In 1889 one Hemabai, a widow and a partner in a firm carrying on business in partnership with two persons, viz., Goculdas and Bhugwandas (defendants Nos. 1 and 2), in Sind and at Behrin in the Persian Gulf, died, and the partnership was then dissolved. She had no children, but it was alleged that she had adopted one Purshotam, the brother of the second defendant. On the 13th February, 1890, the guardian of one Kissondas, a minor (her husband's nephew), applied to the High Court of Bombay for letters of administration to her estate, alleging that Kissondas was her heir and next of kin. A caveat was filed by her father and others, in which they denied that Kissondas was her heir, and alleged that Purshotam had performed her funeral ceremonies. The matter came on as a suit on the 19th February, 1894, when an order was made, without prejudice to any of the questions raised by the issues, dismissing the application and ordering letters of administration to Hemabai's estate to issue to the Administrator General of Bombay. Letters of administration were accordingly granted to him on the 30th March, 1894.

In the meantime, however, viz., on the 12th April, 1893, Bhugwandas (defendant No. 2) had filed three suits in the High Court of Bombay, in the name of himself and Goculdas (defendant No. 1), as surviving partners of Hemabai's firm, to recover certain debts due to that firm. Disputes subsequently arose between Bhugwandas and Goculdas, and by a consent order of the 22nd July, 1893, it was ordered that any moneys recovered in the said three suits should be paid over to a receiver (defendant No. 3), to be held by him until further order. On the 1st August, 1893, consent decrees were passed in the above three suits for a total sum of Rs. 28,335, which was forthwith handed over to the receiver.

On the 22nd April, 1894, this suit was filed by the Administrator General of Bombay as administrator of Hemabai appointed as above stated. He claimed to recover the whole sum paid to the receiver, alleging that the first and second defendants as her partners were largely indebted to the firm, and that the money really belonged to her estate. He prayed that the receiver might be directed to pay over the money to him, and that, if necessary, the partnership accounts should be taken. The second defendant (inter alia) pleaded that the suit was one for partnership accounts, and was barred by limitation, and also that the High Court of Bombay had no jurisdiction to try it.

[16] Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to hear the suit. The cause of action alleged was that the second defendant was endeavouring, under cloak of his position as surviving partner, to get into his hands a sum of money within the jurisdiction of the Court, with a view to deprive the representatives of his deceased partner of it, and to employ it for his own purposes. That was, at all events, part of the cause of action, and leave to sue had been obtained under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865.

Held, also, that s. 17 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applied, and that under its provisions the suit was not barred.

SUIT by the plaintiff as administrator of the estate and effects of one Hemabai to recover certain moneys in the hands of the third defendant as receiver which were claimed by the second defendant.

Hemabai died on the 1st September, 1889. She was the widow of one Hamanmull Ramdassani, who in his lifetime had carried on business in partnership with the first defendant (Goculdas) at Karachi in Sind and in the Persian Gulf. He died in 1884, and his widow and heiress, Hemabai, then carried on the business with Goculdas in the name of Hamanmull and Goculdas.

Hamanmull had left a nephew (his brother's son), named Kissondas, who was a minor. His guardian alleged that he (Kissondas) was heir to Hamanmull, and as such entitled to his property. The matter was referred to arbitration, with the result that a sum of money was paid over for the benefit of Kissondas, and a release was executed by his guardian which declared that the rest of the estate was "the sole property of Hemabai and her heirs."

On the 7th August, 1889, a new firm was constituted, and the second defendant, Bhugwandas (Hemabai's nephew), was admitted a partner. It was to be carried on in the names of Hamanmull, Goculdas and Bhugwandas. A partnership agreement was drawn up and signed in Sind by Hemabai, Goculdas and Bhugwandas (defendants Nos. 1 and 2). The first two clauses were as follows:—

"1. This partnership writing we, the undersigned three persons, have made amongst ourselves; the particulars thereof of the names are as follows:—(1) Mother Hemabai Punj Tirathdassani, seth of the firm; (2) Bhai Goculdas Sobhanmulani; (3) Bhai Bhugwandas Mitharamani,—in all three persons.

[17] "2. The original firm which was carried on at Behrin in the names of Punj Hamanmull Punj Ramdassani (and) Bhai Goculdas Sobhanmullani, is discontinued from this day's date, and the accounts, books (and) papers are cleared (? made up). On the other hand, now from this day's date the firm at Behrin will be carried on in the names of Punj Hamanmull Punj Ramdassani, Bhai Goculdas Sobhanmullani and Bhai Bhugwandas Mitharamani for the up-country and local (? business)."

The agreement declared the shares of the parties and provided that Hemabai was to give Rs. 2,100 to the firm as capital, &c. The firm carried on business in Sind and in the Persian Gulf.

In less than a month after this agreement was signed, viz., on 1st September, 1889, Hemabai died and the partnership was dissolved.

Hemabai had no children. On the 13th February, 1890, Tulsabai, the mother of Kissondas, as his guardian applied to the High Court of Bombay for letters of administration to Hemabai's estate. She claimed that Kissondas was Hemabai's heir and next of kin.

To this application the second defendant, Bhugwandas (Hemabai's nephew) and two others (Hemabai's father and another nephew) filed a caveat. They denied that Kissondas was Hemabai's heir and next of kin, and alleged that her funeral ceremonies had been performed by one Purshotam Mitharam, the brother of Bhugwandas (defendant No. 2), who (it was stated at the hearing) had been adopted by her. They denied that Kissondas had any claim to the estate, and alleged that Hemabai had left a will. The matter was then duly filed as a suit, and it came on for hearing on the 19th February, 1894, before Bayley, J., who made an order "without prejudice to any of the questions raised by the issues" dismissing Tulsabai's application and ordering letters of administration to Hemabai's estate to issue to the Administrator General of Bombay. Letters of administration were accordingly granted to him on the 30th March, 1894.

In the meantime, viz., on the 12th April, 1893, Bhugwandas (defendant No. 2) had filed three suits in the High Court of Bombay (Nos. 187, 188 and 189 of 1893) in the name of himself and Goculdas (defendant No. 1) as surviving partners in the firm established under the agreement of the 7th August, 1889, [18] to recover debts due to that firm. Disputes having subsequently arisen between them, Goculdas on the 29th June, 1893, presented a petition, alleging that Bhugwandas excluded him from taking part in the proceedings and was endeavouring to secure for himself the sums claimed in these suits. He further alleged that the deceased partner Hemabai had the largest interest in the assets of the firm, and that on accounts being taken, Bhugwandas would be found largely indebted to the firm. By a consent order, dated the 22nd July, 1893, it was ordered that any sums which might be recovered in the said three suits should be paid over to Limji Navroji Banaji (defendant No. 3) as receiver, to be held by him until the further order of the Court.

On the 1st August, 1893, consent decrees were passed in the above three suits for a total sum of Rs. 28,335, which was forthwith handed over to the receiver (defendant No. 3).

On the 22nd April, 1894, this suit was filed by the Administrator General of Bombay as administrator of Hemabai appointed as above stated. He claimed to recover the whole of the moneys in the hands of the receiver (defendant No. 3). The grounds of his claim are set forth in the following paragraphs of the plaint :—

"3. The said Hemabai died on or about the 1st September, 1889. At the time of her death the said first and second defendants were each indebted to the partnership, and had nothing to receive therefrom, as will be found on taking the accounts thereof if the same be found necessary. The said partnership was dissolved by the death of the said Hemabai."

"6. The plaintiff claims that inasmuch as the first and second defendants have nothing to receive, but on the contrary have to contribute to the said partnership, he (the plaintiff) is the person entitled to receive the said moneys now in the said receiver's hands. The plaintiff is apprehensive that, unless restrained, the first and second defendants may obtain possession of the said moneys from the said receiver in the said suits, and that the same may be lost to the estate of the said Hemabai."

The prayer of the plaint was as follows :—

"A. That it may be declared that the said moneys in the hands of the said receiver, the third defendant, belong to the estate of the said Hemabai, and that the plaintiff is entitled to the same, and that the third defendant may be directed to hand over the same (after making all proper deductions therefrom) to the plaintiff.

"B. That if necessary for the purposes of this suit the account of the said partnership between Hemabai and the first and second defendants may be taken by and under the directions of this Honourable Court

[19] "C. That the first and second defendants may be restrained by this Honourable Court's injunction from receiving the said moneys in the possession of the third defendant."

The first defendant did not file a written statement and did not contest the suit. The second defendant filed a written statement in which he denied the Court's jurisdiction to try the suit, inasmuch as neither he nor the first defendant resided or carried on business in Bombay. His other contentions were raised in the following paragraphs of his written statement :—

"6. This defendant denies that he has to contribute anything to the said partnership as in the 6th paragraph of the plaint alleged. This defendant says that the accounts of the said partnership have never been taken, and that the plaintiff's right to demand the account thereof is barred by limitation.

"7. This defendant further says that the plaintiff has no right to sue for the moneys claimed in the plaint after the time when the right of the said Hemabai's representatives to claim a partnership account became barred by limitation, since the moneys claimed in this suit would have been included in such account as outstandings due to the said partnership.

"8. This defendant also says that, if the plaintiff has any right of action in respect of the said moneys, he is not entitled to sue for more than $\frac{8}{17}$ths thereof as representing the share of the said Hemabai therein."

Subsequently to the filing of this suit the plaintiff recovered a sum of Rs. 5,292 from another debtor of the firm established by the agreement of the 7th August, 1889. The second defendant thereupon filed a supplemental written statement claiming to set off his share in the said sum against any sum which might be recovered by the plaintiff.

At the hearing the following issues were raised :—

1. Whether this Court has jurisdiction to try this suit ?
2. Whether, if so, this suit is not barred by limitation ?
3. Whether in any event plaintiff is entitled to recover more than $\frac{8}{17}$ths share of the moneys claimed in the plaint ?
4. Whether defendant No. 2 is not entitled to set off $\frac{3\frac{1}{4}}{17}$ths of the sums recovered by the plaintiff as stated in paragraph 1 of the supplementary written statement ?

Rivett-Carnac (with him Lang, Advocate General, and Inverarity), for plaintiff.—This Court has jurisdiction. The moneys claimed were recovered from debtors in Bombay. These assets of [20] the firm are now here and in the hands of a receiver appointed by this Court. That of itself gives this Court jurisdiction. The cause of action is the receiving by the defendants in Bombay of moneys belonging to Hemabai. Part of the cause of action has at all events arisen here, and leave has been obtained for this suit under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865.

The suit is not barred by limitation. Section 17 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applies. The plaintiff only obtained letters of administration on the 30th March, 1894. Hemabai's heir, Kissondas, is a minor, and until letters were granted, there was no legal representative capable of suing. See also s. 7 of the Limitation Act ; Lawless v. The Calcutta

Landing and Shipping Co., Ld. (1); Atkinson v. Bradford Equitable Society (2).

But we contend that even if s. 17 does not apply, the suit is not barred. The suit is not for a partnership account. It is for a share in specific assets which have been recovered. Such a suit lies, although the right to an account may be barred—Dayal Jairaj v. Khatav Ladha (3); Merwanji Hormusji v. Rustomji Burjorji (4); Knox v. Gye (5).

Kirkpatrick and Scott, for the second defendant.—This Court has no jurisdiction to order accounts of a firm in Sind and the Persian Gulf. The mere fact that a debt is due or is received from debtors living in Bombay does not give jurisdiction to this Court to order a partnership account—Suganchand Shivdas v. Mulchand (6); Luckmee Chand v. Zorawur Mull (7); Kessowji Damodar v. Luckmidas Ladha (8). Leave to sue under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, is not conclusive of jurisdiction—Nagamoney Mudaliar v. Janakiram Mudaliar (9). It was by consent of the parties that the moneys due in Bombay were paid to a receiver. The receiver's possession, therefore, does not give jurisdiction in [21] another suit brought by a third person. For the purposes of this suit it must be assumed that the money is in the hands of the defendants —Kerr on Receivers (3rd Ed.), 135.

The suit is barred by the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 106; Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 253. Section 17 does not apply. We deny that Kissondas is Hemabai's heir. At all events, there is a dispute as to his right, and it has not been proved. Further, this section provides only for cases where the cause of action might have arisen in the lifetime of the deceased partner, but did not, in fact, arise until after his death. Here it was Hemabai's death that gave the cause of action.

The moneys received by the defendants were barred debts which Hemabai herself could not have recovered. The debtors, however, consented to pay these barred debts to the defendants. The defendants are entitled to keep them. The mere fact that they have got this money does not give Hemabai or the plaintiff as her representative a new right to recover it. The plaintiff can only sue them for a share if Hemabai's right to an account was not barred. Knox v. Gye (5) is no authority that a suit for a share in a specific asset will lie, although a suit for account is barred. It is rather an authority to the contrary. Dayal Jairaj v. Khatav Ladha (3) was a suit for contribution—Banning on Limitation (2nd Ed.), 223.

CANDY, J.—The main facts of this case are clear. There was a firm in Sind, of which the partners were Hamanmull Ramdassani and Goculdas Sobhanmull. Hamanmull having died in 1884, his widow, Hemabai, carried on the business with Goculdas in the name of Hamanmull and Goculdas. On 7th August, 1889, the said Hemabai, Goculdas and one Bhugwandas (nephew of the deceased Hamanmull) entered into a partnership agreement, according to which Hemabai was to be the seth of the firm, furnishing a capital of Rs. 2,100, not bearing interest, but drawing interest at 6 per cent. per annum on all her moneys employed in the firm over and above that sum, and Goculdas and Bhugwandas were to be the other partners, with the right to draw Rs. 250 and Rs. 200 per annum respectively from the firm without interest,—sums [22] beyond that to be drawn by them with the consent of Hemabai and to bear interest at 6 per cent. The old firm, which had been carried on in the names of Hamanmull and Goculdas, was discontinued and the accounts closed. The new firm was to be carried on in the names of Hamanmull, Goculdas and Bhugwandas, the profits being shared in the following proportions :—One-fourth anna to charity, eight annas to Hemabai, five annas and half to Goculdas, and three and a quarter annas to Bhugwandas.

Hemabai died in Sind in September, 1889, and thus the partnership was dissolved. Hemabai was a childless Hindu widow, and the usual disputes ensued. On 13th February, 1890, Tulsabai as guardian of Kissondas, a minor nephew of Hemabai's husband, applied to the Bombay High Court for letters of administration of the estate of Hemabai, the scheduled list of property including certain property in Bombay, namely, cash and goods deposited with certain parties in Bombay. This petition was opposed by the above-mentioned Bhugwandas and two others, and the case was then filed as a suit, No. 7 of 1890, which terminated on 2nd March, 1894, by the Judge ordering letters of administration to be granted to the Administrator General of Bombay.

In the meantime, on the 12th April, 1893, Bhugwandas filed three suits in the Bombay High Court (Nos. 187, 188 and 189 of 1893) in the names of Goculdas and himself as surviving partners in the firm of Hamanmull, Goculdas and Bhugwandas, to recover certain debts due to the said firm. The debts were apparently the same as the assets in Bombay in the schedule above alluded to. In those suits Goculdas made petitions, dated 29th June, 1893, alleging that Hemabai had the largest interest in the firm of which she had been a member, and that an account being taken, Bhugwandas would be found largely indebted to the firm. I am not now taking it that these allegations were true. I am merely relating the facts of the allegations which led to the Judge appointing a receiver in those suits, which he did on 22nd July, 1893. On 8th August, 1893, consent decrees were passed in those suits; and the moneys recovered under them are now in the hands of the receiver, L. N. Banaji, who is the third defendant in the present suit.

[23] The Administrator General having taken out letters of administration of the estate of Hemabai as directed by the Judge (see above), filed the present suit on 21st April, 1894, against Goculdas and Bhugwandas and the receiver, reciting certain of the above facts, and alleging that at the time of her (Hemabai's) death, which dissolved the partnership, the first and the second defendants were each indebted to the partnership and had nothing to receive therefrom, as will be found on taking the accounts thereof, if the same be found necessary. Therefore, the plaintiff claims that inasmuch as the first and second defendants have nothing to receive, but on the contrary have to contribute to the said partnership, he (the plaintiff) is the person entitled to receive the said moneys now in the receiver's hands. He prayed as follows :—(His Lordship read the prayer of the plaint and continued.)

Goculdas does not defend this suit, and it appears that he is willing that plaintiff should recover all the moneys in question. Bhugwandas has pleaded that—

1. This Court has no jurisdiction, because neither the first nor the second defendant resides or carries on business or personally works for gain in Bombay.

2. Hemabai carried on business with both the first and second defendants in the Persian Gulf, not in Bombay.

3. He (the second defendant) has nothing to contribute to the partnership. and the plaintiff's right to demand an account is barred by limitation.

4. The right to an account being thus barred, the plaintiff has no right to sue for the moneys in question, since they would be included in such account.

5. If the plaintiff has any right of action in respect of the moneys, he is not entitled to more than $\frac{8}{17}$ ths as representing Hemabai's share in the profits of the firm.

6. He, the second defendant, is entitled to a set-off, namely $\frac{3\frac{1}{4}}{17}$ of a sum of Rs. 5,292, which the plaintiff has since the institution of the suit recovered from a debtor of the firm.

[24] On these pleadings the following issues were raised :—(His Lordship stated the issues and continued). Mr. Inverarity (with him the Advocate General and Mr. Rivett-Carnac) appeared for the plaintiff, and in opening his case treated the moneys in question as due to a firm of which the second defendant was not a partner. He said : "There is no question of account between us and the second defendant, because he is not a partner in these outstandings." Subsequently he was doubtful on the point and asked the Court not to take the statement as an admission either way. Subsequently the plaintiff, when appealed to, seemed doubtful as to which partnership these assets belonged. He said : "I claim the whole of the moneys in question, whether of the old or new partnership, because if they are of the old, then the second defendant has no interest in them, and if of the new, then the second defendant is indebted to Hemabai's estate more than his share of these items." In the same way, he expressed his inability to say who were the members of the firm at the time when the debt became due which he had recovered since the institution of the suit, and which formed the subject of the set-off claimed by the second defendant.

In answer to these pleas, Mr. Kirkpatrick for the defendant urged that the plaintiff must be confined strictly to the prayers of his plaint, and I am of the same opinion. It is impossible to read the 3rd and 6th paragraphs of the plaint taken with the prayers A and B without seeing that plaintiffs claim the whole of the moneys, solely because the first and second defendants are indebted to the partnership. There is not a word about the debts having been due to the firm represented by Hemabai and Goculdas only.

No application was made to amend the plaint, and, therefore, I shall confine myself solely to a consideration of the case as first stated. Indeed, if the debts covered by the decrees in suits Nos. 187, 188 and 189 of 1893 were really due to the partnership of Hamanmull and Goculdas only, then it would appear that those debtors are still liable to the person who can legally recover the debts of that firm. The sums now in the hands of the present third defendant represented debts due to the firm of Hemabai, [25] Goculdas and Bhugwandas. If the debtors in question should really have paid to another firm, this firm has not lost its right to recover its dues unless barred by limitation. Goculdas (defendant No. 1) in those suits treated the debts as due to the firm formed by the partnership agreement of 7th August, 1889 (see B). He is on the present plaintiff's side. There is, therefore, no reason to allow the plaintiff now in the face of the plaint to turn round, and say that he claims the whole of the sums, because they were really due to another firm in which the second defendant had no interest.

The suit is, therefore, by the administrator of a deceased partner claiming assets of the partnership which have been recovered by the surviving partners; the whole and not a share of those assets being claimed because, if an account of the partnership is taken, it will be found that the whole of these assets would fall to the estate of the deceased partner. If the suit be taken as one for a partnership account, then it is apparently barred under art. 106 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Hemabai's death on 1st September, 1889, having dissolved the partnership, and the suit having been filed in April, 1894. For the plaintiff it is contended that under s. 17 of that Act the period of limitation should be computed from the time when the Administrator General was directed to take out letters to administer the estate of Hemabai, as until that happened there was no legal representative of the deceased capable of instituting a suit. But that is not so. Here it was open to Tulsabai on behalf of Kissondas, the minor nephew of Hemabai's husband, to have instituted a suit in the District Court at Karachi for an account of the partnership at any time within three years from Hemabai's death. The parties are Hindus, not affected by s. 179 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865). Now, after the grant of letters to the plaintiff no other person than the plaintiff can act as representative of Hemabai (s. 82 of Act V of 1881). But there was no reason why the person claiming to be Hemabai's heir should not have before 1st September, 1892, filed a suit for partnership account.

It seems doubtful whether a suit for a partnership account would, in this case, lie in the Bombay High Court. The defendants at the time of the commencement of the suit did not dwell or carry on business or personally work for gain within the [26] limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of this Court, and it is difficult to see how the cause of action in such suit can be said to have arisen, wholly or in part, within such limits. The fact that certain assets of the partnership were and are in Bombay would not affect "the ground of origin of the right" (see remarks of Phear, J., in Harjiban Das v. Bhagwan Das (1)). Here, to adopt the language of the Privy Council in Luckmee Chand v. Zorawur Mull(2), Karachi was undoubtedly the central place of business. At Karachi the partnership books were kept; at Karachi the partners would have recourse to those books for the purpose of ascertaining the state of the transactions between them. As Mr. Justice Green said in Suganchand v. Mulchand (3), "where else could the cause of such action be said to arise, except where, by consent of the parties, the head-quarters of the partnership had been established, the moneys advanced, the accounts kept, &c."

I have not overlooked the fact that the plaint in this suit was endorsed by the admitting Judge "under cl. 12 of Letters Patent." But every plaint is admitted under that clause, and those words do not, per se, indicate that the leave of the Court had been first obtained, on the ground that the cause of action arose in part only within the jurisdiction. For the purpose of first obtaining leave one would expect an application with a statement of the grounds of the application. The language clearly points to something granted when asked for. Here assuming that the words above noted are meant to show that the leave of the Court had been first obtained, it would be interesting to know the grounds for supposing that the cause of action in this case had arisen in part only within the limits of this Court's jurisdiction. No doubt, as was pointed out by Mr. Justice Bittleston in Bavah Meah Saib v. Khajee Meah Saib (1), the language of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent "gives rise to nice questions as to what is sufficient in any particular case to constitute a part of the cause of action."

But in the view which I take of the case it is unnecessary to pursue this point further, for the case may be put thus: a suit [27] for a general partnership account being barred by limitation, will a suit for the whole or a share of these assets lie? It is admitted that if it will be for a share, then the plaintiff's share is $\frac{8}{17}$ths. The prayer for a reference to the Commissioner is not that a limited account should be taken, enough to show that Goculdas and Bhugwandas are so heavily indebted to the firm that there can be no doubt that Hemabai's estate is entitled to the whole of these sums (I doubt whether such a reference would in any case be valid), but here the prayer is for a reference to the Commissioner that the partnership account may be taken, and what that is, is well known (see e.g., sch. IV, No. 132, Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882).

The question thus assumes a double aspect. The claim for a general partnership account being barred by limitation, has plaintiff any right of action at all in regard to these assets which have been recovered by the surviving partners? If he has, then can he claim the whole of these assets? In considering the answer which should be given to these questions, counsel naturally referred to the judgments delivered in the House of Lords in the case of Knox v. Gye (2) as interpreted by the Court of appeal of this Court in Dayal Jairaj v. Khatav Ladha (3), which interpretation was followed by a Judge of this Court in Merwanji Hormusji v. Rustomji Burjorji (4).

Now it is evident, on a perusal of the report of Dayal Jairaj v. Khatav Ladha (3) that the judgment of the Appeal Court on the facts of that case cannot be directly applied to the facts of the present case. In that case the plaintiff, instead of claiming a share of partnership assets received by one partner after a dissolution, the right to an account generally being supposed to be barred, claimed to be repaid the excess of moneys borrowed on account of the partnership over the amount which the plaintiff was bound to pay as between him and the three co-partners who joined in the notes. The period of limitation began to run from the time when the properties of himself and the partner Khatav Ladha (whom he sued) were sold and applied in satisfaction of the joint decree. The defendant Khatav Ladha pleaded that the [28] accounts of the partnership were still unadjusted, that the claim was barred by Limitation Act, and that all the partners should be made parties. The plaint was accordingly amended, the other partners or their representatives being made parties, the claim being extended, including a certain sum deposited in the hands of the Accountant General, and praying that, if necessary, the partnership accounts should be taken and such sums as might be found due to the plaintiff might be ordered to be paid to him by the defendant Khatav Ladha. The other defendants did not appear or plead. The Judge of the Division Court found that the claim was not barred by the Limitation Act, and reserved his findings on the other issues till an account of the partnership dealings and transactions had been taken by the Commissioner to whom a reference was ordered. It was that decision which was confirmed by the Appeal Court on the following grounds:—(a) That the claim as primarily preferred was a suit for contribution, not in regard to a partnership transaction, and, therefore, it could be made the subject of a suit without also asking for a general account—Sedgwick v. Daniell (1); (b) that the claim as primarily preferred was justified by the opinions of three of the learned Lords in Knox v. Gye, which were that a suit for recovery of a partnership asset received by one partner after the dissolution of the partnership may be maintainable even where the right to a general partnership amount may have been barred by the statute of limitations; (c) that it was the defendant Khatav Ladha who insisted on the partnership account being taken. Therefore, without deciding how the case would have stood had the suit been solely or primarily for a general partnership account, the order directing a general account of the partnership to be taken was confirmed.

In the present case, though the prayer of the plaint is that "if necessary" the partnership account should be taken, it is evident that for the recovery of the whole of the assets the taking the general partnership account must be the sole and prime reason.

Next, as to Knox v. Gye, it is unnecessary to repeat at full length the quotations from the judgments which are given by Mr. Justice [29] Green in his judgment in the case just noted. But stress may be laid on one or two points. It was a suit filed in October, 1864, by the representative of a deceased partner, who had died in November, 1854, against the surviving partner for a general partnership account, including an asset which had been recovered by the surviving partner and from one Hughes. Vice-Chancellor Wood held that the application of the statute of limitation was excluded by the fiduciary relation existing between the deceased and the surviving partner, and by the fact that the money recovered from Hughes was received within six years before the institution of the suit. On appeal this was reversed by the Lord Chancellor (Lord Chelmsford), who held that the claim was barred by the statute of limitations. On further appeal to the House of Lords the decision of Lord Chelmsford was upheld.

Lord Westbury noted that it was on the fact of a receipt of the sum from Hughes within six years before the institution of the suit that the plaintiff chiefly relied: but Lord Westbury pointed out that, if, as an answer to the statute, it was intended to rely upon the receipt of the debt due to the partnership, it should have been alleged and proved that the sum was received within six years from the death of the deceased partner, whereas the sum was apparently recovered in June, 1861 (the case as put in the Report, p. 661, says in 1862). Therefore, if the right to the account was taken away by the statute previously to the receipt of such item, the subsequent receipt could not remove the bar and restore the title to the account.

Applying that ruling to the present case it will be seen that the assets now in question were recovered in 1893, i.e., more than three years (the statutable period) from the death of the deceased partner Hemabai.

Lord Westbury then went on to show that a Court of Equity will not after the lapse of the statutable period, without acknowledgment, decree an account between the estate of a deceased partner and a surviving partner. He said:

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

"It must be recollected that the representative of a deceased partner has no specific interest in or claim upon any particular part of the partnership estate. The whole property therein accrues to the surviving partner, and he is the owner thereof, both at law and in equity. The right of the deceased partner's representative consists [30] in having an account of the property, of its collections and application, and in receiving that portion of the clear balance that accrues to the deceased's share and interest in the partnership. Another source of error in this matter is the looseness with which the word 'trustee' is frequently used."

The rest of the judgment of Lord Westbury is taken up with his reasons for dissenting from the opinion of Vice-Chancellor Wood that there was anything fiduciary between the surviving partner and the dead partner's representative. It is evident that according to Lord Westbury's judgment the present suit, whether simply for a share of a partnership asset or for an account of the partnership in order to obtain the whole of an asset, would be bad.

Lord Westbury was followed by Lord Colonsay. He treated the case briefly:

"The deceased partner died in November, 1854, and the bill was filed in 1864, but it is said that in the interval, viz., in January, 1859, a considerable sum was received by the surviving partner as a compromise of a debt of a larger amount due to the partnership estate; and it is contended that as a period of six years had not run from that date of recovery until the filing of the bill, the statute does not apply. I cannot adopt that view. If adopted, the result would be that a new period would run from the date of every recovery of partnership debts, and that would in effect make the statute valueless in regard to partnership accounts; and I see no reason for it, because the account, if sued for within the statutory period, must have comprehended all debts and claims, whether recovered or unrecovered, and whether good, bad or doubtful."

So here the fact that a period of three years has not run from the date of the recovery of the assets until the filing of the present action, does not avoid the bar of limitation in a suit for an account. But Lord Colonsay went on to say: "I do not say that, if a sum is unexpectedly recovered after the lapse of six years, the executor of the deceased partner, though he has lost the right to sue for an account of the partnership concerns, may not in another kind of suit demand a share of the particular sum so recovered." The value of this obiter dictum is diminished by the fact that no illustration was given of an unexpected recovery, nor was it stated what should be the form of the other kind of suit.

Lord Colonsay was followed by the Lord Chancellor (Lord Hatherley), who as Vice-Chancellor Wood had given the original decision, and he devoted his judgment to a strong expression [31] of dissent from the opinion of Lord Westbury, that there is nothing fiduciary between a surviving partner and the executors of his deceased partner. He said: "It appears to me that the case we have had to consider here is this. I will assume that an account had been taken upon the death of the deceased partner or immediately after the death of the deceased partner; that everything which could be ascertained had been ascertained and adjusted, that the account was complete, and that releases were given." Then he assumed that this complete adjustment had not included a debt to the partnership "say of the amount of £20,000 which was left outstanding, and which was subsequently received by the surviving partner by right of his survivorship as partner; then and then only would the executors of the deceased partner have a right to a moiety (assuming that the partners were partners in moieties) of that money, viz., £10,000. I apprehend that it would be an extraordinary answer for that partner to make to any such a claim: True it is you were entitled to this once, but you have settled all accounts more than six years ago; the parties who were indebted to the firm were not at that time able to pay their debts, they have paid them since, the money has been collected by me, the surviving partner who alone could collect it, but having collected I say that I hold no fiduciary position towards you."

Then Lord Hatherley showed by an instance which he quoted that the case put by him was not imaginary. He says: "It is not imaginary that a large sum of money may be received long after the ordinary accounts of the partnership have been closed." And then he applied the principle laid down by him to the case before the House of Lords in the passages quoted by Mr. Justice Green and to be found at pages 109, 110 of 12 Bom. H. C. Rep. He held that the surviving partner would have a right to say to the executor of the deceased partner: "I am willing to pay you that which is your own, but further than that I will not go. . . . I will not go back to the partnership accounts which, I say, are all settled, and as to which there are no accounts between us. . . . It appears to me that Mr. Gye (the surviving partner) had only one of two courses open to him, viz., that of handing over the money that he had received, or the deceased partner's share of it to the executors of the deceased partner, assuming that all accounts had been settled up to that period, or to say: 'I shall demand an account and show by an account that the whole of that money is mine.'"

[32] If I have correctly quoted the judgment of Lord Hatherley, it would appear that the whole of his case is based on the assumption that the accounts of the partnership had been taken within the statutable period after the dissolution of the partnership by the death of one of the partners. Subsequently an asset not included in that account is recovered by the surviving partner. He holds that in trust for the estate of the deceased partner; and if sued by the executors of the deceased partner, he must hand over the share belonging to the estate of the deceased partner, assuming that all accounts had been settled up to that period; or if he pleads that since that settlement there have been fresh accounts, which, if taken, would show that the asset the subject of the present suit belonged entirely to him, he has a right to have that account taken.

But here, in the case now before me, no attempt has ever before been made to settle the partnership accounts. After the statutable period the representative of the deceased partner sues the surviving partner who has recently collected some assets and says: "Give me my share, and not only so, but give me the whole, because I demand that a general partnership account be taken by which I can show that I am entitled to the whole of these assets." It is not the defendant who demands an account in order that he may retain the whole of the assets. The only case in which Lord Hatherley said the surviving partner was bound to hand over the share of the assets to the executors of the deceased partner, was when it is one in which it was assumed that all accounts had been settled up to that period. Therefore to the present plaintiff Lord Hatherley would apparently have said: "You can get neither a general partnership account nor a share of these assets."

I must admit that the point is not clear beyond all doubt, for just before the passage quoted above Lord Hatherley said: "Now, as regards the right to an account, I cannot quite conceive that the right of the executors of a deceased partner will be barred by the statute of limitations if they do not assert their right to the account within the statutory period, and that equity will follow the law in that respect, and that it will adopt, as to a suit, the limit which the law has assigned with reference to the [33] commencement of an action." These words, if not governed by the sentence above quoted, would seem to be general. And so possibly they were taken by Lord Chelmsford, who followed Lord Hatherley. He held that the receipt of the money due from Hughes did not prevent the statute from continuing to run, and he dissented from a remark "almost incidentally made by Lord Hatherley that 'the statute of limitations would not apply to a partnership account of this description, but that the statutes are applicable to the present case, appears to me to be clear." Then after quoting cases to show the limitation to six years of actions of account applied to bills in equity for an account, he proceeded:

"The statute of limitations then being applicable, and beginning to run in November, 1854, upon what ground is it alleged that it was stopped in its course, and that although six years afterwards elapsed, it did not operate as a bar to the suit for an account? The ground taken is that the debt due from Hughes to the partnership was satisfied by the payment in discharge of his liability in the month of January, 1859, and that the bill was filed within six years of such payment. * * * The question to be determined is whether when a right to demand an account of a partnership arises, and afterwards six years elapse, the payment, before the expiration of the six years, of a debt owing to the partnership when the time of limitation began to run will take the case out of the statute."

Lord Chelmsford then went on to show that this question must be answered in the negative.

"Now in taking the accounts of a partnership all outstanding debts due to the partnership must necessarily enter into the account. * * * If the effect of the payment of Hughes's debt is to create a new right to an account, then every debt due to a partnership, which is received after a dissolution, must in like manner give a fresh right to demand an entire account of the whole of the partnership concern, and this equally whether six years have elapsed or not, after a suit for an account might have been commenced before the debt due to the partnership was received, the consequence of which would be that when a partnership is dissolved by death, and there are outstanding debts to be collected by the surviving partner, the statute of limitations could never operate as a bar to a suit for an account against him."

Then shortly afterwards is the passage quoted by Mr. Justice Green (12 Bom. H. C. Rep. at pp. 110—111):

"There may be a difficulty in determining what is the right of an executor of a deceased partner (in the case put by my noble and learned friend, i.e., Lord Hatherley), where he has allowed the statute of limitations to run against his claim to an account, and a debt has been recovered by the surviving partner after the six years have elapsed. But this is a difficulty occasioned by his own laches, and I see no reason why he should not have a right to sue for his share in this sum . . . . the [34] surviving partner being at liberty to defend himself by alleging and proving that the whole of the sum received had been applied, or was applicable to the payment of partnership liabilities."

So if Lord Chelmsford's words be taken in a general sense, then though twenty years may elapse after the dissolution of a partnership by the death of a partner, and no account of the partnership is ever taken, and after the twenty years an asset is recovered by the surviving partner, he can be sued by the representative of the deceased partner for the share of the asset due to the estate of the deceased. But if the words are to be confined to the case put by Lord Hatherley, and that case assumes a general partnership account taken within the statutable period, this asset being excluded from that account, then and then only can a suit lie for a share of that asset, the surviving partner being at liberty to defend himself by showing that the asset though not included in the previous account had been applied or was applicable to the payment of partnership liabilities. It is evident that Mr. Justice Green put the general interpretation on the passage quoted. In Dayal Jairaj v. Khatav Ladha (1) he said "that a suit for a recovery of a share of a partnership asset received by one partner after the dissolution of the partnership may be maintainable even where the right to general partnership account may have been barred by the statute of limitations, is supported by the opinions of at least three of the four learned Lords who took part in the decision of Knox v. Gye;" and Mr. Justice Latham in Merwanji v. Rustomji (2) said: "I think that the opinions of the majority of the Law Lords in that case (Knox v. Gye) do establish that a suit may be brought by the representative of a deceased partner against the surviving partner to recover a share in a sum received by the surviving partner in respect of partnership transactions within the period of limitation, although a suit to take the partnership accounts generally would be barred. Such is the interpretation put on the case by Green, J., in his judgment in Dayal Jairaj v. Khatav Ladha (1)."

Were the matter res integra I should be inclined to doubt whether the obiter dicta of the learned Lords are clearly enough expressed to found on them such an important proposition. Lord [35] Colonsay's remark referred to an "unexpected recovery," which would seem to show that he contemplated a previous partnership account having been taken, from which this asset had been inadvertently excluded. Lord Hatherley founded his remarks on the assumption that a general partnership account had been taken within the statutable period, the asset in question having been excluded therefrom. Lord Chelmsford's remarks referred to the case put by Lord Hatherley. But if (to adopt Lord Chelmsford's words above quoted with a slight alteration) the effect of the payment of any debt due to the partnership to the surviving partner is to create a right to a share in that asset in favour of the representative of the deceased partner, then every debt due to a partnership which is received after a dissolution must in like manner give a fresh right to a share in each asset, and this equally, however many years have elapsed since the dissolution, and however negligent the representative of the deceased partner may have been in never asking for an account. The right to an account (amongst other things) of an outstanding debt, which must be included in the account as part of the partnership assets to be collected, cannot be affected by payment of that debt which merely converts into realized assets what was previously uncollected, and cannot stop the course of the statute of limitations which was running against the claim to an account of the partnership concerns.

It was said that upon payment of the debt a new right accrued to the representative of the deceased partner. But the right to sue for what? The answer must be for an account. But that he was entitled to sue for all along, and the account must have included this very debt, the receipt of which is supposed to have created a new right to an account (per Lord Chelmsford, p. 687). And then follows the passage in which Lord Chelmsford said that he saw no reason why in the particular case put by Lord Hatherley, the executor of a deceased partner should have a right to sue for his share in an asset received by the surviving partner after the lapse of the statutable period for a claim to an account.

It must be admitted that when the remarks of the learned Lords are considered from this point of view, there does seem some difficulty in giving a general interpretation to them. But [36] the Court of Appeal having read those remarks in a different way, and the point being one of great nicety and doubt, I think that I am bound to follow the general interpretation which has hitherto been adopted in this Court. All the four learned Lords in Knox v. Gye would have refused the present plaintiff's prayer for an account. I feel no doubt about that.

The plaintiff, therefore, is entitled to a share. What he can recover is Hemabai's $\frac{8}{17}$ths and the $5\frac{1}{2}$ annas' share of Goculdas, who does not contend the plaintiff's claim. I have felt some doubt with regard to Goculdas' share, the plaintiff being strictly entitled only to the share due to Hemabai's estate, his claim to an account in order that he may show that he would be also entitled to the share of Goculdas and Bhugwandas being undoubtedly bad. But as Goculdas evidently wishes that plaintiff should take his share, and Bhugwandas does not raise any plea showing that he is entitled to retain Goculdas' share, I shall allow the plaintiff's case in this respect.

With regard to the set-off, it is clear from the letter of the pleader of the debtor (Ex. 2) that the debt was paid to the plaintiff as due to the firm of which the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were partners. This also is borne out by the copy of the indemnity bond (Ex. 4). Therefore, there is an ascertained sum to which the second defendant is certainly entitled as much as plaintiff is entitled to a share in the sums recovered by the decrees Nos. 187, 188 and 189. Indeed, it is difficult to say how plaintiff has recovered the debt due from Hiranand. The representative of a deceased partner has no specific interest in, or claim upon, any particular part of the partnership estate. The whole property accrues to the surviving partner (see remarks of Lord Westbury in Knox v. Gye quoted above, p. 675). The executors of a deceased partner have an interest in those assets which the surviving partner can alone get at (per Lord Hatherley, p. 679). But it is unnecessary to consider that point further. It is enough that the second defendant is entitled to recover from the plaintiff the sum as claimed by him. I find then on the issues :—

1. As regards the claim to a share in the moneys in question, this Court has jurisdiction.

[37] 2. The claim for this share is not barred by limitation. The claim for a general account is barred.

3. Plaintiff is entitled to recover $\frac{8}{17}$ths and also Goculdas' $\frac{5\frac{1}{2}}{17}$ths.

4. Defendant No. 2 is entitled to the set-off as prayed by him.

I direct that the costs of the suit be paid out of the estate in the hands of the third defendant.

The plaintiff appealed and the second defendant filed cross-objections to the decree.

Macpherson (Acting Advocate-General) and Inverarity, for appellants (plaintiffs).—This is not a suit for a partnership account. We do not desire an account. This is a suit to recover property really belonging to Hemabai as the principal partner of the firm. The whole of the money really belongs to her, as both the defendants are indebted to the firm. The property is in Bombay and in the hands of a receiver appointed by this Court. There is, therefore, jurisdiction. The fact that the property is here is, at all events, part of the cause of action, and leave to sue has been obtained, and where that is the case there is no distinction between partnership suits and other suits. It is a question of discretion whether the Court will entertain the suit.

Next we contend that the suit is not barred. We claim the benefit of ss. 7 and 17 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). On Hemabai's death, Kissondas was the heir. He is a minor and there was no "legal representative capable of instituting a suit" until the plaintiff was appointed administrator on the 30th March, 1894. A minor cannot sue. A suit is instituted for him. The words "legal representative capable of instituting a suit" in the section mean a person who has taken out probate or letters of administration. The plaintiff now represents Hemabai and all her property vests in him. See s. 4 of Act V of 1881.

A suit by the representative of a deceased partner to recover a share in assets received by the surviving partners may be brought, although a suit for a general partnership account may be barred by limitation—Knox v. Gye (1); Dayal Jairaj v. Khatav Ladha (2); [38] Merwanji Hormusji v. Rustomji Burjorji (3). Reference was also made to the Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 45; Lindley on Partnership pp. 549, 550.

Kirkpatrick and Scott, for respondent (defendant No. 2).—This is a suit for partnership accounts. A right to an account is the only right a partner has against his co-partner. The plaintiff cannot claim the money without an account, and we may keep it until an account is taken. See as to a partner's rights Knox v. Gye (1); Keshav Gopal v. Rayapa (4); Kramibhai v. The Conservator of Forests (5); Ashworth v. Munn (6); Joharmal v. Tejram (7). But a suit for an account is now barred by limitation. See Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 106; Noyes v. Crawley (8). Sections 7 and 17 do not apply. We deny that the minor Kissondas is the heir, and say that Purshotam, who is not a minor, is. The question between them has not yet been tried and is not decided. A mere unproved allegation that a minor is the heir does not give a third person (e. g., the plaintiff) the benefit of ss. 7 and 17. The existence of a dispute as to heirship does not extend the period of limitation, either for the disputants or for third persons. Ignorance of his rights on the part of the heir, whoever he may be or his neglect to enforce them, does not extend the period of limitation so as to enable a third person to sue after the period has expired—Banning on Limitation (2nd Ed.), p. 117. If Kissondas proves his heirship, he may hereafter perhaps be entitled to sue under s. 7. But it is only the minor himself who can claim the benefit of that section. A third person cannot—Starling on Limitation (3rd Ed.), p. 37; Rudra Kant v. Nobo Kishore (9). Further we say the claims of Kissondas have been released. If so, then, he could not sue. Can a third person claim under s. 7 to do what the minor himself cannot do? The plaintiff here does not pretend to represent the minor and is not suing on his behalf. Why should he be allowed the benefit of s. 7, which is given only to the minor himself? This suit was barred before the plaintiff obtained letters of [39] administration. A minor can sue (Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882, s. 440), or in this case a receiver might have been appointed—Yeshwant Bhagwant v. Shanker Ramchandra (1). Among Hindus in the Mofussil there is always a legal representative capable of suing without probate or letters of administration which Hindus and Mahomedans in the Mofussil are not required to obtain—Lalchand Ramdayal v. Gumtibai (2); Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa (3); Mitra on Limitation (2nd Ed.), p. 221, note. Therefore s. 17 does not apply. If it is held to apply to Hindus they will be able to sue at any time after the period of limitation has expired by adopting the expedient of taking out probate or letters of administration and claiming a new period dating from the grant. Counsel also referred to Chandmull v. Ranee Soondery Dossee (4); Badri Narain v. Jai Kishen Das (5); Janaki v. Dhanu Lall (6). The arguments and authorities on the points of jurisdiction, &c., were the same as in the lower Court.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—The dispute between the parties to this appeal is with reference to a sum of Rs. 28,335 now in the hands of the third defendant, L. N. Banaji, as receiver appointed by this Court in Suits Nos. 187, 188 and 189 of 1893. The Division Court has by its decree directed the money to be divided between the plaintiff as administrator of the estate of Hemabai, deceased, andthe defendant Bhugwandas in certain proportions. The plaintiff claims that he has established his title to the whole fund. Hence this appeal.

The defendant Bhugwandas has filed cross-objections, contending that the Court ought to have dismissed the suit altogether on the grounds (1) that it was barred by limitation, (2) that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it. The defendant Goculdas does not claim that any part of the fund should be paid to him. He has not appeared upon the appeal.

In the view which we take upon the question of limitation, it will be unnecessary to consider the law, much discussed in the judgment of the Division Court, as to the rights of the individual [40] partners on the one hand and of the representatives of a deceased partner on the other hand inter se in cases where assets of the firm have been recovered by the surviving partners after the right of such representatives to sue for an account of the partnership dealings and transactions has been time-barred; we advisedly refrain from giving any decided opinion upon this part of the case.

The facts which it is necessary to have before us in order to understand how the questions raised by the defendant Bhugwandas have arisen, may be concisely stated. Hamanmull Ramdassani was an inhabitant of Sind and carried on business there and in the Persian Gulf. The respondent Goculdas was his partner. Hamanmull died in 1884, leaving a widow Hemabai and no issue. This widow as his heiress and Goculdas continued to carry on the same business in partnership until 1889. Goculdas, according to the evidence of Narayanadas Assammal, was a working partner in the firm and brought no capital into it. This may be taken, we think, as an established fact, as Goculdas has never claimed any share in the assets of the firm, and Narayandas affirms that it was so.

On the 7th August, 1889, the respondent Bhugwandas was admitted as a partner in the firm. On that day a partnership-deed was drawn up. It recited that the original firm had been closed and the books and the papers thereof had been cleared, and that from its date a new firm would be carried on, of which Hemabai was to be the seth or owner and in which Goculdas and Bhugwandas were to be partners. It further provided that the capital of the firm was to be Rs. 2,100 to be paid by Hemabai, and that as to the other moneys of Hemabai which might be employed in the firm, interest therein should be paid to Hemabai ½ per cent. The partners Goculdas and Bhugwandas were to draw Rs. 250 and Rs. 200 respectively per annum without interest for their household expenses and were to be at liberty to draw further sums with Hemabai's consent on auspicious occasions, paying interest thereon at ½ per cent., and as to such moneys as should remain credited to them in the firm, they were to be paid interest thereon at the like rate.

" As to whatever net profit and benefit will be made in the firm, the same will be divided, the same will be divided as per Re. 1-1-0 (seventeen annas) in this manner ; the particulars thereof are as follows :—¼ anna of Shri Govardhannathji (a charity account), 8 annas of Seth Mata Hemabai, 5½ annas for Bhai Goculdas Sobhanmalani, 3¼ annas of Bhai Bhugwandas Mitharamani."

The partnership deed was executed in Sind, probably at Tata, where the defendants Goculdas and Bhugwandas reside and Hemabai resided, and the business was to be carried on at Behrin in the Persian Gulf and its outstations. The terms of the deed as we have set them out show, we think, that the moneys with which the business was to be carried on in addition to the capital were to be supplied by Hemabai alone, though it contemplates the probability of the partners having money in the firm. Read as a whole it constitutes, we think, Hemabai the real owner of the firm, and Goculdas and Bhugwandas working partners therein.

Hemabai died on the 1st September, 1889, a little more than three weeks, consequently, after the date of the partnership, which, by operation of law, thereupon became dissolved. For reasons presently to be assigned, it must, we think, be taken for the purposes of this suit that her heir was Kissondas, her husband's brother's son. He was then and still is a minor, having been in 1890 about ten years of age.

In April, 1893, Goculdas and Bhugwandas, the surviving partners in the firm, filed three suits (Nos. 187, 188 and 189 of 1893) against debtors of the firm in Bombay. Bhugwandas in this matter acted for Goculdas, who did not then leave Tata. Subsequently, on Goculdas coming to Bombay, he presented a petition to the Court in suit No. 187 of 1893, in which he stated that Hemabai, deceased, had the largest interest in the business and assets of the firm, and that Bhugwandas on the accounts being taken would be found largely indebted to the firm. He further alleged that Bhugwandas had excluded him from the management of the suits, and that he was apprehensive that Bhugwandas would secure in his own hands the amount admitted by the defendants, and apply it to his own use. This petition resulted in a consent Judge's order of the 22nd July, 1893, under which [42] the sums received in the three suits were paid to the third defendant, the receiver, to be by him held and invested until further order of the Court.

On the 30th March, 1894, letters of administration to the estate of Hemabai were granted to Mr. Carnac, the Administrator General, who on the 22nd April following filed the present suit setting out the above facts, and alleging that Goculdas and Bhugwandas were each indebted to the partnership and had nothing to receive from it; and further alleging that he was apprehensive that Goculdas and Bhugwandas would receive the moneys in the hands of the receiver and that they would be lost to the estate of Hemabai; he prayed (1) for a declaration that the whole fund belonged to Hemabai's estate and that the receiver should be ordered to pay it to him as administrator of Hemabai, (2) if necessary for the purpose of the suit, that the accounts of the partnership should be taken, and (3) for an injunction against the defendants Goculdas and Bhugwandas receiving the fund. Goculdas, as we have stated, does not put forward any claim to it. The contention is between Bhugwandas and the plaintiff only.

It is admitted that the accounts of the firm have not been formally made up and adjusted between the estate of Hemabai and the surviving defendants. Until the Administrator-General was appointed her administrator there was, in fact, no one with whom they could be made up. By counsel for Bhugwandas it has been contended that, as surviving partners in the firm, Bhugwandas and Goculdas were entitled to this asset of the firm, and that the only right of the administrator of Hemabai was to an account against the surviving partners, and payment of the balance at foot of such account, and that as the claim of the administrator of Hemabai to such an account was barred by limitation, the right of Goculdas and Bhugwandas to hold the asset was established. In support of this proposition he relied upon the judgments delivered in the House of Lords in the celebrated case of Knox v. Gye (1) and more particularly upon the judgment of Lord Westbury in that case. We are not prepared to hold that that contention is well-founded even on the assumption that the claim of [43] the plaintiff to an account is time-barred. We are inclined to think that the difference between Indian and English law on this subject alluded to in the course of the argument and the peculiar nature of the partnership-deed in the present case distinguish it from the case put by Lord Westbury; but we do not pursue the question, because we are of opinion that the claim of Hemabai's administrator to an account of the partnership dealings is not time-barred.

The dates as above stated are these: Hemabai died on the 1st September, 1889. The plaintiff was appointed administrator of Hemabai's estate on the 30th March, 1894. The present suit was filed on the 22nd April, 1894.

Now s. 17 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) provides that when a person who would, if he were living, have a right to institute a suit, dies before the right accrues, the period of limitation shall be computed from the time when there is a legal representative of the deceased capable of instituting such suit.

Upon this the question arises whether when Hemabai died there was a legal representative of Hemabai capable of instituting a suit for an account against the partners. Soon after her death, Tulsabai as mother and guardian of Kissondas applied to this Court for letters of administration to her estate limited until Kissondas should come of age. The defendant Bhugwandas and Tirathdas, the father of Hemabai, entered a caveat to the application. They alleged that Hemabai had left a will, of which Tirathdas had been appointed executor; but no such will had ever been proved or judicially adjudicated upon, though Hemabai has been dead for four years. For the purposes of this suit the allegation has not been in any way proved, and may be disregarded. The order appointing the plaintiff administrator of Hemabai's estate inferentially negatives the existence of a will, but being made without prejudice to the questions raised by the issues it is not conclusive between the parties.

The affidavits made in support of the caveat did not suggest that Hemabai left a nearer heir than Kissondas, nor is it here shown that she did. We must, therefore, assume that Kissondas [44] is her heir. This of course will not affect the ultimate claim to the moneys in the hands of the Administrator-General if any one hereafter shall prove that he has a title to oust the prima facie title of Kissondas.

Now Kissondas being an infant when Hemabai died, and being her heir, there was, we are of opinion, no legal representative of Hemabai capable of suing until letters of administration were granted to the Administrator-General. The expression "capable of suing" in s. 17 is, we cannot doubt, the antithesis to "not under legal disability to sue." It cannot, we apprehend, refer to incapacity arising from want of means or absence of other physical causes. What legal disabilities incapacitate from suing, are pointed out in s. 7, amongst which infancy is foremost. If this were not so, the strange result pointed out in argument would result, viz., that up to the moment of the administrator to Hemabai's estate being appointed, the claim for an account was admittedly not time-barred. By the very act of appointing an administrator to protect the estate, the claim became time-barred. Any reasonable interpretation which avoids such an anomaly should be accepted. Here the interpretation which we adopt is both reasonable and obvious. This view does not, we think, at all come into conflict with the decision in Rudra Kant Surma Sircar v. Nobo Kishore Surma Biswas (1) which was a decision under s. 7 of the Act and was determined upon wholly different considerations.

The further question arises whether the Court has jurisdiction in this case, and we are quite unable to bring ourselves to feel any doubt upon the subject. Leave to file the suit has been given under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent. So the Court has jurisdiction if any part of the cause of action arose within the local limits of the High Court. What is the cause of action alleged? It is that the defendant Bhugwandas is endeavouring under cloak of his position as surviving partner to get into his hands a sum of money within the jurisdiction of the Court, nay in the hands of its officer, with a view to deprive the representatives of his deceased partner (who according to the case made in the plaint are solely entitled to it and all the assets of the firm) of the fund, [45] and to employ it for his own purposes. Is not that a cause of action arising within the jurisdiction of the Court? It may not be the whole cause of action, but is it not a most substantial part of one? Is the Court's aid to be withheld? Is its arm to be paralysed by the answer "The Court can't prevent this injustice —this positive wrong—because the accounts of the firm have not been adjusted?" Our answer is an emphatic negative. It might be a good defence to such a suit (we do not say it would be) for the defendant to plead thus—"I am receiving the money for the benefit of the partners at large. I shall duly account for it when the account is taken." That, if credited, might be a good answer; but this is not the case of Bhugwandas. He says the fund is his own and he is entitled to have it and spend it. No doubt it would be necessary in such a case incidentally to take the partnership account if the defendant alleges that he has a claim to the money; but that is immaterial. The Court often has to decide a collateral issue in respect of which it has not direct jurisdiction. The case of rent sued for in the Small Cause Court is an instance. Such a suit is not defeated by reason of the Court having incidentally to determine a question of title to land on which directly it has no jurisdiction—Bapuji v. Kuvarji (1). There is no reason which occurs to us why this Court should not, if necessary, take the accounts. The defendant cannot complain. It is his own wrongful act which gives the Court jurisdiction incidentally to take it. The plea to the jurisdiction, therefore, fails.

When these technical objections are brushed aside, there is really no defence to the suit upon the merits. The terms of the partnership deed and the dates are strong to show that Bhugwandas can have no interest in this fund. The books of the firm kept by Bhugwandas and Goculdas show that he is indebted to the firm, and do not contain a trace of his having brought capital into it. In one of his answers to interrogatories (put in, we cannot help thinking, rather inadvertently by the plaintiff) Bhugwandas says that he brought in some goods, but he betook himself out of Bombay when the suit was coming on, and gave no evidence at the trial. The plaintiff has made out the several allegations in [46] his plaint by strong prima facie evidence which there is nothing to rebut. It is said that the defendant's advisers had not a full opportunity of inspecting the books, and that they were taken by surprise when the books were produced and put in at the trial. They did not, however, ask for a postponement on that ground; nor have they since discovered anything in the books which has been brought to our notice which would help the defendant. In truth, on the merits this suit was undefended, and upon the merits we think it ought to have been decided.

The decree must be varied by making a decree in the terms of paragraphs (A) and (B) of the prayer of the plaint, and the defendant Bhugwandas must pay the costs of the suit throughout.

We have not referred to the set-off; it follows from our judgment that Bhugwandas has no claim under it.

DINSHAW NOWROJI BODE (Plaintiff) v. NOWROJI NASARWANJI BODE AND PEROZSHAW DINSHAW BODE (Defendants).*

Trust—Trustees—Trustees raising money by mortgage of trust property—Sanction of Court.

A testator by his will devised property in Bombay to trustees on certain religious and charitable trusts. The income of the property was more than was required for the purposes of the trust, and the trustees had a surplus of Rs.19,000 in their hands. They were obliged to pull down a certain chawl which stood upon the land for the purpose of rebuilding upon it, and they proposed, with a view to improve the property, to erect a larger and more substantial building than the former one. They expended the surplus of Rs. 19,000 which was on their hands, but found that to complete the work a further sum of Rs. 20,000 was necessary. This they proposed to raise by mortgaging the trust property. They calculated that the whole mortgage-debt would be paid off out of the surplus rents of the trust property within three years. They filed this suit, praying that the Court would sanction the proposed mortgage. The Court, however, refused its sanction, and dismissed the suit.

[47] SUIT by trustees to obtain the sanction of the Court to raise money by mortgage of trust property.

The plaintiff stated that one Hormusji Dorabji, a Parsi inhabitant of Bombay, died, in January, 1833, leaving a will whereby he devised two immoveable properties situate in Bombay to trustees upon trust to receive the rents and profits, and after defraying all expenses for taxes and repairs, or for rebuilding of the same when necessary, to pay and appropriate the balance for the performance of certain religious rites and charities.

The material parts of the will are as follows :—

"I give, devise and bequeath unto my cousins Dinshawbhoy Nowroji, Nasarwanji Nowroji and Darashaw Nowroji, their heirs and assigns, the two following properties or estates, viz., an oart with six buildings standing thereon situate without the Fort in the city of Bombay, in Hanuman Gully, belonging to me, and one range or chawl of seven compartments situate in Jugjivan Kika Street, without the Fort of Bombay, also belonging to me, upon trust to receive the rents and profits of the same two properties, and after discharging out of the said rents all necessary charges for taxes, repairs and the like, hereby directing the said properties to be kept in thorough repairs and to be rebuilt when necessary, to pay and appropriate the balance of the moneys arising from the said rents in the performance of the following religious ceremonies and dinners :—Twelve Jasan ceremonies, one ceremony for the dead called Furvardin, one ceremony of Rapitan, one annual ceremony called Rojgar; and I hereby will and direct that my said trustees shall not have any power to sell or mortgage the said properties, or any part thereof, for any purpose whatever."

The plaint stated that the plaintiff and the defendants were then trustees of the said properties, that they had duly performed the said trusts from time to time, and that after all necessary expenses on that behalf had been defrayed, a surplus of Rs. 19,000 remained in their hands.

"The plaintiff and the defendants have lately been obliged to pull down one of the chawls or buildings standing upon the Hanuman Lane property by the said will bequeathed, with a view to rebuilding the same. The said chawl formerly produced a monthly rental of Rs. 56, but the plaintiff and defendants were advised that, having regard to the advantageous position of the said property, it would be of great benefit to the said trusts to erect a larger and more substantial building on the site thereof, and the plaintiff and defendants have accordingly commenced so to do, and have already erected the ground floor and one upper storey of such building and have expended thereon the larger part of the aforesaid sum of Rs. 19,000, but a further sum of Rs. 20,000 or thereabouts will be required for the completion of the same.

"The plaintiff is now desirous of borrowing the said sum of Rs. 20,000 from one [48] Nemchand Melapchand, who has offered to lend the same at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum upon a security of the mortgage of the same building, and the defendants are willing that the sum of Rs. 20,000 should be so raised, but the plaintiff and the defendants are so advised that it is doubtful whether, having regard to the terms of the said will, they have power so to mortgage any part of the said property, and that their proper course under the circumstances hereinbefore set out is to file this suit for the purpose of obtaining the sanction of this Honourable Court thereto.

"The plaintiff submits that the mortgage now proposed by him will greatly benefit the said trust properties, inasmuch as the building now being erected will when completed yield a monthly rental of at least Rs. 400, and the plaintiff believes that it will be possible to repay the whole of the said sum of Rs. 20,000 out of the surplus rents of the said properties within a period of three years, as by the statement of estimated receipts and expenditure hereto annexed will appear."

"That it may be declared by this Honourable Court that the accumulated surplus rents and profits of the trust properties hereinbefore referred to have been or may be properly expended upon the new building in the fourth paragraph hereof mentioned.

"That for the purpose of completing the said new building the plaintiff and the defendants as trustees of the said properties may be permitted under the sanction of this Honourable Court to raise the sum of Rs. 20,000 and to secure the repayment of the same, together with interest thereon at a rate not exceeding 7 per cent. per annum by a mortgage or charge upon the said new building."

JUDGMENT.

STARLING, J.—In this case the testator by his will devised property in Bombay to trustees on certain religious and charitable trusts. It is not necessary for me to give any opinion as to the validity of these trusts. I have been referred to a decree passed by the late Supreme Court on the 21st November, 1856, in which this will is mentioned. I do not find, however, that there is any declaration in that decree that the trusts are valid. They are merely recited, and one of the properties devised by the will is ordered to be sold. The validity of these trusts, therefore, remains to be determined, if at some future time the question should be raised.

[49] The trustees, however, now desire to build a chawl. This they clearly have power to do under the express terms of the will, and they may extend for that purpose the money in their hands. But they seek for something more. They ask the sanction of this Court to raise a large sum of money by mortgage of the trust property over and above the sum which has accumulated in their hands, for the purpose of erecting the new building, and the question is whether this sanction ought to be granted. The Advocate-General has cited several cases and has urged that they are authorities upon which the Court may act. I have carefully considered those cases, but I do not think they are applicable here. They are cases in which the proposed outlay would benefit the estate, and by that I mean would be for the advantage of present and future beneficiaries. In this case, however, there is no person who would be benefited by the outlay. The only result would be that the trustees would have a larger income in their hands over and above what is necessary for the trusts, because the income is now larger than is necessary for the purposes mentioned in the will. What is to be done with the surplus I do not know. The religious charities cannot be carried out more effectually, so there is no reason to require more money to be expended out of the rents for that purpose, still less for authorising a mortgage of the trust property in order that more rent may be obtained and the unnecessary surplus still further increased. A mortgage would be a burden on the property, and although no doubt at present it seems probable that it might be very rapidly paid off, the Court cannot allow the trust property to be the subject of speculation. It is impossible to foresee events. Circumstances might happen which would greatly depreciate house property generally in Bombay, or this property in particular. A mortgage might in that case become a burden too great for it, and the mortgagee would then have a right to come in and sell the property in order to realise his mortgage-debt. The Court would thus by its sanction have enabled the trustees to destroy the trusts created by the will. If I were to grant this application I would be making a precedent which might possibly be followed hereafter in other cases in which there would be greater risk to the trusts. I must [50] dismiss this suit without prejudice to any question as to the intended application by the trustees of the trust funds already accumulated in their hands.

Suit dismissed.

Practice—Procedure—Plaint, presentation of—Return of plaint for presentation to proper Court—Jurisdiction—High Court, power of, to interfere under Reg. II of 1827, s. 5, cl. 2.†

A Second Class Subordinate Judge returned a plaint for presentation in the proper Court on the ground that the subject-matter exceeded his pecuniary jurisdiction. The First Class Subordinate Judge to whom the plaint was then presented, also returned it for presentation in the proper Court on the ground that the subject-matter was below his pecuniary jurisdiction. The plaintiff thereupon presented the plaint to the successor of the Second Class Subordinate Judge who had originally returned the plaint. That Judge held that he had no jurisdiction to review the order passed by his predecessor. The plaintiff appealed, and the Judge rejected the appeal, holding that no appeal lay against an order refusing to grant a review.

The plaintiff applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction.

Held, that the case was one in which the High Court ought to interfere under cl. 2, s. 5 of Reg. II of 1827.

The order of the Second Class Subordinate Judge was set aside with a direction that he should admit the plaint as of the date of its original presentation.

APPLICATION under the High Court's extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 5, cl. 2, of Reg. II of 1827) against the order of Gilmour McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad.

The applicant presented a plaint to the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Viramgam, who on the 31st August, 1892, returned [51] it for presentation in the proper Court, on the ground that the value of the subject-matter in dispute being more than Rs. 5,000, the case was beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction.

The applicant then presented the plaint to the First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad. That Judge also returned it for presentation in the proper Court, finding that the value of the subject-matter was less than Rs. 5,000, and, therefore, not within his pecuniary jurisdiction.

The applicant again presented the plaint to the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Viramgam, who declined to entertain it on the ground that he had no authority to review the decision passed by his predecessor on the 31st August, 1892.

The applicant then appealed to the District Judge, praying that either the First Class Subordinate Judge or the Second Class Subordinate Judge should be directed to accept the plaint. The Judge rejected the appeal on the ground that the order refusing a review of judgment was not appealable.

The applicant now applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, contending that the Judge should have heard the appeal and that he should have directed the Subordinate Judge to accept the plaint.

A rule nisi was granted calling on the defendant in the suit to show cause why the order of the Judge should not be set aside.

Nagindas T. Marphatia appeared for the applicant in support of the rule:—Either the Second Class Subordinate Judge or the First Class Subordinate Judge has jurisdiction to accept the plaint. We contend that the Second Class Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that he had no jurisdiction. What determines the jurisdiction of the Court is the value of the claim as mentioned in the plaint and not the actual value of the property.

Goverdhanram M. Tripathi appeared for the opponent to show cause.—The present application under this Court's extraordinary jurisdiction cannot be entertained, because the order of the Second Class Subordinate Judge returning the plaint for presentation in the proper Court was appealable and the applicant ought to have appealed to District Court and then come up to the High Court in second appeal. So also when the First Class [52] Subordinate Judge returned the plaint, the applicant ought to have appealed to this Court. Those orders being appealable, the applicant cannot seek redress under the extraordinary jurisdiction. This application is against the order of the District Judge, which is perfectly correct. The original orders of the Second Class Subordinate Judge was apparently wrong, but the plaintiff ought to have sought redress in a proper form.

[FULTON, J., referred to s. 5, cl. 2, of Reg. II of 1827.]

That section has been repealed by Act XII of 1873, schedule, Part VII.

[FULTON, J., referred to Ganesh v. Ramchandra (1).]

There have been several cases in which that Regulation was referred to—Mahadaji v. Sonu (2); Shiva Nathaji v. Joma Kashinath (3); Satu v. Shivrambhat (4). It seems that the repealing Act XII of 1873 was not brought to the notice of the Court in those cases.

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—In this case the plaint was originally presented to the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Viramgam, who, thinking that the subject-matter exceeded Rs. 5,000, returned it for presentation in the proper Court. The plaintiff then went to the First Class Subordinate Judge, who, finding that the subject-matter was less than Rs. 5,000, again returned it for presentation to the proper Court. Thereupon the plaintiff went back to the subordinate Court at Viramgam, where there was a new Subordinate Judge, who was of opinion that he could not review his predecessor's decision. Upon this an appeal was made to the District Court against the final order of the Viramgam Court, but was rejected by the Judge, who held that no appeal lay against an order rejecting an application for review, and at the same time advised the plaintiff to apply to the High Court.

We think it would have been simpler if the District Judge had recommended the conversion of the appeal into one against the original order of the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Viramgam [53] and had excused the delay which was manifestly occasioned by a bona fide mistake as to the proper course to follow: but as all the proceedings are now before us, we are of opinion that this is a case in which we ought to interfere under cl. 2, s. 5 of Reg. II of 1827, on the principles explained in Mr. Justice Melvill's decision in Ganesh v. Ramchandra (1).

It is not disputed by Mr. Goverdhanram that the original order of the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Viramgam, which was passed without reference to the provisions of Act VII of 1887, was erroneous. We now set aside that order, and direct that the plaint be sent to the Subordinate Judge of Viramgam and be admitted by him and numbered and registered as duly presented on 27th June, 1892. All costs hitherto incurred in the Second Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Viramgam, in the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court, in the District Court, and in this Court, to be costs in the cause.

BAI BAIJI (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. BAI SANTOK (Original Defendant), *Respondent. [2nd October, 1894.]

Borah Mahomedans—Suni Borahs—Conversion, effect of—Hindu converts to Mahomedanism—Inheritance—Succession among such converts—Native Christians—Law applied to Native Christians prior to Indian Succession Act (X of 1865)—Custom and usage of inheritance among converts—Burden of proof—Evidence—Matter of public interest—Decrees—Evidence of custom—Practice.

The Suni Borah Mahomedan community of the Dhandhuka Taluka in Gujarat are governed by the Hindu law in matters of succession and inheritance.

Held, therefore, that in this community a widow is entitled to succeed to her husband's estate to the exclusion of a daughter or a step-daughter.

As to the law governing Hindu converts to Mahomedanism, the following principles may now be regarded as settled :—(1) Mahomedan law generally governs converts to that faith from Hinduism ; but (2) a well-established custom of such converts following the Hindu law of inheritance would override the general presumption. (3) This custom should be confined strictly to cases of succession and inheritance. (4) If any particular custom of succession be alleged which is at variance with the general law applicable to these communities, the burden of proof lies on the party alleging such special custom.

[54] If evidence is given as to general prevalence of Hindu rules of succession in a Mahomedan community in preference to the rules of Mahomedan law, the burden of proof is discharged, and it then rests with the party, disputing the particular Hindu usage in question, to show that it is excluded from the sphere of the proved general usage of the community.

Among Native Christians certain classes strictly retain the old Hindu usages, others retain these usages in a modified form, and others again wholly abandon them. Before the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) the Christian convert could elect to attach himself to any one of these particular classes, and he would be governed by the usage of the class to which he so attached himself—Abraham v. Abraham (2). These same principles are applied to the case of Hindu converts to Mahomedanism such as Khojas and Cutchi Memons.

The decrees of competent Courts are good evidence in matters of public interest, such as the existence of customs of succession in particular communities. Such decisions form an exception to the general rule, which excludes res inter alios actæ.

APPEAL from the decree of Rao Bahadur Lalshankar Umiashankar, First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad, in suit No. 314 of 1891.

The parties to the suit were members of the Borah community of Ranpur, in the Dhandhuka Taluka, who were Rajputs converted to Mahomedanism several centuries ago.

The plaintiff was the daughter and defendant was the widow of one Nur Bapu who died at Ranpur on 23rd December, 1889. The plaintiff was the step-daughter of the defendant.

The plaintiff sought to recover the whole of the property belonging to her deceased father, alleging that according to the custom of her caste a daughter was entitled to succeed to her father's estate to the exclusion of his widow; she also alleged that her father had made a will bequeathing to her the whole of his property. She prayed for the whole of the said property, and, in the alternative, for one-half, as a legal sharer under the Mahomedan law.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the caste to which the parties belonged was governed by the Hindu law, and not by the Mahomedan law, in matters of succession and inheritance; that according to the Hindu law she had a widow's estate in her deceased husband's property; that the plaintiff had no such preferential title as she set up according to the custom of the caste, and that the said will was a fabrication.

[55] The Subordinate Judge found that there was a long-established custom among the Borahs of Ranpur to follow the ordinary Hindu law of succession and inheritance; that according to this custom the defendant was the heir of her deceased husband; and that the plaintiff had failed to prove either the will or the special custom on which she relied.

The Subordinate Judge, therefore, rejected the plaintiff's claim.

Against this decision the plaintiff preferred an appeal to the High Court.

Viccaji (with him Nagindas Tulsidas), for appellant.

Branson (with him Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kritikar), for respondent.

The following authorities were cited in argument:—Abraham v. Abraham (1); Jowala Buksh v. Dharum Singh (2); Mahomed Sidick v. Haji Ahmed (3); Ahmedbhoy Hubibbhoy v. Cassumbhoy Ahmedbhoy (4); Raja Bahadur v. Bishen Dayal (5).

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—The appellant in this case is the daughter, and the respondent is the widow, of the deceased Nur Bapu, who died in December, 1889. Nur Bapu belonged to a community of Rajputs who were converted to Mahomedanism some centuries ago, and are known as Suni Borahs in the northern part of Gujarat. The appellant sought to recover possession of the whole of her father's estate to the exclusion of his widow under her father's will, and also under a special custom, and in the alternative she claimed a half share of the property under Mahomedan law. The title based on the will and on the custom was disallowed by the lower Court, and the appellant's counsel did not press these points on our attention, but he rested his case solely on the ground that the parties were bound by Mahomedan law, and not by Hindu law or usage, as the respondent contended. This latter contention was upheld by the lower Court.

[56] The only issue that is raised in appeal is, whether the strict Mahomedan law or the Hindu law and usage governs the succession to the estate of the deceased Nur Bapu as a member of the Suni Borah community of Dhandhuka Taluka in the Ahmedabad District.

The appellant's counsel very properly urged that the burden of proving that a community of people professing the Mahomedan faith were not governed by the Mahomedan law of succession, but by the usages and customs of the old Hindu faith to which their ancestors belonged, rested on the defendant. At the same time we do not think he was right in maintaining that this usage or custom should be proved in regard to the particular relationship which the parties to the present suit bear to one another. If the evidence is clear on the point of the general prevalence of the Hindu rules of succession in preference to the rules of Mahomedan law, the burden of proof will be discharged, and it will then be for the appellant to show that this particular relationship was excluded from the sphere of the proved general usage of the community.

The leading case on the subject of the succession of converted Hindus is Abraham v. Abraham (1), where it was held that though, by the fact of his conversion, Hindu law ceases to have any binding force upon the convert, yet it does not necessarily involve a complete change in the relations of the convert in the matter of his rights and interest, and his power over property. The convert, though not bound by Hindu law, may, "by his course of conduct after conversion, show by what law he intended to be governed as to these matters." This case related to Native Christians, among whom certain classes strictly retain their old Hindu usages, others retain their usages in a modified form, and others again wholly abandon those usages. The Christian convert could, before the Indian Succession Act was passed, elect to attach himself to any one of these particular classes, and he would have been governed by the usage of the class to which he so attached himself. The case of Jowala Buksh v. Dharum Singh (2) was also cited on appellant's behalf, but it has no [57] application, for it only lays down that a single family cannot make a special customary law for itself.

The same principles which govern the case of Hindu converts to Christianity have been applied to the case of Hindu converts to Mahomedanism in this Presidency, such as the Khojas and Cutchi Memons. The first case was decided by the Supreme Court so far back as 1845—Khojas and Memons' case (3); and it has been followed since in a succession of cases—Gangbai v. Thavar Mulla (4); Hirbai v. Gorbai (5); Rahimatbai v. Hirbai (6); In re Haji Ismail Haji Abdula (7); Ashabai v. Haji Tyeb Haji Rahimtulla (8); Abdul Cadur Haji Mahomed v. C. A. Turner (9); Mahomed Sidick v. Haji Ahmed (10); Ahmedbhoy Hubibbhoy v. Cassumbhoy Ahmedbhoy (11); Raja Bahadur v. Bishen Dayal (12).

The principles laid down in these decisions may be thus stated, (1) that, though the Mahomedan law generally governs converts to that faith from the Hindu religion, yet (2) a well-established custom of such converts following the Hindu law of inheritance would override the general presumption; (3) that this custom should, however, be confined strictly to cases of succession and inheritance; (4) and that if any particular usage, at variance with the General Hindu law applicable to these communities in matters of succession, be alleged to exist, the burden of proof lies on the party alleging such special custom. These principles may now be regarded as settled, and they govern the presumptions of law and the burden of proof in cases like the present, if the Borah community to which the parties belong are shown by the evidence in this case to occupy the same position and status as the Khojas and Cutchi Memons.

This is a question of fact, and on this point we feel satisfied that the lower Court has correctly appreciated the oral and written evidence adduced on both sides. The decrees of competent Courts are good evidence in matters of public interest, such as the existence of customs of succession in particular communities; and [58] such decisions form an exception to the general rule which excludes res inter alios actæ—Madhub Chunder Nath Biswas v. Tomee Bewah (1). Exhibits 49 and 50 are copies of two such decrees in which the cases came before this Court, and though no judgments were recorded, the decrees of the lower Courts affirming the custom alleged by the respondent in this case of succession in accordance with Hindu law, were upheld. The judgment in Ex. 50 refers to a number of other decisions of the lower Courts which have been perused by us. In one of these cases (No. 855 of 1886 of the Dhandhuka Court), the parties were Borahs, and the dispute was between the widow and the nephews of a deceased Borah in the Dhandhuka Taluka. The judgment recorded refers to a series of eleven decisions, one of them dating as far back as 1818, in which it was held that these Borahs follow Hindu customs of inheritance, and, on the strength of this custom, the widow's claim to inherit was upheld as against the separated nephews, and the decision was confirmed in appeal. The widow's claim was similarly upheld in appeal No. 91 of 1867 by the District Court of Ahmedabad, on the ground of a custom of succession admittedly not in conformity with Mahomedan law. In suit No. 1107 of 1883, the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Ahmedabad upheld the right of a widow to succeed to the estate of her deceased husband to the exclusion of her daughter and nephews, solely on the ground of ancient custom. It is not necessary to refer to the other decisions, copies of which were produced before us by the respondent's pleader, and which are all referred to in Ex. 50.

Looking at the oral evidence in the case, it may be of use to note that the appellant-plaintiff herself did not rest her claim solely on the Mahomedan law. She also set up a custom which she failed to prove. Her witnesses were unable to cite a single case where a daughter shared the estate of her father, either with her brothers or her mother. Plaintiff's witness No. 22 admitted that there had been no re-marriages in the community of Dhandhuka Borahs to which he and the parties belong. Witnesses Exs. 23, 25 did indeed state that a daughter took [59] her father's estate excepting the widow's $\frac{1}{8}$th share, but they cited no instances. Witness No. 25 deposed that he had given a share to his sister, but this witness admitted later on that in a former suit he might have deposed that he did not know of any case where nephews excluded the widow as heir, and that the gift to his sister was made by his and her father. Witness No. 26 did not know of any case in which sisters received a share from their brothers as heirs to their father. Witness

No. 27 stated that there had been no case in which the daughter inherited her father's estate, and excluded the mother. This witness was a party with the deceased Nur Bapu in a suit which ultimately came before the High Court, which Court confirmed the decision of the lower Courts. As noticed by the lower Court, this witness's statement of the customary law was distinctly in favour of the general application of the Hindu law in matters of succession. Mere opinion-evidence is entitled to no weight in such matters, and the custom must be proved by specific instances which plaintiff's witnesses have failed to adduce—Rahimatbai v. Hirbai (1).

Defendant's witnesses, on the other hand, gave a large number of such instances where brothers had excluded sisters, and also where the mother, i.e., the widow of the deceased, excluded her daughter. The Mookhi (witness Ex. 18) cited the instances of nine out of fifty families of this community at Rappur, where brothers had excluded sisters. He was unable to give specific instances of the settlement of disputed succession between daughters and mothers, excepting the case of his own wife, who succeeded to her father's property after the death of her mother. The next witness, Ex. 31, gave three instances in his own family and two in other families in which the daughter was excluded by the mother. The absence of all disputes on this point is itself strong evidence that the custom is well-established. Witness Ex. 32 gave three instances from other families and one in his own, where the mother succeeded to the exclusion of daughters. Witness Ex. 39 cited an instance within his knowledge of the exclusion of a daughter by her mother. Witness Ex. 40 gave evidence to the same effect.

[60] The oral evidence in the case thus fully corroborates the written evidence of the decrees noticed above, and shows that the customary rules of succession in this community are based on a general adherence to the Hindu law, and are not in conformity with the rules of Mahomedan succession. These customs, having been affirmed by the Civil Courts for over eighty years, must be held to have acquired the force of legal and obligatory customs. The relations between a daughter and step-mother must be governed by the same rules which are shown to regulate those of mother and daughter, as long as no special custom at variance with the general custom is proved.

For all these reasons we reject the appeal, and confirm the decree of the lower Court with costs on appellant.

FULTON, J.—The question for our consideration is, whether the Mahomedan Borahs of Ranpur in Dhandhuka, to which community the parties belong, are governed as regards the succession of widows by Hindu or by Mahomedan law. Mr. Vicaji doubted whether Hindus converted to Mahomedanism, as appears to have been the case with these Borahs several centuries ago, could retain the Hindu rules of succession, but I think it is well settled that a community may be subject to a custom of succession at variance with the ordinary law. The only point for consideration is, whether the custom set up by the defendant is satisfactorily proved.

That the parties have hitherto not believed that they were governed by Mahomedan law, seems clear. The plaint alleges a custom inconsistent with that law on which it falls back only in the event of the custom not being proved. This fact, though not sufficient to shift the burden of proof, tends to lighten its pressure on the defendant, showing, as it does, that the plaintiff and her advisers were conscious that in matters of succession Mahomedan law was not usually followed. It still, however, rests on the defendant to prove her custom, but I agree with the Subordinate Judge that she has done so. The defendant's witnesses Nos. 28, 31 and 40 give instances in which the Hindu law of succession has been applied. On the other hand, not a single instance has been shown in which any succession at all resembling [61] that prescribed by Mahomedan law has taken place; and it is clear that the application of this law would long ago have broken up the property as could easily have been proved if it had been followed. In the cases referred to by the Subordinate Judge, suit No. 854 of 1878 and appeal No. 176 of 1887 (Ex. 50), the parties were Borahs and it was held that their custom of succession was according to Hindu and not according to Mahomedan law. The evidence of Polka Mulji (Ex. 40) seems specially significant, for it shows that the sisters of Nur Bapu did not get the shares in the family property to which they would have been entitled under Mahomedan law, and this evidence was not contradicted as might without difficulty have been done if it had been incorrect.

Looking to these circumstances I think it sufficiently proved that the succession of the Borahs of Ranpur is regulated by Hindu law, subject possibly to a special custom excluding altogether daughters and other females entitled by Hindu law to take more than a widow's interest. Whether this special custom really prevails, it is unnecessary to consider in this case, for there seems no doubt that Hindu law is applicable as between the widow of the last holder and his daughter.

On these grounds I concur in confirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge with costs.

Decree confirmed.

Debts contracted by the guardian of a minor for a pilgrimage not undertaken in the discharge of an urgent spiritual duty which it was obligatory on him to perform, are not necessaries for which the minor would be held liable.

A guardian has no authority to acknowledge a debt on behalf of his ward so as to give the creditor a fresh start for the period of limitation, as he is not an agent on the part of his ward within the meaning of s. 19 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

THESE were cross-appeals from the decision of Rao Bahadur Lalshankar Umiashankar, First-Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad.

The plaintiffs sued to recover from the defendant and his estate a sum of Rs. 39,040-10-9, being the balance due for moneys lent and jewellery sold to the defendant's mother and guardian during his minority.

The defendant was the Talukdar of Sanand and Koth. His father, Bhagvantsangji, died on the 3rd November, 1869. The defendant was born on 15th January, 1870.

On the 24th July, 1872, defendant's mother, Rupaliba, obtained a certificate under Act XX of 1864 appointing her guardain of his person and administratrix of his property.

In 1883, Rupaliba, acting as guardian of her minor son, opened an account with the plaintiffs' firm which supplied her with money, jewellery and other articles from time to time.

The moneys were borrowed (1) for the purpose of a pilgrimage undertaken by Rupaliba to Benares and other sacred places in Upper India, and (2) on the occasion of the marriage of the defendant, which took place in 1888.

The plaintiffs' account was adjusted from time to time. The last adjustment was made on 5th November, 1888, when a balance [63] of Rs. 32,936-1-3 was found due to the plaintiffs' firm. This adjustment was signed by Rupaliba as guardian of her minor son.

In April, 1890, the plaintiffs pressed for payment, and threatened legal proceedings, when Rupaliba pledged with them ornaments worth Rs. 20,000, or thereabouts, as a security for the debt.

On 11th November, 1890, plaintiffs and defendant's guardian Rupaliba referred certain disputes as to interest, &c., to arbitration, and on the 15th November, 1890, the arbitrators made an award directing the defendant's guardian to pay the plaintiffs Rs. 36,401-9-0 within a month. The award was filed in Court and a decree passed in terms of the award.

In January, 1891, defendant attained majority, and on his application the decree on the award was set aside, and the plaintiffs were referred to a regular suit to enforce the award.

The plaintiffs thereupon filed the present suit on the 5th November, 1891, claiming Rs. 36,041-9 as principal and Rs. 2,639-1-9 as interest. They sought to recover the same from the pledged ornaments, from the defendant personally, and from his other property. They relied on the award and also stated the various previous dealings with the defendant's guardian.

(1) 17 M. 221.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that his guardian had no authority to contract debts on his behalf without the sanction of the Court; that he was not liable for the debts so contracted; that the debts were not incurred for necessary purposes; that the award was collusive and fraudulent; that the guardian was personally liable for the debts in question; that the claim was time-barred, and that the plaintiff could not be allowed to base his claim, in the alternative, on the award and on the previous dealings.

The Subordinate Judge held that the grounds relied upon by the plaintiffs not being inconsistent, there was no objection to the alternative nature of the claim; that the suit was not barred by limitation; that the debts contracted by the defendant's guardian were for legal and necessary purposes; that the pilgrimage and marriage expenses were not extravagant; that several large sums lent by the plaintiffs had gone to increase the defendant's [64] estate; that some of the ornaments purchased with the plaintiffs' money were still with the defendant and his wife; that the debts were, therefore, binding on the defendant; that though the award was collusive, the plaintiffs were entitled to fall back on their original dealings. He, therefore, passed a decree in plaintiffs' favour for Rs. 33,907-8-6, to be recovered from the ornaments pledged, as well as from other moveable property of the defendant. He rejected the rest of the plaintiffs' claim.

Against this decision the defendant appealed to the High Court. The plaintiffs also appealed in respect of the items disallowed by the Subordinate Judge.

Lang (Advocate-General) and Inverarity (with Messrs. Bhaishankar and Kanga), for appellant (defendant).

Branson (with Manekshah Jehangirshah), for the respondent (plaintiff).

Lang (Advocate-General).—We contend, in the first place, that there is no cause of action against the defendant. There is no privity of contract between plaintiffs and defendant. It is found as a fact that Rs. 1,25,000 or thereabouts was borrowed by the defendant's guardian for purposes of marriage and pilgrimage. This expenditure is on the face of it extravagant. It is unreasonable and unnecessary. This enormous debt was contracted by the guardian without the sanction of the Court. The defendant's mother had obtained a certificate of guardianship under the Bombay Minors' Act (XX of 1864). Under s. 29 of the Act it is expressly provided that marriage expenses shall not without the sanction of the Court involve a minor's estate in debt. That being the case, the debt contracted for defendant's marriage without the sanction of the Court is absolutely null and void. For such a debt the guardian would be personally liable—Morley's Digest, Vol. I, p. 276; Farhall v. Farhall (1); Hooper v. Eyles (2). Nor had the guardian any authority to borrow for pilgrimage purposes and make the estate liable. The debts contracted for this purpose are not binding on the minor. The plaintiffs have mistaken their remedy. They ought to have [65] proceeded against the guardian. The guardian would be entitled to be recouped out of the minor's estate for all moneys properly borrowed. As to limitation, the guardian had no authority to acknowledge a debt on behalf of the minor. She was not his agent duly authorized in this behalf within the meaning of s. 19 of Act XV of 1877—Azuddin Hossain v. Lloyd (3); Wajibun v. Kadir Buksh (4). The claim is, therefore, time-barred.

Inverarity, on the same side.—What is the position of Rupaliba apart from the Bombay Minors' Act (XX of 1864) ? As a guardian she could only contract for the benefit of the minor's estate. She had no power to contract so as to impose a personal liability on her infant ward—Wahela Rajsangji v. Shekh Masludin (1). As observed by the Privy Council, a guardian has no greater powers here than in England to bind the ward by personal covenants. That being so, the defendant is not liable to satisfy any part of the debts contracted by Rupaliba. The suit is based on the award. That award is found to be collusive and fraudulent. The suit ought, therefore, to have been dismissed. The lower Court ought not to have allowed the plaintiffs to fall back on the original transctions.

Branson (with him Manekshah Jehangirshah) for respondent (plaintiff).—The suit is not barred by limitation. The acknowledgments made by Rupaliba from time to time save the bar of limitation. As guardian and manager of the minor's estate, Rupaliba had authority to acknowledge the debt so as to give a fresh starting point to limitation—Sobahanadri Appa Rau v. Sriramulu (2); Chinnaya Nayudu v. Gurunatham Chetti (3), Bhasker Tatya Shet v. Vijalal Nathu (4). The debts were incurred by Rupaliba for the benefit of the minor, chiefly for the purpose of his marriage. Under the Hindu law the marriage of a minor is a legitimate cause of expense, in regard to which a guardian has power to bind him—Juggessur Sircar v. Nilumbur (5); W. and B. 872; Tagore Law Lectures for 1877, pp. 279, 338. A minor is bound by the [66] acts of his guardian done bona fide and for his interest—Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Mussumat Babooee Munraj Koonweree (6); Nathuram v. Shoma (7); Mayne's Hindu law, s 196. It is found as a fact that the marriage expenses were reasonable, regard being had to the rank and position of the defendant. There are two kinds of guardians appointed under Act XX of 1864. One is a guardian of the person; the other a guardian or administrator of the estate of a minor. Section 29 of the Act does not apply where a guardian of the person of a minor is appointed. As Rupaliba was a guardian of the person of her minor son, she was not bound to obtain the sanction of the Court for the debts incurred for the purpose of the minor's marriage. The moneys she borrowed were applied for the benefit of the minor. With these moneys she purchased ornaments for the use of the minor and his wife. These ornaments are still in the defendant's possession. He cannot be allowed in equity to repudiate his guardian's transactions and at the same time retain the benefit arising from these transactions—Sreemutty Ahfutoonissa v. Goluk Chunder Sen (8); Shurrut Chunder v. Rajkissen (9); Til Koer v. Roy Anund Kishore (10); Watson and Company v. Sham Lal Mitter (11); Girraj Bakhsh v. Kazi Hamid Ali (12); Bai Kesar v. Bai Ganga (13).

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—The plaintiffs sued to recover Rs. 39,040-10-9 out of certain ornaments pledged to them and from the defendant personally. They based their cause of action on an award, dated the 15th November, 1890, or, in the alternative, on an account transaction with the defendant's mother who was his guardian during his minority.

(13) 8. B.H.C.R. A.C. J. 31.

The defendant, amongst other defences, urged that the suit was time-barred; that he was not liable for debts contracted by his guardian during his minority; that the award was fraudulent, and that a claim, in the alternative, on the award and on the previous transactions would not lie.

[67] The First Class Subordinate Judge decided, in the first instance, that there was no objection to the alternative nature of the claim, and, after hearing the evidence, held that the claim was not time-barred; that the award was not properly arrived at: that Rs. 27,147-3-9 were borrowed for purposes that would bind the defendant, and that including interest the plaintiffs were entitled to recover Rs. 33,907-8-6 from the defendant's moveable estate. He thereupon gave a decree entitling the plaintiffs to recover from the pledged ornaments and other moveable property of the defendant Rs. 33,907-8-6, with simple interest thereon at 7½ per cent. per annum from the date of the decree till payment. He also awarded costs in proportion.

Against this decree the defendant has appealed on grounds similar to those urged in his written statement, and the plaintiffs have also appealed in respect of the items disallowed by the Subordinate Judge.

The appeals were argued before us by the Advocate General and Mr. Inverarity for the defendant and by Mr. Branson for the plaintiffs, with permission to the latter to argue further, if necessary, in respect of the items disallowed by the First Class Subordinate Judge.

The circumstances out of which this suit has arisen may be briefly summarised as follows:—This defendant is the Thakur of Sanad and Koth and is one of the chief talukdars in the Ahmedabad District. His position as posthumous son of his father was seriously contested and was finally established in 1874 after protracted litigation, in which his mother Rupaliba had to undergo criminal prosecution. By the will of her husband executed shortly before his death this lady was nominated guardian of the child whose birth was then expected, and on the 24th July, 1872, she obtained from the District Judge a certificate, under Act XX of 1864, appointing her guardian of his person and administratrix of his estate. About 1883 she entered into an account with the plaintiffs' firm which supplied her from time to time with money and jewellery until the account was closed on the 5th November, 1888, with a balance due to the firm of Rs. 32,936-1-3. In 1890, shortly before the majority of the [68] defendant, which occurred on the 15th January, 1891, the plaintiffs began to press Rubaliba for payment. On the 6th April, 1890, she sent them a large quantity of jewellery said to be worth Rs. 20,966, which she authorized them to sell if they were not paid the full amount of their claim by the 15th October. Subsequently, on the 11th November, the plaintiffs on the one side and Rupaliba on the other referred the question in dispute between them to arbitrators, who on the 15th idem made an award in the plaintiffs' favour entitling them to receive Rs. 36,401-9 from the defendant and to recover the amount from the pledged ornaments. An attempt was made to get this award filed in Court, but on appeal to the High Court the application was rejected. This suit was then instituted on the 5th November, 1891. The reference and award have now been made a cause of action, but the award has been held invalid, and no arguments have been addressed to us in support of it, though Mr. Branson for the plaintiffs contended that there was nothing collusive about it from which any opinion unfavourable to the honesty of the plaintiffs should be drawn. Apart from the question whether the guardian of the defendant had authority to refer the matter in dispute to arbitration, on which it is unnecessary to express an opinion, we think that the Subordinate Judge's reason for refusing to act on the award is amply supported by the evidence of the arbitrators themselves.

For the defendant Mr. Inverarity contended that as the award was held bad, the plaintiffs should not have been allowed to fall back on their claim based on the account, but on this point we overruled him as intimated at the hearing. The plaint contained a prayer based on alternative causes of action, and this fact was clearly understood by the defendant, as appears from the 14th paragraph of his written statement. Under these circumstances there seemed no objection to the plaintiffs relying on alternative grounds which, as pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, are not inconsistent.

Having thus dealt with certain preliminary points in this case, we now turn to the main questions, which are as follows:—

1. Whether Rupaliba could bind the defendant personally to pay the debts incurred?

[69] 2. Whether she was competent to pledge his ornaments, and did validly pledge them?

3. Whether the claim is time-barred, either as against the defendant personally, or to recover payment by the sale of the pledged ornaments?

4. Whether any, and if so, which of the items entered in the account were for necessaries and were not liable to be disallowed as forbidden by law?

5. What sum, if any, the plaintiffs are entitled to recover (a) from the defendant personally and (b) by the sale of the pledged ornaments?

On the first of these issues the decision must, we think, be in the negative. The remarks of the Privy Council in Waghela Rajsangji v. Shekh Masludin (1) are clear on this point as follows:—"Now it was most candidly stated by Mr. Mayne, who argued the case on behalf of the respondent, that there is not in Indian law any rule which gives a guardian and manager greater power to bind the infant ward by a personal covenant than exists in English law. In point of fact, the matter must be decided by equity and good conscience, generally interpreted to mean the rules of English law if found applicable to Indian society and circumstances. Their Lordships are not aware of any law in which the guardian has such a power, nor do they see why it should be so in India. They conceive that it would be a very improper thing to allow the guardian to make covenants in the name of his ward, so as to impose a personal liability upon the ward." With these remarks before us it seems hardly necessary to discuss the matter further. Act XX of 1864 certainly gives no power to a guardian or administrator to bind the ward by personal covenants. The learned Subordinate Judge referred to s. 18 of the Act, which subject to certain restrictions gives the administrator the same powers in the management of the estate as might have been exercised by the proprietor if not a minor, but as this section merely deals with the management of the estate it does not confer any power of rendering the [70] minor personally liable for debts contracted. It was suggested in argument that Rupaliba as natural guardian of her son and as appointed to the office by her husband's will had powers irrespective of the Act. But the will gave her no power to bind her son personally, and probably would have been ultra vires if it had purported to do so, and no rule of Hindu law was pointed out which gives a mother such power over her son. Cases in which mortgages and other dispositions of the property by a guardian have been held binding on the ward, do not affect the question, for the power of the guardian subject to certain restrictions to alienate the property for certain purposes was not disputed. The case of Nathuram v. Shoma Chhagan (1) referred to by Mr. Branson seems in no way inconsistent with the general rule, as it merely shows that the guardian of a ward according to Hindu law may impose a charge on the deceased father's estate for expenses connected with the father's funeral ceremonies. While holding, however, that a minor cannot be bound personally by contracts entered into by a guardian which do not purport to charge his estate, we do not think it follows that he is necessarily exempt from liability—see Marlow v. Pitfield (2). If the debts were incurred for necessaries (3), he would, we believe, be bound to pay them on the general principle embodied in s. 68 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), as his liability would not probably be affected by the fact that the loans were advanced at the instance of the guardian—see Juggessur v. Nilumbur (4). Her contract on his behalf might be ineffectual like one entered into by himself, but the liability to discharge debts incurred for necessaries would remain: see Walter v. Everard (5). The necessity for them would determine whether or not he was bound to repay them, and not, we think, the reasonable belief of the lender that they were for necessary purposes. The case of Hunoomanpersaud v. Mussumat Babooee (6) was one in which the guardian had exercised her powers of mortgaging the estate and the ruling that in respect of such a transaction a bona fide creditor should not suffer when he had acted with due caution, cannot, in our opinion [71] be extended to a case in which it is sought to make the ward personally liable for the debt. To the latter case the decision of Barnes v. Toye (7) seems more applicable, in which it was held that where an infant was sued for the price of goods supplied to him on credit, he might for the purpose of showing that they were not necessaries give evidence that when the order was given he was already sufficiently supplied with goods of a similar description, and that it was immaterial whether the plaintiff did or did not know of the existing supply. See also Johnstone v. Marks (8).

On the second question we think that Rupaliba as guardian and administratrix had power to pledge the ornaments for purposes beneficial to the minor, but not as a security for money previously borrowed, which the minor was under no obligation to pay. The general rule is that a Hindu guardian can pledge the property of her ward for beneficial purposes, and in respect of moveables there is no prohibition in s. 18 of the Act. But the contracting of debt for marriage expenses without the sanction of the District Court is forbidden. However necessary, then, such expenses might be according to the standard of expenditure recognized by the class to which the defendant belongs, no obligation could be imposed on the minor's estate in respect of them, and no pledge of his property to secure debts incurred on account of such expenses would be valid. Mr. Branson contended that the prohibition in s. 29 applied only to marriage debts incurred by a guardian of the person and did not limit the discretion of the administrator of the estate, and that as Rupaliba was administratrix as well as guardian, she could borrow for the marriage in the former capacity, if not in the latter. We do not think, however, that we should accede to this reasoning, as it would defeat the object of s. 29, which evidently is to limit marriage debts to the extent which the District Court may consider reasonable. Moreover, it seems inconsistent with the simple words of the law, which declares that marriage expenses shall in no case without the sanction of the Civil Court (i. e., the District Court, vide s. 34) involve the minor's estate in debt. The contention that in incurring [72] these marriage debts the guardian could fall back on her powers as a Hindu mother cannot, we think, be maintained after she had thought proper to accept the position of guardian and administratrix under Act XX of 1864—Shurrut Chunder v. Rajkissen Mookerjee (1). The object of s. 29 was clearly to keep the marriage expenses within due limits. What those limits should be is no doubt a matter of opinion. The learned Subordinate Judge thinks that an expenditure of Rs. 100,000 on the marriage was reasonable. In this view possibly the opinion of Rajput Chiefs would coincide, for their extravagance on marriages is notorious; but it is doubtful whether the District Court, which alone had jurisdiction to determine the expediency of such expenditure, would have concurred. The net income of the estate is not clearly established, for it seems doubtful whether Devkaran, when estimating the income at Rs. 1,30,000 (Ex. 108) had taken into account the Government dues of about Rs. 55,000, to which he refers in the latter part of his evidence (Ex. 108). But even if the net income were Rs. 1,30,000, the expenditure would seem to have been very heavy, bearing in mind that apparently ready money was not available to meet it. Various efforts have from time to time been made to curtail such marriage expenses. The subject is referred to in the first volume of Tod's Rajasthan, p. 547, which shows that so long ago as the end of the 17th century efforts were made to limit these expenses. Under the circumstances, we doubt whether we should be justified, on the evidence before us, in treating as necessary such a large expenditure as seems to have been incurred on the defendant's marriage; but however this may be, for the purposes of this case, it must, we think, be held that whether reasonable or not, the marriage debts cannot support a pledge of the minor's ornaments, because they were not sanctioned by the District Court. Cases were referred to, such as Sreemutty Ahfutoonnissa v. Goluck Chunder (2), in which it was held that where money had been borrowed for necessary purposes and improperly charged on the immoveable property in contravention of the provisions of Act XL of 1858, which correspond with s. 18 of the Bombay Act, the ward was in equity bound to [73] pay off such charges before recovering the property. But such cases do not seem applicable, as they were decided on the ground that the object of the debts was legitimate. Here, so far as the marriage debts were concerned, it seems to us that they were forbidden by law. Consequently, we think that these marriage debts, the payment of which could not be enforced against the minor's estate, do not constitute a valid charge on the ornaments.

In regard to the pilgrimage debts, we think the objection prevails that they cannot be treated as necessaries. Doubtless, we have to determine what are necessaries according to Hindu ideas, and a pilgrimage may be looked upon as beneficial. But we think we should be extending the meaning of the term "necessaries" very much beyond the meaning that has hitherto been assigned to the word if we were to sanction as a binding charge on the defendant a debt contracted for a pilgrimage not undertaken in discharge of any urgent spiritual duty, which it was obligatory on him to perform. No authority has been shown to us amongst cases decided, in which a guardian has been allowed to borrow money on his ward's behalf for such a purpose. Turning to the evidence it is difficult to find what was the necessity for a pilgrimage at such an inconvenient time (when it may be presumed the treasury was empty, as otherwise there could have been no need to borrow). Rupaliba deposes on the subject as follows:—"I had made a vow to make a pilgrimage when the case against me in connection with the Kunwar Saheb was pending. Consequently I went on that pilgrimage." There is, however, nothing to show that there was any need to carry out her vow at the particular time selected, when she went with considerable pomp, taking with her her son and 75 followers; nor does it appear that the defendant was bound by the vow. In such a matter a guardian ought to exercise ordinary prudence. Expenditure that might be proper, if money were plentiful, ceases to be so when it has to be met by borrowing. We cannot then hold that the pilgrimage expenses can be treated as necessaries so as to bind the defendant to repay them.

Besides the pilgrimage and marriage expenses there are some other items, about which we are not prepared at present to express an opinion. If it can be shown that they were actually applied to [74] necessary purposes, and were binding debts on the minor when in 1890 Rupaliba sent the ornaments to the plaintiffs, these ornaments would doubtless be pledged for them and could be sold to pay them off. But, unless it can be shown that they were binding debts when the deposit took place, it is clear, we think, that the ornaments were not legally pledged. The loans were not advanced in the first instance on their security. The cases, therefore, quoted to show that where a guardian borrows money on mortgage the lender is only bound to make reasonable enquiries as to the beneficial nature of the loans and is not bound to see to their application, do not seem relevant. Here, the money was not borrowed on mortgage or pledge. It was borrowed on personal security, and by a subsequent deposit of the ornaments to avert a suit the guardian could not charge them, unless the minor was at the time of such deposit liable to be sued for the debt. We find, therefore, that there was no valid pledge of ornaments except in so far as there may have been debts due in 1890 by the defendant personally for necessaries supplied to him or for money lent and expended on necessaries.

Having regard to the foregoing opinions the question of limitation becomes one of less importance, but as the matter was argued, and as it may still determine the defendant's liability in case any of the items are found to be on account of necessaries, it is expedient to dispose of it. It appears to us that the acknowledgment of the guardian would not bring within time items otherwise time-barred, as she was not the agent of her ward. On this point there seems to be a difference between the recent decision of the Madras High Court in Sobhanadri Appa Rau v. Sriramulu(1) and the earlier decisions of the Calcutta High Court in Azuddin Hossain v. Lloyd (2) and Wajibun v. Kadir Buksh (3), but with the utmost deference to the opinion of the learned Judge who decided the former we think that the decisions of the Calcutta High Court are more consistent with s. 19 of the Limitation Act. They do not seem at variance with Chinnaya Nayudu v. Gurunatham Chetti (1) and Bhasker Tatya Shet v. Vijalal Nathu (2), [75] in which it was held that the manager of a Hindu family could by his acknowledgment prolong the period of limitation. The manager may, for the purposes of s. 19, be the agent of his adult co-parceners, but it is difficult to see how the guardian of a minor can be treated as an agent. It was, we believe, admitted in argument that Rupaliba's power to prolong the period of limitation depended on her power to bind the minor by her contracts. The suit, therefore, seems time-barred so far as the defendant's personal liability is concerned, except in respect of the small item borrowed after 4th November, 1888. If the pledge is good in respect of any items, the suit is not time-barred to enforce payment by the sale of the ornaments, which were only deposited in 1890.

On the 4th issue it is unnecessary to say more, as the question of necessaries and the effect of s. 29 of the Minors' Act have already been sufficiently discussed. Mr. Branson referred to the defendant's evidence, from which it appears that he is in possession of ornaments obtained for him from the plaintiffs at the time of his marriage, and contended that it would be very inequitable that he should keep them without payment. It is greatly to be regretted that the defendant should retain them on these terms, but it seems impossible to give the plaintiffs relief in respect of them. Had they sued within the period of limitation to recover them on the ground that they were not meant to be given gratuitously, and that the defendant could not retain them without paying for them, they might perhaps have got a decree; but they have not done so. We have come to this conclusion with hesitation, but the reluctance with which we have arrived at it has been somewhat lessened by the consideration that the plaintiffs have on their side received ornaments admittedly valued at Rs. 20,966-0-0 which after this lapse of time it may possibly be difficult for the defendant to reclaim, denying, as he does, the validity of the contract on which they are said to have been delivered.

Subject, then, to the allowance of any items for which the ornaments may be found to have been duly pledged, the decree must be reversed, and the claim rejected, with costs throughout.

An application for execution of a decree made by the legal representatives of a deceased decree-holder, without the production of a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), is nevertheless one made " in accordance with law " within the meaning of art. 179, cl. 4, of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

SECOND appeal from the order of A. S. Moriarty, Acting District Judge of Khandesh, in appeal No. 96 of 1893.

On the 19th September, 1887, one Balkishan Shiwa Bakas obtained a decree in the Court of the Joint Second Class Subordinate Judge of Dhulia. After his death, viz., on the 25th August, 1890, his heirs and legal representatives, Bankatlal and Manaklal, presented a darkhast for execution of the decree, which was rejected because they did not produce a succession certificate under Act VII of 1889.

The heirs then obtained a certificate under the Act, and on the 26th September, 1892, presented a fresh darkhast for execution. The decree was then transferred for execution to the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Nandurbar under s. 224 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882).

The learned Judge held that the first darkhast of 25th August, 1890, was not in accordance with law, having been presented by the heirs of the deceased decree-holder without the succession certificate as required by s. 4 of Act VII of 1889. He was, therefore, of opinion that the second darkhast of 26th September, 1892, was barred by limitation, having been made more than three years after the date of the decree. The second darkast was, therefore, dismissed and this order of dismissal was upheld on appeal by the District Judge.

The heirs of the decree-holder thereupon appealed to the High Court.

[77] Vasudeo Gopal Bhandarkar, for appellants.—Section 4 of Act VII of 1889 does not provide that an application for execution cannot be made without the production of a certificate. It merely provides that the Court shall not proceed upon such application except on the production of the certificate. That shows that the certificate may be produced after the application is presented.

In the present case the first darkhast of 25th August, 1890, was an application " in accordance with law " within the meaning of art. 179, cl. 4, of Act XV of 1877—Brojo Nath v. Isswar (1); Hafizuddin v. Abdool (2); Mangal Khan v. Salim-ullah Khan (3); Mahammad v. Lalli (4).

There was no appearance for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The two lower Courts have rejected the darkhast as barred by limitation, holding that the earlier darkhast of the 25th August, 1890, although presented within three years of the date of the decree, was nugatory in reference to art. 179, cl. 4 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), because the heirs who presented it did not produce the certificate requisite under s. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889).

The only case cited in the Courts below appears to have been Kendiga Madi Chetti v. Soobbamma (1), which interprets s. 20 of Act XIV of 1859.

Mr. Vasudeo Bhandarkar, who argues this appeal, relies on Brojo Nath v. Isswar (2), Hafizuddin v. Abdool (3) and Mangal Khan v. Salimullah Khan (4). where it was held that an application without the production of the certificate under the Succession Certificate Act was nevertheless one made "in accordance with law" within the meaning of art. 179, cl. 4. Ramasami v. Seshayyangar (5) and Krishnaji v. Vithal (6) appear to have been decided on the same principle, and the Privy Council case Mahammad v. Lalli (7) has also been cited.

We have considered an authority of a contrary tendency, Manohar v. Gebiapa (8), which is a construction of art. 179. [78] cl. 4, in connection with the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, XVII of 1879. The words used in s. 47 of that Act are:—"No application shall be entertained unless the plaintiff produce the certificate." But in the Succession Certificate Act, s. 4, the words are:—"No Court shall proceed upon an application . . . . to execute . . . a decree . . except on the production, &c."

On consideration of the difference of language used, "entertain" meaning something different to "proceed," we are of opinion that the last cited decision does not conflict with those passed at Calcutta and Allahabad referred to above. We follow them as being in accordance with the tendency of the decisions on art. 179, cl. 4.

The Court, therefore, reverses the decrees of the Courts below, and directs the original Court to proceed with the execution as not barred by limitation; the respondent-defendant to pay the costs incurred in the two lower Courts.

SONSHET ANTUSHET TELI (Original Defendant), Appellant v. VISHNU BABAJI JOHARI (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent.

Khoti Settlement Act (Bom. Act I of 1880)—Landlord and tenant—Tenancy—Presumption as to nature of tenancy in absence of evidence—Payment of rent—Mortgage by tenant—Sale of tenant's interest—Rights of purchaser—Heirs of tenant cannot surrender tenancy, or affect purchaser's title—Transfer of tenancy in khoti village—Ordinary tenancy—Occupancy tenancy.

One Atmaram, who held certain land as tenant, mortgaged it to Hirshet and shortly afterwards died. There was no evidence to show the term of Atmaram's tenancy. After his death the plaintiff Vishnu, who was his brother, became tenant of the land and paid rent to the khots. Some years subsequently Hirshet (the mortgagee) sued to enforce his mortgage and made the plaintiff Vishnu and his two sisters parties. He obtained a decree and sold the mortgaged land in execution. Sonshet bought it and now claimed possession. Vishnu contended that Atmaram's interest terminated at his death, and that Sonshet was, therefore, not entitled to possession.

[79] Held, that Sonshet was entitled to possession. The fact that Atmaram had paid rent to the khots showed that he was their tenant. In the absence of all evidence on the subject, the presumption was that the tenancy was an ordinary tenancy from year to year continuable until legally terminated. There was nothing to show that the khots had ever terminated it. Atmaram's heir could not surrender it to the prejudice of the mortgagee. Sonshet, therefore, had purchased a tenancy which had never been legally put an end to, and was entitled to possession.

Under the Khoti Settlement Act (Bom. Act I of 1880) occupancy tenancies are not transferable except under certain circumstances, but there is no prohibition to the transfer of an ordinary tenancy.

SECOND appeal from the decision of T. Walker, Assistant Judge of Ratnagiri.

Suit for possession of land.

The land in question was originaly held by one Atmaram, a Khatedar, who mortgaged it to one Hirshet. Atmaram died in 1882; and after his death the plaintiff Vishnu, who was his brother, paid the rent for that year and got the khots to enter his name as khatedar.

In 1886 the mortgagee Hirshet brought a suit on his mortgage to which he made Atmaram's brother Vishnu (the plaintiff) and also his sisters Bhimabai and Jankibai parties. He obtained a decree, and in execution the land was sold in 1890 and bought by Sonshet. Subsequently Vishnu sued the mortgagee (Hirshet) and others in the Mamlatdar's Court to recover possession, but his suit was dismissed. He thereupon brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Devgad (No. 158 of 1890) for a declaration of his title to the land and for ejectment of defendants. The purchaser Sonshet was afterwards made a party to that suit

Vishnu obtained a decree and proceeded to take possession, but was obstructed by Babu Dnond, who claimed as tenant under the purchaser Sonshet. Plaintiff applied to the Court under s. 328 of the Civil Procedure

Code (Act XIV of 1882), and the application was registered as a suit (No. 254 of 1891) between Vishnu as plaintiff and Babu and Sonshet as defendants.

The Subordinate Judge held that Sonshet by his purchase had become owner of the land, and he dismissed the plaintiff's [80] (Vishnu's) suit, and issued a perpetual injunction against the execution of the decree in suit No. 158 of 1890.

Vishnu appealed against this decision (No. 254 of 1891), and the defendants in suit No. 158 of 1890 appealed against the decision in that suit. The appeals in both suits were heard by the District Judge of Ratnagiri. He reversed the decision in suit No. 254 of 1891 and confirmed the decree in suit No. 158 of 1890, and awarded possession of the lands to Vishnu, the plaintiff in the latter suit. He held that, as Sonshet had not shown what title he had purchased at the sale in 1890, he could not succeed in his claim against the plaintiff Vishnu, who had had possession.

The following is an extract of the judgment of the District Judge in appeal in suit No. 158 of 1890:—

"Suit No. 158 of 1890 was a simple ejectment suit against certain defendants, ten in number, and Sonshet was afterwards added as defendant No. 11. A decree for possession was awarded against all but Sonshet (see Ex. 18), who had declared to have been unnecessarily joined. Plaintiff, on going to take possession, was resisted by Sonshet's tenant, and he, therefore, now sues Sonshet, who was then not in possession but has since taken possession and claims on his title. The papers in the former case are now before me in appeal, and that appeal and this have been heard on consecutive days. It is proved that plaintiff had possession for six or eight years prior to his dispossession by the defendants in the former suit. As Sonshet and his tenant have subsequently taken possession, plaintiff is entitled to oust them, unless Sonshet can prove that he is the real owner of the land. From Ex. 16 it is clear that he purchased Atmaram Mahadevbhat's right, title and interest in the land in dispute on the 11th January, 1890. With the papers in both cases before me, I am unable to say with certainty what right, title and interest Atmaram had. From Ex. 31 it appears that he paid various sums of money to Sundrabai kom Govind Ramchandra and other people calling themselves khots. Perhaps these are the khots of the village. Granting that they are, I do not know whether Atmaram's rights, if he be a tenant at all, were those of a dharekari, or quasi-dharekari, occupancy tenant or ordinary tenant, transferable or non-transferable. The khots are the persons principally interested, and they are not called as witnesses, nor are they made parties to the suit. I am of opinion that Sonshet has failed to prove his case."

Sonshet preferred a second appeal.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan, for the appellant.—We claim as purchaser at a Court-sale held in execution of the decree against Atmaram. We have bought Atmaram's rights. The plaintiff is Atmaram's heir. Whatever equities bound Atmaram, bind the plaintiff.

[81] Daji Abaji Khare with Vasudev G. Bhandarkar, for the respondent (plaintiff).—Atmaram's tenancy terminated at his death, and Sonshet, who purchased Atmaram's interest, has not shown any title to hold the land after that time. He has not proved the nature of Atmaram's tenancy.

[FULTON, J.—If so, Atmaram must be presumed to have been a tenant from year to year.]

NOV. 8.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
20 B. 78.

An annual tenant in a khoti village cannot mortgage his tenant right. Section 9 of the Khoti Act (Bom. Act I of 1880) enacts that even an occupancy tenant cannot mortgage his land, much less can a tenant from year to year—Bombay Gazetteer, Vol. X, p. 211; Narayan Balvantrao v. Balu Vithu (1). Moreover, a landlord is not bound to continue a tenancy from year to year after the death of his tenant—Govind Raghunath v. Narayan Dikshit (2). The khot could put an end to Atmaram's tenancy after his death by giving the land to another. Accordingly Vishnu became the khot's tenant in his own right. Atmaram's tenancy having come to an end at his death, neither his mortgagee, nor the purchaser in execution of the decree on the mortgage, can now claim any title to the land.

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.— Both these appeals have been heard together, the parties and the land in dispute being the same. It appears that the land originally stood in the name of Atmaram, who mortgaged it without possession to one Hirshet. Atmaram was the natural brother of the plaintiff Vishnu, and was adopted by his maternal grandfather Mahadevbhat, who was originally holder of the land. He died about 1882, and after his death the plaintiff paid the rent due for the year and got the khots to enter his name as khatedar. Some years after Atmaram's death Hirshet sued to enforce his mortgage, and made Atmaram's sisters Bhimabai and Jankibai and the plaintiff parties. He obtained a decree, and on bringing the mortgage land to sale, it was bought by the defendant Sonshet. The question now before us is, whether Sonshet by that purchase obtained a right to possession.

[82] The learned Assistant Judge has correctly pointed out in his judgment in appeal No. 556 of 1891 that by this transaction Sonshet purchased the right, title and interest of Atmaram, but when stating that he could not say for certain what right, title and interest Atmaram had, he failed to draw the usual presumption from the fact of Atmaram's paying rent to the khots that he held the land as their tenant. For what term the tenancy was to continue, is not proved; but in the absence of all evidence on the subject, the Court should have presumed that it was an ordinary tenancy from year to year continuable until legally terminated —Govind v. Narayan (2).

Mr. Vasudev Gopal contended that the entry of the plaintiff's name by the khots as tenant instead of the name of the sister or sisters of the deceased, who were the real heirs, would terminate the tenancy; but although on the assumption that the tenancy was an annual one, the khots were entitled to determine it by giving the proper notice, there is nothing to show that they have ever done so. The heirs themselves could not surrender it to the prejudice of the mortgagees' rights—Sukru v. Tafazzul (3), and their acquiescence, if they did acquiesce, in the entry of the plaintiff's name as tenant would not have the effect of terminating it.

Under these circumstances, Sonshet being purchaser of a tenancy which has never been legally put an end to, is entitled to be put into possession. No question of limitation arises, as twelve years have not elapsed since Atmaram's death.

Mr. Vasudev Gopal contended that under the Khoti Act the tenancy could not be transferred; but on reference to the Act we find that while occupancy tenancies are not transferable except under certain circumstances, there is no prohibition to the transfer of an ordinary tenancy such as in the absence of evidence on the subject we must presume Atmaram's tenancy to have been. The reason for this distinction is apparent. In case of an ordinary tenancy the khot can at any time get rid of the tenant by giving him notice; whereas, if a transfer of an occupancy tenancy could be carried out against his wishes, he might be provided with a tenant whom he did not like and could not eject.

[83] We must point out that as Sonshet was made a party to suit No. 158 of 1890 the Court should have decided as to his title. The suit was not brought within six months of the alleged dispossession, and, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree until after adjudication on Sonshet's plea that he was not the owner. If the plaintiff was not the owner, he could not be awarded possession from defendants Nos. 1 to 10; and there was no authority for refusing to determine the issue of the title raised by defendant No. 11, and thus rendering necessary a second suit.

We now reverse the decrees of the Assistant Judge in both appeals and that of the Subordinate Judge in suit No. 158 of 1890, and we restore that of the Subordinate Judge in suit No. 254 of 1891, and direct that plaintiff do pay all Sonshet's costs in both suits throughout.

Decrees reversed.

A person does not render himself liable to a penalty under s. 54 of Bombay Act VI of 1873 for allowing mere waste or dirty water to run from his premises on to a public street, unless the water is "offensive."

REFERENCE by T. S. Hamilton, Sessions Judge at Surat, under s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The reference was in the following terms:—

"Under the provisions of s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, I have the honour to forward, for the consideration of their Lordships, the papers and proceedings in a criminal case, wherein Gulabdas Bhaidas was convicted on the 8th August last by A. Wood, Magistrate, First Class, of this district, of an [84] offence punishable under ss. 54, 74 of the Bombay District Municipal Act VI of 1873, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 25, which was paid.

"2. I am of opinion that the offence was not proved against the accused, and I beg to recommend that the conviction should be set aside for the following reasons.

"3. Section 54 runs thus:—'Whoever causes or allows the water of any sink or sewer or any other offensive liquid, or other matter from his premises, or from his land, to run, drain, or be thrown or put upon any road shall be liable to the penalty hereinafter provided.'

"4. In the present case the offence held proved against the accused was that of allowing foul water to run out of his drain on to a public street. The first two issues, therefore, as laid down by the Magistrate, First Class, were the following :—

"(1) Did foul water flow from the drain in question?

"(2) Did it flow on to a public road?

"These he decided in the affirmative for the reasons stated, viz.:—

"'The first question must be answered in the affirmative. I cannot doubt the existence of the nuisance as testified to by the Sanitary Superintendent and Inspector, and the neighbours;' and 'the mouth of the drain is under the threshold of the back door of the accused's compound. The ownership of some of the ground within that doorway is under dispute, but up to it the public unquestionably have access, for it is the only approach to the house abutting on Mr. Gulabdas 'premises.'

"5. I beg to submit that these are not sufficient reasons for finding on the two issues in the affirmative. In the first place, I can find no evidence that any nuisance was caused by the alleged flow of water. From the wording of the section, it would seem that the water must be 'offensive' or, as the Magistrate puts it, 'foul,' that is to say, it must be something more than mere dirty water, or water which is not quite clear. It must have an offensive smell, as indeed water from a sink or sewer generally has.

[83] "6. Now the witnesses for the prosecution mostly speak of the water issuing from the hole in question as being 'dirty'—nothing more. One says it was dirty like 'bathing water.' Another says it was 'clear rather than muddy.' Not a single witness says it came from a sink or a sewer, or was offensive. One witness goes into detail, and says it was water 'which ran from the body of the accused man's little son, who was being washed by a groom.' I submit, therefore, that the finding on the first issue was wrong.

"7. As to the road on to which the water was flowing, there is ample evidence that it was a private lane, and not a public road. To cite only prosecution witnesses :—

"Sanitary Inspector.—'The lane is open on one side only. The gully or lane is 5 feet broad.'

"Rangildas Ramdas :—'It is a blind alley. It is known as Gulabdas Vakil's lane.'

"Wallabhdas Kalyandas.—'It is a blind alley.'

"Vithaldas Pranjivandas.—'I live next door to Mr. Gulabdas. The ground is not either Government or Municipal. There is only the right of way of accused and myself over it. No one else has a right of way. It is not a public road.'

"8. I am unable, in face of this evidence for the Crown, to understand how the Magistrate could have held it to be a public street."

The reference was heard by a Division Bench (Jardine and Ranade, JJ.).

Jardine (with him Goverdhanram M. Tripati), for the accused.—Section 54 of Bombay Act VI of 1873 has no application to the present case. There is no evidence that the waste water which the accused allowed to run out of his drain was "offensive"; and unless it is offensive, the section does not apply. Besides, the waste water did not run on to a public street. It was a blind alley used by the accused and his neighbours. What is a "street" is explained in Kalidas v. The Municipality of Dhandhuka (1).

[86] There was no appearance for the complainant.

JUDGMENT.

PER CURIAM:—We concur with the Sessions Judge in holding that neither the evidence nor the findings justify a conviction under s. 54 of Bombay Act VI of 1873. The Magistrate was satisfied that the water complained of was foul. But there is no finding on evidence that it was "offensive," and the Courts may not enlarge the meaning of that word so as to include mere waste or dirty water. As regards the definition of "street" in Bombay Act II of 1884, we think the Magistrate should have considered the judgment in Kalidas v. The Municipality of Dhandhuka (1), interpreting the older definition.

The Court annuls the conviction and sentence.

RANCHOD MORAR (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. BEZANJI EDULJI AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), *Respondents.

[26th November, 1894]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 409, 413—Application for leave to sue in forma pauperis—Refusal of such application a bar to subsequent application in the same right—Jurisdiction—Plea of jurisdiction.

The plaintiff applied for leave to sue as a pauper for the redemption of a mortgage. As he did not proceed with the application, it was rejected with costs on 29th November, 1888.

On the 4th February, 1890, plaintiff again applied for leave to sue as a pauper for the redemption of the same mortgage There being no opposition, the application was granted, and was registered as a suit.

On the 20th September, 1893, when the suit had been heard nearly to the end, the Government Pleader intervened, and applied that it should not be allowed to proceed further until the plaintiff had paid the costs incurred by Government in opposing the first application, which had been rejected. But the plaintiff refused to do so, and thereupon the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit with costs under s. 413 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), and ordered the plaintiff to pay the Court-fees under s. 412.

Held, on appeal, (1) that the order rejecting plaintiff's first application was an order under s. 409 of the Code of Civil Procedure; (2) that both the applications [87] were made in respect of the same right to sue; (3) that the order rejecting the first application operated as a bar under s. 413 of the Code to the entertainment of the second application, and (4) that such bar being one to the jurisdiction of the Court, the Subordinate Judge was not only competent but bound to take notice of it at any stage of the suit.

APPEAL from the decision of Khan Bahadur M. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge of Surat, in suit No. 2 of 1890.

* Appeal No. 161 of 1893.

(1) 6 B. 686.

Suit in forma pauperis for redemption. In 1888 the plaintiff applied, as heir of one of the mortgagors, for leave to sue as a pauper for redemption of certain property which had been mortgaged in 1873 for Rs. 19,500 by his father and uncles.

On 29th November, 1888, this application was rejected for want of prosecution. In rejecting the application, the Subordinate Judge passed the following order :—

"Since the applicant does not wish to proceed with the application, I reject his application to be allowed to sue in forma pauperis and order him to pay opponent's costs and bear his own."

On the 4th February, 1890, the plaintiff again applied for leave to sue as a pauper for redemption of the same mortgage of 1873.

The application contained the following clause :—

"All the properties in mortgage belonged to my grandfather by right of ownership. I have, therefore, as a grandson a share in my own right in the ancestral property. Therefore, under the said right, as also under my own right as one of the male survivors of a joint Hindu family, I alone have brought this suit for redeeming the mortgage."

This application, not being opposed by the defendants, was granted by the Subordinate Judge, and it was registered as suit No. 217 of 1890 under s. 410 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882).

On the 20th September, 1893, the suit being then nearly at an end, the Government Pleader applied to the Court, praying that it should not be allowed to proceed further until the plaintiff had paid the costs incurred by Government in opposing his previous application for leave to sue as a pauper.

The plaintiff having refused to do so, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the order of the 29th November, 1888, rejecting the first application for leave to sue in forma [88] pauperis was made under s. 409 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that, therefore, the second application was barred under s. 413 of the Code.

Against this order of dismissal the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Kalabhai Lalubhai, for appellant (plaintiff).—Section 409 of the Code of Civil Procedure clearly refers to orders passed on the merits ; it contemplates an enquiry into the question of pauperism, and it is only after holding such an inquiry that the Court can make an order under that section either allowing or refusing to allow the applicant to sue as a pauper. The order rejecting our first application was not passed after inquiry into our pauperism. It was passed merely because we did not wish to proceed with the application. The order was, therefore, not passed under s. 409 of the Code. The lower Court's order as to costs was illegal and ultra vires—The Collector of Ratnagiri v. Janardhan Vithal (1). The Government Pleader can only intervene under the latter part of s. 413 of the Code, if a regular suit is instituted in respect of the same right to sue. In the present case no such suit was filed, and the latter part of s. 413 does not apply. The Government Pleader was present in Court when the second application for leave to sue in forma pauperis was granted and registered as a suit. He did not then contend that the application was barred under the first part of s. 413. He must, therefore, be deemed to have waived the objection. It was too late for him to raise any objection after the suit had proceeded for over three years, and was nearly ripe for judgment; and then the only objection taken was that the suit should be stayed till the Court-fees were paid. He ought not to have been allowed to raise even this objection at the last stage of the suit—Parkinson v. Hanbury (1). Section 413. cl. 2. does not apply to a pauper suit. As regards cl. 1, it has no application to the present case, as we did not sue in respect of the same right of action. On the former occasion plaintiff sued as heir of his father, i. e., in a representative capacity. On the second occasion plaintiff sued in his own right as the sole surviving member of a joint family. The second application was, therefore, [89] not barred by the first. The Subordinate Judge was not competent suo motu to take the objection under s. 413. He had already passed an order allowing the applicant to sue as a pauper. This order could only be set aside either on a review or on an appeal to the High Court—Refers to Amichand v. The Collector of Sholapur (2). The Collector of Kanara v. Krishnappa (3).

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Manekshah Jehangirshah, for respondent No. 1.

Rao Saheb Vasudeo J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for respondent No. 9 —The order dismissing the first application for leave to sue in forma pauperis could only have been made under s. 409 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There is no other section under which it could be made. That being the case s. 413 applies, and the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain a subsequent application for leave to sue in forma pauperis in respect of the same right of action. This objection to the jurisdiction of the Court could be raised at any stage of the suit—Muhammad Ismail v. Chattar Singh (4); Harsaram Singh v. Muhammad Raza (5); Abaji v. Ramchandra (6). It is contended for the appellant that no such objection was taken either by the defendants or by the Government Pleader when the second application was granted and registered as a suit. But the consent or acquiescence of parties cannot confer on the Court a jurisdiction which it does not possess. Where there is an inherent incompetency in a Court to deal with the question before it, the omission to raise the question of its jurisdiction does not operate as a waiver—Bibi Ladli Begam v. Bibi Raje Rabia (7). Section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure is conclusive on the point. It prevents a Court from entertaining any suit the cognizance of which is barred by any enactment for the time being in force. As to the question whether both the applications for leave to sue in forma pauperis were made in respect of the same right to sue, it is clear that the plaintiff sought on both occasions to redeem one and the same mortgage. The fact that on the former occasion he sued as heir of his father, and that afterwards he sued in his own right as the sole surviving member of his family, does not alter the cause of action.

JUDGMENT.

[90] JARDINE, J.—Mr. Kalabhai for the appellant has contended that the first order which was made by Mr. Modi, Subordinate Judge, "rejecting" the application, is not one made under s. 409 or 412. He was, however, unable to show us any other section under which it might have been passed. It was made in an inquiry expressly made under s. 408. We are satisfied that we can refer it to s. 409.

Section 413 then came in, creating, in my opinion, a bar to subsequent pauper suit by the following words:—"An order of refusal to allow the applicant to sue as a pauper shall be a bar to any subsequent application of the like nature by him in respect of the same right to sue." Assuming for the moment that the words "same right" apply to the second application, s. 413 constituted a statutable bar to the suit under s. 11. If the result of the first application had been stated in the second, the Court would have rejected it under s. 54 (c) and 407 (c). But the Subordinate Judge, Mr. Modi, apparently per incuriam did not do so. After taking the evidence on the merits the bar created by s. 413 was pointed out to his successor, Mr. Nanavatti, who dismissed the plaint, but explained that he looked on the cause as an application to sue as a pauper. Mr. Modi might, after refraining, as he did, from rejecting the second application at the preliminary hearing under s. 407 (c), have refused it under s. 409 at the formal hearing under this last section—Chattarpal v. Raja Ram (1), as the statutable bar which I take to be an objection under s. 407 (c), might then have been pleaded by the opposite party or otherwise have come to the Subordinate Judge's knowledge.

Section 409 ends thus—"The Court shall then either allow or refuse to allow the applicant to sue as a pauper." A refusal to allow has been held open to review—Adarji v. Manikji (2). Mr. Kalabhai argues that, as there was no refusal, but s. 410 was applied, the leave given to sue as a pauper was final, except so far as it might be altered by review in the Court of the Subordinate Judge or by revision of the High Court. He cited Parkinson v. Hanbury (3), where Lord Justice Knight Bruce [91] treated three years' acquiescence in an order giving leave to sue as a pauper as waiver on the part of the defendant. The report is curt; and there is no mention of bar to jurisdiction, a question arising under our Code. I do not think that question is excluded from the present case by the last sentence of s. 409—Chattarpal v. Raja Ram (supra). I assent so far to Mr. Kalabhai's argument as to hold that when Mr. Modi allowed the second application under s. 409, the cause rightly proceeded as a suit under s. 410. The Subordinate Judge, Mr. Nanavatti, heard it on the merits; and at a late stage the bar created by s. 413 came to his knowledge. Unless that bar is treated as mere procedure as something that vanished under the last sentence of s. 409 as soon as the second application to sue as a pauper was allowed, the bar was one to the jurisdiction, and the Subordinate Judge, being under s 410 required to deal with the cause as a suit, was right in dismissing it. He has rightly held that the final order is under s. 412; and under that section the directions about costs and Court-fees are legal. The cause had reached its penultimate stage when the bar to jurisdiction was pointed out. The decision in Shekh Isuf v. Sidi Ibrahim(4) seems to deal with a cause that had gone no further than orders allowing and rejecting the application.

I have considered whether the first part of s. 413 deals with mere procedure or goes to the jurisdiction. The simile of a "bar" used there as in ss. 11 and 14 points to jurisdiction; the order of refusal under s. 409 prevents the applicant alleging pauperism any more in respect of the same right to sue. The two reasons for the rule of res judicata, the interest of the State that there should be an end of litigation and the hardship on the individual—Lockyer v. Ferryman (5), Thakore Becharji v. Thakore Putaji (6)—apply to the decision on pauperism, under s. 409. There is no reason for encouraging pauper suits; and I do not think the mere omission of the first Subordinate Judge nor the laches of the opponent take the present case out of the rule, especially as the laches of an opponent [92] may be collusive or result from a wish to get the suit tried cheaply to the injury of the public revenue. In Naru v. Anpurnabai (1) the bar is treated as one to the jurisdiction under s. 310 of the Code of 1859. Taking the bar to be such, no consent of parties can confer jurisdiction—Spooner v. Juddow (2); The Government of Bombay v. Ranmalsingji (3); Bibi Ladli v. Bibi Raje (4). The objection may like that of res judicata be taken at any stage of the suit or appeal—Geeasoodin v. Ramchandra (5); Muhammad v. Chattar (6); Abaji v. Ramchandra (7) —and the interests of the public revenue I think require us to hold that, as in the present case, the Court may take it when pointed out by the Government Pleader or other amicus curiæ.

The next question is, whether the second application is based on the "same right to sue." There has been but little argument on the meaning of this phrase: Mr. Kalabhai only cited Naro v. Anpurnabai. The phrase must, I think, mean either the same as "cause of action" or something less. If treated as tantamount to cause of action, I would hold that the phrase applies here, on the authorities I relied upon in Thakore Becharji v. Thakore Putaji. Both applications are for redemption of the same mortgaged property; thus the subject-matter and the relief prayed are the same in both. The causa petendi is the same; the applicant says the mortgage is paid off. There is also eadem conditio personarum in our opinion. What Mr. Kalabhai seeks to establish is that this part of the exception of res judicat does not exist; or, to put the argument in another form, that there is not eadem quæstio—Chinniya v. Venkattachella (8). I incline to think that the phrase "same right to sue" means this question of right or, as it is called in Shridhar v. Narayan (9), ground of right, though in conceivable cases it may mean eadem conditio personarum. Treating it as not commensurate with "cause of action," I am of opinion that it applies to the present case. There is no contradiction between the titles set up in the [93] two applications. In the earlier one he leaves the Court and his opponents to guess how he has a title to sue, as son and heir of his father, as if they could infer something about his status in the Hindu family from this mere description of himself. In the latter application he unfolds his status. There is no real difference between the two.

The Court confirms the decree of the Subordinate Judge with costs; and orders the appellant to pay the usual Court-fees.

RANADE, J.—The decision in this case turns entirely on the construction of ss. 409, 412 and 413 of the Civil Procedure Code. The appellant, original plaintiff, as the heir of one of the mortgagors, applied in 1888 for leave to be allowed to sue in forma pauperis for the redemption of a mortgage for Rs. 19 500. That application, No. 78 of 1888, was rejected on 29th November, 1888. The actual words of the order of rejection were as follow:—"Since the applicant does not wish to proceed with the application, I reject his application to be allowed to sue in forma pauperis, and order him to pay opponents' costs, and bear his own." Plaintiff again applied in 1889 for leave to sue in forma pauperis for the redemption of the same mortgage. The defendants did not either appear to oppose, or did not object, and the Government Pleader only urged that plaintiff was not a pauper. Khan Bahadur Modi granted this application, and it was registered as suit No. 217 of 1890. The inquiry lasted over more than three years, and when the case was nearly ripe for judgment, the Government Pleader intervened on the 29th September, 1890, and asked that the inquiry should not proceed further until plaintiff had paid the costs due to Government in respect of his rejected application of 1888. The lower Court advised plaintiff to pay the costs due to Government and the Court-fees in the present suit, but plaintiff declined to do either, and thereupon the lower Court dismissed the plaint with costs under s. 413, and ordered plaintiff to pay Court-fees also under s. 412.

Plaintiff preferred the present appeal in forma pauperis from this order of the lower Court. The chief contentions of the appellant before us were—(1) that the lower Court was in error in dismissing the plaint, and in applying s. 413 to this [94] suit. Plaintiff's previous application had not been disposed of under s. 409, and s. 413 was, therefore, not applicable to the case; (2) the lower Court had no jurisdiction to dismiss a plaint which had been duly registered; (3) it was also urged that the two applications were not made in the same right within the meaning of the first clause of s. 413; (4) lastly, it was contended that the order directing plaintiff to pay Court-fees and costs was improperly made under the circumstances of the case.

The issues for consideration are :—

(1) Whether the order rejecting plaintiff's first application was passed under s. 409?

(3) Whether the lower Court was competent to dismiss the plaint under the bar created by s. 413?

(3) Whether the two applications were made in the same right?

(4) Was the order about costs and Court-fees proper under the circumstances of the case?

With regard to the first point, we are of opinion that the lower Court very properly held that the order passed on plaintiff's first application was an order under s. 409 of the Civil Procedure Code. That section no doubt requires the Court either to allow or refuse the application, while the order in question was one of rejection. An order of rejection can no doubt be made under s. 407, Ch. XXVI, but, like the order rejecting plaints (s. 54), it has to be made on preliminary grounds before notice is issued, and before any inquiry is held into the applicant's pauperism. In the present case it is admitted that such an inquiry had commenced, and any order rejecting the application at that late stage cannot be considered to have been passed under s. 407. There may also be orders dismissing the application under ss. 97, 98, and in the circumstances of this case, when the applicant's pleader declined to proceed with the inquiry, such an order might have been made. But, as a matter of fact, the Judge, who decided the application, did not dismiss it, and he did not allow the applicant to withdraw under s. 373. He rejected the application to be allowed to sue as a pauper. [95] This he could only do under s. 409. The word "refuse" is used in s. 408 as equivalent to the word "reject" used in s. 407. In Baldeo v. Gula Kuar (1), where the applicant had withdrawn his petition to be allowed to sue in forma pauperis, and the petition had been struck off, the High Court of Allahabad expressed its view that the application might well be regarded as rejected under s. 409. Plaintiff's first application must, therefore, be regarded as disposed of under s. 409, notwithstanding the slight ambiguity of the words used.

The next point to be considered is, whether it was competent to the lower Court, after having registered the application as a suit, and gone on with the inquiry for three years, to set aside the order granting plaintiff's application for leave to sue as a pauper, and dismissing the same. The Judge who made the order in 1890 was not the Judge who set it aside in 1893. This circumstance, however, can make no difference, for both orders were passed by the same Court. The appellant's pleader, Mr. Kalabhai, however, contended that the Court, which ordered plaintiff's second application to be registered as a suit, could not set it aside of its own motion without any objection from the other side. It is no doubt true that the defendants did not raise any objection on this head, and even the Government Pleader, who intervened, objected only to the inquiry being allowed to proceed further until the costs due to Government were paid. He urged this objection under the latter portion of s. 413, which objection was plainly out of place, as the present suit was a pauper suit, and not a suit on which full Court-fees had been paid. The lower Court, however, took action under the first clause of s. 413, which provides that "the order of refusal under s. 409 shall be a bar to any subsequent application of the like nature made in respect of the same right to sue." The question we have to consider in this case is thus whether the Court could, of its own motion, cancel its order registering plaintiff's second application as a suit, on the ground that such an application was barred by s. 413. As a general rule, a Court cannot set aside any order passed by it of its own motion, but this rule does not apply to matters involving questions of jurisdiction, limitation, [96] res judicata, &c., which take away jurisdiction. Section 11 is explicit on the point, and it has been authoritatively held that when the jurisdiction of the Court is involved, the Judge cannot refuse to entertain the objection if it is patent on the face of the proceeding. In Geeasoodin v. Ramchandra (1) the objection about res judicata was taken notice of even in appeal. To the same effect are the rulings in Kuppa v. Dorasami (2), Muhammad Ismail v. Chattar Singh (3); Harasran Singh v. Muhammad Raza (4); Abaji v. Ramchandra (5); Toponidhe Dhirj v. Sreeputty Sahanee (6); Triloki Nath v. Pertab Narain (7). When the objections do not affect the jurisdiction of the Court, they cannot be urged in appeal if they are not urged in time in the lower Court—Fuzul v. Gafar (8); Nawab Mahomed v. Moozuffur Hossein (9); Ex parte Manohar Bhivrav (10). Perhaps the case most in point is that reported in Shekh Isuf v. Sidi Ibrahim (11). There, as here, the first application to sue in forma pauperis had been rejected, and a second Judge had admitted a second application, and registered it as a suit. His successor cancelled the order registering the second application, and in appeal this Court reversed the last two orders, and rejected the application which had been registered as a suit. To the same effect is the ruling in Naro v. Anpurnabai (12), though that case is an authority in regard to another question involved in this case, namely, the interpretation of the words "in respect of the same right to sue" used in s. 413. On the whole, therefore, we feel satisfied that the lower Court was not merely competent but bound to take notice of the bar created by the first clause of s. 413.

The third point raised by the appellant relates to the question whether the two applications were made in the same right to sue. The bar created by the first clause of s. 413 has no existence except where the two applications are of a like nature, and made in the same right to sue. It was contended that plaintiff's first [97] application was made in his capacity as heir to his father, and the second application was made in his own right. We have had the two plaints translated, and we feel satisfied that this objection has no substantial foundation. In his present plaint plaintiff states (paragraph 10) that the properties in mortgage belonged to his grandfather, and "I have, therefore, as a grandson, a share in my own right in the ancestral property. Therefore under the said right, as also in my right as one of the male survivors of a joint Hindu family, I have brought this suit for redemption." The claim in the first application of 1888 was made by plaintiff in his right as heir to his father, who was one of the mortgagors. The insertion of the grandfather's name, and the attempt to trace title through him, does not alter the nature of the claim. Plaintiff's grandfather was not a party to the mortgage. Plaintiff's father and his uncles were the mortgagors, and the claim in both applications was substantially to redeem this mortgage of 1873 for Rs. 19. 500. The two claims must, therefore, be regarded as having been in the same right to sue within the meaning of the first clause of s. 413. The principal authority on this part of the case is the ruling in Naro v. Anpurnabai (supra) in which case the second application had been allowed on the ground that it was made in a different right to sue. The High Court, however, held "that the same set of facts which the mind at once grasps as jurally integral ought not to be made the basis of repeated proceedings, and the rule obtains that all the circumstances which exist when the former of two actions is brought, and can be brought forward in support of it shall be brought forward then, and not reserved for a second action arising out of the same events. Though the forms of action differ, the cause of action is identical, and the test is whether the evidence in support of both actions is substantially the same." This was also the test laid down in Shridhar v. Babaji (1) as to what does or does not constitute a ground of right identical with the one relied upon in a previous suit. The matter is different when the grounds of right do not originate in the same transaction, and they give rise to different duties. Judged by these tests, plaintiff's applications in his own right, and as [98] heir to his father, originate in the same transaction represented by the claim to redeem the mortgage of his father. The cases cited by the appellant's pleader on this point—Baboo Gooroo v. Baboo Huronath (2) ; Thakore Becharji v. Thakore Pujaji (3)—can be distinguished, for in these cases either the subject-matter, or the ground of right, were different. We must, therefore, overrule this objection also of the appellant. We accordingly hold (1) that the order rejecting the appellant's first application was an order under s. 409, and that the refusal operated as a bar to entertainment of the second application; (2) that the lower Court was not only competent but bound to take notice of this bar to its jurisdiction ; (3) and that the two applications were made in the same right to sue, and not in different rights. The appellant was badly advised in not following the suggestion made to him by the Subordinate Judge in the Court below. His claim was rightly dismissed with costs under the circumstances of the case. Though the words used are not free from ambiguity, the lower Court has not disposed of the case as being still in the application stage. It has dismissed the plaint as in a regular

(1) P J. (1873), 17. (2) 6 M. 76. (3) 4 A. 69.

THE ORIENTAL GOVERNMENT SECURITY LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY LIMITED (Original Defendants), Appellants v. SARAT CHANDRA CHATTERJI AND ANOTHER (Original Plaintiffs), *Respondents.

Insurance—Life insurance—Age of assured—Proof of age—Onus of proof—Mistake in statement of age—Fraud.

A. insured his life with the defendant company. By the terms of the policy the declaration of the assured as to his age was made the basis of the contract, and the policy was issued subject to the express condition that, in case any statement contained in the declaration were untrue, the policy should be void. The assurance was also expressly made subject to the regulations and conditions contained in the prospectus of the company. The prospectus contained the following provision with regard to the age of parties insured:—"Age admitted in the company's policies in all cases where proof is given satisfactory to the directors. Proof of age can be furnished at any time; if not furnished, it will be necessary on settlement of claim;" and after stating the nature of the "evidence as to age" which the company would accept, the prospectus continued:—"The directors recommend applicants to furnish any of the above as soon as possible and get the age admitted in the policy, as it is required by all soundly conducted companies on settlement of claim if not previously produced." A. died, and his administrators claimed the amount of the policy.

Held, that the above condition contained in the prospectus, which must be read into the policy, impose on the assured, or his representatives, the obligation of giving proof of age before the company could be called upon to pay. If the evidence had been given in the lifetime of the assured, and an admission of age was attached to the policy, no further proof would be needed, and the onus of disputing the age would be thrown on the company; but, in the absence of such evidence and of such admission, it lay upon those claiming upon the policy by reasonable proof to satisfy the Court as to the age of the assured.

The prospectus of the company contained a further provision that "policies held by parties on their own lives are indisputable on any ground whatever except fraud."

Held, that this provision did not relieve those claiming upon the policy from the burden of giving proof of age, but it covered a misstatement as to age as well as other misstatements, provided they were not fraudulent. It relieved the assured from the legal effect which an innocent misrepresentation as to age would otherwise have had under the strict terms of the contract. The result, therefore, was that the plaintiffs should give proof of the age of the assured, but, if such proof disclosed nothing more than an innocent mistake as to age on the part of the assured, the policy would not be vitiated. Subject to the above terms of the prospectus, any untruth in the declaration as to the age of the assured would vitiate the contract. The statement [100] as to the age of the APPEAL from Parsons, J.

The plaintiffs (respondents) as sons and administrators of the estate of Anandprasad Chatterji sued the defendant company (appellants) to recover Rs. 8,000, with interest from the 3rd September, 1889, as moneys due on certain policies of insurance, dated the 27th June, 1889, whereby the said Anandprasad Chatterji insured his life for a total sum of Rs. 8,000.

On the 31st July, 1889, the said Anandprasad Chatterji died. The plaintiffs obtained a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), and now sued to recover Rs. 8,000.

The defendants pleaded that the execution of the policies sued on was obtained by fraud and misrepresentation; that some person had personated Anandprasad Chatterji, who was at the date of the policies in a dying condition and entirely unfit to be insured; that Anandprasad was represented to be only fifty-two years of age, whereas he was over seventy years old; and they further alleged that "this proposal of insurance was accepted upon the promise contained in the proposal paper submitted to them that proof of age of the proposer would be furnished later on. No such proof was furnished to the defendants."

The case was tried by Parsons, J., who found a verdict for the plaintiffs, and passed a decree for Rs. 8,000. He held that the policies had not been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation. The third issue was "whether any proper proof of the age of the said Anandprasad had ever been forwarded to the defendants?" As to this issue His Lordship said:—

"As to the third issue, it was almost useless to give proof of age when the defendants had repudiated the policies and brought the charge of fraud. A declaration of age, however, was sent in, and I do not see why it should not have been accepted as reasonable proof. They had the report of their own medical man as to the age of the proposed insurer; they knew he thought it was probably near fifty-five than fifty-two, and they granted the policies with that knowledge. It is proved now that this is correct. Ananda was between fifty-two and fifty-five at the time. It is hardly to be expected that a native would be much more accurate than that." On issue 4 I find that the plaintiffs are entitled to the amount claimed, and I pass a decree as asked for in para. (a) of the prayer of the plaint."

[101] The defendants appealed.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the appeal Court was delivered by that the assured was under the age of fifty-two years when the policies were effected, and on that ground are not entitled to recover.

Now by the terms of the policies the declarations of the assured as to his age, as well as the other declarations in his personal statement, are made the basis of the contract, and the policies are issued subject to the express condition that, in case any statement contained in the declaration be untrue, the policies shall be void. The assurance is also expressly made subject to the regulations and conditions contained in the prospectus of the company. It cannot, we think, be doubted that, subject to the further term in the prospectus to which we shall presently refer, any untruth in the declaration as to the age of the assured would vitiate the contract. The statement as to the age of the assured amounts to a warranty, and that warranty being broken, the risk under the policies would not attach. This was so held in the case of a similarly worded policy by the House of Lords in Thompson v. Weems (1). See, too, Macdonald v. Law Union Insurance Company (2) and London Assurance v. Mansel (3). The burden of proving that the warranty had been broken was there thrown upon the insurers, and in the opinion of Lord Blackburn [102] rightly so (p. 684), and this no doubt is the general law in such cases. The prospectus, however, in the present case contains these provisions: "Age admitted in the company's policies in all cases where proof is given satisfactory to the directors. Proof of age can be furnished at any time. If not furnished, it will be necessary on settlement of claim." And at p. 43, after stating the nature of the "evidence as to age," which the company will accept, there follows this clause: "The directors recommend applicants to furnish any of the above as soon as possible, andget the age admitted in the policy, as it is required by all soundly conducted companies on settlement of claim if not previously produced." These conditions, which must be read into the policies, impose, we think, upon the assured, or his representatives, the obligation of giving proof of age before the company can be called upon to pay. The stipulations as to evidence of age contained in the prospectus would otherwise be meaningless, and the provision that such evidence can be given at any time shows that it was not the intention of the parties that, if not given before the issuing of the policies, it should be treated as waived by the company. If the evidence has been given in the lifetime of the assured, and an admission of age is attached to the policy, no further proof will be needed, and the onus of disputing the age will be thrown on the company; but, in the absence of such evidence and of such admission, it lies, we think, upon those claiming upon the policy by reasonable proof to satisfy the Court as to the age of the assured.

We have not noticed, in this connection, the answer of the assured contained in the proposal in reply to the question as to what proof of age he could furnish—"evidence of my age will follow afterwards"—because, as we intimated at the hearing, the answer appears to us to have reference to the time before the acceptance of the proposal; and we think that though the company might have called for the proof before acceptance, yet when they finally accepted the proposal, which they did on the 1st July, by their letter of that date, they waived compliance by the assured with this promise, and when the policies were issued, they were granted upon the terms and conditions upon which the company's policies are ordinarily issued.

[103] The plaintiffs rely upon the further term in the prospectus, to which we have alluded, that "policies held by parties on their own lives are indisputable on any ground whatever except fraud," to which the judgment of the Court in Wood v. Dwarris (1) shows that full effect should be given as though it were a proviso contained in the policy. This term does not, however, appear to us to relieve those claiming upon the policies from the burden of giving proof of age which the assured, as we have said, undertook to do before claiming under the policies; but yet we see no reason for thinking that it does not cover a misstatement as to age as well as other misstatements, provided they are not fraudulent. It relieves the assured from the legal effect which an innocent misrepresentation as to age would otherwise have under the strict terms of the contract. The result, therefore, is that the plaintiffs must give proof of the age of the assured; but, if such proof discloses nothing more than an innocent mistake as to age on the part of the assured, the policies will not be vitiated. The plaintiffs, in proof of the age of the assured, have tendered in evidence a declaration made by their uncle Otal soon after the death of Anandprasad. We do not doubt the genuineness of this declaration, or think that it was not duly declared by Otal before the Magistrate, before whom it purports to have been affirmed; and though it may not be legal evidence of the age of the assured within the provisions of the Evidence Act, yet it is a document of the class which the parties by their contract have made proof of age. On that ground we think that it is admissible in evidence, and ought to have been received at the hearing. That it was not forwarded to the defendants at the time when the claim was made, was due, we cannot doubt, to the absolute repudiation, by the defendants, of all liability under the policies. The plaintiff Sarat swears that he gave it to his solicitors at that time, and we see no reason to doubt his statement. The parties, we think, ought to be in the same position as if the document had been sent to the defendants, and they had refused to act upon it.

We have then to consider what the age of the assured really was. The defendants have given no reliable evidence upon this point. The plaintiffs' witnesses agree in stating that he was a man [104] who appeared to be between fifty and fifty-five, his hair half gray half black, and his general appearance betokening that age. Dr. Ferdinand thought that he looked fifty-five. In this state of the evidence, we think that it is quite impossible for the Court to say that the age of the assured was not that given in the declaration of Otal, or that it is proved that the assured fraudulently understated it.

The Advocate General has objected to the award of interest. It should run at six per cent. from the date of the plaint. To that extent the decree will be varied. In all other respects, it will stand confirmed with costs. The defendants will be allowed in reduction of the amount of decree the premia for one year less the premium already paid.

CURSANDAS NATHA AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. LADKAVAHOO AND OTHERS (Defendants).* [5th April, 1895.]

Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), ss. 5 and 14—Guardian and minor—Decree against minor—Neglect of guardian to appeal—Leave to appeal granted to minor after attaining majority—Practice—Procedure.

One Kessowji Jadhowji died in 1886 and by his will directed his daughter-in-law Ladkavahoo to adopt Karamsey Madhowji, his nephew's son, and "to this lad as his inheritance" he gave the residue of his property. In a suit filed to have the will construed, a decree was passed on 1st October, 1887, declaring (inter alia) that until his adoption by Ladkavahoo, Karamsey Madhowji was not entitled to any part of the estate. Karamsey Madhowji was then a minor and was represented in the suit by his father and guardian. No appeal was made against the decree, but the guardian and Ladkavahoo began to negotiate with each other as to the sum of money which each should receive out of the testator's residuary estate as the price of giving and receiving the boy in adoption. These negotiations continued until 1890, when Ladkavahoo died, and the adoption directed by the will thus became impossible. In December, 1894, Karamsey Madhowji, alleging that he had only attained majority on the 14th of that month, applied for a review of judgment, but his application was rejected (1). In [105] March, 1895, he obtained a rule nisi for leave to appeal against the decree of 1st October, 1887. He submitted that the circumstances amounted to "sufficient cause" under s. 5 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and that he had not unduly delayed his application after attaining full age.

Held that the special circumstances did amount to "sufficient cause" under the above section, and that leave to appeal should be granted. The guardian was desirous that the adoption ordered by the decree should take place, hoping that he would obtain a large sum of money for giving the minor in adoption. His interests were, therefore, in conflict with those of the minor, and the interests of the latter were not sufficiently consulted in deciding whether or not to appeal against the decree.

RULE nisi obtained on the 8th March, 1895, by Karamsey Madhowji, formerly a minor defendant in the case, calling on the plaintiffs to show cause why he should not be allowed to appeal against the decree made in this suit on the 1st October, 1887.

This rule was granted upon a petition of the same date presented by Karamsey Madhowji, which set forth the following facts :—

One Kessowji Jadhowji died in 1886, leaving a will and property to the extent of ninety lakhs or thereabouts. The plaintiffs were the executors of his will.

Ladkavahoo was his daughter-in-law, being the widow of his predeceased son Liladhar Kessowji. By his will Kessowji Jadhowji directed Ladkavahoo to adopt the petitioner Karamsey Madhowji (who was his nephew's son), and then gave the residue of his property "to this lad as his inheritance."

In 1887 the executors filed this suit to have the will construed, and to ascertain the rights and interests of the petitioner in the testator's estate. The suit was heard by Farran, J., who on the 1st October, 1887, passed a decree whereby it was declared (inter alia) that until his adoption by Ladkavahoo the petitioner was not entitled to any part of the said estate. The trial of the case before Farran, J., is reported at I.L.R., 12 Bom. 185.

The petitioner was then a minor, and in the suit was represented by his father and guardian Madhowji Kutchra.

Subsequently to the decree, Ladkavahoo corresponded with the petitioner's said guardian and with the solicitors for the executors with the ostensible object of arranging for the petitioner's adoption.

[106] The petitioner, however, alleged that Ladkavahoo and his guardian were influenced in delaying the adoption by persons whose interest it was to prevent its taking place, and that they were not so anxious that the adoption should be carried out as occupied in endeavouring to obtain out of the estate of the testator large sums of money for themselves as the price of the petitioner's being adopted and given in adoption. This correspondence continued throughout the years 1887, 1888, 1889, and 1890. Ultimately Ladkavahoo went on a pilgrimage and died without making any adoption, and the adoption of the petitioner directed by the will became impossible.

The petitioner contended that his father and guardian committed a gross breach of duty in entering into such negotiations for his own benefit and in not appealing against the decree of Farran, J., which declared adoption to be necessary.

The petitioner further alleged that he only attained the age of eighteen on the 14th December, 1894, and that he had no funds of his own to enable him to take steps in the matter; that with the assistance of friends he had recently applied to Farran, J., for a review of judgment, but that a review had been refused (1). He, therefore, sought to appeal against the decree, submitting that he had had sufficient cause for not appealing before, and that he had not unduly delayed this application after attaining full age.

In support of his petition the petitioner filed an affidavit, in which he stated that Ladkavahoo had demanded four lakhs of rupees out of the residuary estate of the testator as the price of receiving, and his father one lakh as the price of giving, the petitioner in adoption, and he produced a draft agreement by which it was agreed that, in consideration of the adoption taking place, these sums should be paid out of the testator's estate.

The above rule came on for argument before Sargent, C.J., and Bayley, J.

Macpherson and Inverarity, for the plaintiffs showed cause.—We say the petitioner attained majority in May, 1894, while he alleges he did not come of age until December, 1894. The petitioner is barred by limitation.

[107] Lang (Advocate General), for the petitioner in support of the rule.—It was the duty of the guardian of the petitioner to protect his interests. The lower Court passed a decree declaring that the petitioner took no part of the estate unless he was adopted. It was for the minor's interest that he should be declared entitled under the will to the estate, even if he were not adopted. His guardian ought, therefore, to have appealed against the decree. But he hoped to make money out of the adoption, and was, therefore, content with the decree which declared adoption to be necessary. He, therefore, did not appeal, and the minor's interests were sacrificed. Now that Ladkavahoo is dead the effect of the decree is to exclude the petitioner from the estate altogether. His guardian wholly failed in his duty to the petitioner. The interests of the two were in conflict. Under these circumstances the petitioner ought now to be allowed to appeal. He only attained his majority in December. The circumstances show "sufficient cause" within the meaning of s. 5 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). He cited In re Manchester Economic Building Society (1); Curtis v. Sheffield (2).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—The question here is whether "sufficient cause" for the delay in presenting the appeal has been shown. What circumstances will constitute "sufficient cause" within the meaning of the fifth section of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) is a point that has often been discussed; but no rule has been laid down defining or specifying the nature of the circumstances which are to be regarded as sufficient under the section. It is impossible to lay down any such rule, and I shall not attempt it. The English case that has been cited, In re Manchester Economic Building Society (1), does not assist us much. The passage from the judgment of the Master of the Rolls that has been relied upon only in fact re-states the question that we have to decide.

There is no dispute here as to the facts until we come to the time at which the petitioner is said to have attained full age. Until then how does the case present itself. The suit was brought for the purpose of having the testator's will construed. [108] By that will the residue of the estate is bequeathed to the petitioner as adopted son. But the important question is raised as to whether under this bequest the petitioner is entitled to take the residue unless he is adopted. The Judge who tried the case has held that on that condition alone he is entitled to the property; and that unless he is adopted the property must go elsewhere. In his judgment on review (3), the Judge says that the question was a difficult one and was in his opinion one which might properly have gone to appeal. That then is the nature of the case and the point to be decided.

It appears that, after the decision of the lower Court was given, negotiations with reference to the proposed adoption began between the lady who was to adopt and the father of the petitioner who was to give him in adoption. Both were anxious to effect the adoption, and both sought to make a profit out of it, and it appears that there was some arrangement made between them, that upon the adoption taking place the adopting mother was to get four lakhs out of the estate, and the father was to get one lakh. It was thus manifestly to the advantage of the petitioner's father and guardian that the decree of the lower Court should stand, and that the adoption which it declared to be necessary should be carried out. He would naturally desire that the decree which declared adoption to be necessary should remain in force rather than that it should be upset. It was thus clearly not his interest to appeal, while for the minor it was most important, if it was possible, to obtain a declaration from the appeal Court that he was entitled to the property under the will, whether he was adopted or not. Here, then, we have the interests of the minor and of his guardian in conflict—the interest of the minor requiring an appeal, the interest of the guardian being that the decree, which directed an adoption for which he would get a lakh of rupees, should not be questioned, but should remain in force.

The negotiations with regard to the adoption continued for some time, and in 1889 Ladkavahoo left Bombay and subsequently died when on pilgrimage. The adoption directed by the will thus became impossible.

[109] Nothing more was done until December, 1894. The petitioner says he did not until then attain majority. He also says that the pecuniary circumstances of his father and himself were such that it was impossible for either of them to take steps in the matter. In that month, however, with the assistance of a friend, the petitioner applied to Farran, J., for a review of judgment, but his application was refused, and now the petitioner comes to this Court for leave to appeal.

We think that up to December, 1894, the special circumstances amount to "sufficient cause" and excuse the delay in proceeding. That being so, we think that nothing since then has occurred which should lead us to refuse the petitioner leave to appeal. If the delay until then is held excused, we ought to excuse the delay since that time.

Under the circumstances, we think the petitioner may appeal. We consider that his interests (he being then a minor) were not sufficiently consulted in deciding the question as to whether or not to appeal from the decree of the Division Court, and that he ought now to be allowed to take his case to appeal.

Rule made absolute.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice B. Tyabji.

KANKUCHAND SHIVCHAND AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. RUSTOMJI HORMUSJI (Defendant).* [23rd July, 1895.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 75—Instalments—Payment of debt by instalments—Right to sue for whole debt on default of payment of any instalment—Default in payment—Waiver of right to sue—Proof of waiver—Nature of proof.

On 15th August, 1891, the defendant executed a document admitting that he was indebted to the plaintiffs in the sum of Rs. 2,125 and agreeing to pay the amount in seven instalments, the first (Rs. 401) to be paid in August, 1891, the [110] second on the 28th April, 1892, and the remainder at intervals of six months. The document contained the following clause :—"If any of the instalments is not duly paid, I am to pay the whole amount with interest at eight annas per cent. per annum." The defendant failed to pay the first instalment, which the plaintiffs admitted was now barred, but on the 10th June, 1895, the plaintiffs filed this suit to recover the remainder of the debt and interest. The defendant pleaded that under the above clause the whole sum became due on the failure to pay the first instalment; that the right to sue which then accrued was never waived, and that the suit was now barred by limitation.

Held, that the plaintiffs having failed to prove a waiver of the right of suit which accrued to them in August, 1891, the suit was barred by limitation.

The waiver contemplated by art. 75 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) must be either an agreement between the parties, or such conduct as will itself afford clear evidence of a legal waiver.

SUIT to recover Rs. 1,724 principal and Rs. 349-13-3 as interest. The plaint stated that the plaintiffs had acted as commission agents for the defendant. The accounts between them were adjusted on the 15th July, 1891, and a sum of Rs. 2,125 was found due to the plaintiffs by the defendant. On that day he signed a document admitting the debt and agreeing to pay them the amount in seven instalments, the first (Rs. 401) to be paid in August, 1891, the second (Rs. 300) on the 28th April, 1892, and the remainder (four of Rs. 300 and one of Rs. 224) at intervals of six months. In default of payment of any instalment, the plaintiff was to be at liberty to recover the whole sum then due.

The plaint further stated that the defendant had failed to pay the first instalment of Rs. 401, but the claim in respect of it was now barred, and the plaintiffs now sued for the remainder of the debt, viz., Rs. 1,724 and interest Rs. 349-13-3, making a total of Rs. 2,073-13-3.

The clause relating to the plaintiffs' remedy in case of default in payment of the instalments was as follows:—

"The said instalments will be paid by me as each of them will fall due. If any of the instalments is not duly paid, I am to pay the whole amount with interest at eight annas per cent. per annum."

The suit was filed on the 10th June, 1895. At the hearing the only issue raised was whether the claim was not barred by limitation.

[111] Inverarity, for plaintiffs.—The second instalment became due on the 28th April, 1892. On the 28th April, 1895, the Court was closed for vacation. The plaint was lodged on the 10th June, 1895, on which day the Court re-opened after the vacation—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 48. All the other instalments have fallen due in the three years before suit. The question is, whether the whole amount became due on failure to pay the first instalment, and were we bound to sue then for it. We say we had an option and might sue or not, and the suit now brought is not barred. Counsel referred to s. 5 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Rule 48, High Court Rules.

Macpherson, Acting Advocate-General, for defendant.—The whole sum became due on the failure to pay the first instalment. The right to sue which then accrued to the plaintiff was never waived, and the suit now brought is too late—art. 75 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). He referred to s. 63 of the Contract Act; Mumford v. Peal (1); In the matter of Cheni Bash Shaha (2); Sethu v. Narayana (3); Gopala v. Paramma (4); Hiralal Bachanji v. Budho Valad Bahiru (5); Nobodip Chunder Shaha v. Ram Krishna Roy Chowdhry (6).

JUDGMENT.

BADRUDIN TYABJI, J.—The plaint in this suit, which was lodged on the 10th June, 1895, and was admitted as a short cause on the 11th June, 1895, states that the accounts between the plaintiffs and the defendant were finally adjusted on 15th February, 1891, when a sum of Rs. 2,125 was found due by the defendant to the plaintiffs, and that the defendant executed the Gujarati writing or bond, dated the same day,

(1) 2 A. 857. (2) 5 C. 97. (3) 7 M. 577. (4) 7 M. 583.
(5) P. J. (1883), 172, (6) 14 C. 397. (7) 38 Ch. D. 273 (284).

whereby he agreed to pay to the plaintiffs that sum by six instalments, the first being for Rs. 401, which became due on the 2nd Shravan Sud, 1947, corresponding with 6th August, 1891; and the second of Rs. 300, which became due on Vaishakh Sud 2nd, 1948, corresponding with 28th April, [112] 1892. The bond provides that, "if perchance any default be made in the payment of (one) instalment, I am duly to pay the moneys in respect of the instalments with interest thereon at the rate of eight annas." The construction put on the third paragraph of the plaint upon this proviso is, "that, if the defendant fail to pay any one of the instalments, the plaintiffs were at liberty to recover at once the whole amount then due with interest at the rate of six per cent per annum;" and it was contended by Mr. Inverarity in his argument for the plaintiffs that the proviso was optional and not absolute, and that, unless the plaintiffs elected to claim the whole amount at once, the defendant was not bound to pay anything more than the amounts of the instalments as they became due from time to time. I may at once say that that is not the construction I put upon the document, and that in my view the elements necessary to make the proviso optional are entirely absent here: see Asmutullah v. Kally Churn (1); Nilmadhub v. Ramsodoy (2); Hanmantram v. A. Bowles (3).

The question then arises whether the whole claim which under the terms of the document became due in default of the payment of the first instalment, namely, on 6th August, 1891, is not now barred under art. 75 of the Indian Limitation Act (XV of 1877). It was admitted on behalf of the plaintiffs that the first instalment of Rs. 401 was barred under any circumstances, and the plaint accordingly seeks to recover the amounts of the remaining instalments only, with interest. It was also admitted by Mr. Macpherson, on behalf of the defendant, that, by the combined operation of s. 48 of the Civil Procedure Code and Rule 48 of the High Court Rules, the second instalment was not barred, and that all the other instalments were within the time provided by the law of limitation. It was, however, argued for the defendant that as the whole sum became due in default of the payment of the first instalment,—that is, on the 6th August, 1891,—and as the suit was not brought within three years from that date, therefore, it is entirely barred. In reply to this the plaintiffs' counsel relied on the proviso of art. 75 of the Indian Limitation Act, which runs as follows:—"On a promissory note or bond payable by instalments [113] which provides that if default be made in payment of one instalment, the whole shall be due:—three years from the time when the first default is made, unless where the payee or obligee waives the benefit of the provision, and then when fresh default is made in respect of which there is no such waiver." The plaintiffs claim the benefit of this proviso, and have given evidence to prove that they waived their right of claiming the whole amount when the first instalment became due, and that, therefore, their claim as to the rest of the instalments is still alive.

Before considering the evidence on this point, I must observe that no reference is made to any such waiver in the plaint, which seeks to save the suit from limitation rather on the ground of the proviso in the bond being optional than on the ground of its having been waived by the plaintiffs. Now I take it to be settled law that mere inaction or delay or even the receipt of an overdue instalment does not, per se, amount to a waiver (see the cases collected in Starling's Limitation Act under art. 75 and also Cheni Bash v. Kadum Mondul (1); Nobodip v. Ram Krishna (2); Sethu v. Narayana (3); Gopala v. Paramma (4).) I take it, therefore, that there must be either an agreement between the parties, or such conduct as will itself afford clear evidence of a legal waiver; and I conceive that the nature of proof must be the same, whether the waiver is pleaded by the plaintiffs to avoid limitation or by the defendant to escape from the liability to pay the whole, if a suit is filed by the creditor within the proper time on the ground of default in the payment of any one of the instalments. Now Mr. Justice Straight in Mumford v. Peal (5) lays down the nature of the evidence necessary to prove the waiver in the following words:—"I think," said that learned Judge (p. 863)" that the most cogent and conclusive proof must be demanded to establish that a party to a contract has abandoned a right accruing to him under its provisions on breach, and has entered into some fresh parol arrangement condoning such breach and creating new relations with the party in default."

[114] I will now proceed to examine the evidence in this case with a view to see how far it satisfies the conditions above laid down. There was no documentary evidence given, but three witnesses were examined on behalf of the plaintiffs on this point:—

The first of these, Chuuilal Nahalchand, who is the munim of the plaintiffs, said:—

"The defendant did not pay the first instalment. Subsequently to that I had an interview with defendant—about five or seven days after the first instalment became due. Defendant said he expected to get the money in a few days and would pay. He did not pay. He said he was willing to pay. What objection was there when the interest was running? I saw him on several occasions. I did not sue him for the whole debt, because he said he expected to get the money; as soon as he got money he would pay us, and that interest was running on our money. When the subsequent instalment became due, he did not pay. I did not sue him before all instalments became due, because we had promised that we would not sue him before all instalments had become due. Two persons were present—Bhikaram and Chunilal Bechardas. This conversation took place seven or eight days after the first instalment became due. I never sent him any attorney's notice; but we did make demands every time I saw him. I demanded the whole money, namely, Rs. 2,125. I demanded that when all the instalments had become due. After the first instalment became due, I demanded the whole amount. I demanded the amount of the instalments for Rs. 2,125. He said he would bring money and pay the Rs. 2,125 immediately on receiving money. We began to demand after the first instalment became due. I made the demand, both before and after my promise."

This is the whole of the munim's evidence, and it seems to me to be clear that, in spite of the great skill and ingenuity of the learned counsel for the plaintiffs and of his repeated efforts to get any definite evidence from this witness as to the alleged agreement for waiver, he has completely failed to extract it. If this evidence proves anything, it rather proves that so far from waiving the benefit of the proviso, the plaintiffs insisted on being paid the full amount of Rs. 2,125 and that they were put off by the defendant from time to time on vague promises of payment when he should get money. I may add that this witness was not cross-examined.

(1) 5 C. 97. (2) 14 C. 397. (3) 7 M. 577. (4) 7 M. 583. (5) 2 A. 857.

The next witness was Chunilal Bechardas, whose evidence was as follows :—

"I am a mehta in plaintiffs' firm, was present at the interview between defendant and last witness. I was there after the interview had begun. Bhikaram was present also. The munim and Bhikaram demanded the instalment that had become due. [115] The defendant said, "I will pay you money by small sums. You need not be impatient. We have been friends for a long time. I am bound to pay you instalments with interest.' The munim and Bhikaram did not agree, and demanded money then and there. Still defendant went on saying that interest was running, and they should not be anxious, and, therefore, the money remained unpaid. The reason why we did not sue him was that we had dealings with him for a long time."

This witness also, I think, fails to prove any definite agreement for waiver. On the contrary he rather confirms the evidence of the munim that the plaintiffs continued to insist on the payment of the whole amount. The reason he gives for not suing the defendant earlier was not that an agreement had been come to between the parties, but simply because "they had dealings with the defendant for a long time."

The third and the last witness was Bhikaram Aditram, who was formerly in plaintiffs' service. He says :—

"I know why defendant was not sued when the first instalment became due. When we demanded money from defendant, he said he expected money and would pay, and that we had been on good terms for a long time; that he would receive money within two months. He asked me to tell the munim that he would pay the interest for all the money. The munim refused to wait. Munim told me to take the defendant to him. I did so. We all three went into the adjoining room. Defendant was told to pay the money. He said he would pay in two or three months, and asked us not to sue him. My Shet then said 'Look here, we will wait till all the instalments become due, and then we shall pay you interest.'"

In cross-examination he said: "After the interview and before this suit I used to go to defendant to demand this money. I also went to him after the first instalment became due." In answer to a question by me the witness said, "I only demanded the instalments and never demanded the whole amount." Taking this man's evidence as a whole, I do not think it proves any definite legal arrangement for a waiver of the plaintiffs' right to demand the whole amount on non-payment of the first instalment. His statement that he never demanded anything more than the instalments, is contradicted by the munim, who distinctly says that the whole sum of Rs. 2,125 was demanded. But, even if I accept it as literally true, the mere demand of an instalment has never, so far as I knew, been held to amount to a waiver of the right to demand the whole sum, although the receipt and acceptance of an instalment as such has been held to amount to a [116] waiver (see Mumford v. Peal (1), Cheni Bash v. Kadum Mondul(2), Papamma Row v. Toleti Venkaiya(3), Nagappa v. Ismail (4), Buddhulal v. Rekkab Das(5)). It is true that the defendant has not been examined as a witness to contradict the evidence given by any of the plaintiffs' witnesses, and the plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to treat such evidence as substantially and admittedly correct ; but it is going too far to ask the Court to hold that the inherent defect and insufficiency of the plaintiffs' evidence is cured by the mere fact that the defendant has not been called to contradict it.

On the whole, therefore, I have come to the conclusion that the waiver contemplated by art. 75 of the Limitation Act has not been proved in this case, and I am confirmed in this opinion by the fact that no such waiver is alleged in the plaint. I, therefore, find the issue "whether the plaintiffs' claim is barred by limitation" in the affirmative and for the defendant, and dismiss the suit.

I cannot, however, award any costs to the defendant, as his defence is a purely technical one, and is not only opposed to all principles of honesty and fair dealing, but is a very ungrateful return for the kindness and consideration shown to him by the plaintiffs. The parties must bear their own costs respectively.

Before the Hon. Mr. Farran, Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Starling.

HURBAI AND ANOTHER (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. HIRAJI BYRAMJI SHANJA (Original Defendant), *Respondent.

Mahomedan law—Minors—Mortgage by widow—Widow—Right to mortgage shares of minors.

In 1884 one Ismail Ebrahim, a Mahomedan, died intestate, leaving a widow, two sons and two daughters. At the time of his death he was the owner of a certain house in Bombay. After his death his widow and his eldest son Ebrahim (without the consent [117] of the other children who were minors) mortgaged the said house to the defendant. In 1894 a younger son and one of the daughters of Ismail filed this suit, praying that their shares in the house might be ascertained and declared ; that the house should be sold, and their shares in the proceeds handed over to them. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff's mother and adult brother Ebrahim had mortgaged the house to him in 1991 as a security for a loan of Rs. 3,500 which they wanted to pay off debts incurred in re-building the house and to defray the marriage expenses of the said Ebrahim. He contended that the mortgage was binding on the plaintiffs, having been made for the benefit of the family, and that, if not, the plaintiffs were bound to pay him the money due to him before claiming any share in the house.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to their shares in the said house free and discharged of the mortgage executed to the defendant.

The Mahomedan law makes no provision with regard to mortgages, as such transactions are, strictly speaking, unlawful, as they involve the payment of interest. As, however, mortgages do now exist among Mahomedans, they must be governed by the rules applicable to sales. To authorise a sale by the guardian of a Mahomedan minor, there must be an absolute necessity for the sale, or else it must be for the benefit of the minor. The money raised by the mortgage in question was not raised for any purpose specially authorised by Mahomedan law, and the purpose for which it was raised was not for the benefit of the minor. Consequently, the widow had no authority to mortgage their shares.

* Suit No. 69 of 1894 ; Appeal No. 853.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.
20 B. 116.

THE plaintiffs were the children of one Ismail Ebrahim, a Mahomedan inhabitant of Bombay, who died intestate about the year 1884. He left a widow (Yemnabai), two sons (Ebrahim Ismail and the second plaintiff Rusul Ismail), and two daughters, viz., Bibibai (since deceased) and the first plaintiff, his heirs according to Mahomedan law. The first plaintiff attained majority about the year 1890, but the second plaintiff was still a minor at the date of this suit.

The plaint, which was presented as a petition in forma pauperis in 1893, stated that Ismail Ibrahim at the time of his death was the owner of a certain house in Bombay, and that after his death his widow Yemnabai and his eldest son Ebrahim mortgaged it to the defendant without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiffs, and that they (the mortgagors) had attorned as tenants to the defendant who had obtained a decree in the Small Cause Court of Bombay, directing them to vacate the said house; that the defendant had enforced the decree by execution, and in doing so had removed certain property belonging to the plaintiffs, and had forcibly expelled them from the house. The plaintiffs, however, [118] re-entered it, and the defendant thereupon instituted criminal proceedings against them in the Police Court, which were pending at the date of the petition. The plaintiffs prayed that their shares in the said house might be ascertained and declared, and that the house should be sold, and their shares in the proceeds delivered to them, and that the Police proceedings might be restrained.

The defendant in his defence stated that the plaintiffs' mother and adult brother Ebrahim had mortgaged the house to him on 1st May, 1891, as security for a loan of Rs. 3,500, which they wanted (inter alia) to pay off debts incurred in re-building the house and to defray the marriage expenses of the said Ebrahim: that the mortgagors had attorned to him and had agreed to pay Rs. 31 per month for use and occupation. On their default in payment of the rent, he obtained a decree in the Small Cause Court against them. He further stated that on the 16th March, 1894, he had sold the house by auction to one Purshotam Virji.

He submitted that the mortgage and sale were binding on the plaintiffs, the mortgage having been made for proper and necessary purposes, and for the benefit of the family; that, if not, the plaintiffs were bound to pay to him the money due to him before claiming any share in the house.

The case was heard before Candy, J.

The plaintiffs appeared in person.

Viccaji and Modi, for the defendant.

CANDY, J.—I find on the first and second issues against the plaintiffs. On the third issue, that they are simply entitled to a declaration of their shares in the property in and subject to the mortgage-lien of defendant. If defendant sells the mortgage property in satisfaction of the mortgage-debt, plaintiffs are declared to be the owners of their shares in the balance (if any) of the purchase-money. But this has never been denied by the defendant. I must, therefore, under s. 412 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) order plaintiff Hurbai to pay the Court-fees which would have been paid by her if she had not been permitted to sue as a pauper. Hurbai has been [119] ill-advised in bringing this suit; I am not sure that it has not been filed at the instigation of her mother Yemnabai. However that may be, she has entirely failed to show any reason why she should avoid the mortgage-lien of the defendant. It is clear that Hurbai with her sister Bibi (since deceased) and her brother

Rusul (still a minor and a party plaintiff in this suit) were quite young when their father Ismail died. At that time Ismail was the owner of certain leasehold Fazendari land on which stood a dilapidated chawl and two sugar-mills. Yemnabai, Ismail's widow, was the natural manager of the family. She and her adult son Ebrahim were persuaded to remove the remains of the chawl and the sugar-mills, and to erect a pucka building, which no doubt might turn out to be a most profitable property. This they purported and were entitled to do for the benefit of the family. But they had, as might naturally be expected, to borrow money to erect the building, which was mortgaged as security for the debt. Then they got into the hands of the mortgagee. Yemnabai and Ebrahim are not parties to this suit; and there is no material on which this Court can form an opinion that the debt is not owing as shown by mortgage-deeds. Certainly the assertion, that the building was erected by borrowing money on the security of ornaments pledged with a Marvadi, is entirely unsubstantiated. It follows, therefore, that the plaintiffs are simply entitled to the declaration as to their shares in the property, subject to the defendant's mortgage-lien. Plaintiffs must pay defendant's costs.

The plaintiffs appealed, and contended that their shares in the house were not subject to the defendant's mortgage, and that the mortgage was not for necessary family purposes and was not binding on them.

The appellants appeared in person.

Viccaji and Modi, for the defendant.

JUDGMENT.

[120] STARLING, J.—One Ismail Ebrahim was possessed of a piece of Fazendari land in Khetwadi Back Lane, on which stood a chawl and two oil-mills. Ismail Ebrahim died in 1884, leaving him surviving a widow Yemnabai, a son Ebrahim, then of full age, another son Rusul, and two daughters, Bibibai (since deceased unmarried) and Hurbai, who were all minors. After the death of Ismail, Yemnabai determined to build upon the land; pulled down the chawl and oil-mills, and after obtaining a building certificate from the Municipality borrowed a sum of Rs. 1,000 from one Hormusji Maneckji Dadachanji, and on the 9th November, 1885, she (on her own behalf and that of her minor children) and Ebrahim executed a mortgage of the said piece of land. On the 4th May, 1886, she borrowed a further sum of Rs. 1,000, and on the 9th November, 1886, another sum of Rs 500, and on each occasion she (on behalf of herself and the minors) and Ebrahim executed a further charge for the amount borrowed. According to Yemnabai's account, some of the money borrowed was misappropriated by a contractor, and as far as she knows, the balance was spent in erecting a new house, but it is impossible to say how much was so spent, as all the money she received she handed over to the contractor, or an agent, to spend on the new house, and no accounts of its expenditure were produced at the trial. To make up the amount misappropriated by the contractor, Yemnabai says she sold the ornaments of her two daughters. In 1891, Hormusji tried to sell the property mortgaged to him. Notices from some of the heirs of Ismail were issued at the time of the sale, and no sufficient price being offered, the sale was stopped.

On the 1st May, 1891, Yemnabai borrowed from the defendant the sum of Rs. 3,500, and she and Ebrahim executed a mortgage for that sum. In the mortgage all the previous deeds were recited, and it was stated that it was a mortgage with immediate possession of the hereditaments mortgaged, including the interest of the said minors, and the deed purported to convey the interest of the minors in the property mortgaged, but Yemnabai only signed the deed in her own name and not also as guardian of the minors. Out of this sum the previous mortgage and further charges were paid off, the cost of the mortgage-deed, stamps and registration were paid, and the balance handed to Yemnabai. According to a recital [121] in the deed, the mortgage was executed to raise money to pay off the previous mortgages, to repair the house, and for the marriage of Ebrahim. Subsequently to the date of the mortgage, the defendant got into possession of the house and land, and the petitioners Hurbai (she having now attained her majority) and Rusul (a minor) presented a petition to be allowed to sue in forma pauperis and recover their respective shares in the property free from the mortgage to the defendant. The case was tried by Candy, J., and he passed a decree declaring that the petitioners were entitled to 49/288 and 98/288 parts, respectively, of the mortgaged property, subject nevertheless to the mortgage to the defendant. Against this decree the plaintiffs have appealed, and the question we have now to determine is whether Yemnabai, as the natural guardian of her minor children, had power to charge their interest in the property under the circumstances hereinbefore set forth.

The plaintiffs are governed by Mahomedan law. According to Macnaghten, Chap. VIII, pl. 14, a guardian is not at liberty to sell the immoveable property of his ward except under seven circumstances, of which we need only mention the following:—1st, where he can obtain double its value; 2ndly, where the minor has no other property, and the sale of it is absolutely necessary to his maintenance; 3rdly, where the late incumbent died in debt which cannot be liquidated except by the sale of such property; 5thly, where the produce of the property is not sufficient to defray the expenses of keeping it. Nos. 1, 2 and 5 are clearly applicable to a case of sale only. No. 3 would be applicable to a case of sale or mortgage, but there is no allegation here that Ismail left any debts at the time of his death, or if he did, it is clear that the money was not borrowed for the purpose of paying them off. In the reported cases it is laid down that, to authorize a sale by the guardian of a Mahomedan minor, there must be an absolute necessity for the sale, or else it must be for the benefit of the minor. See Mussamut Bukshun v. Mussamut Dookhin (1); Mussamut Syedun v. Syud Velayet (2). The same principles have been recognized in other reported decisions, but we do not refer to them, as they turned mainly on other [122] considerations. The Mahomedan law makes no provision for mortgages, as such transactions were, strictly speaking, unlawful, as they involved the payment of interest on money borrowed. As, however, mortgages do now exist here among Mahomedans and between Mahomedans and other sects, they must be governed by the same principles as apply to sales. There is this difference, however, between them. It may be for the benefit of a minor that his guardian by selling property should have money in hand; but, in the case of a mortgage, the amount of money received will probably be less than on a sale, and although the property is not absolutely parted with, it is burdened with a charge which must go on increasing unless the interest payable is paid regularly, and eventually the property, if sold by the mortgagee, may not produce sufficient to pay the mortgage-debt and interest.

In the present case the land at the date of Ismail's death was worth something, out of which the minors might have got their share if it had been sold. Now, although there is a house built on it, the whole property is burdened with such a debt that it seems improbable that, the minors will ever get anything if the decree of Candy, J., is allowed to stand. Besides this a portion of the money is recited in the defendant's mortgage-deed to have been borrowed for the marriage of Ebrahim. We do not know if any portion was so applied, but such a purpose is clearly not one for which the share of the minors could be charged. We think it clear, therefore, that the money was not raised for any purpose specially authorised by Mahomedan law, and that the purposes for which it was raised were not for the benefit of the minors; consequently, Yemnabai had no authority to mortgage their shares.

The necessity for this suit has doubtless arisen from the inveterate habit people here have of looking at everything through Hindu eyes, and thus the two mortgagees treated Yemnabai as if she were the widow of a Hindu, instead of being the widow of a Mahomedan who was governed by Mahomedan law; but it must not be taken that we intend by this to determine whether the transaction could have been upheld even if Yemnabai had been a Hindu.

[123] Mr. Viccaji suggested that the plaintiffs ought only to get their share of the land in any event, and not any portion of the house, but the money was spent on the house without their consent, and it stands on their land; consequently, as the house goes with the land, they are entitled to their shares of the whole. Besides this it is possible, although the learned Judge in the Court below does not place any reliance on the evidence of Yemnabai, that the whole of the money originally borrowed may not have been spent on the house, but may have been made away with by the contractor, in consequence of which Yemnabai may have had to use the proceeds of Hurbai's ornaments to make up the deficiency, and a portion of the amount, last borrowed was certainly alleged to be wanted for Ebrahim's marriage for the repayment of which the share of the minors was in no way liable. Further, both mortgagees had all the facts of the case before them, and ought to have known the risk they were running. Consequently, there is no hardship upon the defendant in being deprived of a portion of the house as well as a portion of the land.

The decree of Candy, J., must, therefore, be varied by declaring that the plaintiff Hurbai is entitled to $\frac{49}{288}$ parts and the plaintiff Rusul Ismail to $\frac{98}{288}$ parts in the said property more fully described in the schedule to the said decree free and discharged from the mortgage executed to the defendant by Yemnabai and Ebrahim Ismail on the 1st May, 1891, and by ordering the defendant to bear his own costs in the Court below and of this appeal and to pay the Court-fees of the plaintiffs both in appeal and in the Court below.

Decree varied.

THE MUNICIPAL CORPORATION OF BOMBAY (Original Defendants), Appellants v. CUVERJI HIRJI AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), *Respondents.

[9th, 10th and 12th August, 1895.]

Vendor and purchaser—Broker—Brokerage from vendor and vendee—Position and rights of broker—Claim of brokerage from both vendor and vendee.

A broker is entitled to his commission if the relation of buyer and seller is really brought about by him, although the actual sale has not been effected by him.

A broker is entitled to his commission where he has induced in the vendor the contracting mind, the willingness to open negotiations upon a reasonable basis even though a change or modification of the terms of the contract is made by the buyer and seller without his intervention.

A broker sued the Municipality of Bombay for brokerage in respect of land purchased by them.

Held, that, if during the time that the broker was negotiating with the vendor, the latter was induced to consent to the sale, the broker was entitled to his brokerage. It was not material to enquire what operated upon the mind of the vendor, and whether it was the advice of friends, or the knowledge that his land could be acquired compulsorily, or the persuasions of the broker. It was sufficient to support the broker's claim if the vendor's acceptance of the terms was brought about during his intervention; and the fact that the Municipal Commissioner stepped in at the last moment, and himself actually struck the bargain, did not deprive the broker of his brokerage.

Primarily a broker is merely the agent of the party by whom he is originally employed. To make the other side liable to pay him brokerage it must be shown that he has been employed by such party to act for him, or that in the contract he has agreed to pay brokerage.

THESE two appeals were heard together. The respondents (plaintiffs) in both suits were a firm of brokers in Bombay, and in both suits they claimed to recover money alleged to be due to them as brokerage in certain transactions. They alleged that in 1891 they were instructed to purchase lands required by the Municipality for certain proposed new roads. The price was not to exceed Rs. 3 per square yard. They purchased a quantity of land at this rate, and were paid two per cent. on the purchase-money as brokerage by the Municipality. There remained three [125] plots of land still to be obtained: two of them belonged to Bai Motlibai and the third to one Muncherji Framji Cama. With much difficulty they ultimately persuaded these owners to part with the land, and the two plots were accordingly purchased from Bai Motlibai for Rs. 7,47,489, the brokerage on which at two per cent. was Rs. 14,949, and the third plot was purchased from Muncherji for Rs. 1,72,124, the brokerage on which at the same rate was Rs. 3,462.

In their suit against the Municipality (No. 402 of 1893) as purchasers the plaintiffs claimed both these sums.

The Municipality alleged that their purchase of the lands in question had not been brought about by the plaintiffs, and they denied their liability.

The second suit (No. 403 of 1893) was brought by the plaintiffs against Bai Motlibai in respect of the first of above transactions. They claimed to recover from her, as vendor, another sum of Rs. 14,949, being brokerage on the purchase-money of the land sold by her to the Municipality charged at the same rate as the plaintiffs charged the purchaser, viz., two per cent.

Bai Motlibai in her written statement denied her liability, alleging that she had not employed the plaintiffs as brokers nor accepted their services as such.

In both suits the lower Court passed a decree for the plaintiffs for the sums respectively claimed.

The defendants in both suits appealed, and the appeals were heard together.

Macpherson (Acting Advocate-General), Inverarity and Scott, for appellants in both appeals.

Lowndes and Jardine, for the respondents.

The arguments of counsel were exclusively upon the facts appearing in the evidence taken by the lower Court.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—The questions which we have to determine in these appeals are (1) whether the Division Court was right in awarding to the plaintiffs' firm of Cuverji Hirji and Company brokerage at the rate of two per cent. against the appellants the Municipal Corporation of Bombay in respect of the purchase by [126] the latter of two plots of land at Agrapada, one from the appellant Motlibai and one from Mr. Muncherji Cama, and (2) whether that Court was right in awarding to the same firm brokerage at the same rate against the appellant Motlibai in respect of the sale by her of the former plot to the Municipality. The sums awarded are large—Rs. 18,412-4-2 against the Municipality and Rs. 14,949-12-5 against the appellant Motlibai. In each case the appellants respectively contend that they are not liable to pay the plaintiffs any brokerage, and if they are liable for brokerage, they are not liable at the rate of two per cent. awarded.

Separate evidence was not recorded in the Court below in each of the two cases. Before us it was argued that the evidence presented in appeal No. 857 (suit No. 402) should be taken as the evidence upon which both appeals should be decided, with the exception of that of the witness M. H. Maju, whose evidence was only to be read in appeal No. 856 (suit No. 403).

(After dealing with preliminary matters not material to this report His Lordship continued.—) The question which we have to consider next, is upon what terms as to remuneration Hirji Hansraj was employed by the Municipality. This forms the basis of the case against that body. Hirji was really only a partner in the plaintiffs' firm; but, as the other partners were dormant, so far as the transactions in question in the suit are concerned, we shall speak of Hirji Hansraj as though he only were the broker.

The Municipality of Bombay in carrying out their operations for the well-being and improvement of the city have often to acquire lands in particular localities. Such lands are acquired sometimes by ordinary purchase and sometimes by inducing Government to put in force the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act on their behalf. In addition to the limited compulsory powers of purchase which their own Act (Bombay Act III of 1888) confers upon them, they can always apply to Government to put in force the provisions of the General Act. They differ, therefore, from private purchasers in that they can compel unwilling owners to part with their lands; but, if they are known to be the intending purchasers, they can be forced to pay [127] for the land, which they are under the necessity of acquiring, a little more than its actual market value. Their position in this respect must be borne in mind when we come to consider the claim of their brokers against Motlibai (His Lordship reviewed the evidence as to the terms in which the brokers were employed, and found that the agreement was that brokerage should be paid at the rate of one per cent. He then continued :—)

Mr. Scott for the appellants argued that the evidence afforded signs of a special agreement between the Municipality and Hirji that the latter should be paid brokerage only in cases where the bargain had been actually struck through him. The only written evidence which he can point to (oral there is none) in support of the argument is an ambiguous phrase in Ex. No. 1. We do not consider that it affords any substantial basis for such a contention. And we think that whatever the general law may be which governs the relation between principal and brokers, such is the law to be applied between the Municipality and Hirji. Now we take that law to be as laid down by Erle, C. J., in Green v. Bartlett (1). His Lordship says: "The question whether or not an agent is entitled to commission, has repeatedly been litigated, and it has usually been decided that, if the relation of buyer and seller is really brought about by the act of the agent, he is entitled to commission, although the actual sale has not been effected by him." In that case the purchaser had been introduced to the vendor by the agent. In the present case, there is no question of introduction. That is often the main office of a broker in cases where an article of commerce is sold. The bringing together of a willing vendor and a willing purchaser is virtually bringing about the bargain, and the same is often the consequence, though in a less degree, of bringing a vendor and buyer of land into communication. But, in a case like the present, the owner is usually well known to the intending purchaser; the latter has no difficulty in ascertaining the person with whom he has to deal. The initial phase of the transaction is not the making of the parties known to each other, but the inducing in the owner the contracting mind—the willingness to open negotiations upon a reasonable basis. The American authorities cited in the notes to Story on Agency [128] (9th Ed.), p. 329, show that a broker is entitled to his commission who has negotiated the contract, even though a change or modification of its terms is made between the buyer and seller; and that view is, we think, borne out by the English cases. See Green v. Bartlett (supra) and Wilkinson v. Martin (2); Mansill v. Clements (3); Lara v. Hill (4).

We proceed to consider how far Hirji brought about the Motlibai purchase. We shall deal with the history of the transaction in some detail, as it is necessary to have it fully before us when considering the plaintiff's claim against Motlibai. (His Lordship discussed the evidence at length and continued.—)

Now the result of this evidence appears to us to be, so far as the Municipality is concerned, that although Hirji did not succeed in obtaining a definite account in writing from Motlibai of the terms upon which she would part with the land, yet during the time he was negotiating with her, her mind had been brought to the point of being willing to accept either Rs. 3 per square yard of her land or to grant it on Fazendari tenure at two annas per square yard per annum; and that when the purchase was effected upon the former terms, it had been substantially brought about while Hirji was conducting the negotiations on behalf of the Municipality. It is not, we think, material to enquire what operated upon the mind of Motlibai to bring about this condition of mind, whether it was the advice of her friend Mr. Bengali or the knowledge that her land could be acquired compulsorily, or the persuasions of Hirji. It appears to us sufficient, to support Hirji's claim against the Municipality, if it was brought about during the intervention of Hirji, and we think that the Municipal Commissioner stepping in at the last moment, and himself actually striking the bargain, does not deprive Hirji of his claim to brokerage.

We turn to a consideration of the liability of Motlibai to pay brokerage to Hirji in respect of this contract. The evidence in the case shows that the rate of commission usually demanded by, and given to, land brokers in Bombay, where there is no special agreement, is two per cent. on the purchase-money, but that this [129] rate, which is deemed exorbitant in the case of large purchases, is usually modified by special agreement in such cases. The question before us is not, however, so much as to the rate of brokerage. It is rather as to the liability of Motlibai to pay brokerage at all.

Hormusji Muncherji Cama makes the following statement:—"The practice as to brokerage on sale of land in Bombay is that, in the absence of special contract, the purchaser and the seller both pay two per cent." Subject to the above observations as to the rate, this is doubtless true in cases where a broker is engaged on each side; but as Hormusji was speaking of a case in which there had been but one broker employed on both sides, his answer must, we think, as contended for by counsel for the respondent, have reference to that case also. There was no cross-examination upon this answer. Hirji says in his re-examination: "Besides the Rs. 31,800 received as brokerage, I have also received a large amount of brokerage from the parties on the other side. In all cases of private purchase, I always received brokerage from the other side, and in every case, except Cama's, I was paid two per cent."

No evidence was given for the defendant Motlibai to contradict or modify these statements. We must, therefore, assume that where a contract for the sale of land is completed through the intervention of a common broker, the practice, subject as above stated, is that he receives two per cent. from each of the contracting parties.

The common course appears, in such cases, to be to sign the contract subject to the usual or agreed rate of brokerage being paid. This appears from the plaintiff's letters, and coincides with our experience. This affords the parties the opportunity of considering the question of their liability to brokerage and its rate before finally signing. The practice, as we have stated it, assumes the employment of a common broker. A broker is often spoken as a middleman or negotiator between two parties (Story on Agency, p. 29; Fairlie v. Fenton (1)). He frequently acts as the agent of each. "The engagement of a broker is, like [130] that of a proxy, a factor or agent, but with this difference that the broker being employed by persons who have opposite interests to manage, he is as it were agent for both the one and the other to negotiate the commerce or affair in which he concerns himself. Thus his agreement is twofold and consists in being faithful to all the parties in the execution of what every one of them entrusts him with" (Domat, Bk. 1, tit. 17, cited in Story on Agency, p. 28, in notis). But primarily he is deemed merely the agent of the party by whom he is originally employed (Story, p. 31). To make the other side liable to pay him brokerage, it must, we think, be shown that he has been employed by such party to act for him, or that in the contract such party has agreed to pay the brokerage.

In the present case we think, therefore, that it lies on the plaintiffs to show that Motlibai employed Hirji as her agent to conduct the negotiation before they can recover brokerage from her. The case is peculiar. Hirji did not, as we have said, introduce the parties to each other, nor was the purchase actually completed through him. He was a special agent of the Municipality, who are a body, as we have pointed out, armed with peculiar power of purchasing land, to effect this and other purchases, and his position as such was known to Motlibai. His commission, too, was not agreed to at the time of the contract being entered to. Under those circumstances it appears to us that he cannot receive brokerage from Motlibai unless he can show that he was engaged by her to negotiate on her behalf. No special agreement between Hirji and Motlibai is alleged in the plaint, and there is no prima facie presumption, we think, of his having been engaged by her.

Motlibai has positively denied that she ever engaged Hirji as her broker; but this denial is not in itself entitled to much weight, as she has untruly asserted that he had no interviews with her save one. That circumstance cannot, however, we think, be pressed strongly against her. She is a very old lady, and in August, 1894, showed symptoms of senile dementia, with a failing memory (Ex. 44). Her examination had been taken so late as December, 1893. The same excuse cannot be made for some of the witnesses who supported her assertions. Hirji's diary shows six interviews with Motlibai between the 14th April, [131] 1892, and the 17th of October inclusive in that year. They are Exs. 22*b*, 22*f*, 22*p*, 22R, 22*h*, 22*q*; of these 22*f* and 22*p* alone support the idea that Motlibai employed Hirji, or suggested that he should obtain favourable terms for her. The rest of the several interviews which he had with Bengali and Nowroji point to him as urging upon her acceptance terms which, he thought, would be acceptable to the Municipal Corporation. The oral evidence of Hirji Hansraj does not advance the case any further upon this point. Nor we think does the fact of Motlibai not having answered Hirji's letters (Exs. Z and A1). Notwithstanding the terms in which these letters are couched, Motlibai had all along taken up the position that she would not make an offer to the Municipality, but would consider offers made to her by that body. Hirji, we think, when ignoring this he pressed the lady to make an offer to the Municipal Corporation, cannot complain that his letter was not distinctly replied to, nor can it be inferred from Motlibai's not replying that she recognised his right to brokerage. Her not replying to his subsequent letters (Exs. A7 and A12) is as consistent with her having considered them to be begging letters as with her having recognized the claim made upon her as just.

The plaintiff's whole case against Motlibai rests, we think, upon Ex. 22*p* (1). Assuming the last two paragraphs of that entry [132] to be genuine and torepresent correctly what took place (and for this we have to rely wholly upon the truthfulness and accuracy of Hirji), we do not consider that they establish an agreement on the part of Motlibai to pay brokerage to the plaintiff. Taking the penultimate clause at the highest, it only shows that Motiibai contemplated the possibility of paying Hirji brokerage on a lease if she should grant one to the Municipality. Such a lease she never granted. We are of opinion that under these circumstances Hirji has not established his right to brokerage against Motlibai.

(As to the second claim of the plaintiffs against the Municipality in suit No. 402 of 1893, viz., the claim for brokerage in respect of the purchase from Muncherji Framji Cama, His Lordship after discussing the evidence held that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover brokerage from the Municipality on the amount of the purchase-money at one per cent., and continued :—)

The decree in appeal No. 857 (suit No. 402) will, therefore, be varied, reducing the amount awarded by one-half. In other respects it stands confirmed. Each party to have their own costs of that appeal. The appeal No. 856 (suit No. 403) will be allowed and the suit dismissed. As to costs, we think that we ought not to allow Motlibai any costs either of the suit or appeal. It was her denial of Hirji's interviews with her, and the resulting charge of fabrication of books by him, which caused the great length of the hearing in this case. Even in appeal the same charges, though in a modified form, were insisted on. Moreover, by not answering Hirji's letters, and allowing him to assume that she recognized his claim to brokerage she in some measure was the cause of the litigation between Hirji and herself. The untrutbful line of defence which she adopted is, however, the reason which compels us to refuse her her costs.

Decree varied.

(1) This exhibit was an extract from the diary of Hirji (plaintiff No. 2) under date 28th August, 1892, which was as follows :—

"To-day being Sunday (I) had had an interrupted interview with Bai Motlibai Wadia. In course of conversation as usual about her land (she) said as follows :—

"'My younger son does not agree with my view. He says that (the land) may either be sold (to the Municipality) at the rate of Rs. 5, or that (a portion of) the land sufficient for (the purpose of) the roads may be given free of charge. But I and (my) elder son are of opinion that (the land) should not be sold, but that the same should be given on perpetual lease, so that a permanent income may be secured. But do you, (she) said 'get (the Municipality) to pay something more than two annas (rate)' and suggested certain alterations in the conditions. But ultimately (she) said in sweet words 'do you arrange definitely with the Municipality and call (again) to-morrow (or) day after ; I will give a clear answer."

"To-day the aforesaid Bai asked (me) about the practice in respect of the brokerage. (I) told her the practice (was to charge the brokerage) at the rate of two per cent. on twenty years' rent.

"On this occasion the Bai often consulted an aged Parsi who was sitting by her side."

RAM RAVJI JAMBHEKAR (Original Defendant), Appellant v. PRALHADDAS SUBKARN (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent.

Hundi—Bill of exchange—Hundi payable at fixed date—Dishonour by non-acceptance—Cause of action—Jurisdiction—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 14.

On 14th April, 1889, the defendant at Gwalior drew a hundi for Rs. 2,500 on his firm at Bombay in favour of Damodar Sukhlal payable forty-five days after date. It was subsequently indorsed at Gwalior by Damodar Sukhlal to the plaintiff at Cawnpore, who sent it to the Bank of Bombay at Bombay for collection. It was to become payable on the 1st June, 1889, but on 23rd April, 1889, the Bank presented it to the defendant's firm at Bombay for acceptance, which was refused. The Bank thereupon returned it to the plaintiff at Cawnpore, and it was never presented for payment. On the 16th June, 1891, the plaintiff filed a suit upon the hundi against the defendant at Cawnpore, but on the 18th March, 1893, the plaint was returned to him, the Court holding that it had no jurisdiction. On the 16th April, 1893, the plaintiff filed this suit in the High Court of Bombay. Previously to the filing of the suit the defendant had ceased to carry on business at Bombay.

The defendant contended (1) that the hundi being payable at a fixed date, and not having been presented for payment when due, no cause of action had arisen to the plaintiff. (2) That the Court had no jurisdiction, inasmuch as (a) the defendant was a foreigner and at the date of suit did not carry on business in Bombay, and (b) no part of the cause of action (if any) had arisen in Bombay. (3) That the suit was barred by limitation.

Held—

(1) That the dishonour by non-acceptance of a hundi payable at a fixed date gives an immediate cause of action against the drawer, and there is no need to wait until the maturity of the hundi or to present it for payment.

(2) That under the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) the dishonour of a hundi by non-acceptance constitutes now, as it has always done, part of the cause of action in a suit against the drawer.

(3) That the Court had jurisdiction under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865.

(4) That the suit was not barred by limitation, the plaintiff being entitled to the benefit of s. 14 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

SUIT on a hundi for Rs. 2,500, dated 14th April, 1889, drawn by the defendant's firm at Gwalior on his firm at Bombay in favour of Damodar Sukhlal and indorsed at Gwalior by Damodar Sukhlal to the plaintiff at Cawnpore.

The plaintiff (respondent) carried on business at Gwalior under the name of Shivram Subkarn, at Cawnpore under the name of Lachminarayan Pralhaddas, and at Bombay under the name of Baldevdas Bunsidas.

[134] The defendant (appellant) had a firm at Gwalior under the name Gangadhar Yeshvantrao, and at the date of the hundi in question a firm also at Bombay under the name of Gopalrao Malharrao. This latter firm, however, (he alleged and the lower Court found) was closed in February, 1893, two months before this suit was filed.

The firm of Damodar Sukhlal carried on business at Gwalior. On the said 14th April, 1889, this firm at Gwalior obtained six hundis from the defendant's firm there for a total sum of Rs. 10,000. These hundis were all drawn by the defendant at Gwalior on his then existing branch firm at Bombay. The hundi now sued on was one of these, and was in the following form :—

"(This is) 1 hundi (for) Rs. 2,500, in letters rupees twenty-five hundred ; the double of the moiety thereof, rupees twelve hundred and fifty having here been in full deposited by and (received) from Bhai Damodardasji through Bhai Damodardasji Sukhlal. After (the expiration of) (45) forty-five days from the lunar date 13th of Chaitur Sud (14th April, 1889) do you be pleased to pay the moneys in hundi currency to Sha (i.e., the holder, a respectable person). The lunar date the (13th) thirteen of Chaitur Sud of (Samvat) 1946 (14th April 1889)."

The above hundi and the other hundis given at the same time were to become due on the 1st June, 1889, and were made payable in Bombay. No cash was given for them, but, instead, Damodar Sukhlal gave the defendant two hundis, each for Rs. 5,000, drawn by him (Damodar Sukhlal) on two different firms in Bombay payable at sight. These hundis, though really drawn on the 14th April, 1889, were dated the 24th April, 1889.

A few days after obtaining the above hundis from the defendant (viz., on the 19th April), the firm of Damodar Sukhlal became insolvent, and the partners absconded from Gwalior. In the meantime, however, they had (at Gwalior) indorsed and sent the above hundi for Rs. 2,500, which they had obtained from the defendant, to the plaintiff's firm at Cawnpore. That firm indorsed and sent it to the Bank of Bombay, in Bombay, for collection. On the 23rd April the Bank presented it to the defendant's firm in Bombay for acceptance, but that firm having heard of Damodar Sukhlal's insolvency refused to accept it. A day or two afterwards, the two hundis given by Damodar Sukhlal to the defendant on the 14th April were presented for payment by him and were dishonoured.

[135] On the 25th April, the Bank of Bombay returned the above hundi to the plaintiff at Cawnpore. The plaintiff appears to have kept it there. It became due, as above stated on the 1st June, 1889. It was, however, never presented for payment, nor were any steps taken by the plaintiff for two years to enforce payment. But on the 16th June, 1891, he filed a suit upon this hundi against the defendant in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Cawnpore. The plaint in that suit was, however, returned to him on the 18th March, 1893, the Court holding that it had no jurisdiction to hear the suit.

The plaintiff at Cawnpore thereupon sent the hundi to the munim of his Bombay firm, by whom, on behalf of the plaintiff, this suit was filed on the 16th April, 1893.

The plaintiff claimed the sum of Rs. 2,500 from the defendant with interest from the 1st June, 1889, till payment.

The following were the material paragraphs of the plaint :—

"2. On the 13th Chaitur Sudha, Samvat 1946 (the 14th April, 1889), the defendants drew a hundi for Rs. 2,500 payable forty-five days after date upon their said Bombay firm payable in favour of Bhai Damodardas and the said Bhai Damodardas sold and indorsed the said hundi to the plaintiff's firm at Cawnpore. The said hundi was duly presented for payment in Bombay, but was dishonoured.

"3. On or about the 16th June, 1891, the plaintiff filed a suit to recover the amount of the said hundi against the defendant in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Cawnpore, and on the 18th March, 1893, the said suit was dismissed for want of jurisdiction in the said Court to hear and determine the same. The plaintiff says that during the said period, between the 16th June, 1891, and 18th March, 1893, he was prosecuting this suit in the said Court with due diligence and in good faith, and he submits that the said period should be excluded in computing the period of limitation for this suit."

The following were the issues raised at the hearing—

1. Whether at the time of the filing of this suit, the defendant carried on business in Bombay ?

2. Whether any part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of this Court ?

3. Whether this suit is not barred by limitation ?

4. Whether the plaintiff is the holder, in due course, of the hundi sued upon ?

The Judge (Starling, J.) found the first issue in the negative, but found on the others for the plaintiff and passed a decree for the amount claimed.

[136] The defendant appealed.

Kirkpatrick and Lowndes, for the appellant.—The suit is barred by limitation. The cause of action (if any) accrued on the 1st June, 1889, when the hundi became payable. This suit was not filed until 16th April, 1893. The plaintiff is not entitled to exemption under s. 14 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). That section requires good faith and due diligence. The plaintiff delayed for two years before filing his suit at Cawnpore on 16th June, 1891, and he did not bring his suit to a hearing in that Court for a further period of two years, his plaint being returned on the 18th March, 1893. It was clear that Court had no jurisdiction. No part of the transaction took place at Cawnpore—Ramjivanmal v. Chandmal (1); Sitaram Paraji v. Nimba valad Harishet (2).

We contend that the plaintiff has never had any right of action upon this hundi, inasmuch as it has never been presented for payment. It is admitted that it was only presented for acceptance. That is not enough. Presentment for payment after due date is necessary, and there is no right of suit for non-payment without it—Negotiable Instruments Act XXVI of 1881, ss. 64, 66, 68, 69; Chitty on Bills of Exchange (11th Ed.), pp. 248, 251, 271. The lower Court held that non-acceptance of itself gave an immediate cause of action, and that subsequent presentment for payment was not necessary. That is the law in England, but not in India. It is a peculiarity of English law (Chalmers on the Negotiable Instruments Act, Introduction, p. xxviii). It originated in usage and is now embodied in Stat. 45 and 46 Vic., c. 61, s. 43. But in India the law is different. There has been no such usage here in the case of hundis payable at a fixed date, and there is no provision in Act XXVI of 1881, similar to s. 43 of the English Act. It is clear that it was intentionally omitted as to such hundis, because in the case of hundis payable at sight, presentment for acceptance is required by s. 61. The Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) is a Code (see preamble), and to such a code this Court can make no additions— Bank of England v. Vagliano (3). If acceptance of such hundis can be enforced without authority in the Act, then [137] s. 43 of the English Act is superfluous. To hold acceptance compulsory will be, in effect, to insert by implication in the Indian Act a new clause similar to s. 43 of the English Act. No usage in India as to acceptance has been proved. The refusal, therefore, of the defendant to accept this hundi before it was payable gives no right of action to the plaintiff.

Again, the plaint alleges dishonour by non-payment, but the only evidence given was as to dishonour by non-acceptance. A plaintiff who has got leave under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, cannot afterwards change his case—Rampurtab Samruthroy v. Premsukh Chandamal (1).

Further, the defendant is sued as drawer. But his contract as drawer was made at Gwalior. It was a contract that he would pay the hundi there, if the drawee did not pay it at Bombay. The failure of the drawee to pay in Bombay does not give a right to sue the drawer in Bombay. The suit should be at Gwalior. As to the liability of a drawer, see ss. 30, 31 and 92 of Act XXVI of 1881; Sulleman Hussein v. New Oriental Bank (2). The defendant is a resident of a foreign State, and this Court has no jurisdiction over him—Gurdyal Singh v. Raja of Faridkot (3); Girdhar Damodar v. Kassigar (4). The plaintiff is not a holder for value, but a mere agent for collection. His accounts with Damodar Sukhlal were not altered when he received this hundi—Mulchand Joharimal v. Suganchand (5).

Scott (with Inverarity) for the respondent (plaintiff).—The plaintiff as indorsee of the hundi had a right to have it accepted by the drawee before it became due. It was presented in Bombay for acceptance and dishonoured. Such dishonour gives an independent right of action, and a suit may be brought at once.—There is at once a complete right of action—Chitty on Bills of Exchange (11th Ed.). p. 195; Ballingalls v. Gloster (6); Allan v. Mawson (7); Whitehead v. Walker (8). The law laid down by these cases has always been the law in England. It is now the law there by statute; see Stat. 45 and 46 Vic., c. 61, s. 43. [138] The law in India is the same; see also Miller v. The National Bank of India (9). When the defendant's firm in Bombay refused to accept the hundi on the 23rd April, 1889, a cause of action at once accrued to the plaintiff. Part of the cause of action certainly accrued then, and leave to sue under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, has been obtained. This Court has, therefore, jurisdiction. The hundi having been dishonoured by non-acceptance, it was not necessary afterwards to present it for payment —Negotiable Instruments Act XXVI of 1881, s. 76. The defendant was drawee as well as drawer, and from Gwalior he had written to his Bombay firm not to accept or pay the hundi.

As to limitation, the plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of s. 14 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). He sued at Cawnpore within the period of limitation, but that Court held that it had no jurisdiction. He is not responsible for the delay in getting the decision of that Court upon the point—Sominadha v. Samban (10).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—This was a suit upon a hundi for Rs. 2,500, of which the plaintiff was the holder, drawn by the defendant's branch at Gwalior upon the defendant's Bombay branch, and alleged to have been dishonoured in Bombay. The plaintiff has obtained a decree for the amount of the hundi with interest from the Division Court.

The appellant (defendant) before us contends that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit, and that it was barred by limitation, and, on the merits, that the plaintiff was not the holder of the hundi "in due course," and that he was not entitled, under the circumstances, to maintain a suit upon it.

The circumstances, which are not disputed, are these:—The defendant, who is a Baroda shroff and banker, carries on business also at Gwalior by a munim under the name of Gangadhar Yeshwantrao. He had also, at the date of the hundi, a branch in Bombay carried on in the name of Gopalrao Malharrao. On the 14th April, 1889, the defendant's Gwalior branch drew six hundis for the aggregate amount of Rs. 10,000 on the defendant's [139] Bombay branch of Gopalrao Malharrao and indorsed them to the firm of Damodar Sukhlal, which was a firm carrying on business at Gwalior.

The hundis were all made payable forty-five days after date and fell due in Bombay on the 1st of June, 1889. At the same time, and in exchange for these six hundis, Damodar Sukhlal drew two hundis for Rs. 5,000 each, one on Baldevdas Bansilal and the other on Kushal Chand Punamchand, both of Bombay, and endorsed them to the defendant's Gwalior branch. They purported to be payable at sight, but were post-dated 24th April, 1889.

Out of the six hundis which the firm of Damodar Sukhlal so received from the defendant's branch at Gwalior, they sent one for Rs. 2,500 (the hundi now sued on) to the plaintiff's branch of Cawnpore which was carried on under the name of Lachminarayanji Pralhaddas with the following endorsement:—"This hundi is sent for (the purpose of) being sold from the camp by Damodardas Sukhlal to Sha Lachminarayan Pralhaddas of Cawnpore." It is not contested that, at the time when the plaintiff's Cawnpore branch received this hundi, the firm of Damodar Sukhlal was largely indebted to the plaintiff both on the Cawnpore and Bombay accounts. A hundi had also been drawn for Rs. 1,482 6 4 by Damodar Sukhlal on the plaintiff's Cawnpore branch, which fell due and was duly paid about the time of the receipt of the hundi in question by that branch.

Soon after the receipt of this hundi for Rs. 2,500, the plaintiff's Cawnpore branch sent it to the Bank of Bombay for collection. Gangadharrao Yeshwantrao also sent the two hundis for Rs. 5,000 each received from Damodar Sukhlal to Bombay for collection.

On the 19th April the owners of the firm of Damodar Sukhlal stopped payment and absconded from Gwalior. Whereupon Gangadharrao Yeshwantrao telegraphed and wrote to the defendant's Bombay branch of Gopalrao Malharrao directing the latter not to accept the six hundis of Damodar Sukhlal and to present the two hundis of that firm for acceptance through the bank. These last mentioned hundis were presented to the drawees thereof respectively, and were dishonoured. The [140] consideration for the six hundis of Gangadharrao Yeshwantrao, including the hundi sued upon, thereupon failed, as Damodar was a debtor to that firm at Gwalior.

The Bank of Bombay presented the hundi in question to the defendant's Bombay firm of Gopalrao Malharrao on the 23rd April, 1889. Acceptance was refused. It was then returned by the bank to the plaintiffs at Cawnpore. It was not presented at due date for payment.

After receiving back the hundi from the Bank of Bombay the plaintiff sent a vakil's notice to the defendant. The defendant refused to receive the notice, and did not pay the amount of the hundi.

On the 16th June, 1891, the plaintiff instituted a suit upon the hundi in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Cawnpore. It was dismissed for want of jurisdiction on the 18th March, 1893. The plaintiff instituted the present suit on 11th April, 1893. The plaint was accepted with leave to sue under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, on that day.

It has been found by the Division Court that the defendant ceased to carry on business in Bombay and closed his firm here shortly before suit filed. There is no cross-appeal against that finding. So it must be taken as a fact in the case.

Dishonour by the drawee has always been held to constitute part of the cause of action in a suit on a hundi by the holder against the drawer—Mulchand v. Suganchand (1). It is contended before us that in this case there has been no dishonour under the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), as the hundi was not presented for payment. The definition, in the Indian Act, of the engagement which the drawer of a bill of exchange enters into with the person in whose favour it is drawn, is very compendiously expressed (s. 30). Under English law, upon which the Act is founded, the engagement of the drawer is that "on due presentment it shall be accepted and paid according to its tenor, and that if it be dishonoured, he will compensate the holder, provided that the requisite proceedings in dishonour shall [141] be duly taken." We take this definition from the English Act (45 and 46 Vic., c. 61 and 65); but it is merely a reproduction of the Common Law. This was also the law in British India before the passing of the Negotiable Instruments Act, and we can see no indication, in that Act, of an intention to alter it. The section in the Indian Act relating to this subject is s. 30. "The drawer of a bill of exchange is bound, in case of dishonour by the drawee in acceptance thereof, to compensate the holder, provided due notice of the dishonour has been given to the drawee." Dishonour may be by non-acceptance, which takes place "when the drawee makes default in acceptance upon being duly required to accept the bill" (s. 91), or by non-payment, which takes place "when the acceptor of the bill.....makes default in payment upon being duly required to pay the same" (s. 92).

In the case of bills drawn otherwise than payable after sight, there is no definition or explanation of the meaning of the italicised words "upon being duly required to accept the bill," and it is argued that, in the case of such bills, there is no dishonour within the meaning of the Act, except dishonour by non-payment, and thus the drawer incurs no liability until the Bill is presented for payment, and payment is refused. The English law does not require presentment for acceptance of a bill payable after a fixed date to be made by the holder before such fixed date arrives (see s. 39 (3) of the English Act, which is declaratory of the American law (Chalmers, p. 120) and Whitehead v. Walker (2)), nor does the Indian Act (s. 62). But under the English law it was not only allowable but was strongly advisable to do so; and we think that the Negotiable Instruments Act has made no alteration in that respect. Presentment for acceptance must always and in every case precede presentment for payment, and it appears to us that the drawer of a bill contracts that whenever the bill is duly presented, it will, subject to the provisions of s. 63, be accepted. The several sections in Chap. 61, relating to presentment for payment, appear to us to pre-suppose that the bill has not been already dishonoured by [142] non-acceptance. When it is dishonoured by non-acceptance, as well as when it is dishonoured by non-payment, the provisions of Chap. VIII come into play. It is true that there is no such explicit declaration of the law upon this subject contained in the Indian, as in s. 43 (2) of the English, Act. But the whole scope and tenor of Chap. VIII of the Indian Act appear to contemplate the same result as is there declared to follow from non-acceptance. We are, therefore, of opinion the dishonour of a bill by non-acceptance constitutes now, as it has always done, part of the cause of action in a suit against the drawer.

No notice of dishonour is required where, as in this case, the drawer and drawee are the same person. On dishonour of the bill, the right to sue the drawer immediately accrued and was complete, and there was no need to wait till the maturity of the bill, or present it to the drawee for payment. The same view of the position of a drawer under the Negotiable Instruments Act was taken by the Court in Miller v. National Bank of India (1) as we have adopted. But the point was hardly disputed and but little discussed. It would be unfortunate if we had felt ourselves compelled to declare the Anglo-Indian law to be different from the English law upon this subject.

It has been, however, argued upon the authority of Gurdyal Singh v. The Rajah of Faridkote (2) that, admitting that part of the cause of action arose in Bombay, the Court has no jurisdiction over the defendant, who is a subject of the Baroda State and a foreigner, inasmuch as before suit filed, he had ceased to carry on business in Bombay and to be amenable to the jurisdiction of this High Court.

The answer to this contention appears to us to be found in a passage of the judgment of the Privy Council itself. "In a personal action..... a decree pronounced in absentem by a foreign Court to the jurisdiction, of which the defendant has not in any way submitted himself, is by international law an absolute nullity. He is under no obligation of any kind to obey it, and it must be regarded as a mere nullity by the Courts of every nation, except (when authorized by special local legislation) in [143] the country of the forum by which it was pronounced." Except in the case of Kessowji v. Khimji Jayaram (3), where, to escape from a grave anomaly, one of the heads of jurisdiction conferred on the High Court by cl. 12 of its Letters Patent was read as though the words "being a British subject" were inserted in it, it has been considered, since the establishment of this High Court, that the several heads of jurisdiction specified in the clause were applicable to actions where a foreigner was a defendant. The number of suits which have been brought, and without question decided, upon that view of the law must have been very great. The judgment of the Court of Appeal in Girdhar v. Kassigar (4) virtually overrules Kessowji v. Khimji (3), and decides that the case of foreigners resident out of the jurisdiction, but carrying on business within it, is not to be impliedly excluded from the purview of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent. The reasoning upon which the decision is founded, is directly applicable to the case before us. Thus we feel that we should be virtually overruling that decision if we were to accept the contention of the counsel for the appellant. We do not, however, doubt its correctness, and willingly follow it. The plea to the jurisdiction, therefore, fails. ... ...

As to limitation, we see no sufficient reason for not excluding, from the period prescribed for the suit, the time occupied by the plaintiff in prosecuting his suit in the Court at Cawnpore. That it was a bona fide suit, in which the plaintiff hoped to obtain a decree in his favour, there can, we think, be no doubt. It was prosecuted to decree, but failed. We feel unable to accept the argument for the appellant that because the mistake made in filing the suit at Cawnpore was an error of law, that the suit was not a bona fide one. It was a stupid, though not an unaccountable, blunder; but the ignorance of law, or the ill-advice of a pleader, does not, in our opinion, necessarily or prima facie establish a want of good faith. We do not assent to the ruling, in which a contrary proposition appears to be laid down. We also cannot say that the plaintiff has not established that his suit was prosecuted with diligence. He engaged a pleader and took [144] the usual steps which a litigant is compelled to adopt. If there had been undue delay in the service of the summons, it would have been pointed out in the cross-examination of the plaintiff. Nothing of this kind has been shown. The hearing of the case appears to have been delayed in part by defendant not putting in his written statement, in part by the state of the business of the Court. It would, under these circumstances, be rather an extreme step to deprive the plaintiffs of the benefit of s. 14 of the Limitation Act.

Lastly, as to the plaintiff being a holder in due course (s. 9), we do not entertain any doubt. The circumstances show that the hundi was sent to the plaintiff to prevent the plaintiff dishonouring the hundi which Damodar Sukhlal had drawn on him, and to reduce the amount of Damodar Sukhlal's indebtedness to the plaintiff. The several cases, in which the holder of a bill is said to be a holder for consideration or value, will be found in the illustrations to the English Bills of Exchange Act, s. 27. The present case clearly falls within them.

We, therefore, confirm the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

The Bombay District Municipal Act (Bombay Act VI of 1873), s. 17†—Public street—Street—Construction of Act—The City of Bombay Municipal Act (III of 1888) s. 3.‡

In a suit brought by the plaintiff against the Municipality of Ahmedabad, the question was whether a certain street was a public street within the contemplation of the Bombay District Municipal Act (Bombay Act VI of 1873). The District Judge, on the evidence and having regard especially to the fact that the street in question was protected by a gate closed at night by a polia, or watchman, who lived over the gate, and was under the control of and paid by the owners of the houses in the street, held that there had been no dedication of the land to the public, and that the public had not acquired such a right of going over it as to SECOND appeal from the decision of G. McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb Maneklal Narottamdas, Joint Second Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad.

[147] The plaintiff sued for an injunction restraining the defendants from removing a bench standing upon the ground in front of the plaintiff's ota (verandah), alleging that the bench had been there for more than twenty years.

The defendants pleaded (inter alia) that the ground on which the bench stood, did not belong to the plaintiff, but was part of a public street.

The Subordinate Judge found (1) that the bench had been standing upon the ground in front of the plaintiff's ota (verandah) for upwards of twenty years, (2) that the ground on which the bench stood formed part of a street, but not of a public street, and (3) that the Municipality had no right to remove the bench. He, therefore, passed a decree for the plaintiff.

The defendants appealed, urging (inter alia) that as there had been no issue raised at the trial as to whether the ground on which the bench stood formed part of a public street, they had called no evidence on the point, and they contended that they should be given an opportunity of calling such evidence. The Judge confirmed the decree, but on second appeal by the defendants, the High Court remanded the case for a finding on the following issue (see I. L. R., 19 Bom., 212):—

"Whether the land in question forms part of a public street vested in the Municipality?"

The finding of the Judge was in the negative. The following is an extract from his judgment:—

"A public street is nowhere defined in the Bombay District Municipal Acts (No. VI of 1873 and No. II of 1884). An attempt has, therefore, been made to use the definition in s. 3 of Bombay Act III of 1888, the City of Bombay Municipal Act. A public street is therein defined as 'any street heretofore levelled, paved, metalled, channelled, sewered or repaired by the corporation, and any street which becomes a public street under any of the provisions of that Act.' It has been contended for the defence that as the street is lighted and swept by the Municipality, and a channel is cut in it during the rainy season by the Municipality, and as the sullage water of the houses in the street is removed by municipal servants, the definition above quoted applies. On the other hand, it has been contended that as it is neither levelled, nor paved, nor metalled, nor sewered, nor repaired by the Municipality, the definition does not apply. As to the facts, I believe the evidence of the Municipal Secretary, Mr. Dayabhai, as it is not materially contradicted, and the facts of lighting, sweeping, and removal of sullage [148] water, are admitted, and the fact of channelling is proved by the accounts produced by him (Exs. 48 and 49). But I do not think the definition given in an Act for the City of Bombay can properly be applied to a town in the Mofussil like Ahmedabad in all its strictness:

"The real test would seem to be whether every member of the public has the right of way over the street in question. I should think that they had not such right. This pol is completely closed on one side, and where it opens on the main road, there is a gate-way with a storey over it. A watchman, called a polia, lives on that storey and keeps charge of the gate and closes it at night, opening it when necessary. This gate-way and storey are kept in repairs by the house-holders of the pol, and the polia is also paid by them in various ways. Most of these facts are admitted by the Municipal Secretary, Mr. Dayabhai. He says: 'The street people are the owners of the storey, and the man who lives in it, does so for and on their behalf. The street has a gate with shutters. The street people repair the gate and shutters.' The nature of the payments to the polia is stated by Motilal (Ex. 57), a municipal inspector, who lives in the pol in question and was called as a witness by the Municipality and by the polia himself (Ex. 78). The existence of the gate-way, its possession and control by the inhabitants of the street, and the fact that it is closed every night, show that the street has all along been a private one and has been intended to be so. Private individuals certainly cannot control the right of access to a public street. It has been contended that there exists no such control, because no case can be quoted in which such access was disputed. But the very fact of closing the gate at night is a proof of this control. No doubt it is opened, if necessary, for the purposes of the inhabitants of the pol, but it would hardly be contended that any member of the public can cause it to be opened in order to enter at any hour he chooses. For example, if 4 or 5 Mahomedans wanted to enter it at night, merely for the purpose of walking through the street, surely they would not have the right of causing the gate to be opened for the purpose. Similarly, if a couple of suspicious-looking Kolis wanted to enter the pol, the polia would be justified in keeping the door closed until they could give good reason for letting them in. If the road were public, could any private individual prevent access, in either case, without rendering himself liable to prosecution for wrongful restraint?"

The defendants filed objections to the above finding.

Wadia with Gangaram B. Rele, for the appellants (defendants).—The Judge finds that the street in question is paved and channelled by the Municipality, but he holds that it is not a public street. The term "public street" is not defined in the District Municipal Act, but it is defined in the Bombay Municipal Act III of 1888, s. 14, there being no definition in the District Municipal Act, the definition given in the similar Act relating to the City of Bombay should be accepted.

Chimanlal H. Setalvad, for the respondent (plaintiff).—The public may have a right of way in a street which is not a public [149] street, and the proprietary right to which may be in private individuals. The Judge has found that the persons who own houses in this street are the proprietors of the street. The Court cannot read into one Act a definition contained in another.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—The issue sent down to the lower appellate Court (I.L.R., 19 Bom., 212) involves the question what constitutes a "public street" within the contemplation of Bombay Act VI of 1873. That Act contains a definition of a "street," but not of a "public street," although several sections refer only to public streets, among which is s. 17, which provides for the vesting of "public streets" in the Municipality, but at the same time leaves the question still open as to what are "public streets." The District Judge has come to the conclusion on the evidence, and more especially on the fact, that the street in question is protected by a gate closed at night by a polia, or watchman, who lives over the gate and is under the control of, and paid by, the owners of the houses in the pol; that there has been no dedication of the land to the public, and that the public has not acquired such a right of going on it as to make it a public street which it was intended by the Act to vest in the Municipality. The language of the High Court in Kalidas v. The Municipality at Dhandhuka (1) supports the view of the District Judge, where they say "no one's rights of property would be safe if the Municipality could take advantage of such limited access by members of the public, in order to make out a claim to hold the land in question as public property."

It was contended before us, on appeal, that the Court should have applied the test afforded by s. 3 of the Bombay City Municipal Act III of 1888. But that Act has no bearing on the Mofussil Municipal Act VI of 1873 in question, which relates to a state of things and conditions of life entirely different, and is, moreover, framed on entirely different lines. Under these circumstances we see no reason for interfering, on second appeal, with the finding on the issue, and must, therefore, confirm the decree with costs.

Decree confirmed.

Lunatic—Lunatic's estate—Act XXXV of 1858, s. 14†—Manager appointed under the Lunacy Act—Manager of joint family—Alienation by manager.

Where a person is appointed manager of a lunatic's estate under Act XXXV of 1858, he can only make a valid alienation in accordance with the provisions of that Act, although he may also be de facto, manager of the family property.

A Hindu married woman having a lunatic husband and minor sons was appointed guardian of the lunatic's estate under Act XXXV of 1858. She was also de facto manager of the family. She mortgaged the family property without the sanction of the Court, as required by s. 14 of the Act.

Held, that the mortgages were invalid as regards the lunatic's interest in the property, but as regards the interest of the minors, which was vested in them at the time of the mortgages, the property being ancestral, the mortgages were binding if made for family purposes.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

20 B. 150.

THESE were second appeals from the decision of Gilmour McCorkell, District Judge of Kanara, reversing the decree of Rao Saheb V. D. Joglekar, Subordinate Judge of Honavar.

Suit for possession of land. The land in question was the property of one Venkatesh, who was found to be a lunatic under the Lunacy Act (XXXV of 1858). His wife Lakshmibai was appointed manager of his estate under s. 14 of that Act. She was also de facto manager of the family, which consisted of her lunatic husband and two minor sons Ganpaya and Pandurang (defendants Nos. 3 and 4). In 1876 she mortgaged the land, without possession, to the first defendant.

On the 4th February, 1882, Ganpaya having then attained [151] majority, sold the same land to the plaintiff, who in 1889 brought this suit for possession.

The first defendant claimed as mortgagee from Lakshmibai. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 did not defend the suit. Defendant No. 4 (Ganpaya's brother Pandurang) contended that his share in the property was not bound by Ganpaya's sale to the plaintiff.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that defendant No. 1 had proved his mortgage, and that the share of defendant No. 4 was not bound by the plaintiff's purchase from defendant No. 3.

On appeal, the Judge passed a decree for the plaintiffs, ordering that they "should recover possession of the land free from all incumbrances on the part of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and mesne profits from the date of suit."

The following is an extract from his judgment :—

"Lakshmibai was the wife of one Venkatesh Pai, who had been declared a lunatic, and his wife had obtained a certificate. In 1876 she mortgaged to defendant No. 1. Plaintiffs contend that that mortgage is invalid. On this point there can be no doubt. Lakshmibai had obtained a provisional order to sell some lands, but she did not fulfil the conditions imposed. She had, therefore, no authority to sell. Now it must not be assumed that even an absolute authority to sell can be construed as an authority to mortgage. Under such special Acts as Acts XXXV of 1858 and XX of 1864,* the administratrix must act in strict conformity to the authority conferred ; otherwise her acts are invalid ab initio. The argument of the Subordinate Judge, that she was acting as the guardian de facto of her sons, cannot be sustained for a moment. Her husband was alive, and she held in trust for him and not for her children. Her children could only claim proper maintenance, but they had no proprietary right in the estate such as came after the death of their father.

"Defendant No. 5 obtained a decree against Lakshmibai as administratrix of her husband's estate in respect of maintenance. The maintenance of a widow in a joint Hindu family is a charge against the general family estate, and not against any particular portion. The maintenance of defendant No. 5 must be held as a charge against the lands in dispute along with the rest of the family estate."

* Section 18 of the Minors' Act (Bombay Act XX of 1864)—

18. Every person to whom a certificate shall have been granted under the provisions of this Act may exercise the same powers in the management of the estate as might have been exercised by the proprietor if not a minor, and may collect and pay all just claims, debts and liabilities due to or by the estate of the minor. But no such person shall have power to sell, alienate, mortgage, or otherwise incumber any immoveable property or to grant a lease thereof for any period exceeding five years without the sanction of the Civil Court previously obtained.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

[152] The first defendant (Anpurnabai) preferred a second appeal.

Scott with Ghanasham N. Nadkarni, appeared for appellant (original defendant No. 1):—The mortgage by Lakshmibai to the first defendant was valid. She acted in two capacities. She had been appointed manager under the Mofussil Courts' Lunacy Act, and, therefore, any alienation made by her in that capacity was effectual. She also acted as the de facto manager of the family, and borrowed money from the first defendant to pay off previous debts. Therefore the alienation made by her as the de facto manager cannot be impeached, the alienation being for a family necessity—Bai Amrit v. Bai Manik (1); Girraj Baksh v. Kazi Hamad Alli (2); Keshav v. Doulatkhan (3); Manishankar v. Bai Muli (4).

[FULTON, J.—Lakshmibai did not obtain the sanction of the Court under s. 14 of the Lunacy Act to mortgage the property. Therefore the alienation made by her as the manager of her lunatic husband would be bad. See Court of Wards v. Kupulmun Sing (5).]

The family having derived the benefit of the mortgage transaction, it should not now be set aside—Dilkoer v. Roy Anand Kishore (6). As the mortgages were made for the benefit of the family, neither the lunatic nor the minors are entitled to have it set aside without making restitution.

We further contend that the lunatic had no interest in the family property. Lunacy deprived him of his share, and he became entitled only to maintenance. A lunatic is not entitled to a share on partition—Mayne's Hindu Law, art. 443.

Shamrao Vithal, for the respondents (original plaintiffs) :—The previous sanction of the Court under s. 14 of the Lunacy Act was not obtained, and, therefore, the mortgage was not valid so far as the lunatic was concerned—Court of Wards v. Kupulmun Sing (5). It was not as the de facto manager of the family that he purported to deal with the property, but as [153] manager appointed under the Lunacy Act. She ought to have obtained the sanction of the Court either under the Lunacy Act or the Minors' Act. There is no authority for the proposition that a lunatic is under no circumstances entitled to a share in the family property. If a man becomes a lunatic after partition, he cannot be deprived of his share. It is only where a man is a lunatic at the opening of the inheritance that he is not entitled to a share.

Narayan G. Chandavarkar, appeared for respondents (original plaintiffs) in Appeal No. 551.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The District Judge has decided in favour of the plaintiff on the ground that the mortgages by Lakshmibai, under which defendant No. 1 claims, were bad, both as regard her lunatic husband and the defendants Nos. 3 and 4. As to the latter, he disputes the ground of the Subordinate Judge's decision in favour of defendant No. 1 as proceeding on the assumption that she was acting as the guardian de facto of her minor sons. But this is a mistaken view of the Subordinate Judge's reasoning. He treated Lakshmibai as being the de facto manager of the family, and, as such, being able to alienate the property for family purposes. It was not disputed that she did fill that character; but the question for consideration is, whether having been appointed a guardian of her lunatic husband's estate under Act XXXV of 1858, she could mortgage the lunatic's interest without the consent of the Court as required by s. 14 of the Act. The decisions in Shurrut Chunder v. Rajkissen (1) and Bhupendro Narayan v. Nemye Chand (2) are conclusive that in the case of a manager of a minor appointed under the Minors' Act, although he may have been de facto manager of the family property, he can only make a valid alienation in accordance with the Minors' Act. The language of s. 14 of the Act XXXV of 1858 is the same as that of s. 18 of the Bombay Minors' Act XX of 1864, and the decision must be the same with regard to the manager of a lunatic. The remarks of Phear, J., with respect to a lunatic's estate in The Court of Wards v. Kupulmun Sing (3), and which is referred to in Shurrut Chunder v. Rajkissen (1), are to that effect. [154] The mortgages, therefore, under which defendant No. 1 claims, were invalid as regards the lunatic's interest in the property, but as regards the interest of the minors, defendants Nos. 3 and 4, which was vested in them at the time, it being admittedly ancestral property, if the mortgages were for family purposes, they would be binding on defendants Nos. 3 and 4, through whom plaintiff claims. Owing to the view the District Judge took of the rights of the parties, there is no finding as to this. It was contended for defendant No. 1 that the lunatic was only entitled to maintenance after the partition, but this would not be so if the lunatic was not one at the time of Giriappa's death so as to disqualify him from inheriting or demanding a partition, and as no issue was raised in either Court below relative to the lunatic's proprietary right, it must be assumed that such was the case, as was held by Phear, J., under similar circumstances in The Court of Wards v. Kupulmun Sing (3).

Lastly, it was said that, at any rate, equity requires that the plaintiff should not recover possession of the lunatic's proprietary interest in the property without paying some portion of the amount of the mortgage passed to defendant No. 1, as it was expended on the family estate, and the plaintiff has had the benefit of it. This question cannot be satisfactorily dealt with until it has been determined whether the money raised by defendant No. 1's mortgages was for a family purpose. We must, therefore, before disposing of the case send down the following issue for determination :—

Were the mortgages executed by Lakshmibai to defendant No. 1 or was either and which of them for a family purpose?

Finding to be sent to this Court within three months.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Lalshankar Umiashankar, Joint Subordinate Judge of the First Class, A. P., of Thana, in appeal No. 190 of 1891.

Three brothers, Ravji, Parashram and Sitaram, were members of a joint Hindu family.

In April, 1870, the three brothers passed two bonds (Exs. 6 and 7) in favour of the plaintiff's father for debts incurred for the benefit of the joint family.

After this Ravji died, leaving behind him his widow and two minor sons (defendants Nos. 4 and 5).

On the 14th October, 1874, Parashram and Sitaram passed a bond (Ex. 8) for Rs. 1,990-5-0, being the balance due on the previous bonds (Exs. 6 and 7), mortgaging certain family property. The claim in respect of the previous bonds was at that time barred by limitation.

In 1879, Parashram and Sitaram adjusted the account of the debt due on Ex. 8, and executed for themselves, and as guardians of defendants Nos. 4 and 5, two mortgage-bonds (Exs. 10 and 11) in plaintiff's favour for Rs. 2,500 and Rs. 466-7-0, respectively.

In 1890, the plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 3,999 due on Ex. 11 by sale of the mortgaged property as well as from the defendants personally.

Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 (who were sons of Parashram) and defendant No. 6, Sitaram, contended that they were not personally liable.

[156] Defendants Nos. 4 and 5, the sons of Ravji, contended (inter alia) that their uncles, Parashram and Sitaram, had no authority to execute the bond sued upon as their guardians, or to revive the debt in respect of which it was passed, so as to affect their shares in the family property, and that the debt was not for the benefit of the family.

The Court of first instance held that the bond sued upon was passed for a debt incurred for the benefit of the joint family; that the mortgage was not binding on defendants Nos. 4 and 5; and that the shares of defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 6 in the mortgaged property, as well as the defendant No. 6 personally, were liable to pay the debt. The Court passed a decree accordingly, and dismissed the suit as against defendants Nos. 4 and 5.

On appeal, the Subordinate Judge with Appellate Powers found that the debt was contracted for the benefit of the whole family, and, therefore, binding on all the defendants; and that the shares of defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were liable. He, therefore, amended the first Court's decree by directing that the defendants should pay to plaintiff Rs. 2,895-0-6 and costs within six months from the date of the decree, and in default the plaintiff should recover the amount by sale of the mortgaged property.

The following extract from his judgment gives his reasons:—

"It is contended that on the dates of Exs. 10 and 11, the old debts were barred by limitation as against defendants Nos. 4 and 5, and that Parashram and Sitaram had no right to renew them, so as to bind the minors (defendants Nos. 4 and 5). But as the old debts due on Exs. 6, 7 were joint, and binding on all the members of the joint family, the bond Ex. 8 was binding on defendants Nos. 4 and 5, even if their names did not appear therein. The joint family property was also liable for the joint debt (I. L. R., 5 Bom. 38). As the disputed property was joint, and as it was mortgaged for the joint debt, I hold that the contention of defendants Nos. 4 and 5 is not good, and that the shares of all the members of the family in the disputed property are liable to pay the debt."

Against this decision the defendants Nos. 1, 4, 5 and 6 appealed to the High Court.

N. G. Chandavarkar, for appellant.—At the date of Ex. 8, the debt due on Exs. 6 and 7 was time-barred. Neither Parashram nor Sitaram had any right to revive a time-barred debt. The manager of a Hindu family is not competent to do [157] so—Gopalnarain v. Muddomutty (1); Chinnaya v. Gurunatham (2); Naranji v. Bhagvandas (3); Sobhanadri Appa Rau v. Sriramulu (4).

Manekshah Jehangirshah, for respondent.—Under the Hindu law, a debtor is bound to pay his debts, whether they are barred or not by limitation. A manager of a Hindu family can pay a time-barred debt, just as an executor can do under the English law—Tillakchand v. Jitamal (5). Suppose the manager were to pay a barred debt, can the other members of the family be allowed to question his act? A manager can acknowledge a debt, so as to give a fresh starting point to limitation—Bhasker v. Vijalal (6). If he can do so, why may he not revive a barred debt? A widow can pay a time-barred debt of her deceased husband; it is her duty to do so. The manager is under a similar obligation to pay off the debts of the family. He does not exceed his authority if he revives a barred debt.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The first question raised in this appeal relates to the mortgage-bond (Ex. 8) dated the 4th October, 1874. This was given in satisfaction of two money-bonds (Exs. 6 and 7) by Parashram and Sitaram, as managers of the Hindu family, to which defendants Nos. 4 and 5, minor sons of Ravji, belonged. It is found as a fact that at the date of this mortgage-bond (Ex. 8), the debt evidenced by the two earlier bonds was barred by limitation.

The Subordinate Judge held under these circumstances that the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were not bound by Ex. 8. The lower Court of appeal has held the contrary, considering the revival of the debt to be within the authority of the managers, but without citing any text of Hindu law or judicial decision. Mr. Mankeshah, who supported this view, has urged that the manager is in a position like that of an executor at English law—Tillakchand v. Jitama (5)—with a duty imposed on him to pay debts. But on this point a contrary view has been expressed by Couch, C. J., in Gopalnarain v. Muddomutty (1), that "the manager of a joint Hindu family has no power to revive a debt by an acknowledgment [158] except as against himself." The same view was taken under the Limitation Act of 1877, s. 19, by a Full Bench at Madras in Chinnaya v. Gurunatham (2), which followed the decision in Kumara Sami v. Pala (7), on the words "generally or specially authorized" in s. 20 of the Limitation Act (IX of 1871). See also Naranji v. Bhagvandas (3) and Wajibun v. Kadir (8), as regards acknowledgments. Following these authorities we must disallow the claim against defendants Nos. 4 and 5 altogether; they are not liable either personally or as regards their shares in the mortgaged property.

The lower Court of appeal allowed Rs. 1,103-15-6 to the defendants on the sixth issue, being seven years' rent at Rs. 99 per annum, plus Rs. 410-15-6 interest. But per incuriam it assumed that the plaintiff had not filed his books of account, whereas it appears that they were

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

JETHABHAI DAYALJI (Original Defendant), Appellant v. GIRDHAR (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent. [10th December, 1894.]

Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 50—Priority—San-mortgage optionally registrable, but not registered—Subsequent mortgage registered—Decree passed on san-mortgage—Execution—Purchaser at execution sale—Priority of mortgagee under registered mortgage to such purchaser—Notice.

In 1875 the land in dispute was mortgaged to defendant No. 2 under two san-mortgage bonds, which were optionally registrable, but were not registered. In [159] 1885 the land was mortgaged to plaintiff by a registered mortgage accompanied with possession. In 1886 the defendant No. 2 obtained a decree upon his san-mortgage bond, in execution of which the mortgaged property was brought to sale and purchased by defendant No. 3.

Defendant No. 3 was afterwards put in possession by the Court. Thereupon the plaintiff sued to enforce his mortgage lien against the property in the hands of defendant No. 3 who pleaded that the san-mortgages of 1875 were entitled to priority over the plaintiff's mortgage of 1885, and that he as purchaser at a sale under a decree obtained upon the san-mortgages held the property free from the plaintiff's claim.

Held, that the plaintiff's mortgage, having been executed and registered after Act III of 1877 had come into force, was entitled under s. 50 of the Act to priority over the unregistered san mortgage bonds.

A san-mortgage is not within the exceptions mentioned in s. 50 of the Act.

Held, also, that under s. 47 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) the plaintiffs' registered mortgage began to operate from the date of its execution, and was not affected by the decree subsequently obtained upon the earlier mortgages.

By the custom of Gujarat, transfer of possession, which is necessary under general Hindu law, is not essential to validate san-mortgages, and such mortgages have always been held valid charges as between mortgagor and mortgagee, but they are liable to be defeated in case of the transfer of interest to third parties under registered instruments.

Apart from the doctrine of equitable notice, registration under Act XVI of 1864 and Act VIII of 1871 conferred no priority on a registered document as against a document the registration of which was optional. Since Act III of 1877, however, the competition obtains in a more general form, and confers priority on all documents required to be registered, and registered since Act III of 1877 was passed, over all prior unregistered deeds of an antagonistic character.

SECOND appeal from the decision of J. J. Heaton, Acting Joint Judge of Ahmedabad, in appeal No. 399 of 1891.

* Second Appeal No. 301 of 1893.

The property in dispute was mortgaged by one Bava Jagpal to defendant No. 2 by two san-mortgage deeds, dated 23rd March, 1875—one for Rs. 99 and the other for Rs. 98, respectively. The deeds were optionally registrable (see s. 18 of Act VIII of 1871), but neither of them was registered.

On the 22nd June, 1885, Bava Jagpal mortgaged the same property to the plaintiff for Rs. 651. The mortgage-deed was registered, and the mortgagee got possession.

Subsequently, defendant No. 2 sued Bava Jagpal, the mortgagor, on the san-mortgage bonds of 1875, and obtained a decree, in execution of which the mortgaged property was put up [160] for sale and was purchased by defendant No. 3, who was afterwards put into possession by the Court.

In 1891 the plaintiffs filed the present suit upon the registered mortgage of the 21st June, 1825, for possession of the property, and in the alternative to enforce their mortgage lien by a sale.

Defendant No. 1, the son and heir of Bava Jagpal, the mortgagor, did not admit the plaintiff's mortgage.

Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 pleaded (inter alia) that the san-mortgage-deeds of 1875 were entitled to priority over plaintiff's mortgage of 1885, and that a decree having been obtained on the san-mortgages, defendant No. 3 had purchased the property at the Court sale free from the plaintiff's mortgage lien.

The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiff's claim, holding that the san-mortgages relied upon by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were not proved, and that the decree based upon the said mortgages was fraudulent and collusive.

On appeal the Acting Joint Judge held that the san-mortgages were genuine, but that though they were earlier in point of time, and optionally registrable, the plaintiff's mortgage being registered was entitled to priority under s. 50 of the Registration Act (III of 1877).

He, therefore, varied the decree of the first Court, and ordered defendant No. 3 to pay to plaintiffs, within six months, Rs. 675 with interest at six per cent., or in default to restore possession of the land in suit to plaintiff.

The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 appealed to the High Court.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for the appellant (defendant No. 3).— The defendant No. 2 obtained a decree upon the san-mortgage of 1875. In execution of that decree, the right, title, and interest of the mortgagor was sold as it existed at the date of the san-mortgage. That was what defendant No. 3 bought at the sale. The property in his hands as purchaser is, therefore, free from all incumbrances subsequently created by the mortgagor—Kasandas Laldas v. Pranjivan Asharam (1). The plaintiff's mortgage was subsequent, and defendant No. 3 is not liable to satisfy it. A [161] san-mortgage is valid without possession according to the custom of Gujarat and is binding on all subsequent incumbrances—Sobhagchand v. Bhaichand (2).

Chimanlal Harilal, for appellant (defendant No. 2).

Nagindas Tulsidas, for respondent (plaintiff).—Under s. 50 of the Registration Act III of 1877 the plaintiff's mortgage being registered, is entitled to priority over the earlier san-mortgages, which are unregistered —Shivram v. Saya(3). A san-mortgage is not within any of the exceptions mentioned in s. 50 of the Act.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, in reply.—The san-khats are merged in the decree. And a decree is within the exceptions to s. 50 of Act III of 1877.

JUDGMENTS.

JARDINE, J.—The appellant (defendant No. 2) relied upon two unregistered documents of 1875 of which the registration was optional, viz., two san-mortgage-deeds passed to him, on which in 1886 he obtained a decree, in execution whereof the mortgaged property was put up for sale by the Court, and purchased by defendant No. 3, who obtained possession. The plaintiffs-respondents relied upon a registered mortgage, dated the 25th June, 1885.

In this case no question of notice requiring us to consider whether the equitable rule applies, arises as in Vinayak v. Vasudev (1). In that case the change effected in the law by s. 50 of Act III of 1877 was pointed out. That section makes a rule under which the plaintiffs' registered mortgage would have priority over every unregistered document of earlier date, unless the latter be held to come within an exception. Mr. Ganpatrav urged that the contrary view had been taken in Vinayak v. Sitaram (2), where Sobhachand v. Bhaichnad (3) is referred to, but, as we have ascertained from the record, only for the equitable rule about notice. In Appeal No. 453 of 1893 decided on the 29th November, 1894, by Sargent, C. J., and Candy, J., where, as in the present case, the competition was between a san-mortgage-deed executed in Gujarat in 1876, optionally registrable and unregistered, and a sale-deed [162] executed and registered after Act III of 1877 had come into force, the later document was awarded priority. The judgment of the District Court in that case shows that it took that view after consideration of Sobhagchand v. Bhaichand (supra), Hasha v. Ragho(4) and Shivram v. Saya(5). We are of opinion, then, that we would exceed the province of interpretation if we imported into s. 50 of Act III of 1877 an exception in favour of san-mortgage-deeds. On this point we consider the law has been correctly applied by the Court below.

Mr. Ganpatrav then urged that as defendant No. 2 had on some date later than that of the registration of the plaintiff's mortgage obtained decrees on his san-khats against the person now represented by defendant No. 1, s. 50 of Act III of 1877 gave those unregistered mortgages priority. This point seems not to have been raised in the two Courts below, and no authority was cited here. Under s. 47, the plaintiffs' registered mortgage began to operate from the date of execution—Santaya v. Narayan(6) and is not affected by the decrees obtained by defendant No. 2—Madar v. Subbarayalu (7) followed in The Himalaya Bank, Limited v. The Simla Bank, Limited (8).

For the above reasons the Court confirms the decree with costs.

RANADE, J.—I concur in the view taken by Mr. Justice Jardine in disposing of this appeal. The question at issue in this case is solely whether appellant Bechardas, who is the auction-purchaser in execution of the decree passed on the unregistered san-mortgages of 1875, was properly required by the lower Court to pay to the respondents, original plaintiffs, the sum due in respect of the registered mortgage of 1885 executed in their favour by the common mortgagor Bava Jagpal.

The appellant's pleader chiefly rested his case on the authority of the Full Bench decision in Sobhagchand v. Bhaichand (1), affirmed in Sankana v. Virupakshapa (2) and Mohan v. Togu (3). In the first of these decisions, it was held that in the case of [163] san-mortgages, the transfer of possession, necessary under the general Hindu law, was not essential, and that such mortgages were valid under the custom of Gujarat. The case of Sankana v. Virupakshapa came from Dharwar side, while Mohan v. Togu. though it related to a san-mortgage, and the facts were some what similar to those of the present case, was not decided on the ground of any peculiar custom in regard to san-mortgages in Gujarat. In that case the auction-purchaser in execution of the decree on the unregistered, though prior, san-mortgage, was put in possession, but the subsequent registered mortgagee was permitted to redeem the san-mortgage charge. None of these cases thus supports the appellant's contention about the privileged character of san-mortgages in the way of dispensing with the priority conferred by the Registration Act of 1877 on registered mortgages. The only privilege recognized is in regard to the objection about possession. san-mortgages have always been held to be valid charges, as between mortgagor and mortgagee, even when not accompanied by transfer of possession—Lakhmichand v. Kastur (4); Dwarkadas v. Galabhai (5). Even these early decisions, however, recognized the fact that this privilege was liable to be defeated in case of the transfer of interests to third parties under registered instruments—Lakhmichand v. Kastur. This view was also given effect to in Kasandas v. Pranjivan (6), in which the contest was between a registered mortgage of 1864, and an unregistered mortgage of 1862, and the superior claim of the former was upheld.

Leaving, therefore, the question of special custom aside, we must apply the general law to the case. It is true that in Sobhagchand v. Bhaichand, Westropp, C. J., and the Judges who sat with him, held that the registered certificate of sale did not defeat the prior unregistered mortgage. Melvill, J., explained the reason clearly in his judgment by stating that under the Registration Act, competition for priority can only exist between documents which are in their nature antagonistic. The decision by the Full Bench of the third point referred to it is thus not applicable here, or, if it is applicable, it tells against appellant's contention.

[164] As regards the general law, the authorities are clear that, under Act XVI of 1864 and Act VIII of 1871, the competition about priority was only recognized in regard to documents of a like kind, either optional or compulsory. Apart from the doctrine of equitable notice, which question does not arise in the present case, registration under those Acts by itself conferred no priority on a registered document if its registration was compulsory as against a document whose registration was optional. Since Act III of 1877, however, the competition obtains in a more general form, and confers priority on documents required to be registered, and accordingly registered since Act III of 1877 was passed, over all prior unregistered documents of an antagonistic character.

The Allahabad High Court decided the point in Kuar Gir Prasad v. Bansi (7), Lachaman Das v. Dip Chand (8), and it was subsequently affirmed in The Himalaya Bank v. The Simla Bank (9). The Bombay High Court reconized this same change in the law in Kanitkar v. Joshi(1), Ichharam v. Govindram (2), Shivram v. Saya (3). The Madras High Court affirmed it in Nallappa v. Ibram (4), and that Court went to the length of allowing s. 50 of Act III of 1877 to overide even the equitable doctrine of notice, in which last respect this Court has not been able to accept the Madras view—Shivram v. Genu (5) and Dundaya v. Chenbasapa (6). The Calcutta High Court also recognized the change effected by Act III of 1877 in Shib Chandra v. Johobux (7). The expression of opinion contained in Dundaya v. Chenbasapa (supra), that the principles of the former Acts are equaliy applicable to the recent Act, must be confined to the two points directly decided in that case, namely, about the equitable doctrine of notice, and the effect of possession, and cannot be extended to embrace the point now under consideration, in respect of which all the High Courts are in accord in holding that Act III of 1877 has effected an important change. On the whole, we feel satisfied that the [165] san-mortgages in this case were entitled to no particular privilege by force of custom, and that as the registered mortgage competing with them was executed since Act III of 1877 was passed, and the execution sale in which the appellant Bechardas bought the property took place subsequent to the registered mortgage, the appellant Bechardas was very properly ordered by the lower Court to pay off the encunbrance, subject to which the sale must be held to have taken place.

As regards the contention that the san-mortgages merged in the decree, and that s. 50 exempts decrees from competition with registered mortgages, the authorities are clear that no such exemption can be claimed. In The Himalaya Bank, Limited v. The Simla Bank, Limited (8), it was expressly held that a mortgage registered under Act III of 1877 was entitled to priority over a decree obtained subsequently to the registration of such deed upon a prior unregistered bond. The principle of that decision is that the decree and the sale only give effect to the rights under the bond, and cannot confer any higher right. See also Dullabhdas v. Lakshmandas (9).

We accordingly reject the appeal, and confirm the decree with costs.

Decree confirmed.

At the trial it was proposed to ask what the prisoner had said, on the ground that she was not then in custody, and that s. 26 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) did not apply.

[166] Held, that, notwithstanding the temporary absence of the policeman, the accused was still in custody, and the question must be disallowed.

[R., Rat. Unr. Cr. Cas. 855 (856).]

THE prisoner Emily Lester was charged with the murder of her husband at Navlak Kota near Pavagadh, in the Panch Mahals, on the night of the 8th May, 1895. Mr. Lester was District Superintendent of Police.

Professor Littledale, who was then in camp at some distance, heard of Lester's death. He at once sent word to Bhaskarrav Ramchandra Heblikar, who was a Magistrate of the First Class, and both of them went to Navlak. After some inquiry it was determined to remove the prisoner to Godhra.

Mr. Littledale in his evidence said :—

"At 9-15 we started, and I drove her into Godhra with one pair. During the day I had said 'I'll drive her in, but I won't take any responsibility for her custody, but will see to her being treated humanely.' I said this to Heblikar, I think, and to the Mahalkari of Halol. In consequence, a mounted savar accompanied me and Mrs. Lester. He rode in front. About 14 miles from Champaner, in a village called Kalol, I said to him there 'You had better go in and get another savar. Your horse will be tired.' He said yes and turned into Kalol off the road, and I with only Mrs. Lester and the coachman went on slowly. But till we had gone two miles, we were not overtaken by the savar. During his absence, I remember something said by her (the prisoner) about the shooting of Lester."

Machpherson (Acting Advocate General) for the prosecution.— I propose to ask the witness what the prisoner said : No policeman was present. The savar had gone away. The prisoner was no longer in custody. Section 26 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), therefore, does not apply.

Before the Honourable Chief Justice Farran and Mr. Justice Starling.

RAMJI MORARJI (Original Defendant), Appellant v. J.E. ELLIS AND THE STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF NEW YORK (Original Plaintiffs), *Respondents. [20th September, 1895.]

Costs—Decree—Assignment of decree pending appeal—Assignee of decree made respondent to appeal—Decree reversed in appeal—Liability of assignee for costs of hearing in lower Court.

The Standard Oil Company and one Ellis sued the defendant for damages. The lower Court found that there was no privity of contract between the company and the defendant, and dismissed the suit of the company (plaintiff No. 1) with costs, but passed a decree for Ellis (plaintiff No. 2) with costs. The defendant appealed in the first instance making Ellis (plaintiff No. 1) the sole respondent. The company, however, gave the defendant (appellant) notice that the decree obtained by Ellis had been assigned to them. Whereupon he (the appellant) obtained leave to make the company party-respondents as assignees of the decree from Ellis. The company objected to be made respondents. The appeal Court reversed the decree of the lower Court and dismissed the suit, and the question arose whether the company could be made liable for the general costs of the hearing in the lower Court.

Held, that the company were liable only for the costs of the appeal in which they had taken an active part, but not for the general costs of hearing in the lower Court, except so far as the suit was their suit. Ellis was liable for the costs throughout. The appellant (defendant) was not entitled, by bringing the company on the record against their will, to obtain an additional security for the costs already incurred in the lower Court.

The assignee of a decree who is made respondent in an appeal from it, and takes no steps actively to support it, ought not to be ordered to pay costs.

THE Standard Oil Company of New York (plaintiff No. 1) had a branch in Bombay and imported oil. Ellis (plaintiff No. 2) was a broker and commission agent, who obtained orders for the company and for others from native dealers.

This suit was brought by the company and Ellis against the defendant (appellant) to recover damages for his non-acceptance of five hundred barrels of oil, for which, it was alleged, he gave Ellis (plaintiff No. 2) an indent, in August, 1893, requesting him, or his agents, to purchase it for him. The plaint stated that Ellis accordingly ordered from the company (as the defendant intended) the said oil, but when it arrived, the defendant refused to take [168] delivery, repudiated the indent, and denied that he ever gave the order.

The plaint contained the following clause :—

"9. To avoid any technical defence the plaintiff John Edward Ellis has joined with the said company as a plaintiff in this suit. The plaintiffs submit that the plaintiff company is entitled to recover from the defendant the said damages, or, in the alternative, that the said second plaintiff is so entitled. The second plaintiff is willing that the said plaintiff company should recover the said damages."

The lower Court found that there was no privity of contract between the Standard Oil Company (plaintiff No. 1) and the defendant; that they had sold the oil to the commission agent Ellis (plaintiff No. 2) and not to his correspondent (the defendant).

* Suit No. 91 of 1894; Appeal No. 852.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.
20 B 167.

In his judgment the Judge (Candy, J.) said :—

"I now come to the question, who can recover from the defendant No. 1—the Standard Oil Company or Ellis? Admittedly both cannot, nor can there be a decree in the alternative. Ellis is the only man who can recover from the defendant. The correspondence recorded in the case shows that there was no privity between the Oil Company and Ramji Morarji. The Oil Company who supplied the oil to the commission agent (Ellis) sold to him and not to his correspondent. 'There is no more privity between the person supplying the goods to the commission agent and the foreign correspondent than there is between the brick-maker who supplies the bricks to a person building a house and the owner of that house' (Per Blackburn, J., in Ireland v. Livingston (1)."

The lower Court accordingly dismissed the suit of the company with costs, but passed a decree for Ellis (plaintiff No. 2) for Rs. 8,892, with costs.

The defendant appealed, in the first instance making Ellis the sole respondent. On the 1st August, 1894, the Standard Oil Company gave the defendant notice that the decree obtained by Ellis had been assigned to them. Thereupon (on 31st August, 1894) the defendant obtained leave to make the company party-respondents as assignees of the decree from Ellis.

The appeal Court reversed the lower Court's decree with costs and dismissed the suit. In speaking to the minutes of the decree, the question arose whether the Standard Oil Company could be made liable for the general costs of the hearing in the lower Court.

[169] Inverarity, for the Standard Oil Company.—We cannot dispute our liability for the costs of the appeal; but we contend that we are not liable for the general costs of the hearing in the lower Court. The decree of the lower Court has dismissed our suit with costs, and, of course, we must pay these costs so far as it was our suit. But for the costs of the suit in so far as it was Ellis' suit we are not liable. In the lower Court, Ellis succeeded and got a decree against the defendant. We have bought that decree, and it has been assigned to us as purchasers. We are in the same position as a complete outsider would occupy who bought the decree. He could not be held liable for the costs of the decree which he bought from the decree-holder. The cost of obtaining it is probably taken into account in fixing the price paid for it. The point is, therefore, to be considered as if we had not been parties at all. The Court has no jurisdiction to make persons not parties pay costs—Ram Coomar v. Chunder Canto (2). That is a strong case, for the Court thought that the person whom it refused to fix with costs had such an interest that he ought to have been a party. Here we had no interest. The Court found that to be so, and dismissed our suit, while it gave Ellis a decree. The defendant contended that we were not a proper party, and had no claim against him, and succeeded in his contention.

Macpherson (Acting Advocate General) for the defendant (appellant).—The company ought to be made liable for the whole of the costs in the lower Court. The company has been the really active party in the litigation. The suit againt us, so far as it was their suit, was dismissed with costs. We could not appeal against that order as to costs; but Ellis got a decree against us, and we appealed against that decree. The company took over that decree and were made respondents as assignees. An assignee by operation of law is liable to costs ab initio. A person who voluntarily makes himself assignee is a fortiori similarly liable—Watson v. Holliday (1); Borneman v. Wilson(2); Harland v. Garbutt (3); Boynton v. Boynton (4). An appeal is part of a suit—[170] Bachubai v. Shamji Jadowji(5). He referred to ss. 372 and 582 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV 1882).

Inverarity in reply.—The cases cited are distinguishable. First, in each case the party made liable for costs took the initiative and applied to be made a party. We did not do that; we objected to be made a party to the appeal, and it was done against our will. Secondly the trustee in bankruptcy in one case and the executor in the other represented the whole interest of the party for whose costs they were made liable. But we do not represent Ellis. The buyer of an article does not represent the seller, or accept his liabilities. Nor does the buyer of a claim such as this. Once our suit was dismissed we stood in the position of a mere outsider so far as Ellis' suit was concerned, and this Court has no power to make us pay the costs for which he alone is liable.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—The question which we have to consider is as to the liability of the assignee of a decree in favour of a plaintiff to pay the costs of suit in the event of the decree being reversed.

We agree with the argument of Mr. Inverarity that (except possibly in a very extreme and exceptional case) a person assisting the plaintiff is not liable in respect of, and cannot be ordered to pay, costs unless he is made a party to the suit—Hayward v. Giffard(6); Ram Coomar v. Chunder Canto(7). Now, in the present case the Standard Oil Company having originally, under s. 26 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) been wrongly made party-plaintiffs to the suit, were by the decree dismissed from it, and were ordered to pay the costs of the defendant occasioned by their having been so joined.

From this order of dismissal there has been no appeal. Their liability to pay the general costs of the suit must, we think, under these circumstances, be determined as if not having been joined as plaintiffs originally, they had been for the first time made parties respondents, by reason of having taken an assignment of the decree.

[171] It appears, from the correspondence which has been read, that they did not consent to be made respondents; but they took no steps to have the ex-parte order, making them respondents, set aside, and they have since actively supported the decree, which has been reversed in appeal. That is their position.

It has been contended that under s. 582 of the Civil Procedure Code the Court had no power to make them respondents in consequence of the assignment of the decree to them; but that contention is opposed to the ruling in Rajaram v. Jibai (8) which shows that under s. 372 they were liable to be made respondents without calling in aid the provisions of s. 582, and cannot be supported. We must take it that the company have been properly made respondents.

Now, it is a well-settled rule that executors and trustees in bankruptcy and others suing in autre droit are liable for costs as though they were suing in their own right, and when, pending a suit, they come in as plaintiffs in lieu of original plaintiffs and adopt the proceedings, they become liable personally for the costs ab initio. See the earlier cases collected in Cook v. Hathway(1) and see Watson v. Holliday(2); Borneman v. Wilson(3); Boynton v. Boynton(4); Daniel's Chancery Practice, p. 1175 (6th Ed.).

It cannot, we think, be doubted that an assignee of a claim in suit, who in virtue of his assignment is made a party to the suit as plaintiff before decree, is liable to have the same rule as to costs applied to him. Secar v. Lawson(5) is an instance of a person acquiring an interest in the subject-matter of the suit by assignment so being made a party. It shows that such parties are treated just as an executor coming in after the death of his testator or a trustee in bankruptcy coming in after adjudication would be treated, and we cannot doubt that the same rule as to costs would be applied to them. We have not been referred to, nor have we found a case in which the assignee of a decree has been made respondent, or in which his liability to costs has been dealt with. We think that, on principle, the Court has jurisdiction to make such an assignee liable for the costs of the suit ab [172] initio, if he is made a respondent at his own desire in lieu of the original plaintiff, or if, having been so made a respondent ex parte, he actively supports the decree. In principle we can see no difference between his case and that of the trustee in bankruptcy who actively supports an erroneous decree in favour of the bankrupt. Admitting, however, the jurisdiction, we think that the assignee of a decree, who is made respondent in an appeal from it, and takes no step actively to support it, ought not be ordered to pay costs. A person who takes an assignment of a decree already made takes a completely legitimate security, and ought not, we think, as a rule, to be subjected thereby to liability for the costs of the litigation which led up to it, even though the defendant succeed in getting him made in invitum a party respondent.

In the present case the assignee company have taken an active part in the appeal, though they have been brought upon the record against their consent. It is admitted that they may properly be ordered to pay the appellant's costs of the appeal, but it is argued that they ought not to be ordered to pay the costs incurred in the Court below. There is this difference between this case before us and that of an executor or trustee coming in and supporting the decree, that here the original plaintiff is still retained upon the record, and that the assignee company are only added as an additional security for costs already incurred or for those to be incurred in the appeal. We have felt great doubt upon the subject, but, on the whole, we think the defendant is not entitled, by bringing the assignee company upon the record against their will, to obtain an additional security for the costs which have been already incurred in the Division Court. The decree will, therefore, be drawn up making the Standard Oil Company liable only for the appellant's costs of appeal and Ellis liable for the costs throughout. The costs of speaking to the minutes will be borne by the parties respectively.

SECOND appeal from the decision of P. Khareghat, Assistant Judge of Broach, in appeal No. 63 of 1889.

Suit for an injunction directing the first defendant to pay annually to the plaintiffs and their heirs the sum of Rs. 17-8-10 as their share of the mazmundari hak paid by Government to the first defendant and for the arrears thereof for the years 1885-87.

The plaint alleged that a mazmundari hak of Rs. 123-7-0 stood in the names of three persons, viz., Parjaram (defendant No. 1) and two others, and was duly paid each year; that of this total amount the sum of Rs. 54-4-7 was received by Parjaram (defendant No. 1) and that in this latter sum the plaintiffs were sub-sharers, their share being Rs. 17-8-10; that this sub-share originally belonged to their grandfather Pranjivan Premchand, who received it annually from Parjaram (defendant No. 1); that after Pranjivan's death his widow Harkore received it until her death in 1877; that after her death her daughter Jivkore (plaintiffs' mother) received it until 1884, and that on the 26th May, 1885, by a deed of gift of that date she gave it to the plaintiffs. They now sued to recover payment from Parjaram (defendant No. 1).

The defendant (inter alia) denied the plaintiffs had right to the hak in question, and contended that he was a nearer heir of Premchand than the plaintiffs or their mother Jivkore. The following table shows the relationship of the parties:—

[174] Both the Court of first instance and the lower appellate Court rejected the plaintiffs' claim, holding that the defendant was a gotraja-sapinda of Premchand, and as such entitled to succeed in preference to Jivkore, who as daughter of a predeceased son ranked as a bandhu of the propositus.

Against this decision the plaintiffs preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

* Second Appeal, No. 565 of 1892.

predeceased son of Premchand. She is, therefore, entitled to succeed in preference to the remoter kinsmen. She is a gotraja-sapinda and not a bandhu as held by the lower Courts. The word gotraja means one born in the same family. The sister, though she passes by marriage into a different gotra, still ranks as a gotraja-sapinda according to the Vyavahara Mayukha, and succeeds immediately after the paternal grandmother on account of her propinquity of relationship. On the same principle I contend that a son's daughter would inherit as a gotraja-sapinda in preference to the remoter gotraja-sapindas. Refers to Mandlik's Vyavahar Mayukha, p. 81; West and Bühler's Digest (3rd Ed.), p. 130: Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Mankuvarbai (1); Kesserbai v. Valab Raoji (2). In Yadnavalkya's sloka 175, the word 'daughter' includes grand-daughter.

1894 DEC. 11. APPELLATE CIVIL. 20 B. 173.

Vicaji (with him M. M. Munshi), for respondent.—A son's daughter is not in the list of heirs. The general rule is that females are excluded from inheritance, unless they are specially named as heirs. A son's daughter is a bandhu—West and Bühler's Digest, pp. 137, 496; Mayne's Hindu Law, p. 574: see also Mohandas v. Krishnabai(3).

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—It has been argued for the appellants that the reasoning of the Vyavahara Mayukha in regard to the inclusion of sisters among gotraja-sapindas logically includes the daughter of a son of a propositus, although this daughter is not mentioned [175] as such in any of the sacred texts. We are, however, of opinion that this argument goes beyond the principles on which Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai(1) was decided; see pp. 422 and 446 of the Report. We, therefore, confirm the decree with costs.

On the 7th March, 1889, a decree-holder presented a darkhast for execution of a decree which awarded him possession of certain immoveable property. This darkhast was opposed by a third party, who was in possession of the property.

The decree-holder thereupon applied to the Court to have the obstruction removed. This application was registered under s. 331 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), as a suit between the decree-holder as plaintiff and the party who offered the obstruction as a defendant.

On the 22nd January, 1891, the decree-holder withdrew this latter suit. Thereupon his darkhast of the 7th March, 1889, was struck off the file. On the 12th November, 1892, he presented a second dharkhast for execution.

APPEAL from the decision of Rao Bahadur N. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona, in darkhast No. 655 of 1893.

[176] On the 2nd December, 1888, the plaintiff obtained a decree against one Sarasvatibai for possession of certain immoveable property.

On 7th March, 1889, the plaintiff applied for execution of the decree. This application was opposed by the Nazir of the District Court, who was in possession of the property as a receiver.

The plaintiff applied to the Court to have the obstruction removed.

Thereupon the Nazir's claim was registered under s. 331 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) as a suit between the decree-holder as plaintiff and the Nazir as defendant.

On the 22nd January, 1891, the decree-holder withdrew this latter suit, with liberty to bring a fresh suit.

On the 24th January, 1891, the darkhast of the 7th March, 1889, the proceedings on which had in the meantime been kept in suspense, was struck off the file, on the ground that as the suit under s. 331 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) had been withdrawn, the darkhast had come to an end.

On the 12th November, 1892, the plaintiff presented a fresh darkhast for execution. The plaintiff afterwards withdrew from this darkhast, with liberty to file a fresh darkhast.

On the 2nd November, 1893, the plaintiff again applied for execution. This application was rejected by the Subordinate Judge as barred by limitation, on the ground that the second darkhast of the 12th November, 1892, having been presented more than three years after the date of the first darkhast (7th March, 1889) was time-barred, and consequently the present darkhast was also barred by limitation.

Against this decision the decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

Shivram v. Bhandarkar, for appellant.—The second darkhast was a continuance of the first. The proceedings under the first darkhast had remained in suspense pending the suit under s. 331 of the Code of Civil Procedure. When the decree-holder withdrew [177] that suit, he was not allowed to proceed with his darkhast. The Court struck it off the file. The decree-holder was, therefore, obliged to present a fresh darkhast. This darkhast should be treated as a continuation of the first. The proceedings taken in the suit under s. 331 of the Code of Civil Procedure were steps in aid of execution within the meaning of art. 179, cl. 4 of the Limitation Act. Refers to Becharam Dutta v. Abdul Wahed (3); Gobind Pershad v. Rung Lal (4); Shurat Chunder Sen v. Abdool Khyr (5); Chandra Prodhan v. Gopi Mohun Shaha (6); Kallyanbhai v. Ghanashamlal(1); Chintaman v. Balshastri (2); Ram Narayan Rai v. Bakhtu Kuar (7) : Tarachand v. Kashinath (8); Vellaya v. Jaganatha (9). At any rate, the later darkhast should be regarded as a revival of the first darkhast, and so art. 178 of Act XV of 1877 would apply.

N. G. Chandavarkar, for respondent.—The second darkhast having been presented more than three years after the date of the first, was clearly time-barred, and so no right to revive the first darkhast was left. What was the legal effect of the suit under s. 331 of the Code of Civil Procedure? If the decree-holder had succeeded in removing the Nazir's obstruction, then, no doubt, the time occupied in that suit would have been excluded. But the obstruction was not removed. The withdrawal of the suit filed under s. 331 left matters precisely where they were before that suit. The Nazir held as a trustee for the rightful owner. The latter can, therefore, take advantage of the Nazir's proceedings—Sanganabasaga v. Nagalingaya (1). The cases cited show that the proceedings under the first darkhast can go on only if the obstruction is removed. Here it was not. The cases, therefore, do not apply. I rely on Unnoda Persad Roy v. Sheikh Koorpan Ally (2); Nilmoney Singh v. Ramjeebun (3); Krishnaji v. Anandrao (4).

JUDGMENT.

[178] JARDINE, J.—On the 7th March, 1889, the plaintiff (now appellant) applied for execution of the decree against the property. The Nazir as receiver of an estate objected to give possession; and on the 8th April, 1889, the plaintiff applied to the Court to remove the obstruction. Under s. 331 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), the Nazir's claim was registered as if the decree-holder had sued. On the 22nd January, 1891, the plaintiff withdrew this suit, with liberty to bring a fresh suit. In this interval the proceedings on the darkhast of the 7th March, 1889, had remained in suspense; and on the 24th January, 1891, it was struck off, on the ground that, as the suit based on the Nazir's claim had been withdrawn, the darkhast had come to an end. On the 12th November, 1892, the plaintiff made a fresh darkhast.

In the matter of appeal before us the question is, whether the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that this second darkhast was barred by limitation—Unnoda v. Sheikh Koorpan (2). Mr. Shivram has urged that it was presented within the periods allowed by arts. 178 and 179 of sch. II of the Limitation Act. The cases cited nearly all bear upon art. 179, clause 4. He claims that the time occupied in the suit under s. 331 of the Code should be excluded; or that the second darkhast should be treated as a revival of the first, as in Kalyanbhai v. Ghanashamlal (5), Chandra Prodhan v. Gopi (6), Chintaman v. Balshastri (7), which last case is relied upon as being similar to the present.

With regard to these and other cited authorities, we must remark that they apply to proceedings in execution, held in suspense pending other proceedings, such as suits under s. 331, until the decree-holder has succeeded in removing the obstacle. None has been shown where when the decree-holder has not succeeded, but failed to remove it, the second darkhast has been treated as a revival or legal continuance of the first. We must make this distinction, which is made also in Ragunandun v. Bhugoo (8).

[179] It is unnecessary to consider whether in no circumstances the time taken up by an unsuccessful suit should be deducted or the SECOND appeal from the decision of H. F. Aston, District Judge of Thana, in appeal No. 367 of 1893.

The plaintiff having obtained a decree, applied for execution on 17th July, 1890. Thereupon a notice was issued under s. 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) on the 18th July, 1890. A process fee of annas 8, instead of Rs. 2, was levied by mistake on the notice in question in the first instance. When the mistake was found out, the decree-holders were required by the Court to make good the deficiency. The deficient Court fee was paid on 29th August, 1890, but the notice under s. 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure had already been issued and served on the judgment-debtor.

[180] On the 22nd August, 1893, the decree-holders presented a fresh darkhast for execution. This darkhast was rejected by the Subordinate Judge, on the ground that it was barred by limitation.

This order of rejection was confirmed, on appeal, by the District Judge, whose judgment was as follows:

"I agree with the view taken by the Subordinate Judge that a mere compliance with the Court's demand for the deficiency in a Court-fee on a notice already issued under an application for execution is not an application in accordance with law to the proper Court to take some step-in-aid of execution, and that such a compliance does not come within the description of the application referred to and contemplated in the above quoted cl. (4 of art. 179 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877)."

Against this decision the decree-holders appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—After the executing Court had on the application of the decree-holder taken a step-in-aid, viz., the issue of a notice under s. 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Court ordered him to pay up some deficiency in the Court fee therefor. It is contended that the District Judge ought to have held that this payment saved limitation under art. 179, cl. 4, of the Limitation Act of 1877. The case of Bhoma v. Kamaji (1) is relied upon; but there is nothing in that case to show that the payment was made after the application to the Court and the step taken by it. On the present facts it does not appear that any application for execution, or to take a step-in-aid, was made when the additional Court fee was paid. The words of cl. 4, therefore, do not save the limitation—Vellaya v. Jaganatha (2). Radha Prosad v. Sundar Lall (3) is of a contrary tenor, but the reported judgment does not notice all the words of the clause. That case appears also inconsistent with Rajkumar Banerji v. Rajlakhi Dabi (4). We concur with the District Judge in his decree rejecting the darkhast as time-barred, and confirm the decree with costs.

The Hindu law of inheritance and succession applies to Molesalam Girasias who were originally Rajput Hindus, but were subsequently converted to Mahomedanism.

The plaintiff was the second son of the defendant, who was the Thakor of Amod, a talukdari estate of the nature of an impartible raj or principality. The plaintiff's family belonged to the community of Molesalam Girasias. Plaintiff alleged that according to a family usage he as a junior member of the family was entitled to receive maintenance from his father, who was the holder of the gadi. The estate was under the management of the Talukdari Settlement Officer from 1878 to 1888, during which period that officer granted the plaintiff an allowance in lieu of maintenance without any objection on the defendant's part. On the 1st August, 1888, the estate was restored to the defendant, who stopped the allowance. The plaintiff thereupon sued in 1891 to recover from the defendant arrears of maintenance for two years and eleven months at Rs. 200 a month.

Held, the plaintiff was entitled to recover, and that the claim was not time-barred.

APPEAL from the decision of Khan Bahadur M. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge of Surat, in suit No. 154 of 1891.

Suit for arrears of maintenance.

The plaintiff was the second son of the Thakor of Amod, which was a large talukdari estate of the nature of an impartible raj or principality.

The plaintiff's family belonged to the community of the Molesalam Girasias, who were Rajput Hindus converted to Mahomedanism several centuries ago.

The plaintiff alleged that the Molesalam Girasias were governed by the Hindu law in matters of inheritance and succession, that the Amod estate was of the nature of an impartible raj [182] or principality, and that according to a long-established family usage he as a junior member of the family was entitled to receive from his father (the defendant), who was the holder of the gadi, an allowance in lieu of maintenance suitable to his rank and station in life ; that he had been in receipt of such allowance from 1878 to 1888 during the period the Talukdari Settlement Officer was in management of the estate ; that on the 1st August, 1888, the estate was restored to his father the defendant, who refused to allow him any maintenance.

The plaintiff thereupon filed the present suit in 1891 to recover from his father Rs. 7,000 on account of arrears of maintenance for two years and eleven months at the rate of Rs. 200 a month. He also claimed a sum of Rs. 575 on account of the birth ceremonies of his sons, and the funeral rites of his deceased wife.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the estate was his self-acquired property ; that there was no custom in his family securing maintenance to the younger sons of the Thakor of Amod ; that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim maintenance from him simply because the Talukdari Settlement Officer had allowed him maintenance ; and, lastly, that the claim was time-barred.

The Subordinate Judge held that the estate was ancestral ; that the parties were governed by the Hindu law of inheritance, modified by the ancient customs of the Molesalam Girasias ; that the younger sons of the Thakor of Amod were by family usage entitled to maintenance ; that the plaintiff's claim was not barred by limitation ; that the estate was worth Rs. 50,000 a year, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover maintenance at the rate of Rs. 200 a month.

The Subordinate Judge accordingly passed a decree awarding the plaintiff Rs. 7,000 on account of arrears of maintenance, but rejected the rest of his claim.

Against this decision the defendant appealed to the High Court.

The East India Company v. Oditchurn Paul (1); 2 Campbell's Gazetteer, 378; 1 Forbes Ras Mala, 343.

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—This is a maintenance suit brought by the respondent (original plaintiff) against his father, the appellant, who is the Maharana Thakor of Amod, a large talukdari estate in the Broach District. The admitted facts of the case are that plaintiff is the second son of the defendant, and the family belongs to the community of Molesalam Girasias, who were originally Rajput Hindus, but became Mahomedans some centuries ago. The plaintiff's case is that the Molesalam Girasias follow the Hindu law and custom in matters of inheritance and partition, and that as the estate in impartible, he, as a second son of the defendant, is entitled by ancient family custom to receive (khoraki poshaki) maintenance suitable to defendant's rank and means, and also to receive special contributions on occasions of death and birth ceremonies in his family.

The plaint stated that during the time that the estate was under the management of the Talukdari Settlement Officer, plaintiff used to receive an allowance, at first of Rs. 50, and afterwards of Rs. 100, a month from that officer. That allowance was discontinued by defendant when the estate was restored into his possession on the 1st August, 1888. The income of the estate was stated to be about Rs. 80,000 a year. Plaintiff accordingly claimed arrears of maintenance for thirty-five months from 1st August, 1888, besides Rs. 575 on account of the Bismillah, i. e., birth ceremonies of his two sons, and the funeral rites of his deceased wife.

Among other defences, which it is not necessary to notice here, as they were not pressed in argument in the appeal before us, defendant urged (1) that the estate, though ancestral, had been lost to the family, and had been acquired by the defendant after [184] forty years of litigation; (2) that the net yield of the estate was only Rs 41,000 a year; (3) that there was no family custom securing maintenance and contributions for birth and death ceremonies as of right to the younger sons of the Thakor of Amod, and that only the eldest son was entitled to have jivai of about Rs. 1,000 or 1,500 per year; (4) the fact that the Talukdari Settlement Officer allowed maintenance to plaintiff did not confer any right on plaintiff to claim maintenance from the defendant; (5) that plaintiff had other sources of income which yielded him Rs. 3,800 a year, besides his income from service as police inspector; (6) that khoraki poshaki was only a subsistence allowance, and plaintiff could not claim Rs. 200 a month on that account, simply because he was the second son of defendant, and the estate was considerable; (7) and, lastly, it was urged that plaintiff's claim was time-barred.

The lower Court held (1) that plaintiff's claim was not time-barred; (2) that the estate was ancestral, and not self-acquired; (3) that the net income of the estate was Rs. 50,000; (4) that the Hindu law, modified by the ancient custom of the Molesalams, governed the parties, and that the special custom set up by the defendant was not proved; (5) that defendant's allegations as regards plaintiff's other income were not proved, and that plaintiff was entitled to claim maintenance, but not the other contingent expenses; (6) and that plaintiff was entitled to the maintenance claimed. Plaintiff's claim for Rs. 7,000 was accordingly awarded, and he was allowed maintenance at the same rate from the date of the suit till the date of the decree.

DEC. 20.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The defendant appealed from this decree, and the chief points argued before us related to the question of limitation, the applicability or otherwise of a modified Hindu law to the parties, and the adequacy of the maintenance awarded by the lower Court. The points for consideration are thus (1) whether plaintiff's claim was time-barred; (2) whether the parties were governed by a modified Hindu law; (3) whether the maintenance awarded was fair and reasonable. The question of limitation can more conveniently be considered after the question of the law applicable to the parties is disposed of.

[185] If plaintiff has no claim under the law which governs the parties to demand maintenance from the defendant, it is plain that the mere payment of maintenance by the Talukdari Officer, or its discontinuance by the defendant, would furnish no cause of action to the plaintiff to bring his present suit.

It was contended on appellant's behalf that as the parties admittedly professed the Mahomedan faith, the Mahomedan law governed them, unless it was satisfactorily established that there was any binding family or local custom which subjected them to any other law, and that the burden of proving such a custom lay heavily on the party who claimed the benefit of the same—Abraham v. Abraham (1); Jowala Buksh v. Dharum Singh (2); Raj Bahadur v. Bishen Dayal (3). The general correctness of these propositions was not disputed by the respondent, but it was urged on his behalf, that as the community to which the parties belong were Rajputs, who were converted by force into Mahomedanism, and who retained many of the Hindu customs and usages, among them the old law of inheritance, the present case fell within the class of the cases relating to similar communities, such as the Khojas and Kutchi Memons, in respect of whom their customs have been allowed to prevail over the Mahomedan law. It was to prove such a custom that the plaintiff filed numerous decisions of the Subordinate Courts confirmed in appeal, which judicially recognized the custom of the applicability of Hindu law to the Molesalam community. The lower Court has placed its chief reliance on these decisions, copies of which were filed as Exs. 43—52. It is, however, of more consequence to note the express admission of the defendant in this connection. Defendant admitted (Ex. 68), that the Mahomedan law did not govern his community of Molesalams, to which he belonged, in matters of inheritance and maintenance. It is true he stated at the same time that the Hindu law also did not govern them. But there is not much force in this last contention, seeing that he admitted that, if a Molesalam father left behind him his widow, sons, and daughters, the sons succeeded to the property, and maintained the widow and the daughters till these last were married. [186] Similarly, a joint brother displaced the sonless widow as heir, while, in the case of separation, the widow succeeded as heir, if there was no male issue. These rules are distinctively rules of Hindu law, and they are not recognized by Mahomedan law. Moreover, defendant admitted (Exs. 68, 65,) that khoraki poshaki, monthly maintenance, was given by the Thakor in possession of the gadi to his sons, and that after the father's death, the younger sons obtained land as aida or jivai from their eldest brother, who succeeded to the gadi. This again is a rule of succession known to Hindu law in respect of impartible raj estates. These admissions must be read with the admitted facts that the names borne by the parties and their ancestors (Exs. 70, 54) are all Hindu names, and that defendant's accounts show that, in his family, the Hindu rate of homa is performed by, and dakshina given to Brahmins, and the goddesses Laksbmi and Sharada worsbipped on Divali and Dasara days (Exs. 115—121, 122—126).

Next in order we have to consider tbe decisions and the authority of writers like Mr. Forbes. Mr. Forbes in his Ras Mala has given an account of the conversion of these Rajputs, and he states that while the Molesalams follow the Mahomedan practices of circumcision, nika, and burial, they yet worship certain Hindu gods, and have bhats to recite their pedigrees, and they follow the Hindu law and custom in matters of inheritance. The cases referred to in Exhibits 43—52 fully bear out these assertions. Exhibit 43 is a copy of a decision, passed so far back as 1865, in which the District Court remanded the case back specially for an inquiry into this question of the applicability of Hindu law to the Molesalam parties, and both the Court of first instance and the District Court found this issue in the affirmative. Ex. 45 is a decision of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Anklesvar, which goes fully into this question, and the decision arrived at was to the same effect. These two cases were also noticed and followed in a later decision of 1887 (Ex. 46), and upheld in appeal here, Ex. 47. Exhibits 48, 52 relate to a case in which the present defendant was a party, and one of his female relations brought a suit for maintenance against him in 1865. That suit was disposed of on the same ground in the lower Courts, and their decision was upheld in special appeal by this Court. [187] Exhibits 49, 50, 51 also relate to a suit between Molesalams in which the same point of the applicability of Hindu law was affirmed in all the Courts. In a more recent case decided by Division Bench of this Court, Bai Baiji v. Bai Santok (1) (Ranade and Fulton, JJ.) a few months ago, this point was argued at some length, and the course of decisions noted above was followed, and it was held that the general Hindu law governed disputes about inheritance in this community.

Under the general Hindu law the person in possession of an ancestral impartible estate or raj is bound to provide maintenance for the younger branches of the family who cannot claim partition—Mutusawmy v. Venkataswara (2); Himmatsing v. Ganpatsing (3). The sons and daughters expressly come under this category. Plaintiff will thus have a right to claim maintenance, unless indeed, as the Molesalams are converted Hindus, defendant succeeded in establishing a particular custom to the contrary, in which case the special custom, and not the general law, must prevail—Rahimatbai v. Hirbai (4); Mahomed Sidick v. Haji Ahmed (5). So far from this being the case, it is admitted by the defendant, that the younger brothers have a claim to demand aida from their eldest brother when he succeeds to the gadi, Ex. 95, though he denies the son's right to claim jivai from the father. Defendant himself has cited instances in his own family when such aida settlement was made in favour not only of younger brothers, but of younger sons also. Exhibits 80, 90, 91 show that a son's claim for maintenance was recognized by the Civil Courts in the case of the Thakor of Saroda. Exhibits 98, 113 are documents passed in 1861 by Abheysing to his brother, the present defendant and his father.

by which an allowance of Rs. 1,500 was fixed for Abheysing, Rs. 400 out of which were to be paid during defendant's father's lifetime, and the whole after defendant succeded to the gadi. Defendant has been himself paying not only to his eldest son, the Patwi Kuwar Ishvarsingh, but also to his other sons, both before and after the attachment was removed, certain sums annually for their private expenses, [188] Exs. 222, 211, 240. Taking all these circumstances into account, it cannot be maintained that any special custom derogatory of the general law has been established by which a Thakor in possession of an impartible raj is absolved from the obligation of providing maintenance (khoraki poshaki, i.e., food and dress) to his second son. The lower Court, therefore, very properly found this issue in plaintiff's favour, and against the defendant.

The plaintiff's right to claim maintenance being thus established, the next question is, whether plaintiff's present claim is time-barred. Defendant's contention is that he refused plaintiff's demand in 1873 or 1876. The appellant's counsel before us stated that the refusal was made in February, 1877, and that, counting from that time, the present suit brought in 1891 was time-barred. He also contended that the intervening attachment did not extend the period, and that the Talukdari Officer's acts did not bind appellant. Plaintiff alleges that his claim was never refused, and that there were distinct admissions of the defendant of a much later date, and that he received maintenance from the Talukdari Settlement Officer from 1878 to 1887, and it was only in 1888 that this allowance was discontinued, from which period the suit was admitted within the time allowed by law. It is, therefore, necessary to examine the evidence to see how far defendant's contention is made out. (His Lordship referred to the evidence at length and continued :—)

It is unnecessary to refer to the other exhibits. The correspondence shows clearly that defendant never objected to plaintiff's claim for maintenance. His objections were confined solely to the amount, offering first to settle Rs. 150, and then Rs. 400 a year. As late as 1887, defendant asked an increase of his own allowance and those of all sons by Rs. 25 for each of the sons, Ex. 72. Defendant certainly objected to settle lands on plaintiff during his lifetime, but he so far recognized plaintiff's claim as to express his readiness to settle at first lands yielding an income of Rs. 1,500, and next an income of Rs. 2,400, to come into effect after his own death. This latter question of aida is not now before us, and it is only necessary to refer to it here for satisfying ourselves that, according to defendant, plaintiff has a right after his death to have an income from land of [189] Rs. 2,400 a year. It furnishes a measure of the fairness or otherwise of the maintenance settled by the lower Court during defendant's lifetime. That Court has properly given weight to the rank of the defendant, and plaintiff's near relationship on the one hand, and the circumstances of the family on the other.

The question of limitation does not, therefore, arise in this case for the simple reason that there has been no formal and final refusal on defendant's part of plaintiff's claim till 1888. The claim being recognized as an obligation by the defendant, the Talukdari Officer simply stood in defendant's place in settling Rs. 50 in 1878, and raising that allowance to Rs. 100 in 1886. Defendant had never refused plaintiff's claim either before the estate was taken over for management by the Talukdari Officer, or while it was under such management.

APPEL-LATE

The last issue in appeal relates to the adequacy of the amount. The estate admittedly yields a net income of Rs. 41,000. Its gross income appears, from Exs. 223, 226, 229, 233, 272, 241, 244, to be Rs. 67,000 a year. There are no debts now, and the income is rising. Defendant himself fixed plaintiff's aida after his death at Rs. 200 per month or Rs. 2,400 per year, Ex. 211. That amount, therefore, cannot be said to be unreasonably high during defendant's lifetime. The fact that plaintiff is employed in the Police Department cannot detract from the merits of plaintiff's claim as the Thakor's son.

On the whole, therefore, the lower Court's decision appears to be correct, and we dismiss the appeal, and confirm the decree with costs on appellant.

Decree confirmed.

ABDUL KADIR AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. DHARMA (Original Defendant), *Opponent. [8th January, 1895.]

Regulation II of 1827, s. 21—"Caste"—Caste question—Contribution to the caste fund—Arrangement between members of the caste for the purpose of paying off the debts of the caste—Hindus—Mahomedans.

The term "caste" in s. 21 of Reg. II of 1827 (1) is not necessarily confined to Hindus, but comprises any well defined native community governed for certain internal purposes by its own rules and regulations.

An agreement embodying an arrangement come to between members of the caste for the purpose of paying off the debts of the caste, out of certain contributions to the caste funds, involves a caste question.

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the decision of Rao Saheb P. B. Joshi, Subordinate Judge of Rajapur, in a small cause suit.

The plaintiffs sued to recover Rs. 10 from defendant Dharma valad Gulam Lambe under the following circumstances :—

The plaintiffs alleged that they and the defendant were residents of Madhil Mohola (street) at Rajapur ; that the defendant and other people of the mohola executed an agreement on the 18th November, 1885, whereby the plaintiffs were appointed adhikari (headmen) of the jamat (caste), and as such were authorized to recover rupees seven on account of gav-jevan (feeding the villagers) for each marriage when the bride and the bridegroom

(1) Section 21, Reg. II of 1827 :—

First.—(The jurisdiction of Civil Courts shall extend to the cognisance of all original suits and complaints between natives and others (not British-born subjects) respecting the right to moveable or immoveable property, rents. Government revenues, debts, contracts, marriage, succession, damages for injuries and generally of all suits and complaints of a civil nature), it being understood that no interference on the part of the Court in caste questions is hereby warranted beyond the admission and trial of any suit instituted for the recovery of damages on account of an alleged injury to the caste and character of the plaintiff, arising from some illegal act or unjustifiable conduct of the other party.

were from their mohola, and rupees ten from the [191] person at whose house the marriage took place when the bridegroom was from a different locality; that the defendant having given his daughter in marriage to a bridegroom from a different place became liable to pay rupees ten, and that the defendant declined to pay that amount though called upon to do so.

The following is an extract from the agreement:—

"We have appointed you two persons to be the headmen in connection with the business and affairs of the community. As to that it has been the practice among us from former times to take certain amounts as on account of village (caste) dinner on occasions of the marriages of giris in our said street. Particulars thereof are as follow:—

"7. If the bridegroom and the bride be residing in our street, the amount to be paid to the community on account of caste dinner in that behalf is rupees seven.

"10. If a bridegroom comes from another street or from another village to marry a bride living in our street, the amount which he is to be caused to pay to the community on account of caste dinner is rupees ten.

"In this manner it being the practice from former times to this day to take the amounts on account of caste dinner, we have taken the same as mentioned above. In the same way, you are to receive the amounts as stated in the above agreement, when marriages take place at the house of any member of our community. And if any one of our community should raise any objection to pay the amount on accouut of caste dinner as stated above, the said amount should be recovered from him by taking legal steps. In the event of marriage taking place at the house of any one of us in our street according to the above agreement, we will pay you the amount as stated above. You are to receive the said amount and pay the same to Bapu valad Baba Malim Vagu, inhabitant of Rajapur, and take an acknowledgment from him. Our community owe to the said Malim * * about Rs. 300 on account of a decree, dated 23rd June, in suit No. 278 of 1877, and Rs. 400 received in cash on the 16th November 1885. On account of this amount you are to pay the said Malim the amount of the above income and render an account thereof to us (members of) the community every year. We have given this agreement in writing of our own free will and pleasure."

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the suit involved a caste question, and was, therefore, not maintainable in a Civil Court.

The Subordinate Judge held that the question at issue was a caste question, and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, urging that the Judge erred in law in holding the claim to be a caste question. A rule nisi was issued to the defendant to show cause why the decision of the Judge should not be set aside.

[192] Narayan G. Chandavarkar appeared for the applicants (plaintiffs) in support of the rule.—The Judge was wrong in dismissing the suit on the ground that it involved a caste question. Our suit was based upon the agreement executed to us by the defendant and other members of the community; therefore the objection of caste question cannot arise in the case. Even supposing that the case does involve that point, still the parties being Mahomedans, s. 21, Chap. II, of Reg. II of 1827 has no application to the present case—Sayad Hashim Saheb v. Huseinsha (1).

(1) 13 B. 429.

Macpherson with Ghanasham N. Nadkarni appeared for the opponent (defendant) to show cause.—He relied on s. 21, Chapter II, of Reg. II of 1827; Dodhusa v. Khemchand(1); Kazee Shaik Mohinoodeen v. Usmalji Momudjee (2).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—We think that the term "caste" in Reg. II of 1827 is not necessarily confined to Hindus, but comprises any well defined native community governed for certain internal purposes by its own rules and regulations; and that the agreement referred to in the plaint simply embodies an arrangement come to between members of the caste for the purpose of paying off the debts of the caste out of certain contributions to the caste funds, and as such involves a caste question. We must, therefore, discharge the rule with costs.

Rule discharged.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 292 and 293—"Obscene," meaning of the word.

In interpreting the word "obsence" in ss. 292 and 293 of the Indian Penal Code, the Courts may rightly follow Reg. v. Hicklin (3) where Lord Cockburn, C.J., says: "I think the test of obscenity is this, whether the tendency of the matter charged as obscenity is to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences, and into whose hands a publication of this sort may fall."

Whether a publication is obscene, is a question of fact.

THIS was a reference by G. Jacob, Sessions Judge of Poona, under s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The accused was charged under s. 293 of the Indian Penal Code with having in his possession certain obscene pictures for the purpose of sale.

Mr. Plunkett, the trying Magistrate, found that "the pictures were decidedly obscene and indecent." He, therefore, convicted the accused and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 10.

The accused applied to the Sessions Court for revision of the Magistrate's proceedings, contending that the pictures were not obscene.

The Sessions Judge thereupon made a reference to the High Court on the following grounds:—

"I am of opinion, however, that the Magistrate was wrong in holding the pictures to be obscene within the meaning of the exception. There are four pictures. The pictures are of female figures partly, and in one case entirely, naked, but in the latter case a somewhat strained attempt at conventional decency has been observed. I have not given a more full description, as I forward herewith copies of the four pictures for inspection.

"The pictures are not, I think, such 'as to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences, or [194] that their primary and palpable result would be to excite to lust' (see Mayne's Notes under s. 292 of the Indian Penal Code). The Magistrate's finding that the pictures are obscene, cannot, I think, be accepted as final, as he has given no reasons for it. It would be, I think, well if there should be an authoritative decision on this point if the Magistrate's opinion be deemed correct, as it would seem, from the documents now tendered by the applicant, that such pictures are passed without objection through the Custom Office.

"The effect of the Magistrate's decision would be that even partial nudity is obscenity, for he makes no distinction between the different pictures. There is nothing objectionable in attitude or gesture, apart from the mere fact of nudity or partial nudity.

"I am of opinion that the Magistrate's decision should be reversed and that the fine be refunded."

There was no appearance either for the Crown or for the accused.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.:—The trying Magistrate found that "the pictures were decidedly obscene and indecent," and convicted and fined the accused under s. 293 of the Indian Penal Code. The accused moved the Sessions Judge to refer the case to this Court. The learned Judge thinks the judgment defective as not stating reasons, and wrong in fact, as in his opinion the primary and palpable result of the pictures is not to deprave or corrupt or excite to lust.

We are of opinion that in the interpretation of the word "obscene" in ss. 292 and 293 the Courts may rightly follow Reg. v. Hicklin (1) which was approved by the Court of Common Pleas in Steel v. Brannan (2). It was followed in Empress v. Indarman (3). Lord Cockburn, C. J., said in Reg. v. Hicklin, p. 371: "I think the test of obscenity is this, whether the tendency of the matter charged as obscenity is to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences, and into whose hands a publication of this sort may fall. Now, with regard to this work, it is quite certain that it would suggest to the minds of the [195] young of either sex, or even to persons of more advanced years, thoughts of a most impure and libidinous character." The Court below had found the book to be, "by reason of the obscene matter in it, calculated to produce a pernicious effect in depraving and debauching the minds of the persons into whose hands it might come."

The Sessions Judge remarks that the effect of the Magistrate's decision would be that even a partial nudity in a picture is obscenity, for he makes no distinction between the different pictures. If the conviction related only to the half-draped pictures entitled Danube and Lorely, we might use our powers of revision, following the opinion expressed by Mr. Mayne in his Commentary on s. 292, as we do not think they are of such a sort as excite to sensual feelings. The other two pictures, which are naked women, are so drawn and coloured as to make it a question, in our opinion, for the trying Court whether or not they come within the mischief at which s. 293 explained by the decisions quoted above is intended to strike. Now, the Magistrate has found that they are "indecent," and we presume that this is the reason why he held them to be obscene. It was open to the accused at the trial to show by argument and evidence that the effect of these two pictures is not necessarily to deprave or debauch, or that they are artistic or conventional or otherwise not polluting to the morals of the public. We are of opinion that there are no sufficient grounds for interfering with the decision of the Magistrate, to whom the law leaves the question of obscenity which is very much one of fact.

We, therefore, return the record and proceedings.

SECOND appeal from the decision of John Fitz Maurice, Assistant Judge of Ahmedabad, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb B. Y. Gupte, Subordinate Judge of Umreth.

The plaintiffs brought this suit in 1892 to recover certain land from the defendants, alleging that they had bought it in 1891 from one Parshotam Liladhar, who had purchased it in the year 1880 in execution of a decree against the father of defendant No. 1.

Defendant No. 1 answered that his father had mortgaged the land to defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 answered (inter alia) that they were mortgagees in possession, and that the plaintiffs were bound to pay to them the amount due under their mortgage before they (plaintiffs) could recover possession.

At the hearing the plaintiffs' pleader while stating his clients' case stated that the plaintiffs were willing to pay the amount properly due to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 on their mortgage.

The Subordinate Judge found that the sale to the plaintiffs was proved; that the mortgage relied on by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was proved; and he held that the plaintiffs must bring a redemption suit before they could be allowed to obtain possession of the land in dispute. He, therefore, rejected the claim.

APPEL-LATE CIVIL.

20 B. 196.

On appeal by the plaintiffs the Judge confirmed the decree, holding that as the plaintiffs had not amended their plaint by adding a prayer for redemption, they could not be allowed to [197] redeem now against the consent of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, but must be referred to a fresh suit.

The plaintiffs preferred a second appeal.

Gokaldas K. Parekh, for the appellants (plaintiffs).—The Judge has fallen into an error in supposing that the defendants did not consent to our redeeming the land. Their written statement clearly shows that they were willing to allow redemption in this suit. Further on, pleader also stated, at the hearing, that we were willing to redeem. The question of mortgage was considered, and the mortgage was held proved. Therefore, it was wrong not to allow redemption simply on the ground that the suit was one in ejectment and not for redemption—Vasudeo Balaji v. Narayan Krishna (1); Mansukh Pitambar v. Tarbhovan Parshotam (2); Nilakant Banerji v. Suresh Chunder Malik (3).

Chimanlal H. Setalvad, for the respondents (defendants).—The plaintiffs having brought a suit in ejectment, it was rightly dismissed. In an ejectment suit, a plaintiff cannot be allowed to redeem—Chandu v. Kombi (4). We did not say in our written statement that we were willing to allow redemption in the suit. We merely contended that the plaintiffs were not entitled to bring a suit for possession before the redemption of our mortgage.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—It would be difficult after the decree passed by the Privy Council in Nilakant v. Suresh Chunder (3) to hold that the Court cannot in its discretion pass a decree for redemption in a case in which the plaintiffs have sued in ejectment. In the present case the passage in the written statement, in which the defendants virtually admit they are ready to be redeemed, taken in connection with the statement of the plaintiffs' pleader at the hearing that his clients were ready to redeem, was virtually equivalent to an alternative case being made at the hearing, if not in the pleadings. As the Courts below were both under the impression that a decree for redemption could not be made, and exercised no discretion in the matter, we may, on second appeal, exercise that discretion in favour of the plaintiffs. We must, [198] therefore, reverse the decrees, and send back the case for the Court to pass a redemption decree after ascertaining what (if any) amount may be found due on the defendants' mortgage or mortgages to which the plaintiffs may be subject. The parties to pay their own costs in this Court and in the lower Court of appeal. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 to have their costs in the Court of the Subordinate Judge.

SADASHIV GANPATRAO, A MINOR (Original Plaintiff), Decree-holder v. VITTHALDAS NANCHAND (Original Defendant), *Judgment-debtor.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 39—Act VI of 1892, s. 4—Application for execution of decree—Proceedings in the suit—Vakalatnama.

Applications for execution of the decree are proceedings in the suit. A vakalatnama remains in force until all proceedings in the suit are ended.

THIS was a reference by Rao Saheb Krishnaji Sadashiv Risvadkar, Subordinate Judge of Parner in the Ahmednagar District, under s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

One Sadashiv Ganpatrao got a decree against Vitthaldas Nanchand in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Parner. Vitthaldas appealed against the decree to the District Court. The decree being confirmed in appeal. Sadashiv's vakil, Vaman Trimbak, who had been engaged in the Court of the Subordinate Judge to conduct the suit, presented an application for the execution of the decree, and got it fully executed according to the judgment in appeal. In the meanwhile, Vitthaldas preferred a second appeal to the High Court, which confirmed the decree of the District Court. After the disposal of the second appeal, Vaman Trimbak presented an application for the recovery of the plaintiff's costs in second appeal. A question having arisen whether the vakalatnama [199] filed by Vaman Trimbak in the suit gave him authority to present the application for execution for recovery of the costs, the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the vakil had authority under s. 39 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882); still as the section was not explicit on the point, he submitted the following questions:—

"(1) Whether the execution of the darkhasts is a proceeding in the original suits within the meaning of s. 39 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882)?

(2) Whether the pleader in the original suits has authority to present those darkhasts and to seek the execution of the decree to which they relate without filing a fresh vakalatnama?"

OPINION.

FULTON, J.—We are of opinion that both questions must be answered in the affirmative. Under s. 39 of the Civil Procedure Code the vakalatnama shall be considered in force until all proceedings in the suit are ended so far as regards the client. Applications for execution of the decree are proceedings in the suit—see s. 4 of Act VI of 1892, and the decision of the Privy Council in Thakur Parshad v. Fakir-ul-lah (1).

Order accordingly.

SECOND appeal from the decision of C. G. W. Macpherson, District Judge of Belgaum.

[200] Suit for possession. The land in question had been the property of one Rahiman, the father of the appellant (defendant No. 2), and was mortgaged by him. After his death his widow Husenbi (defendant No. 1) on the 16th July, 1881, sold it to the plaintiff in order to pay off the mortgage and other debts of her deceased husband.

The plaintiff now sued her and the appellant (defendant No. 2), who was her minor son, for possession and for mesne profits. Husenbi (defendant No. 1) did not appear. The minor son (defendant No. 2) pleaded that by Mahomedan law his mother had no authority to sell the land, and that he was not bound by the sale.

The Second Class Subordinate Judge of Saundatti (Rao Saheb G. V. Patvardhan) found that the sale to plaintiff was proved, and that the minor defendant No. 2, Bala, was bound by it. He, therefore, allowed the claim.

On appeal by Bala the Judge confirmed the decree. Defendant No. 2 filed a second appeal.

Gangaram B. Rele, for the appellant (defendant No. 2).—According to Mahomedan law a mother is not the legal guardian of her minor son, and the first defendant, therefore, had no authority to sell the property to the plaintiff—Sita Ram v. Amir Begam (1); Hamir Singh v. Musammat Zakia (2); Hasan Ali v. Mehdi Husain (3); Mussamat Bukshun v. Mussamat Dookhin (4). Under Mahomedan law there are two classes of guardians, near and remote. The near guardians are fathers, paternal grandfathers, their executors and the executors of such executors. The remote guardians are the more distant paternal kindred. The near guardians only have control over the property—Macnaghten's Mahomedan Law, pp. 62, 63, 64. The mother, not being included in the list of the near guardians, cannot alienate the property of her minor son.

[FULTON, J.—Husenbi had a share in her husband's property. Therefore, the sale by her would be good to the extent of her share in the land.]

The plaintiff did not claim a share in the land. He did not make out that case in the plaint.

(1) 8 A. 324 (338). (2) 1 A. 57. (3) 1 A. 533. (4) 12 W. R. 337.

[201] Gokuldas K. Parekh, for the respondent (plaintiff).—The position of the parties and the circumstances of the case must be considered in order to decide upon the effect of the rule. Husenbi was in possession of all the property left by her husband. She dealt with the property as ostensible owner. The plaintiff purchased the property bona fide and for valuable consideration. The property was sold to us for a necessity, namely, to pay off the husband's debt. According to Mahomedan law, the discharge of debts is a matter of necessity, and the heirs of a deceased person acquire their right as such after the debts due by the deceased are discharged. Both the lower Courts have found that the transaction was beneficial to the minor and that the course adopted by Husenbi was the best for him.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The mother not being the legal guardian of her minor child according to Mahomedan law cannot do any act relating to the property of the minor so as to bind him—Sita Ram v. Amir Begam (1). If, therefore, the sale in this case by defendant No. 1 can be supported, it can only be on the ground that, by Mahomedan law, the mother, as one of the heirs in possession of the property of her husband, had the right to sell to pay off creditors. As to this, it may be that an heir who has possession of the entire property may sell in execution of a decree obtained against him by creditors—see the judgment of the Allahabad High Court in Hamir Singh v. Musammat Zakia (2)—but here the sale was in discharge of debts which had not been adjudged; nor have any special circumstances been found by the Courts below such as led the Allahabad High Court, whether rightly or wrongly, in Hasan Ali v. Medhi Husain (3) to give effect to the sale by the mother.

We must, therefore, reverse the decrees of the lower Courts and dismiss the plaint, as the plaintiff seeks to recover the whole of the property, but without prejudice to the plaintiff's right to sue to recover the mother's share (if any) in the land in question. Appellant to have his costs throughout.

Decree reversed.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur R. D. Paranjpe, First Class Subordinate Judge of Satara with appellate powers, reversing the decree of Rao Saheb Shivram Sitaram Vagle, Second Class Subordinate Judge of Karhad.

This action was brought by plaintiffs against the defendant, who called himself Bapuji bin Gopalji, to obtain a declaration that he was not the legally adopted son of one Gopalji, and that his adoption, even if it took place, was null and void.

The plaint alleged that in the patilki vatan of mauje Kale in the Satara district the plaintiffs had $\frac{2}{3}$rds share and the deceased Gopalji had $\frac{1}{4}$th share; that Gopalji had been appointed to officiate as patil during his lifetime; that after his death, which occurred in April, 1890, the right to officiate as patil belonged to the plaintiffs, and that the defendant, in order to oppose the plaintiffs' right to officiate as patils, represented himself as the adopted son of Gopalji and fraudulently got his name registered by the revenue authorities in 1891.

The defendant answered (inter alia) that he had been duly adopted by Gopalji's widow Mohanai; that the plaintiffs had no right to sue to set aside his adoption, inasmuch as they were not persons entitled to succeed as reversioners after Mohanai's death, nor [203] were they authorized by the reversioners to bring the suit; that the defendant was one of those who were entitled to succeed after Mohanai's death, and that the suit was not maintainable in the Civil Court, the subject-matter thereof being within the cognizance of the revenue authorities, which had sanctioned the defendant's adoption and appointed him to officiate as patil.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the grounds that the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue to set aside the adoption and that the declaration asked for could not be made.

On appeal by the plaintiffs the decree was reversed, and the suit was remanded for trial on the merits.

The defendant preferred appeal.

Lang (Advocate-General) with Gangaram B. Rele, appeared for the appellant (defendant).—It is admitted that the plaintiffs' family and Gopalji's family are quite distinct. The heir of Gopalji is to be sought for in his branch of the family. The plaintiffs do not claim to be reversioners, either presumptive or contingent, after Gopalji's widow, who is still alive. They are utter strangers to Gopalji's family, and, therefore, they have no right to challenge the defendant's adoption. A suit to set aside an adoption by a widow, is open only to reversioners and not to strangers—Rani Anund v. The Court of Wards (1); Bhikaji v. Jagannath (2); Ramabai v. Rangrav (3); Kattama v. Dorasinga (4).

We do not deny that the plaintiffs are vatandars. We only deny their right to officiate as vatandars, a matter which is entirely in the cognizance of the Collector under the provisions of the Vatan Act (Bom. Act III of 1894).

Setlur with (Balaji Abaji Bhagavat), appeared for the respondents (plaintiffs).—We contend that we have an existing interest in the vatan and, therefore, we are entitled to bring the suit under s. 42 (f) of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877). We do not claim interest in any property other than the vatan. We simply ask for a declaration that the defendant has not become a vatandar by his adoption. The following authorities

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—The only point at issue in this case is whether the suit brought by the respondents for a declaration that appellant was not the adopted son of Gopalji was or was not maintainable under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The record of the case, Exs. 42, 43, 46 to 49, shows that as far back as 1858, notwithstanding the objections of respondents' ancestors, Gopalji was recognized as the sole owner of 16 annas' patilki vatan, and his right to officiate as sole patil was recognized by the revenue authorities. Respondents applied to the revenue authorities, in 1868, and claimed to be owners of 12 annas' shares in the vatan, but they were informed that they might establish their claim when the next vacancy occurred, Ex. 32. Gopalji died in 1890, and respondents put in their claim, but in the inquiry under the Vatandars' Act, appellant was recognized to be Gopalji's adopted son, and sole heir to his 16 annas' vatan (Exs. 44, 45), and respondents were directed to secure a decree setting aside appellant's adoption by Gopalji (Ex. 33). Thereupon the present suit was brought for a declaration that appellant's adoption was not valid. Appellant replied that as he was adopted by Gopalji's widow, who was still alive, and as respondents were not her reversionary heirs, the declaratory suit was not maintainable. The Court of first instance held that the suit did not lie, but the lower Court of appeal reversed that decree, and held that the suit could be maintained, as respondents were of the vatandar family, and the declaration sought would help them in their application to the revenue authorities to have their names entered as representative vatandars in the vatan register.

The appellant's counsel referred to the following authorities :—Bhikaji v. Jagannath (6) ; Rani Anund v. The Court of Wards (7) ; [205] Ramabai v. Rangrav (8) and Kattama v. Dorasanga (9) ; and the respondents' counsel relied upon Dadaji v. Bhaskarrav (2) ; Ningangavda v. Satyangavda (1) ; Ramchandra v. Anant (4) ; Yellapa v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (3) and Govind v. Bapuji (5) in support of his contention.

On a careful consideration of these rulings, we feel satisfied that respondents' suit in its present form was clearly not maintainable. Respondents admitted that they were distant relations, and not reversionary heirs, and not entitled to Gopalji's property (Ex. 50). Under such circumstances, it is clear that they had no right to bring a suit to set aside appellant's adoption by Gopalji's widow. In Bhikaji v. Jagannath (6), it was ruled that a suit to set aside the adoption made by a widow could only be brought by the nearest reversioner, and that a more distant heir could only sue when the nearer heir's rights had been waived. Respondents in this case are admittedly very distant relations, and Gopalji has left nearer heirs and reversioners, one of whom appellant himself claims to be. The principle of the decision in Bhikaji v. Jagannath (6) was approved of by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Rani Anund v. The Court of Wards (7), where it was expressly held that a suit to set aside adoption must be brought by a presumptive reversionary heir. It is only when he colludes, or refuses without sufficient cause to sue, that more distant heirs can sue. The principle of these rulings is that every declaratory decree must be ancillary to some consequential relief obtainable thereby—Kattama v. Dorasinga (1)—and it is plain that no such relief is possible in the case of distant and contingent, and not presumptive reversionary, heirs.

The respondents' counsel admitted the correctness of these propositions. He, however, contended that the consequential relief need not in all cases be in respect of property, and that if the declaration was likely to be of use in influencing the decision [206] of the revenue authorities, the suit would lie on the analogy of the principle recognized in Kalova v. Padapa (2). It was further contended that though a suit for the declaration of a right to officiate as representative vatandar could not be maintained, as that jurisdiction was vested by law in the Collector—Khando v. Apaji (3) and Chinto v. Lokshmibai (4), yet when the entry of a name in the revenue records is the result of the recognition of a private right by a Civil Court, it is competent for a Civil Court to make such a declaration—Rangrav v. Krishnarav (5). In Yellapa v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (6) it was further held that though a party may not sue for a declaration of his right as vatandar to officiate, yet he can bring a suit to have it declared that another person had not the status of a vatandar, and could not, therefore, be selected to officiate. In Ramchandra v. Anant (7) this Court decided that the Vatandars' Act did not take away the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to determine who was or was not entitled to have his name entered in the list of vatandars. See also P.J. for 1874, p. 205, and Ningangavda v. Satyangavda (8) and Govind v. Bapuji (9).

It is obvious, however, that these rulings have no direct application to the suit in its present form. The suit has been admittedly brought by a distant bhauband to set aside appellant's adoption by Gopalji's widow, and the authorities relied upon by the respondent's pleader do not show that such a suit can be maintained, unless it is proved that nearer reversionary heirs have waived their rights. Respondents have not brought this suit to secure a declaration that the appellant is not a vatandar. He is admittedly a member of the vatandar family, and claims to be a nearer heir in his natural right to Gopalji than the respondents. Moreover, it must be noted that respondents' real object in securing the declaration is to influence the Collector to enter their names as representative vatandars. Their names were excluded from the register so far back as 1858, more than thirty-five years ago; and even if appellant's adoption were not proved, [207] Gopalji's widow could and would certainly adopt another son, who would have, as Gopalji's heir, a right, by reason of his father's thirty-five years of adverse enjoyment, to have his name entered in Gopalji's place. The declaration will thus be of an abstract fact which can lead to no consequential relief. A mere contingency, which confers no present or certain interest, will not suffice as a basis for such a declaration. The reply of the revenue authorities could not confer on respondent a right to bring a suit which they did not already possess. The grant of relief in declaratory suits is not a matter of right, but of discretion and a claim so obviously stale cannot be entertained where no right to bring the suit has been clearly established.

On the whole, the authorities referred to above seem to allow no choice but to reject the claim, so far at least as the suit in its present form is concerned. We accordingly reverse the decree of the lower Court of Appeal, and restore that of the Subordinate Judge. The respondents should pay all the costs to the appellant throughout.

JARDINE, J.—I concur. The view taken in Bhikaji v. Jagannath (1) and approved in Rani Anund v. The Court of Wards (2) is also suggested by Illustration F of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The plaintiffs in the present suit wish to influence the Collector by shewing that the defendant, though a vatandar, is not as large a sharer as he would be if his status as adopted son is admitted. There are many facts which may influence the Collector, but which are not to be ascertained by civil suits for declarations; he makes his own inquiries as to personal ability and superior fitness. The present suit is barred on the same grounds as the suits where the plaintiffs sought to be declared vadil mentioned in Ningangavada v. Satyangavda (3).

RAJMAL MOTIRAM MARVADI (Original Plaintiff), Applicant v. KRISHNA VALAD MAHIPATI HAGADEKAR (Original Defendant), *Opponent. [22nd January, 1895.]

The expression "show cause" in para. 2, s. 44 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Bom. Act XVII of 1879) means to allege and prove sufficient cause and not simply to object.

THIS was an application under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the order passed by C. H. Jopp, Special Judge under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Bom. Act XVII of 1879).

The plaintiff, who was a creditor of the defendant, applied under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act to the conciliator of Tembhurdi to effect an amicable settlement between them. The

44. When the agreement is one finally disposing of the matter, the conciliator shall forward the same in original to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of lowest grade having jurisdiction in the place where the agriculturist who is a party thereto resides; and shall at the same time deliver to each of the parties a written notice to show cause before such Judge, within one month from the date of such delivery, why such agreement ought not to be filed in such Court.

The Court which receives the agreement shall, after the expiry of the said period of one month, unless cause has been shown as aforesaid, order such agreement to be filed; and it shall then take effect as if it were a decree of the said Court passed on the day on which it is ordered to be filed and from which no appeal lies.

The Court may in any case, for reasons to be recorded by it in writing, from time to time extend the period of one month allowed for showing cause under this section.

conciliator did so, and after reducing the settlement to writing in the form of an agreement forwarded it to the Subordinate Judge of Karmala to be filed in Court according to s. 44 of the Act. Before the Subordinate Judge the defendant [209] impeached the agreement as fraudulent, imputing fraud both to the conciliator and to the plaintiff, but he adduced no evidence in support of his allegations. The Subordinate Judge in the absence of the plaintiff passed an ex parte order refusing to file the agreement on the ground that the defendant did not admit it.

The plaintiff applied for revision to the Special Judge, who issued notice to the defendant to appear and answer the application. On the appointed day neither the plaintiff nor the defendant appeared before the Judge. He, therefore, rejected the application, holding that the agreement was not an "amicable" one as contemplated by s. 41 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879).

The plaintiff then applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction contending (inter alia) that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to dispose of the matter ex parte in the absence of the plaintiff, and that he had no jurisdiction to refuse to file the agreement unless cause was "shown" in the sense of "proved." A rule nisi was issued calling upon the defendant to show cause why the order of the Special Judge should not be set aside.

Ganesh K. Deshamukh, appeared for the applicant (plaintiff) in support of the rule:—The Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to dispose of the matter, especially when notice of the defendant's objections had not been duly served on us. Service of notice is a condition precedent to the Court having jurisdiction—Murari v. Hari (1). Both the Courts appear to have thought that cause is sufficiently shown when it is only alleged. But the expression "to show cause" has been judicially interpreted in reference to s. 525 of the Civil Procedure Code by the different High Courts to mean not only to allege, but to allege and prove cause. We submit that the same interpretation should be put on the expression in the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act—Dandekars v. Dandekars (2), Surjan Raot v. Bhikari Raot (3).

The defendant alleged fraud only in vague and general terms. The particulars of the fraud were not given. As there was no [210] sufficient averment of fraud such as the Court should take notice of, the Judge should not have entertained the plea of fraud at all—Krishnaji v. Wamnaji (4).

There was no appearance for the opponent (defendant).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The Special Judge and the Subordinate Judge have both construed the expression "show cause" in the second paragraph of s. 44 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act as meaning "allege cause" without proving it, or, in other words, as simply to "object." But we think that the expression, as was held by this Court in construing s. 525 of the Civil Procedure Code in Dandekars v. Dandekars (2), is a well-known one denoting both to allege and prove sufficient cause. If that be the correct meaning of it, the subordinate Court could not act upon the defendant's mere statement of objection, but should have decided as to its sufficiency after giving notice to the other side. This was not done by the Subordinate Judge. However, the applicant had an opportunity of supporting the argument before the Special Judge, and if he did not intend to do so on the day fixed for the hearing, he cannot now complain if the Special Judge confirmed the decision of the Subordinate Judge, and ask for the exercise of this Court's extraordinary jurisdiction. We must, therefore, discharge the rule.

Rule discharged.

"Clause 21—Directs that all the property, both moveable and immoveable, should be considered as trust property.

"The said Hormasji does not state the value of his property, but it is believed that it is of the value of about Rs. 3,00,000.

"That, in a suit lately filed by the trustees against a tenant in the Court of Small Causes at Bombay, the said document was produced, and on its admissibility in evidence being disputed by the defendant in the suit on the ground of insufficiency of stamp, it was impounded and forwarded to me under s. 35 of the said Act.

"I think it is a question whether the document is a settlement, or whether it is intended to operate only after the death of the said Hormasji Sorabji Tadivala, and whether, in the latter event, it is a testamentary document and therefore not chargeable with an ad valorem duty under art. 57 of the first schedule of the Stamp Act. I also think that it is not a declaration of trust, and that the stamp of rupees fifteen is not required on that ground, and if it is a settlement, it is at present insufficiently stamped."

The Collector, therefore, referred the following question .—

"Whether the above-mentioned document requires any and what stamp?"

The reference was fixed for argument and disposal before a Full Bench consisting of Sargent, C. J., and Jardine and Candy, JJ.

Macpherson (with Little, Government Solicitor) appeared for the Government of Bombay :—The question is whether the document [213] is a testamentary instrument and, therefore, exempted from the payment of stamp duty, or is it liable to be stamped as a settlement or otherwise. The executant has named it a trust-deed, but the context of the document shows that it is a settlement. It is not a mere declaration of trust. The executant has appointed trustees, and has settled the estate on his grandson. Under the terms of the document he himself is to continue in management of the property, and the trustees are to take over charge of the property in case he becomes incompetent. All these circumstances show that the instrument is a settlement, and it should be stamped as such.

Cleary, Q.C. (with Sitanath G. Ajinkya) appeared for the administratrix and son of Hormusji Sorabji, deceased.—We submit that the document is a testamentary instrument. The mere form of a document is not a test of its particular nature. The present document has made provisions for certain things which are to take effect in futuro. A trust-deed can have nothing to do with such things.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan appeared for Sorabji Shapurji, trustee, and the minor Pestonji Shapurji was represented by his guardian Shapurji Hormasji.

Macpherson, in reply.—The executant had appointed himself a trustee. Therefore, it is clear that the document was to take effect during his lifetime, and that being so, it is not a testamentary disposition. The form of the document is immaterial—Thorncroft v. Lashmar (1).

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by

SARGENT, C. J.—The only question which has been argued before us is whether the instrument is a testamentary document or a settlement. The party executing it calls it a trust-deed. It was clearly intended to have immediate operation, the most important test in distinguishing a settlement from a will. It vests the property in trustees at once, and the provisions as to the management and the ultimate beneficial interest in the property show that it was contemplated that its operation might extend beyond the lifetime of the owner.

[214] The reservation of the management by the owner during his life cannot affect its character. In Crossman v. The Queen (2) and Attorney-General v. Heywood (3) it was held that even the reservation of a life estate by the settlement did not render the instrument less a settlement.

It was argued by Mr. Cleary that the concluding words in para. 7 of the instrument "as long as I am alive, I have authority to increase or decrease" gave the owner the right to revoke the instrument. In the first place, those words must, we think, apply to the management which had just previously been reserved to the owner "in the interest of the property and (the beneficiary) Pestonji." But in any view of the words, as pointed out by Mr. Jarman in his Treatise on Wills, the insertion of a clause of revocation so far from indicating an intention to make a will, gives quite a contrary colour to the transaction, as a will does not require an express power to render it revocable.

It was also argued that the circumstance of the owner providing that any future property he might acquire and all sums to become due to him should be brought into the settlement, and all sums to become due from him during his lifetime should be paid out of the property, were provisions which were never heard of before in a settlement, and that an assignment of such property could not have effect given to it, and that such disposition gave a testamentary character to the whole. But, as pointed out by Mr. Jarman, the introduction of such disposition into the instrument would only show that he attempted to include what he could not, and not that he intended to resort to a different species of disposition. On the whole we think the instrument is one which falls under the definition of a settlement in the Stamp Act, and should be stamped accordingly.

Order accordingly.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. DEVJI GOVINDJI.* [29th July, 1895.]

Verdict of jury—Special verdict—Murder—Culpable homicide—Grave and sudden provocation—Loss of self-control—Burden of proving loss of self-control on accused—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 299 and 300—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 238, 303 and 307—High Court's power of interfering with the verdict of a jury.

The accused was tried for murder. The first verdict of the jury was "guilty of murder under grave and sudden provocation." The Sessions Judge told the jury that it was their duty, after considering the question of provocation, to return a simple verdict of guilty or not guilty. The jury, therefore, brought in a second verdict of "not guilty." The Judge, considering this verdict to be perverse, referred the case to the High Court under s. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

Held, that the direction given to the jury after the first verdict was wrong, as the case fell under s. 238 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882). Although the charge was only one of murder, the jury had a right to bring in a verdict of culpable homicide, if there was grave and sudden provocation so as to deprive the prisoner of the power of self-control.

Held, also, that the jury were not bound to find a simple verdict of guilty or not guilty. They might have found a special verdict, or findings on matters of fact to which the Judge applies the law.

Held, also, that the first verdict was a verdict of murder, as the jury did not find that the provocation had destroyed the power of self-control.

It is not a necessary consequence of anger, or other emotion, that the power of self-control should be lost. Except where unsoundness of mind or real fear of instant death is proved, the pressure of temptation is no excuse for breaking the law.

Held, lastly, that the High Court will not interfere with the verdict of a jury unless it is shown to be clearly and manifestly wrong.

A verdict ought to be considered a proper and not a perverse verdict if it is one which reasonable men might find on the facts in evidence.

[216] The reference was made under the following circumstances :—

" On the return of the jury into Court, the foreman stated that they were unanimously of opinion that the accused was guilty of murder under grave and sudden provocation.

" The Court pointed out that such a verdict could not be accepted, and that the jury were bound to find a simple verdict of guilty or not guilty. That, if they were of opinion that there was such grave and sudden provocation as the law allows, their verdict should be one of acquittal, but if they find that there is an absence of such grave and sudden provocation, then their verdict should be one of guilty.

" The Court then read over the two accounts of the killing given by the accused in his confession of the 12th May, and in his statement before the committing Magistrate, and pointed out to the jury that, assuming that there was provocation, it was neither grave nor sudden, and it was actually created by the actions and conduct of the accused himself. Before the committing Magistrate, the accused practically admits that he had misbehaved with his mother-in-law, and, therefore, he was debarred from pleading that provocation, howsoever grave and sudden, as a plea in abatement of his offence.

" The jury again retired for five minutes and came into Court, and through their foreman delivered a unanimous verdict of 'not guilty.' This verdict is, in my opinion, so clearly perverse, that I feel bound to refer the case to the High Court under s. 307, Criminal Procedure Code" (Act X of 1882).

The reference was heard by a Division Bench (Jardine and Ranade, JJ.).

Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

Hormasji C. Coyaji, for the accused.

JARDINE, J.—The jury by unanimous verdict acquitted the prisoner of murder, the only charge made against him. The Sessions Judge considered this verdict to be clearly perverse, and, therefore, submitted the case for the disposal of the High Court under s. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Before [217] dealing with the facts as a jury, we have as Judges to make some remarks on procedure. The jury were not bound to find a simple verdict of guilty or not guilty. They might have found a special verdict, a string of facts, as in Reg. v. Dudley (1), to which the Judge applies the law. The option is theirs, not his. This is clearly laid down in Queen-Empress v. Dada Anna (2), and again in Imperatrix v. Abdul Razak (3), a case from the Consular Court at Mombassa in Africa. The verdict first returned was "guilty of murder under grave and sudden provocation." This was, in terms, a verdict of murder under the Indian Penal Code as the provocation does not reduce the offence to culpable homicide unless it destroys the power of self-control, a fact which this verdict did not find. If a man acting in cold blood slays the man who has given him grave and sudden provocation, the homicide is murder. The verdict does not affirm either that the person provoking was the person killed. Still as the jury in the second verdict acquitted of murder, it may be supposed that they meant at first that only culpable homicide had been proved. This would have been made clear if the learned Judge had questioned them under s. 303. Upon their finding a verdict of culpable homicide, which is punishable more severely where there is an intention to kill than in other cases, it would have been the duty of the Judge to ascertain from the jury if there was in their judgment such an intention. Killing by criminal negligence or gross want of skill is different in its quality from killing with intention to kill, caused by grave provocation, suddenly given by the person who is killed. See Criminal Ruling No. 62 of the 27th November, 1890, on s. 304 of the Penal Code. The learned Judge also appears to have told the jury that their duty after considering the question of provocation was only to acquit or convict of the charge of murder. This direction was wrong. The present is a case falling within s. 238 of the Procedure Code, which says: "When a person is charged with an offence, and facts are proved which reduce it to a minor offence, he may be convicted of the minor offence, although he is not charged with it." If the jury found as a fact that the person killed had given grave and sudden provocation [218] so as to deprive the prisoner of the power of self-control, they as the Judges of the facts had a right where the only charge was murder, to find a verdict of culpable homicide.

Before approaching the merits I refer again to Dada Anna's case and to Queen-Empress v Mania(1), as showing the settled practice of this Court not to interfere with the verdict of a jury unless it is shown to be clearly and manifestly wrong. These are the words in Queen-Empress v. Mania, which Sargent, C. J., adopted in Dada Anna's case. I sat in both, and it is well known that in my opinion, in which Mr. Justice Ranade has in sundry cases concurred, a verdict, whether correct or not, ought to be considered a proper and not a perverse verdict, if it is one which reasonable men might find. The case ought not to come before this Court under s. 307 unless the Judge disagrees so completely with the jury that he considers it necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case. This view taken in Imperatrix v. Bhawani(2), by Westropp, C. J., and Melvile, J., was adopted in the Code of 1882. There are many cases where two juries, both composed of reasonable men, unswayed by any prejudice, may take different views, exactly as two Judges may differ. One kind of mind more readily believes in testimony, more readily draws inference of crime. Another kind of mind hesitates to believe, pauses and gives the benefit of doubt. Each draws on its experience of life; and thus we find wide differences between Judges and juries, between the Judge that tries the case and the Judges of appeal. In criminal cases such things as confessions, the testimony of accomplices, the possession of stolen property, are weighed in different scales by different minds. The same occurs in Civil cases; e. g., where indiscreet familiarities of a married woman are proved, are they evidence of adultery? A harshly judging set of men might say yes. A more lenient or cautious jury might say no; but if you allowed a new trial in the one case you would have to do the same in the other, as the Judge Ordinary points out in Gethin v. Gethin (3), and so you would never get to finality. Dada Anna's case is a sample where two different Sessions Judges differ from two different juries, and on the reference, [219] under s. 307, the two Judges of the High Court differ, and at length a third Judge decides the matter. (The Judge then read from report of Gethin v. Gethin.)

In the present case the Judge and jury were agreed that the prisoner Devji killed his wife Bai Lakshmi, who was then eight months with child. The question whether he intended to kill her was not asked, but as the medical witness deposes to fracture of the skull and many cutting and punctured wounds, and that these injuries could not have been self-inflicted, it is easy for this Court to hold that the prisoner had an intention to kill. The difference between the Judge and the jury was on the question whether some provocation given by Lakshmi was grave and sudden. The answer in the complete absence of any witnesses has to be gathered from the various statements made by the prisoner to the tribunals. The Judge read them over to the jury and pointed out that in his opinion the provocation alleged by the prisoner was not grave nor sudden; and that whatever it was, he had provoked it himself by misbehaviour with his mother-in-law, which we think cannot be treated in the evidence as an incident forming part of the homicidal transaction, as it belongs to quite a different time and place. I exclude from consideration as evidence some statements made by the prisoner to the police that he was the murderer, as inadmissible under the ruling in Queen-Empress v. Nana (1), as conduct or otherwise. I think the Judge rightly states the effect of the evidence to be that some time about 4 P.M. on the 11th May last, Lakshmi was heard crying inside their house, where between 5 and 6 P.M. the prisoner Devji was found by the police alone and in bloody clothes with her dead body, the front door being locked from the inside. On the 12th May, he made a confession that just before the police came he had struck his wife on the head with a pound weight, a knife, and a sickle, and that he was caught in his bloody clothes after the police had got the door opened, which he had locked from the inside. He said he had given these deadly injuries, because he was enraged at some foul abuse Lakshmi gave him at the time. He accounts for the abuse by a long story. He and his wife had paid a visit to Visnagar; he sent his wife home and stayed with [220] her mother. He was taunted with insinuations that he had there misbehaved with the latter. When he got home to Ahmedabad and on some occasion, two days before the killing, a third person openly taunted him with the same charge and went on doing so for two days—singing a ribald refrain. Prisoner goes on: "I heard it patiently for two days. My wife said that he had been saying this for two days. It was true. I said that I would write a letter to her mother. She replied that if a letter were written, her mother would be disgraced. My wife began to give me foul abuses, so I was enraged." It is not easy to understand fully what the prisoner means. Under the circumstances the wife had a good right to ask him if the charge was true. Possibly his reply was adding insult to injury, and on his own showing it enraged the wife. On the 20th May, the prisoner made another statement to the Magistrate. From that it appears that the wife was at first angry with the man that made the charge. "For about one and a half day I persuaded my wife to believe that I had not misbehaved, but she was not satisfied and began to abuse me much. She said that she would either kill herself or kill me. We quarrelled much for one and a half day. I then smoked a chillam of ganja. She abused me in the name of my mother and sister, and I then slapped her on the face. She then lifted up the hatchet from the ground and struck it on her head. She was striking this on her head and, therefore, I took up an iron weight and struck her with it in the head. She then took up a knife and came to strike me with it. I gave her a push, and she fell down on the cot. While she was on the point of death, I put water into her mouth." Afterwards on the 24th May, the prisoner denied the killing and said he knew nothing about the matter; he had been taking liquor and ganja ; and the defence at the trial was similar. It is not impossible that he had smoked ganja. I think the prisoner's two confessions to be on the whole a tolerably true story. But to what do they amount? They show that the quarrel was not sudden, but had been going on for two days at least. The wife's feelings were probably lacerated by the prisoner's misbehaviour. She may very likely have given him some words of abuse, and he slapped her face. But even if she did, an unprejudiced juryman could not call this abuse, which is a very [221] common habit, a grave provocation : to kill a wife under such circumstances by the use of deadly weapons is an act out of all proportion to the abusive words. The prisoner probably got angry as he says : but, in the absence of proof and of any distinct finding by the jury, I will not believe that the power of self-control was lost. She appears to have threatened to kill herself with the hatchet, whereupon he says he struck her on the head with the iron weight. Now the Penal Code makes provocation a question of fact more distinctly one from the jury, than in England, where Judges have modelled the law ; and s. 299 of the Procedure Code shows this distinctly; it was for the jury to believe or disbelieve the confessions, and to accept or reject any part thereof as true or false. But they have, in my opinion, gone further, and without any reason treated the usual angry language of a quarrel between husband and wife as grave provocation to the use of deadly weapons. It is not clear whether they found that the power of self-control was lost. If this unanimous verdict of acquittal of murder had been given in Bombay, the Judge would have been bound to accept it, and no responsibility for it as a judgment on the facts could be cast on him. It is otherwise in the Mofussil in cases under s. 307, where the Judge has a severer duty.

I have given my views sitting as a jury, and now turn to some considerations as a Judge. If a verdict like the present were allowed to stand there would be a precedent in the High Court for acquitting of murder any husband or wife who kills the other with a deadly weapon and then explains that anger was caused by bad language in a domestic quarrel, and that the result was a sudden stop of moral and religious restraint and the fear of the gallows : so that all power of self-control was gone. This would be contrary to Queen-Empress v. Sakharam (1), where we say that the fear of the punishment for murder is meant to hold in check these irritable vagabond ganja-smoking husbands, the exception about grave provocation was not meant to supply them with excuses. I am clear that as Judges we cannot give our sanction to the view taken by the jury, which is either an evasion or a new view of the law. Like the killing of the [222] unoffending and unresisting boy by the starving sailors in the Queen v. Dudley (2), the killing is murder unless extenuated by some well-recognized excuse admitted by the law. We cannot as Judges tolerate any mere suggestion which would lessen the security the law throws round human life. For some reason or other, fallacious excuses are often debated here where cases come from so many Courts, and it is one of our highest functions as the sacerdotes legum, the leges loquentes, to uphold the ancient and settled doctrines of the law, e.g., where a man was killed under torture by a policeman, to lay down that the maxim respondeat superior had no application in favour of the prisoner, so in another case that mere jealous suspicion of a wife, however strong, does not reduce the murder to anything less. I regret that when the jury first announced their findings on fact in the special form, it was not ascertained whether they found that words spoken by Bai Lakshmi had destroyed the prisoner's power of self-control. I do not think that a reasonable set of men would have found that those mere words used in a long quarrel had reduced him to an irrational state entirely forgetful of the law and its terrors, something like a spoiled child or an animal. All our training as Judges, all the great decisions make us look with dislike on any theory which makes crime easy and excuses atrocious acts. Many people are angry on serious provocation, yet they do not slay the man or woman who has given it: it is not a necessary consequence of anger or other emotion that the power of self-control should be lost. The use of such a phrase shows that the law takes no notice of those metaphysics which assume that the human will is not free. Except where unsoundness of mind is proved, or real fear of instant death is proved, the burden being on the prisoner, the pressure of temptation is not an excuse for breaking the law. In Reg. v. Dudley, the Judges would not allow any theory about "necessity" to be made "the legal cloak for unbridled passion and atrocious crime." Since Lord Hale condescended to refute the Jesuits of France, that theory has hardly been mooted in the High Courts of Justice until Reg. v. Dudley, where Lord Coleridge hints at a Satanic origin :—

> "So spake the Fiend, and with necessity,
> The tyrant's plea, excused his devilish deeds."

[223] In this Presidency the metaphysical question has been debated several times. The leading case is Queen-Empress v. Maganlal (1), where an inferior tribunal had acted on some rhetorical expressions of Sir Raymond West in a printed minute of the Government of Bombay, which excuses some corrupt Judges and Magistrates, who had volunteered to pay bribes for promotion, on the ground that they were under some coercion of circumstances or the desire to get on in the world, and, therefore, did not act of free will, p. 130. The report shows how strenuously the Judges, at least Mr. Justice Bayley and myself, denounced that sort of philosophy as bad law. It was impossible to retain a corrupt Judge in the service of the Crown; and the specious argument of supposed philosophy did not prevail, and those persons were removed, for Magna Charta will tolerate no purchase of a Judge's office, and will recognise no superior. But since we uttered that deliverance on the law, we have had pointedly to enforce it again at sundry times and in divers manners as appears from the published criminal rulings. So deeply do wrong theories about human free will, if admitted as maxims of law, affect the people. In one of these cases this Court had to uphold the verdict of the jury convicting two persons of murder whom the Judge, whose attention was afterwards drawn to that leading case, would have acquitted. The decisions on the law are clear, and they are guides for the Courts to follow. Our Courts have no duty cast on them of discussing the varying motives to crime as a matter of metaphysics—of sitting as did the fallen angels reasoning high of > "Providence, foreknowledge, will and fate.

> Fixed fate, free will, foreknowledge absolute,
> And found no end in wandering mazes lost."

Unless the jury were influenced by these things, the Oriental notion of fixed fate, they were not bound to assume, if they ever did, that the prisoner had lost his power of self-control. The law puts on him the burden of proving this loss of power—of proving that the act was not a mere result of natural ferocity, perhaps roused by drink or ganja. I think this theory accounts for what happened better than the theory that the power of self-[224] control was lost by the trivial provocation. As Sir James Stephen remarks, "the moral character of homicide must be judged of principally by the extent to which the circumstances of the case show on the one hand brutal ferocity, whether called into action suddenly or otherwise, or on the other inability to control natural anger, excited by serious cause"—3 Stephen's History of the Criminal Law, 71.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the learned Sessions Judge was in the present case required by his duty to express complete dissent with the unanimous verdict. To conclude, my judgment on the case sitting both as a jury and a Judge is that the verdict is manifestly wrong and unreasonable, and that the prisoner is guilty of murder and nothing less. As my brother Ranade comes to the same conclusion, the Court now assumes all the responsibilities of a jury and convicts the prisoner of murder and sentences him to death. But on consideration not so much of the jury's verdict by itself as of the obscurity of the evidence and of some indications that the prisoner had been probably excited by drink or ganja, we will ask the Governor in Council to consider whether the sentence may not be commuted.

RANADE, J.—I concur. The Sessions Judge in his charge to the jury appears to me to have too emphatically expressed his opinion in favour of the conviction of the accused on the charge of murder, and discredited the two pleas set up in defence, one of grave and sudden provocation, and the other of intoxication. The questions suggested by both these pleas were matters of fact, and as such the jury, and not the Judge, had to decide them. Clause (d) of s. 298 no doubt contemplates a certain extent of liberty to the Judge to express his view on questions of fact, but when a Judge lays down that there is not sufficient evidence to establish the plea, he in fact trenches upon the peculiar province of the jury to decide upon the sufficiency or otherwise of the evidence to prove allegations of fact (s. 299). The charge, indeed, concluded with an admonition to the jury, that it was for them to decide, whether, from the facts proved and the statements made by the accused, they could come to the conclusions that the accused caused the death of his wife, and did so [225] with the intention of causing her death, but it also asked them to state that the prisoner did not do so in consequence of grave and sudden action or intoxication. The Sessions Judge after setting forth the evidence for and against the prisoner, should have left it to the jury to decide whether it was murder pure and simple, or culpable homicide not amounting to murder, as was alleged by the defence. The jury in the first instance returned a verdict of guilty of murder under grave and sudden provocation. As the degree of intensity of this provocation was not mentioned in the verdict, it was certainly open to the Sessions Judge under s. 303 to put a question on that point with a view to ascertain what was the true character of the verdict. The Sessions Judge, however, informed the jury that he could not accept a qualified verdict, and he required them to find the prisoner either guilty or not guilty of murder. He told the jury that if the grave and sudden provocation was of the kind which the law allows, they should acquit the prisoner. In this there was certainly a misdirection, for it was open to the jury on a charge of murder to bring in a verdict stating circumstances which might reduce the murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder

(s. 238). The Sessions Judge next read over the evidence again, and pointed out that the provocation was not grave and sudden, and, being the result of his own conduct, it could not be pleaded in extenuation, even if held to be proved. Under the stress of such a reiterated charge, the jury brought in a second verdict of not guilty which the Sessions Judge has characterized as perverse, and which it no doubt is on the face of the record, when taken by itself. Reading it in connection with what had preceded it, it is plain that the jury in this case intended really not to acquit the prisoner altogether, but to bring in a verdict of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The apparent perverseness was to a great extent due to the emphasis laid by the Sessions Judge in his charge on their duty to find the accused guilty of murder, and murder alone If, instead of calling upon the jury to return an unqualified second verdict, the Sessions Judge had asked them a question as to whether the grave and sudden provocation was of a sort to deprive the prisoner of all self-control, the jury would in all probability have returned a verdict which [226] would have satisfied the Sessions Judge—a verdict of guilty of murder. The unusual procedure followed by the Sessions Judge was thus to some extent responsible for the apparent perverseness of the final verdict. This irregularity is, however, not of a sort which has been prejudicial to the prisoner, and this brings us to the consideration of the question of fact as to how far the alleged provocation was grave and sudden so as to deprive accused of self-control. Both the jury and Judge found that the death was caused by an act of the accused, and the only question is whether there was grave and sudden provocation. The accused in his first statement made on the next day after the murder, after giving a long rigmarole story which was not very relevant to the charge, stated that his wife abused him because somebody said that he had committed incest with her mother, and he got enraged and struck her three times with a seer weight, and by a knife eight or nine times, and with a hoe eight or nine times. No amount of abuse could under the circumstances be held sufficient provocation for such cruelty to a pregnant wife. In his second statement made nine days after, he added that he had taken ganja that day, and that his wife had, besides the abuses she gave, threatened to kill herself, and he, therefore, struck her a blow with the seer weight. She then threatened to strike him with a knife, and he gave her a push which made her fall down. Later on, on 24th May, he retracted this statement, and stated that he was drunk and did not know. Of course this second statement of 20th May is not borne out by the numerous wounds found on the body of the deceased in the post-mortem examination. In his third statement he admitted that he had taken both majum and drink, and that God only knew if he killed her or she killed herself. He would not venture on positive denial. He in fact abandoned the plea of provocation. This is all the evidence on the point. The evidence about his movements in the house before he was captured shows that the accused was not then quite in his senses, and this excitement was due either to intoxication or was the effect of the madness which horrible crime such as this engenders. The plea of intoxication cannot help accused, as it was voluntary intoxication. The other plea was virtually abandoned by him, and even at its best it did not constitute any provocation for the [227] crime committed. We accordingly agree with the Sessions Judge in finding that the accused was guilty of murder, and not of the lesser offence of culpable homicide as found by the jury in their first verdict. The second verdict was perverse and must be set aside.

For the above reasons, the Court found the accused guilty of murder and sentenced him to be hanged, but as there were reasons that he had been probably excited by drink, their Lordships said they would ask the Governor in Council whether the sentence might not be commuted.

TESTAMENTARY JURISDICTION.

Before Mr. Justice Starling.

IN THE MATTER OF THE WILL OF TULSIDAS VARAJDAS. DAYABHAI TAPIDAS (Applicant) v. DAMODAR TAPIDAS (Respondent.) [7th September, 1895].

Probate—Will—Executor who has acted required to lodge will and obtain probate.

One Tulsidas Varajdas died in 1883, and by his will appointed his brother Tapidas sole residuary legatee and also his executor, and he directed that in case of Tapidas' death, Damodar (Tapidas' son) should be executor. Tapidas accordingly acted as executor until his death in May, 1886, and then his son Damodar continued to administer the estate, but neither of them obtained probate of the will. Tapidas left a will whereby he appointed his two sons Damodar and Dayabhai (the applicant) his executors and also his residuary legatees. In June, 1895, Dayabhai, stating that he was one of the residuary legatees of Tapidas, who was the sole residuary legatee of Tulsidas Varajdas, applied for a citation to be issued to Damodar directing him to bring in and prove the will of Tulsidas Varajdas. In reply, Damodar submitted that there was no necessity to prove the will; that the estate was fully administered, and that he had no funds left in his hands out of which to pay the costs of probate.

Held, that the executor Damodar must lodge the will in Court, and that, on the applicant Dayabhai paying half the estimated costs of obtaining probate (including probate duty), the executor Damodar should take out probate of the will.

CITATION to an executor to bring in and prove the will of his testator.

One Tulsidas Varajdas died at Bombay on 21st January, 1883, possessed of considerable moveable and immoveable property in Bombay. He left a will dated the 8th November, 1882.

[228] By this will he appointed his brother Tapidas Varajdas his executor, and directed that, in the event of Tapidas' death, his son Damodar Tapidas (step-brother of the applicant Dayabhai Tapidas) should act as executor. Tapidas Varajdas was the sole residuary legatee under the will.

Tapidas acted as executor until his death on the 31st May, 1886, and Damodar Tapidas then acted and continued to administer the estate, but probate of the will was not obtained either by Tapidas or Damodar.

Tapidas left a will dated the 26th May, 1885, which was duly proved by his sons the executors thereof, viz., Damodar Tapidas and Dayabhai Tapidas (the applicant), on the 27th November, 1886. The said two executors were the residuary legatees under the said will.

On the 29th June, 1895, Dayabhai Tapidas applied for a citation to be issued to his step-brother Damodar Tapidas requiring him to bring in and prove the will of Tulsidas Varajdas. In his affidavit he stated as follows:—

"5. The said will of Tulsidas Varajdas was not proved by the said Tapidas Varajdas during his lifetime, and the said Damodardas Tapidas has not yet proved the same although I repeatedly called upon him so to do, and in answer to my inquiry whether he would prove it or not he says that it is not necessary for him to do so.

"6. As one of the residuary legatees of the said Tapidas Varajdas the sole residuary legatee under the said will of Tulsidas Varajdas, I am anxious that the original will of the said Tulsidas Varajdas should be produced and deposited in the office of the Registrar, and that the said Damodardas Tapidas should be called upon to prove the same, he having already elected to act thereunder.

"7. Under the aforesaid circumstances I pray that this Honourable Court will be pleased to issue a citation addressed to the said Damodardas Tapidas to produce and deposit the said original will of the said Tulsidas Varajdas into the office of the Registrar, and to prove the same."

In reply, Damodar Tapidas filed an affidavit in which he stated that the testator's estate had been administered without probate by his father Tapidas and himself with the knowledge and consent of the applicant (Dayabhai); that Dayabhai had never before required the will to be proved; that Dayabhai was trustee of various trusts created in pursuance of the will; that the estate had been completely administered, and that he had now no funds out of which to pay the costs of obtaining probate; and that the [229] application was now made merely for the purpose of annoyance. The last paragraph of his affidavit was as follows:—

"10. I say that I have no objection to produce the original will of the abovenamed deceased in the Honourable Court; but having regard to the fact that the estate of the testator has already been fully and completely administered as aforesaid, and the residue paid, I submit there is no necessity of proving the said will. I also submit, that under the events which have happened, the said Dayabhai Tapidas had no justification to obtain the present citation to call upon me to deposit and prove the said will. I say that no funds are left from which I can pay the heavy costs of obtaining probate, as the residue of the said testator's estate has already been paid off as aforesaid. Should, however, this Honourable Court be of opinion that it is now necessary to obtain probate of the said will, I am ready and willing to carry out the Court's direction. In that case, the said Dayabhai Tapidas ought to be made to pay all the costs of obtaining probate, as it is he who, for reasons best known to himself, desires that this expenditure should be incurred, which said expenditure is otherwise entirely unnecessary.

Inverarity, for the applicant in support of the citation. He referred to Williams on Executors (8th Ed., pp. 226-7.)

Scott, for the executor, showed cause.

JUDGMENT.

STARLING, J.—The respondent in this matter, Damodardas Tapidas, is the executor of the will of one Tulsidas Varajdas, but he has not proved the will which is in his possession, and has paid away or set apart the estate which came into his hands. The applicant Dayabhai Tapidas, the brother of the respondent, asks for an order that the respondent should bring the will into Court and prove the same, or else renounce probate. The respondent is unwilling to renounce probate, as that would enable his brother to take out letters of administration cum testamento annexo and claim possession of the estate of the deceased which has not been distributed, and also to interfere in the management of certain charitable trusts provided for by the will. At the same time the respondent does not desire to take out probate, although, since his father's death he has been acting as executor, because he would have to pay the whole of the probate duty, and he has in his hands no portion of the estate which can apparently be devoted to that object, and consequently he would have to pay it out of his own pocket.

The question I have to decide is, whether I can order the respondent to prove the will.

[230] The Indian Succession Act, 1865, and the Probate and Administration Act, V of 1881, do not provide for a case like this. Similar cases have, however, occurred in the Ecclesiastical and Probate Courts in England,

In Pytt v. Fendall (1) Sir George Lee held that an executor having acted as executor could not renounce probate, and ordered him to take out probate before a certain day. In Jackson v. Whitehead (2) Sir John Nicholl said he found no case where the Court had refused to dismiss an executor except on the ground of the party having intermeddled with the effects, and that the reason was obvious; that where a party had intermeddled, he had taken upon himself the burden and acquired the responsibility of an executor. In Long v. Symes (3) the same learned Judge said that if intermeddling would render a man executor de son tort, it would also render an executor compellable to take probate, and assigned the executor in that case to take probate before a certain day. See also Mordaunt v. Clarke (4), where the same principle was followed. This course of proceeding is in no way inconsistent with the provisions of the Indian Acts already referred to, and I think it should be followed in the present case.

The will of Tulsidas Varajdas must, therefore, be lodged by Damodar Tapidas with the Testamentary Registrar of this Court, and he must take out probate thereof; but I will not, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, order him to do so unconditionally. A portion of the administration was carried out by Tapidas Varajdas, the original executor, and for his acts Damodar is not responsible personally. All the legacies under the will except two seem to have been paid, and those two seem to have been set apart in a way which is not apparently improper, and the apparent residue was settled in a more or less formal manner between Damodar and his bother Dayabhai (the applicant), and the same has been divided between them. It is apparent, therefore, that the only reason for the present application is that Dayabhai desires to bring a suit against Damodar in respect [231] of his administration of the estate of Tulsidas, which he cannot do until some one has been recognised as the personal representative. Dayabhai, having quarrelled with Damodar, wants to make Damodar pay out of his own pocket all the costs of obtaining probate, and then to have the gratification of bringing the estate into Court. I do not think he should have this double gratification, as I am doubtful whether there is any necessity for probate, except for the purpose of enabling one brother to compel the other to render an account of the estate, and his application thereof to the Court. If he wants probate taken out, he must pay one-half the costs including probate duty.

The order I shall, therefore, make is that Damodar do lodge the will in Court, and that on Dayabhai paying to Damodar or his attorneys half the estimated costs of applying for and obtaining probate (including probate duty), such estimate to be settled, if necessary, by the Taxing Master, but without prejudice to Dayabhai's right to have the same debited against the estate, Damodar do as soon as practicable thereafter apply for and take out probate of the will of Tulsidas Varajdas, deceased. Each party to bear his own costs of this citation and order.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 523—Agreements to refer within the section—Arbitration—Agreement to refer future differences to arbitration—Naming of arbitrators.

A general agreement to refer future difference to arbitration comes within s. 523 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and may be filed under that section. The section is not confined to cases in which a dispute actually existing at date of agreement is agreed to be referred to arbitration.

But the agreement must name the arbitrator or arbitrators, and an agreement which provides for the future appointment or election of arbitrators does not fall within the section.

The effect of the last clause of s. 523 is to give the parties to such an agreement power to nominate the arbitrator, even when they have agreed that he shall be appointed by the Court. In such cases the Court must appoint their nominee.

(1) Section 523 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) :—

"When any persons agree in writing that any difference between them shall be referred to the arbitration of any person named in the agreement or to be appointed by any Court having jurisdiction in the matter to which the agreement relates, the parties thereto, or any of them, may apply that the agreement be filed in Court.

"The application shall be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit between one or more of the parties interested or claiming to be interested as plaintiff or plaintiffs, and the others or other of them as defendants or defendant, if the application have been presented by all the parties, or, if otherwise, between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants.

"On such an application being made, the Court shall direct notice thereof to be given to all the parties to the agreement other than the applicants, requiring such parties to shew cause within the time specified in the notice why the agreement should not be filed.

"If no such cause be shown, the Court may cause the agreement to be filed, and shall make an order of reference thereon and may also nominate the arbitrator when he is not named therein, and the parties cannot agree as to the nomination.

Mombasa, thence to Zanzibar, and thence to Muscat, delivering part of the cargo at each intermediate place and the last portion thereof at Muscat. The voyage was duly performed as far as Zanzibar, but instead of going thence to Muscat the ship deviated to Bombay and, after some delay there, proceeded to Muscat, arriving there (as the plaintiff alleged) at a date later than the date at which, but for the deviation, she would have arrived. The plaintiff consequently claimed damages from the defendants.

The charter-party contained a clause providing for reference to arbitration in case of dispute between the parties. The clause was as follows :—

"Any disagreement arising between the contracting parties as to the proper interpretation or meaning of any of the clauses of this charter-party or any other disputes or objections being raised by the parties, such disputes, objections, disagreements and matters shall be referred to two arbitrators duly elected by them. In case of dissidence between the arbitrators, an umpire shall be named by them, and his decision shall be final and without appeal. Such disagreements, &c., if any, incurred at any ports be only settled through arbitrators in Bombay and by the owners and charterers only."

The plaintiff desired that the matter in dispute should be referred to arbitration, but the defendants objected. The plaintiff accordingly applied by petition to the Court under s. 523 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) praying for a direction that the charter-party should be filed, and that an order of reference should be made regarding the said dispute.

The application was in the first instance heard by Starling, J., who, on the 4th July, 1895, gave judgment for the plaintiff and ordered the charter-party to be filed, and an order of reference made thereon. Subsequently on the application of the defendants His Lordship withdrew his judgment, and the question now came before a Full Bench.

Macpherson (Acting Advocate-General), for the defendants.—The agreement in question is not one that comes within s. 523 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and it ought not to be filed. General agreements to refer differences to arbitration [234] are not within this section. The agreements contemplated by the section are only those (1) which refer to disputes which at the time of the agreement to refer have actually arisen and (2) in which arbitrators are named. There must be a specific controversy in existence. Until Statute 3 and 4 Will IV, c. 42, there was a distinction between a general agreement to refer such as this is, and an agreement to refer existing disputes : see per Mellish, J., in Randell v. Thompson (1). In India, general agreements to refer were provided for by the Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 28, and see s. 21 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877). The Civil Procedure Code deals only with agreements to refer existing disputes : see ss. 506 to 522. So also s. 525 refers to existing disputes. It is improbable that ss. 523 and 524 were intended to refer to a different class of agreements. He referred to Stat. 53 and 54 Vic., c. 49, s. 27 ; Adhibai v. Cursandos (2) ; Smith v. Nelson (3).

Inverarity and Lowndes, for the plaintiff.—This agreement ought to be filed. It comes within s. 523 of the Civil Procedure Code. The words of that section are wide enough to include such an agreement as this. The arbitrator is sufficiently named in this agreement. He is to be a person elected by both parties. That is a sufficient naming or indication of who the arbitrator is to be. Counsel referred to the English Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, ss. 11 and 17; Act VIII of 1859, s. 326.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—This is an application to this Court to file an agreement of reference under s. 523 of the Civil Procedure Code. It was made in the first instance to Mr. Justice Starling in chambers. That learned Judge entertaining doubts as to his jurisdiction to grant the application, and considering the question involved to be an important one, has referred it to this Bench. It was argued before us on the 20th instant. I read the judgment of Mr. Justice Tyabji and myself.

The agreement to refer, which it is sought to file, is contained in a charter-party and is in the following terms: "Any [235] disagreement arising between the contracting parties as to the proper interpretation or meaning of any of the clauses of this charter-party or any other disputes or objections being raised by the parties, such disputes, objections, disagreements and matters shall be referred to two arbitrators duly elected by them. In case of dissidence between the arbitrators, an umpire shall be named by them, and his decision shall be final and without appeal. Such disagreements, &c., if any, incurred at any ports (shall) be only settled through arbitrators in Bombay and by the owners and charterers only."

The dispute which has arisen between the parties is, we are informed, as to the liability of the steamer owners for not landing goods belonging to the applicants at Muscat. It is contended that the above agreement does not fall within the purview of s. 523 of the Code (Act XIV of 1882), inasmuch as it is an agreement to refer future differences, and not a present existing dispute or present existing disputes, to arbitration; and also because (it is said) the parties have not agreed that any difference between them shall be referred to the arbitration of any person named in the agreement or to be appointed by any Court having jurisdiction in the matter to which the agreement relates. We are unable to accede to the contention of the Advocate General that s. 523 of the Civil Procedure Code is confined to cases in which a dispute actually existing at the date of the agreement is agreed to be referred to arbitration. The section doubtless does not contemplate an agreement to refer future differences being filed until differences have actually arisen. Its concluding paragraph directs the Court in imperative language, upon the agreement being filed, to make an order of reference thereon, which could not be done if no present difference had arisen. It appears to us, however, that when a difference has arisen it is immaterial whether the agreement to refer is contained in a previously existing contract between the parties, or whether it is an agreement entered into for the purpose of determining the existing dispute. Each equally falls within the scope of the section. The words "any difference" embrace alike, we think, any present difference and any future difference arising out of the contract. They appear to us to be a comprehensive mode adopted by the draftsman of [236] the Civil Procedure Code to express the same idea as the draftsman of the Common Law Procedure Act expressed in the words "any then existing or any future differences" which are found in the 11th section of the statute (17 and 18 Vict., c. 125) from which the 523rd section of the Code was probably adapted. We do not think that the position of s. 523 in Chap. XXXVII of the Code, which was relied upon by the Advocate General in his learned argument, between ss. 503 and 527, which are conversant with the reference of existing matters of dispute, is sufficient to show that the Legislature used the expression "any difference" in the restricted sense for which he contends.

It is not, however, necessary for us actually to decide this point, as we think that the second objection raised by the Advocate-General must prevail. It is clear, if we construe the words of the section in their plain ordinary grammatical sense, that the parties here have not agreed in writing that their differences shall be referred to the arbitration of any person named in the agreement. They have left the appointment of arbitrators to a future election by them, and this election has not taken place. Mr. Inverarity contends that the election of arbitrators by the parties to be thereafter made is equivalent to a naming of them in the agreement. "Named" in the s. (523) must, he argues, be read as "designated, or described;" but even giving to the word its widest meaning which we should be anxious to do in order to bring within the scope of the section cases in which the arbitrator, though not actually named, is designated, as for example, by the office which he holds, we feel unable to hold that arbitrators who are left for future election are "named" in the agreement within the meaning of the section. To do so would be to alter the language of the section and not to interpret its existing language according to its plain ordinary meaning. We cannot vary the language which the Legislature has used in order to make the law accord with preconceived notions of what it might be. We can, however, in this case see reasons why the Legislature should have framed the enactment in the restricted form which in our view it has adopted.

It is, however, argued that the context of this section renders it necessary for us to give the extended meaning contended for to the [237] expression. This argument is based upon the last clause of the section, which directs that the Court may also nominate the arbitrator when he is not named in the agreement, and the parties cannot agree as to the nomination. This clause of the section is, it must be admitted, not happily worded, nor does it adapt itself readily to, or fit in with, the provisions of its earlier clause. It appears to us inferentially to give the parties power by agreement to nominate their arbitrator, even when they have agreed that their difference shall be referred to an arbitrator to be appointed by the Court. In such case the Court must appoint their nominee, which is not unreasonable. This seems to us to be the only mode of reading the section so as to make it harmonious throughout. The first clause cannot, we think, be read so as in effect to strike out the words "of any person named in the agreement," from the opening clause and to make it apply to agreements to refer generally when it is in terms restricted to agreements to refer of a special or limited class, viz., those in which the arbitrators are named, or in which it is agreed that they are to be appointed by a Court. The Common Law Procedure Code allowed of any agreement to refer being made a rule of a Court; but the practice under it seems to have been not to make such an agreement a rule of Court until arbitrators were appointed. Per Bowen, L. J., in Re Smith (1). The section with which we are now dealing needs, in any view of the law intended to be enacted, redrafting. Similarly, the parties here have not agreed that their difference shall be referred to a person to be appointed by the Court. Even if an open agreement of reference could be construed as a reference to an arbitrator to be appointed by the Court—a question upon which it is unnecessary for us to give an opinion in this case—the parties here by indicating the manner in which their arbitrators are to be elected have inferentially excluded an appointment by a Court.

The agreement cannot, therefore, be brought within the scope of s. 523 of the Code, and no order for its filing can be made.

B. TYABJI, J., concurred.

[238] STARLING, J.—I agree with the judgment just delivered so far as it decides that the words "any difference" include differences which may arise in the future as well as those which have already arisen, and that "naming" of the arbitrator in the agreement is sufficiently effected by his being described by an official title. I also agree that in the present case it cannot be said that the arbitrators are in any way named in the agreement. With regard to the main point in this case, whether the agreement in question can be filed under s. 523 of the Civil Procedure Code, I had written a judgment deciding that question in the affirmative, but the perusal of the judgment just delivered has made me doubt the correctness of the arguments in support of my decision. At the same time it has not convinced me of the correctness of the judgment on this point, and I am in doubt as to how the judgment ought to go. As, however, this is a point of practice, and two members of the Bench agree as to the order to be passed, I do not intend to occupy the public time by going into the grounds of my doubts.

Probate—Application for probate—Executor—Arbitration—Reference by executor to arbitration—Award—Power of executor to refer to arbitration—Effect of award—Jurisdiction—Jurisdiction of Testamentary Court to decide question of award.*

An executor having propounded a will and applied for probate, a caveat was filed denying the execution of the alleged will, and the master was duly registered as a suit. The executor and the caveatrix subsequently referred "the dispute" to arbitration, and an award was made that the alleged will had not been executed. The executor nevertheless subsequently continued the suit. At the hearing the caveatrix pleaded the award and contended that it was binding on the plaintiff (executor). The plaintiff (executor) contended that the Court as a Court of Probate had no jurisdiction to try any question as to the award, but was limited only to the question of the execution of the will.

[239] Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to determine the question as to the award.

Held, also, that the award was binding on the executor.

Godawaribai, widow of Bhowan Dewa Dave, of Bombay, alleging that he was the sole executor according to the tenor of the said will.

The petition stated that the deceased left a daughter named Ambabai, who was an imbecile and unmarried, and the petitioner, who was a paternal cousin of the husband of the testatrix, as her next of kin according to Hindu Law.

By the alleged will the testatrix appointed the said Ghellabhai Atmaram to be her heir and to have the management of all her property and "after him the whole caste shall carry on the same."

On the 26th October, 1893, the defendant, who was the sister of the deceased Godawaribai's husband, filed a caveat, and the matter was registered as suit No. 21 of 1893 (see s. 83 of Act V of 1881). She alleged that the property referred to in the alleged will was the ancestral property of the husband of the deceased, and had come to the deceased as his widow, and she denied that Godawaribai had executed any will.

While the above suit was pending, the parties thereto, on the 30th October, 1893, by a writing duly signed, referred their dispute to arbitration. The caveatrix consequently did not take any steps to proceed with the caveat and did not file her affidavit in support thereof, (as required by the rules of Court), within eight days. The caveat was accordingly dismissed on the 14th December, 1893. The "submission" to arbitration was as follows:—

"To Bhangsali Kalidas Ramji. Written by us the undersigned. By this instrument we give to you in writing as follows: In the matter of an application presented by Ghellabhai Atmaram Tambuwala to obtain 'power' (probate) from the High Court for the administration and enjoyment between us two persons of the property of Bai Godawari, the widow of Darji (tailor) Bhowan Dewa Dave. I, Nandubai, the wife of Mulji Mala, having raised an objection have got a caveat registered in the High Court. In the matter thereof we the said plaintiff (and) defendant have appointed you an arbitrator to bring about a settlement of the said dispute. As to whatever 'award' you may make and give on arriving at a decision, the same is to be agreed to and abided by us two persons. In this matter we each other agree and consent to [240] act according to your 'award.' This submission paper we of our free will and pleasure and in sound mind and consciousness have made and delivered after having read and got read and understood the same. It is agreed to and approved by us and our heirs and representatives in Court (and) the Darbar, Bombay, the English date the 30th of October in the year 1893."

The arbitrator duly proceeded with the arbitration, both parties appearing before him by their solicitors. After hearing the evidence he, on the 18th April, 1894, made and published his award, whereby he found that the alleged will was not executed by Godawaribai. The following was the award:—

"To all to whom these presents shall come I, Bhangsali Kalidas Ramji, of Bombay, send greeting. Whereas by a suit in the High Court of Judicature at Bombay, being suit No. 21 of 1893, wherein one Ghellabhai Atmaram, who had applied to the said High Court on its Testamentary Side for probate of the will of Bai Godawaribai, widow of Bhowan Deva Dave, dated the 3rd day of April, 1890, was plaintiff and applied for probate of the said will, and one Nandubai, wife of Mulji Mala, who had filed a caveat to the said application for probate, was defendant and disputed the said will; and whereas by an instrument in writing dated the 30th day of October, 1893, and under the respective hands of the said Ghellabhai Atmaram and Nandubai it was referred to me as a single arbitrator to bring about a settlement of the said dispute. Now know ye that I, the said Bhangsali Kalidas Ramji, having taken upon myself the burthen of the said reference, and having heard what was alleged by or on behalf of the said parties respectively, and having heard and considered all such evidence, oral and documentary, as hath been produced before me, and having duly weighed and considered all and singular the matters and things to me referred as aforesaid, do make and publish this my award in writing of and concerning the matters as follows. That is to say, I do award and determine that Bai Godawaribai, widow of Bhowan Deva Dave, did not execute the said will dated the 3rd day of April, 1890, which was produced and put in evidence before me by the said Ghellabhai Atmaram. In witness, &c."

The defendant subsequently applied to the arbitrator for the award, in order to get it filed, but was informed by him that he had already handed it over to the plaintiff.

On the 27th April, 1894, the defendant through her solicitor applied to the plaintiff for the award, in order that it might be filed in Court. But the plaintiff took no notice of the said letter and retained the award in his possession.

The defendant alleged that she was consequently unable to apply, under s. 525 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), to have the award filed. She, therefore, applied for letters of administration, which, however, could not be granted to her, as the plaintiff's application and suit (No. 21 of 1893) was still [241] undisposed of. Her caveat in that matter had been dismissed as already mentioned. She, therefore, on the 7th December, 1894, obtained a rule nisi to set aside the order of dismissal, and on the 28th January, 1895, that rule was made absolute, and leave was given to her to file the necessary affidavits.

The suit accordingly now came on for hearing, and the defendant contended (inter alia) that the award was binding on the plaintiff, and that he was not, therefore, now entitled to maintain the suit.

Counsel for the defendant raised the following issues:—

1. Whether by an award dated 18th April, 1894, made and published by one Kalidas Ramji, the arbitrator duly appointed by the parties in that behalf, it was not declared that the will propounded by the plaintiff was not executed by the said Godawaribai?

2. Whether the said award is not binding on the plaintiff?

3. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to the relief claimed?

Counsel for the plaintiff raised the following additional issue:—

4. Whether this Court has jurisdiction to try the question of the award?

5. Whether the will propounded by the plaintiff is not the last will of the said Godawaribai?

It was agreed that the fourth issue should be first argued and decided.

Macpherson (Acting Advocate-General) and Inverarity, for plaintiff.—This case is now before the Testamentary Side of the High Court, and as a Testamentary Court this Court has only to decide whether or not the will propounded by the plaintiff is the will of the testatrix. That is a question not affected by questions as to the award, and these latter questions are not for this Court. The procedure of this Court is limited—Sections 238 and 261 of the Succession Act (X of 1865). This is not an ordinary civil suit. It is a suit to obtain probate, and the Court has merely to decide whether the alleged will was duly executed or not The jurisdiction of the Court in such a suit is limited to that question. There is nothing in the Probate Act (V of 1881) which empowers an executor to submit that question to arbitration. This Court cannot recognize such submissions. Counsel referred to s. 47 of the Charter of the Supreme Court—Brown on Probate, p. 1.

[242] Kirkpatrick and Mankar, for the defendant.—No question of jurisdiction arises. The question is merely one as to the capacity of parties. We do not dispute that the only question in the suit is as to the execution of the will. But this Court, like every Court, has inherent jurisdiction to determine, and must first determine, whether the parties to the suit are entitled to raise the question which they ask it to try. We say that by the submission and award this suit has been decided, and the executor is now precluded from continuing it and raising the question again. As between him and this defendant the award is binding. No doubt, as between other parties, the will may be again propounded and the same question raised. They cited Salig Ram v. Jhunna Kuar (1).

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—The preliminary question is the fourth issue, viz., whether this Court has jurisdiction to try the question of the award; in other words, whether in any suit on the Testamentary side of this Court the parties can agree to refer the matter in dispute to arbitration, and whether in such a case this Court can recognize such a reference.

It is admitted that the proceedings of the Court in such a case must be regulated, so far as the circumstances of the case will admit, by the Code of Civil Procedure (s. 55 of Act V of 1881); but the contention, as I understand it, is that this provision is confined to the form of the suit (idem s. 83), and that the present question is not one of form but of jurisdiction.

It was pointed out by the learned Advocate-General for the plaintiff that by the Charter of 1823 the Supreme Court on its Testamentary Side was a Court of Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction administering the ecclesiastical law (art. 47 of the Supreme Court Charter), and that the same powers have been confirmed to the High Court by the Letters Patent of 1862 and 1865 subject to the provisions of any law made by competent legislative authority. These propositions are correct; and they establish what is not denied, that this Court has jurisdiction to try the present suit. But they do not establish that the parties to such a suit are incapable of referring to arbitration the matters in dispute between them.

[243] The argument of the learned Advocate-General, if pressed to its logical conclusion, amounts to this, that when once an executor of a will has asked the Court to grant probate of a will he cannot under any circumstances recede from that position, but he must leave it to the Court to grant or refuse probate. Suppose an applicant for probate finds subsequently to his application that the will of which he asked probate is manifestly not the last will of the testator, can he not withdraw from the suit? Can he not elect to have the suit dismissed in default? If Chap. XXXVII of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) is not applicable to testamentary suits, is Chap. XXII equally inapplicable? In a word, what the parties are said to have done here does not affect the jurisdiction of the Court. That remains untouched. In what they are said to have done they have exercised the right which belongs to every litigant, a right which must be recognized by every Court whether it be ecclesiastical or not. I find, therefore, on the fourth issue in the affirmative.

The learned Advocate-General contended that, if this were the finding, then the suit should be adjourned, to enable the defendant to apply under s. 525 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) to have the award filed. I hold that this is not necessary. A party is not, under s. 525, compelled to apply. He may, if he wishes. Here the defendant does not so wish. He prefers to rely on the award as his defence to the suit. In my opinion he can do so. The case must proceed.

The submission and award were then proved and put in evidence. The plaintiff called evidence (objected to by the counsel for the defendant) to show that the question which the parties really intended to submit to the arbitration was what sum of money should be paid to Nandubai for the purpose of buying off her opposition to the plaintiff's application for probate of the alleged will.

Inverarity with Macpherson (Acting Advocate-General), for the plaintiff.—The award was not an honest one. We say that the parties never really intended to submit to arbitration the question as to the validity of the will. The parties had arranged beforehand that the arbitrator should award a sum of money [244] to Nandubai if she withdrew her opposition to Ghellabhai's obtaining probate of the will, and the only question was as to the amount. That was the question upon which the parties intended the arbitrator to find—Russell on Arbitration, p. 563. The executor could not refer the question of the execution of a will to arbitration—Hargreaves v. Wood (1).

Kirkpatrick and Mankar, for the defendant.—Hargreaves v. Wood (1) does not apply. There it was sought to make a rule of the Probate Court an agreement to renounce the executorship of a will which, by the agreement itself, was admitted. That Court refused, as it would not enforce such an agreement; but suggested that, if the agreement to renounce were made a rule of another Court, that rule would be recognized and acted upon by the Probate Court. Here the will and the executorship are both denied, and have been found against by the award of the tribunal agreed to by the parties. We do not apply to enforce this award. We merely contend that until it is set aside it binds the parties to it, and that the plaintiff, who falsely pretends to be executor, cannot raise the question of its validity by way of replication—Thorburn v. Barnes (2); Bache v. Billingham (3); Feret v. Hill (4); Rani Bhagoti v. Rani Chandan (5). We must assume that the parties intended to refer what is stated in the submission paper. They cannot give evidence that they meant something else.

CANDY, J.—I now proceed to consider the remaining issues in the above case.

I find the following facts. By petition filed on 27th September, 1893, Ghellabhai applied for probate of the will of a widow by name Godawaribai who died on 28th May, 1891, the alleged will being dated 3rd April, 1890. Ghellabhai was executor according to the tenor of the will. The usual citations were issued, and on 27th October, 1893, Nandubai, sister of the deceased husband of Godawaribai, filed a caveat through her solicitor

Mr. Mantri. In the meanwhile negotiations were going on for a settlement of the dispute between Ghellabhai and Nandubai. Kalidas was appointed by both sides to be arbitrator to settle the matters in dispute. [245] Kalidas says that the first interview with him on the subject was on 28th October, 1893; but it is clear from the deposition of Tribhowan Jetha, brother-in-law of Ghellabhai (who lives at Surat), and of Tribhowan's son Jivraj, supported as these are by the post cards (Exs. A, B, F) and by the telegrams, that negotiations for a settlement must have been commenced as far back as 19th October, 1893.

It is equally clear, notwithstanding Kalidas's denial, that the idea of Ghellabhai and his relatives Tribhowan and Jivraj, who looked after Ghellabhai's affairs in Bombay, was that Nandubai was to be bought off by payment to her of a lump sum of money. She wanted Rs. 5,000. Ghellabhai says that when Tribhowan and Kalidas came to Surat on 31st October bringing the stamped agreement already signed by Nandubai by which Kalidas was appointed arbitrator to settle the matters in dispute, Kalidas then told him he would settle Nandubai's claim for Rs. 2,000, and that he would want Rs. 200 for his own trouble. It is clear from the telegrams that Tribhowan wanted his relative Ghellabhai to come down from Surat on 25th October, 1893, bringing Rs. 200, but Ghellabhai refused to do this, and apparently he did not pay the Rs. 200 or any other sum to Kalidas when the latter with Tribhowan came to Surat and obtained his (Ghellabhai's) signature to the agreement to refer the dispute to the arbitration of Kalidas. This agreement had been signed by Nandubai in Bombay on 30th October, 1893, (the date the document bears) and by Ghellabhai at Surat on the following day. Nandubai's man Narayan instructed her solicitor Mr. Mantri to withdraw the objection to the grant of probate to Ghellabhai (see Mr. Mantri's letter of 2nd November, 1893, to Mr. Malvi, Ghellabhai's solicitor).

The case was thus left in the hands of the arbitrator. Though Mr. Mantri had been instructed by Narayan to withdraw the objection to Ghellabhai's obtaining probate, yet it is clear that Ghellabhai's solicitor Mr. Malvi took no further steps at that time to obtain probate. No affidavit having been filed by Nandubai in support of her caveat, the caveat was dismissed on 14th December, 1893. No further steps, however, were taken in Court. [246] and the solicitors of both parties applied themselves to the duty of appearing before the arbitrator and arguing the genuineness of Godawari's will. It is clear that neither Mr. Malvi nor Mr. Mantri had any idea that the only question between the parties was as to how much money should be paid to Nandubai. Both solicitors bona fide believed that the question at issue was whether Godawaribai had duly executed the will propounded by Ghellabhai. Mr. Malvi for Ghellabhai adduced the evidence of the attesting witnesses to the will, and on that evidence the arbitrator Kalidas came to the conclusion (so he says) that due execution of the will by Godawari was not satisfactorily established. His award to that effect was dated 18th April, 1894. Ghellabhai says that Kalidas falsely told him that the award was in his (Ghellabhai's) favour, and so induced him to pay the aribitrator's costs (Rs. 297) and take out the award. Kalidas denies this. It is impossible to say which man is speaking the truth. But, even if Kalidas did do as alleged by Ghellabhai, the fact would not invalidate the award.

The parties then remained in statu quo for some months. Nandubai made no attempt to file the award (s. 525 of the Civil Procedure Code, (Act XIV of 1882), and Ghellabhai took no step to have it cancelled. After some time, Nandubai applied for letters of administration of Godawari's estate, but found that the present testamentary suit was an obstacle to her obtaining them. She, therefore, on 7th December, 1894, obtained a rule to set aside the former dismissal of her caveat. This was made absolute on 28th January, 1895.

On 21st September, 1895, the case came on for hearing, the preliminary question argued being whether this Court had jurisdiction to try the question of the award, that is, whether this Court on its Testamentary Side could recognise an agreement to refer to arbitration the question as to the due execution of a will. On 21st September, 1895, I decided that this Court had jurisdiction; and the case came on again for hearing on 26th and 30th of September. Mr. Inverarity for Ghellabhai referred to the case of Hargreaves v. Wood (1) as a case which he could have quoted on 21st September had it then been brought to his notice. [247] I merely allude to the case now, as I think it right to state that it does not, in my opinion, support the argument which was on 21st September put forward on behalf of Ghellabhai. In that case the Court directed the issue between the parties (as to due execution of the will) to be tried before the Judge of Assize; the question came on for trial, and a verdict was taken by consent upon terms agreed upon, that a verdict should be entered for the plaintiffs (four executors who expounded the will), and that two of the defendants who were also executors of the will should renounce probate and disclaim the trusts of the will and codicil. Counsel then moved the Probate Court to direct that the said order of nisi prius be entered and made a rule of the Court of Probate, and counsel for the defendant dissented thereto. But Sir C. Cresswell said that there was by the practice of the Court of Probate an objection to granting this motion: "I am not aware of any instance in which this Court or the Ecclesiastical Courts have recognised a bargain or agreement made by an executor to renounce probate ..... I should have a difficulty in enforcing an agreement to renounce probate. I do not want to make a rule of this Court binding executors to renounce probate." So counsel at the suggestion of the Judge altered the form of his motion and moved for probate of the will and codicil to be granted to the four executors, and probate was decreed accordingly.

In this case there has been no agreement to renounce probate. There was simply an agreement to refer to arbitration the matter in dispute, and solicitors for both parties before the arbitrator treated the matter in dispute to be the due execution of the will. As I said before, I see no reason why any Court, whether Ecclesiastical or not, should not recognise such an agreement.

Mr. Kirkpatrick quoted the case of Thorburn v. Barnes (2) as authority for his contention that Ghellabhai could not object to the award by replication in the present suit, but that he must, if he wishes to avoid the award, make a separate motion to set it aside. But that case was in 1867. Now, in England, as all equitable defences may be relied on, the conduct or mistake of [248] the arbitrator might probably be pleaded as a defence (Russell on Awards, (7th Ed., page 550). This is, in effect, what Ghellabhai pleads in his replication. Nandubai sets up the award and pleads that it is binding on Ghellabhai, and that thus he is barred from propounding the will in question. Ghellabhai replies that he would be bound by the award if it had been an honest one, but he contends that the intention of the parties really was that Nandubai should receive a sum of money and withdraw all objection to the probate of the will being granted.

Can he, on the facts which I have found, so plead and avoid the award? I think not. Whatever may have been the original intention of the parties when they signed the submission paper, it is impossible to ignore the proceedings before the arbitrator. The parties before him were represented by solicitors who insisted on the question as to the genuineness of the will being tried. The evidence may have been all one way in favour of the will. The arbitrator deposes that it did not satisfy him, and so he found against the genuineness of the will. Unless actual misconduct or mistake can be proved against the arbitrator it is impossible to avoid the award. The finding may have been perverse and in the teeth of the evidence. But, unless there is some direct evidence from which we can deduce actual misconduct on the part of the arbitrator, we should, by holding the award to be not binding on the parties, be really reviewing in appeal the decision of the judge whom the parties themselves have chosen, and the risks attending whose judgment they have taken on themselves.

Mr. Inverarity relied on the fact that the arbitrator was positive when giving his deposition that he had examined Nandubai as a witness in the presence of the solicitors of both the sides. When Mr. Inverarity called for the arbitrator's notes of evidence, and Kalidas brought them, I thought it right that Kalidas should have the opportunity of looking at them and correcting his statement if necessary. He did so. I cannot from this fact assume that Kalidas did really examine Nandubai behind the backs of the parties and that in this respect he was guilty of misconduct.

[249] Let us suppose that the arbitrator had really decided what apparently Ghellabhai, Tribhowan and Jivraj thought he was going to decide viz., how much money should be paid to Nandubai. I doubt whether an award to that effect would have been a lawful award. For the main question in dispute between the parties as raised by Ghellabhai's petition for probate and by Nandubai's caveat was the due execution of Godawaribai's will. If the parties secretly agreed that the genuineness of the will should not really be contested, but that an arbitrator should be appointed so as to give colour to the arrangement by which Nandubai was to receive a sum of money, I doubt whether the Court could recognise such an arrangement (see Maule v. Maule (1) and Russell on Awards, 7th Ed., p. 517). Here—holding, as I do, that Ghellabhai was under the impression, when he signed the submission paper, that the result of the arbitration would be simply the payment of a sum of money to Nandubai—had the case rested at this point I might well have decided that Ghellabhai was entitled to avoid the submission paper. But his solicitor brought the matter before the arbitrator as one resting solely on the genuineness of the will. It is impossible to suppose that Tribhowan and Jivraj were ignorant of what was going on before the arbitrator. Mr. Inverarity argued that the question of the genuineness of the will was pertinent to the real question as to how much money should be given to Nandubai. If so, then it was open to the arbitrator to find that the will was not genuine, and, therefore, nothing should be given to her. Whatever may have been the object of the parties in not telling their solicitors of the negotiations which resulted in the submission to the arbitration, the Court must, I think, be guided by the fact of what took place before the arbitrator. There may be some ground for suspecting that official of corruption. But mere suspicion is not enough. The parties, knowing the risk they ran, chose their tribunal, and they must abide by the result.

I find on the issues :—

2. In the affirmative.

3. Plaintiff is entitled to no relief. Suit dismissed with costs.

[250] I ought to add (at the request of Mr. Kirkpatrick) that counsel for defendant objected to plaintiff's adducing any evidence with a view to explain or contradict the written submission paper or award (s. 92, Evidence Act). In the view which I have taken of the case it is unnecessary for me to make any remarks on this point.

SHRI DHARNIDHAR (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. CHINTO (Original Defendant), *Respondent. [24th January, 1895.]

Hindu law—Adoption—Adoption by a daughter-in-law—Adoption divesting an estate which had already vested in another person—Consent of such person to adoption.*

One Shri Dharnidhar, a separated Hindu, died in 1852 childless, leaving three widows and a daughter-in-law Venubai, the widow of a predeceased son Chintaman. Dharnidhar's estate was taken, on his death, by his widows and ultimately became vested in Laxumibai, the survivor of them. In 1871, while she was in possession, Venubai adopted the plaintiff. In 1874 a decision was passed against Laxumibai, in execution of which a large portion of her deceased husband's property passed into the possession of one Chinto. In 1886 the plaintiff filed this suit against Chinto, claiming, as the adopted son of Venubai, to be entitled to all the estate of his adoptive grandfather Shri Dharnidhar (Venubai's father-in-law).

Held, that he could not recover. His adoption by Venubai, which could only be to her husband Chintaman, could not divest Laxumibai of the estate which had come to her as heir of her husband Shri Dharnidhar.

On Dharnidhar's death the estate had vested in his widows with remainder to his collateral heirs, and even if Laxumibai had assented to the subsequent adoption of the plaintiff by Venubai, his claim would not stand against the rights of Dharnidhar's collaterals who would succeed on Laxumibai's death.

From the moment that Dharnidhar died, and his estate vested in his widows, the right of his daughter-in-law Venubai to adopt for the purposes of representation was at an end.

* Appeal No. 9 of 1890.

JAN. 24.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

20 B. 250.

[251] APPEAL from the decision of L. G. Fernandez, First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona.

Shri Moraya Gosavi was the founder of a religious and charitable institution called the "Chinchvad Savasthan," which was afterwards managed by his descendants in the male line.

In 1852, Shri Dharnidhar, the then manager, died leaving surviving him three childless widows, viz., Bayabai, Bahinabai and Laxumibai, and the widow (Venubai) of a predeceased son named Chintaman.

On his death disputes arose as to the right to the management of the savasthan. The claimants were (1) Ganesh, who alleged himself to be the adopted son of Shri Dharnidhar, and (2) Bajaji, who was Shri Dharnidhar's nearst kinsman and reversionary heir.

In 1863 Bajaji filed a suit to recover possession of the savasthan property from Laxumibai, the survivor of the three widows. Pending the suit he died, and his son and heir Chinto continued the suit and ultimately succeeded in obtaining a decree in his favour. In accordance with this decree, Chinto took possession of the savasthan property in August, 1874.

In the meantime, however, Venubai, the daughter-in-law of Shri Dharnidhar, adopted the plaintiff, who was the second son of Chinto. This adoption took place in December, 1871, when Laxumibai was still in possession of the estate and before Chinto had taken possession.

In 1883 a suit was filed with the consent of the Advocate-General under s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882)—known as the "Charity Suit"—for the removal of Chinto and his eldest son Appaji from the management of the savasthan.

In 1886, while the Charity Suit was pending, the plaintiff filed the present suit against his father Chinto to recover possession of the savasthan property as well as the private estate of Shri Dharnidhar, alleging that, as the adopted son of Venubai, he was entitled to succeed to Shri Dharnidhar's property.

[252] In 1888 the "Charity Suit" was finally decided on appeal by the High Court, which ordered the removal of Chinto and his eldest son Appaji from the management of the savasthan, and the appointment of new trustees in their place (1).

Shortly after this decision of the High Court Chinto died, and the plaintiff continued this suit for possession of the savasthan property against the new trustees appointed by the Court.

Both Laxumibai and Venubai died pending this suit.

The Court of first instance rejected the plaintiff's claim, holding that his adoption could not divest the estate which had already vested in Laxumibai, the surviving widow of Shri Dharnidhar.

Against this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Shamrao Vithal, with him P. P. Khare, for appellant (plaintiff).—The plaintiff was adopted by Venubai with the consent of her mother-in-law Laxumibai, who attested the adoption-deed. At the time of the adoption Shri Dharnidhar's estate was fully represented by Laxumibai.

(1) 15 B. 612.

She was, therefore, competent to authorize her daughter-in-law Venubai to adopt the plaintiff. She could have herself adopted a son to her deceased husband Shri Dharnidhar and thereby divested herself of the estate in favour of the son so adopted. She could, therefore, authorize her daughter-in-law to adopt the plaintiff. Her consent renders the adoption valid. Even without such consent, the adoption by the daughter-in-law would not be wholly invalid. Adoption is essentially a religious act, and it is valid for all spiritual purposes, such as performing her husband's shrad, &c. And as a matter of fact, ever since his adoption the plaintiff has been performing all the religious duties which devolve on the spiritual head of the Chinchwad Savasthan. He has acted as the chief ministrant at the shrine of Shri Mangal-Murti from 1871 to 1890. Laxumibai and other members of the family have recognized his status as the legally adopted son of Venubai. It is now too late to dispute his adoption. Laxumibai died shortly after the institution of the suit. On her death Shri Dharnidhar's estate passed to her daughter-in-law Venubai—Vithaldas v. Jeshubai (1). Venubai, too, has recently died. The plaintiff as her adopted son is now the only person who can [253] inherit Dharnidhar's property, being now nearer in descent than any other of his kinsmen deceased. Lastly, there is evidence to show that it was the intention of Dharnidhar that his daughter-in-law Venubai should adopt, and that he had given his permission to her to make an adoption. Adoption by her made with the previous consent and authority of her father-in-law is valid: see West and Bühler (3rd Ed.), 987.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for the respondent (trustees).—It is not proved that Laxumibai gave her consent to the plaintiff's adoption, or that she attested the adoption-deed. Even if she attested the deed, her mere attestation would not necessarily imply her concurrence in the act of adoption—Rajlukhee Debia v. Gokool Chunder (2). In the absence of such consent, the adoption is invalid. It is settled law that an adoption which has the effect of divesting an estate already vested in a third person is invalid unless such third person has given his assent to the adoption —Rupchand v. Rakhmabai (3); Keshav Ram Krishna v. Govind Ganesh (4); Chandra v. Gojrabai (5); Dhoromoyee v. Shama Churn (6). Plaintiff's adoption by Venubai cannot, therefore, divest the estate which was already vested in Laxumibai. It is urged that Laxumibai is now dead, and that upon her death, at all events, plaintiff is entitled to succeed to Dharnidhar's estate. But plaintiff's adoption was void ab initio. It cannot become valid after Laxumibai's death. If it was invalid before, it is invalid after her death. It cannot affect the right of reversionary heirs who come in on the widow's death.

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—This is one of the numerous suits which have been filed in the litigation connected with the Chinchwad Savasthan: see Chintaman v. Dhondo (7); Shri Ganesh v. Keshavrav (8); Shri Dhundiraj v. Ganesh (9).

Taking the "tree" given by the District Judge in the appendix to his judgment in what is known as the "Charity Suit" (7), the position of the parties may be thus shown:—

On the death, in 1852, of Dharnidhar II, the last representative of the eldest branch of the founder's family, disputes arose regarding the right to manage the savasthan and to succeed to the whole estate. One Ganesh claimed to have been adopted by Dharnidhar II; but Bajaji, and after Bajaji his son Chinto, the nearest collaterals, succeeded in establishing their title, and in 1874 obtained possession of the whole, or nearly the whole, of the estate.

In 1871 Ganesh had sued Chinto and Venubai, the widow of Dharnidhar's son Chintaman, who had predeceased his father, for a declaration of his title as adopted son of Dharnidhar. He succeeded in obtaining a decree in his favour from the Subordinate Judge; but on Chinto appealing to the District Court, Ganesh was persuaded to withdraw his suit without obtaining leave to bring a fresh one; and up to the present time he has never succeeded in removing this bar. In 1881, while he was endeavouring by other proceedings to establish his title against Chinto, he and Chinto came to terms, and made [255] an amicable settlement, by which Ganesh was put in possession of part of the savasthan property, Chinto remaining as the recognised trustee and manager.

To return to Dharnidhar's death in 1852—at first the widow Laxumibai after the death of her co-widows succeeded in retaining possession of the whole estate for several years; and the way in which Chinto obtained possession from her was this. In 1863 Chinto's father Bajaji sued her to recover the estate. This suit, after several decisions and remands, eventually became suit No. 12 of 1873 in the Court of the Agent for Sardars, and was decided by the Agent on 31st July, 1874, in favour of Chinto and against Laxumibai, on the ground that as she claimed to hold the estate for the adopted son Ganesh, but Ganesh had on 20th July, 1874, withdrawn his suit to establish his title as Dharnidhar's adopted son, it followed that Laxumibai's title also failed. Accordingly in 1874 Chinto obtained possession of all the estate.

But while the litigation had been proceeding, and before Chinto had prevailed on Ganesh to withdraw his suit for a declaration of title as adopted son, Chinto had prepared a second string to his bow, and in December, 1871, he had given his second son in adoption to Venubai, the widow of Chintaman, who had predeceased his father Dharnidhar II. The factum of that adoption was not seriously contested before us at the hearing of the present appeal; and as between the present parties it may be taken as proved. At the time of that adoption (December, 1871) Laxumibai was in possession of all the savasthan property. At that time there was no distinction recognised between the religious and the private estate. That distinction was first brought out in the "Charity Suit." That suit (No. 2 of 1883) was filed in 1883 under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) with the sanction of the Advocate-General by certain kinsmen of the Dev family against Chinto and his son Appaji to have them removed from their position as managers and trustees of the savasthan. A preliminary issue, decided by the District Judge on 2nd January, 1886, in the affirmative, was whether the property in suit constituted a public [256] charitable or religious trust within the meaning of s. 539, and whether plaintiffs had any direct interest therein. That issue having been decided in the affirmative against Chinto and his son Appaji, Chinto's second son at once brought the present suit against his natural father Chinto and against the kinsmen, who were plaintiffs in the Charity Suit, to recover the whole savasthan estate on the ground that, having been adopted by Venubai, he, as grandson of Dharnidhar, was entitled to succeed to Dharnidhar's property.

By consent the hearing of the present suit was postponed till the final decision in the Charity Suit. The decision of the High Court in that case was given in 1888; Chinto and his eldest son were removed from the management, and the case was sent to the District Judge to take accounts and to frame a scheme for the future management of the devasthan. That scheme has been framed; and the present trustees of the savasthan have now been brought on the record of the present case as respondent-defendants with Chinto's eldest son Appaji, Chinto having died subsequently to the filing of the suit. But the present plaintiff does not now seek to recover the whole of the savasthan property, religious and private. In the "Charity Suit" the High Court reserved to Chinto and Appaji the right, in execution of the decree in that suit, to show that certain of the lands mentioned in the plaint in that suit as belonging to the savasthan were not included in the property appropriated to the savasthan by the Peshwa's award or in subsequent grants. In short, it permitted Chinto and Appaji to remain in possession of Dharnidhar's private estate; and it is in regard to this only that the present plaintiff now urges his claim.

But it is clear that in 1871, when the present plaintiff was adopted by Venubai, Laxumibai was in possession of the private estate of her husband Dharnidhar. It is true that in the suit brought against her by Chinto she rested her right to retain possession on the ground that Ganesh had been adopted by Dharnidhar. That ground, which would be fatal to the present plaintiff as Venubai's adopted son, failed in the litigation in 1874; and it has failed in the present case; for we sent back the case for a finding on the issue—"Was Ganesh adopted by [257] Dharnidhar?"—and the kinsmen of the Dev family and the trustees of the savasthan and Chinto's son Appaji who are the defendants on the record apparently do not care to attempt to defeat Venubai's son by asserting that Ganesh is Dharnidhar's legally adopted son. The finding on the issue was, therefore, returned in the negative. So far, then, as regards the alleged adoption of Ganesh there is no obstacle to plaintiff's claim.

But though Laxumibai, being a female, and thus unable in her own right to be manager and trustee of the savasthan, resisted Chinto's claims between 1863 and 1874, on the ground that she was acting for the adopted son Ganesh, it does not follow that, failing the adopted son, she would not have claimed in her own right to hold the private estate of her husband Dharnidhar, had the distinction between the religious and private estate been then clearly recognised. It is clear that, as regards the private property, Dharnidhar died separated from his kinsmen, and on his death, no son of his loins having survived him, and no adoption by him being proved or by his widows being asserted, the private property of Dharnidhar at once became vested in Dharnidhar's three childless widows with remainder to his kinsmen. Two of the widows died many years ago, without having made any adoption. The whole of the private estate was, therefore, vested in Laxumibai alone in 1871. No adoption by Venubai (which must have been to Venubai's husband Chintaman) could possibly divest Laxumibai of the estate, which had come to her by inheritance from the last owner Dharnidhar. It is unnecessary to quote at length the authorities for this proposition which is now well established. They are all set out by Mr. Mayne in his work on Hindu Law and Usage. We entirely agree with the conclusion at which he arrives (3rd Ed., s. 179, p. 210) that, except under certain circumstances, which have not arisen in the present case, an adoption made to one person will not divest the estate of any one who has taken that estate as heir of another person. Here the adoption made by Venubai to Chintaman will not divest the estate of Laxumibai who took that estate as heir of Dharnidhar. The same principle is to be found in the judgment of this Court in Chandra v. Gojarabai (1), in which it was laid [258] down that adoption by a widow, even under her husband's authority, does not divest the estate of one on whom the inheritance has devolved from a lineal heir of the husband. Here Venubai, even if she had the authority of her husband to adopt (which admittedly she had not), could not divest the estate of Laxumibai which came to her as heir of Dharnidhar. If Venubai had adopted with Dharnidhar's consent before his death in 1852, then the adopted son would have been Dharnidhar's heir. But whatever Dharnidhar may have intended, the plaintiff's case is that Dharnidhar died without anything being carried out. The adoption by Venubai nineteen years after Dharnidhar's death could not divest Dharnidhar's widows of the estate which then became vested in them with remainder to Dharnidhar's collaterals. Strictly speaking (to adopt the language of the judgment of this Court in Chandra v. Gojarabai (quoted above, see p. 471), according to the view taken by our Courts, there was at Dharnidhar's death no undivided family remaining into which an adopted son could be admitted by virtue of his adoption. Therefore, even if Laxumibai assented to the adoption of plaintiff by Venubai, the plaintiff's claim would not stand against the rights of Dharnidhar's collaterals who come in now that Laxumibai has died. (She died in 1886 and Venubai died in 1891 or 1892). It is not, even the question whether Laxumibai could have divested herself of the estate by adopting a son; for she is not the person who has made any adoption; and though she may have assented to Venubai taking a son in adoption for spiritual purposes, and agreed to recognise him as the principal ministrant at the Chinchwad shrine, whether as Venubai's adopted son, or as the son of Chinto, who established his title as trustee, it is clear that these facts could not validate for the purposes of inheritance an adoption which as regards the right to property was ab initio invalid. But we may remark that we agree with the Subordinate Judge that it is not proved that Laxumibai did assent to the adoption. Her "mark" on the deed of adoption, which was not exhibited as it was not registered, and the document, Ex. 156, said to have been executed by her "mark" on the same day, which latter document was not produced till a very late stage of the case, are quite insufficient to establish the assent, which would [259] show that she recognised plaintiff as the heir succeeding to Dharnidhar's estate.

It was ingeniously contended that as Laxumibai died in 1886 and Venubai in 1891 or 1892, the plaintiff, who was actually adopted in 1871, has now no obstacles in his way, and being nearer in decent to Dharnidar than Appaji or the other kinsmen, is now entitled to succeed. But the contention is bad. Supposing that the assumptions on which it is founded are good, still the plaintiff must fail. Either his adoption in 1871 was good or it was bad. If good, he succeeded at once to his grandfather's estate: if bad, he cannot now succeed any more than he could have succeeded before. There is no suspension of the right to adopt (see remarks of this Court in Krishnarav v. Shankarrav (1)). From the moment that Dharnidhar died, and his estate was vested in his widows, the right of his daughter-in-law Venubai to adopt, for the purposes of inheritance, was at an end. (See judgment of West, J., in Keshav v. Govind (2)). In whatever way the case is regarded, the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed, and we must, therefore, confirm the decree of the Subordinate Judge with costs.

Decree confirmed.

A landlord who has let out his land to tenants cannot, on the tenants being dispossessed, bring a possessory suit in the Mamlatdar's Court under the provisions of the Mamlatdars' Act (Bombay Act III of 1886). [261] APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court, s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) against the decision of Rao Saheb Bapurav Janardhan Shrotri, Mamlatdar of Koregaum in the Satara District.

This was a possessory suit brought by the opponent (plaintiff) Narsingrao against the applicants (defendants) under the Mamlatdars' Act (Bombay Act III of 1876). He alleged that he had let the land in dispute to his tenants under a rent-note executed by them to him for ten years; that the defendants took wrongful possession of the same from his tenants; that as it was inconvenient for the tenants to file the suit he himself filed it, and that the tenants were cited as witnesses on his behalf.

The following is the translation of a portion of the rent-note:—

"This land we took in our possession about fifteen days ago agreeing to cultivate it for ten years from this year. So we shall till the land and take all the crop in it. We shall pay you rupees forty-five in cash by two Government instalments (that is, at the time when the instalments of assessment are paid to Government without remission. We shall take your receipt. We shall keep in repairs the boundaries and the boundary marks. You shall pay the judi and the local fund for the land.

"* There are two mango trees and three babul trees on the land. We shall take care of them. If the mango trees bear fruit, we shall take one-third part of them and give a two-thirds part. We will not cut any tree, &c. We shall thus cultivate the land for ten years and in the eleventh year we shall restore it to you."

The Mamlatdar found that the land was in the plaintiff's possession and that the defendants wrongfully obtained possession within six months before the institution of the suit. He, therefore, passed a decree for possession in plaintiff's favour.

The defendants applied under the extraordinary jurisdiction on the grounds (inter alia) that the Mamlatdar had no jurisdiction to entertain dispossessed or deprived thereof otherwise than by due course of law, or who shall have become entitled to the possession or restoration thereof by reason of the determination of any tenancy, or other rights of any other person in respect thereof.

The said Court shall also have power within the said limits, when any person is disturbed or obstructed, or when an attempt has been made to disturb or obstruct any person, in the possession of any lands, premises, crops, trees or fisheries, or in the use of water from any well, tank, canal or water-course, or of the use of roads or customary ways to fields, to issue an injunction to the person causing, or who has attempted to cause, such disturbance or obstruction, requiring him to refrain from causing or attempting to cause any such further disturbance or obstruction.

But no suit shall be entertained by a Mamlatdar's Court unless it be brought within six months from the date on which the cause of action arose.

* * * * *

15. On the day appointed the Mamlatdar shall proceed to hear all the evidence that is then and there before him, and to try the following issues, viz.:—

(a) If the plaintiff avers that he has been unlawfully dispossessed of any property or deprived of any use:—

(1) Whether the plaintiff or any person on his behalf or through whom he claims was in possession or enjoyment of the property or use claimed up to any time within six months before the suit was filed.

[261] (2) Whether the defendant is in possession at the time of the suit, and if so whether he obtained possession otherwise than by due course of law.

* * * * *

18. The party to whom the Mamlatdar shall give immediate possession, or restore a use, or in whose favour an injunction has been granted, shall continue in possession or use until ousted by a decree or order of a Civil Court.

the suit, and that the plaint itself having disclosed that [262] persons other than the plaintiff were in actual possession the suit ought to have been dismissed. A rule nisi was issued calling on the plaintiff to show cause why the decision of the Mamlatdars should not be set aside.

Macpherson (with Gangaram B. Rele), appeared for the opponent (plaintiff) to show cause.

Lang (Advocate-General) with Balaji Abaji Bagavat, appeared for the applicants (defendants) to support the rule.

The Court (Sargent, C. J., and Fulton, J.) referred to a Full Bench the point as to the Mamlatdar's jurisdiction to entertain the suit at the instance of the plaintiff who was not in possession. The case now came on for argument before Sargent, C. J., Farran and Fulton, JJ.

Macpherson.—We submit that the Mamlatdar had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and that his decision is correct. When a tenant is dispossessed it is virtually the landlord who is dispossessed, because a tenant derives possession through his landlord. The first paragraph of s. 4 of the Mamlatdars' Act is that in the case of a possessory suit the plaintiff need not be in actual possession at the time of dispossession, the language used being "give immediate possession of lands, premises, trees, crops, fisheries, or of any profits of the same." Rent is profit of the land; and even supposing that rent is not profit, still under our rent-note we are to get the fruits of the mango trees standing on the land. We are thus entitled to the profits of the land, and that being so, our suit was clearly within the Mamlatdar's cognizance.

[FARRAN, J.—The first paragraph of s. 4 empowers the person who is entitled to immediate possession to bring the suit. You are not entitled to possession, because under the terms of the rent-note the tenants are to remain in possession for ten years.]

Our connection with the land is not wholly severed because under the rent note we are entitled to the profits of the land in the shape of mango fruits. It is our interest to see that the tenants continue in possession of the lands and also give us the produce or profit in addition to the rent. Our contention is further strengthened by the second paragraph of the section. That [263] paragraph relates to suits for injunctions, and therein the words "any profits of the same" are omitted. The omission indicates that in a suit for injunction the plaintiff must be in actual possession—Desai Malabhai v. Keshavbai (1).

Section 15 of the Mamlatdars' Act has laid down certain sets of issues to be raised in cases of possession and in cases of injunction. The issues which relate to suits for possession also contemplate the case of plaintiff who is not in actual possession because the words are "whether the plaintiff or any person on his behalf or through whom he claims."

We contend that possession of the tenant is possession on behalf of the landlord, and that a suit instituted by the landlord for recovery of possession when his tenant is wrongfully ousted can be maintained in the Mamlatdar's Court under the provisions of the Mamlatdars' Act.

Lang (Advocate-General).—A possessory suit in the Mamlatdar's Court at the instance of a person who was not in actual possession at the time of dispossession cannot lie. A mortgagor out of possession cannot bring a suit to recover possession of the property when the mortgagee in possession is ousted by a third party. It has been held that the possession of the mortgagee is not possession on behalf of the mortgagor—Khanderao v. Narsingrao (1). Similarly, possession of tenants cannot be possession on behalf of the landlord within the requirements of the Mamlatdars' Act. A person in possession on behalf of the plaintiff means a person who is in possession with plaintiff's permission such as his servant or agent. The question whether the landlord can bring a suit for possession when his tenant is ousted, has been decided, and it has been held that he cannot—Vohra Uka Dada v. Bai Jivi (2).

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by

SARGENT, C. J.—The Mamlatdar has found that the plaintiff was in possession of the land in dispute by his tenants to whom he alleged he had let it for ten years. The question referred to us is whether such constructive possession is sufficient to give the [264] plaintiff the power to invoke the aid of the Mamlatdar's Court in the event of the tenants being dispossessed.

The issue which the Mamlatdar has to try where the plaintiff avers that he has been dispossessed, is, as provided by s. 15, cl. (a), of the Mamlatdars' Act III of 1876, "whether the plaintiff or any other person on his behalf or through whom he claims was in possession." The real question, therefore, for consideration is, whether the tenants can be said to be in possession on behalf of their landlord. Now, no doubt, the owner is deemed to be constructively in possession through his tenants for certain purposes. But the tenants cannot be properly said to be in possession "on behalf" of their landlord. The expression in its plain and natural meaning refers to actual possession by a servant or agent, such as a steward or bailiff, and that this was the meaning in which it was intended to be used, derives confirmation from s. 4, which shows that the object of creating the Mamlatdar's Court was to give "immediate" possession, and also from the language of s. 18 which implies that the plaintiff, if successful, is to be put into immediate possession which is to continue until the plaintiff is ousted by a decree of the Court. The policy of the Act seems to have been to afford summary relief to the same persons as would have been entitled to sue in ejectment, that is, the persons legally entitled to the actual possession. We must, therefore, hold contrary to what would appear to have been held in civil application No. 81 of 1892 (3), that the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue in the Mamlatdar's Court.

(3) Civil Application (under the extraordinary jurisdiction) No. 81 of 1892 :—

This was an application under the extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the decision of Rao Saheb Janardan Eknath, Mamlatdar of Niphad in the Nasik District.

Plaintiff Gopala Mahadu Sali brought a possessory suit in the Mamlatdar's Court under the Mamlatdars' Act (Bombay Act III of 1876) against one Bhimaji Jayaji Patil and three others. In order to prove that he was in possession of the lands in dispute the plaintiff produced three rent-notes, Exs. A, B, C, passed to him by the tenants to whose possession obstruction was caused by the defendants. The Mamlatdar found that the possession of the tenants was the possession of the landlord (plaintiff). and that obstruction to the tenant's possession was obstruction to the landlord's possession. He, therefore, allowed the claim.

[265] We must, therefore, make absolute the rule nisi, reverse the decree of the Mamlatdar, and dismiss the plaintiff's suit, with costs on plaintiff throughout.

Rule made absolute. Decree reversed.

In a suit for an account of partnership dealings, the plaintiffs valued the claim approximately at Rs. 600. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree awarding to the plaintiffs a sum of Rs. 30,830-9-2. The plaintiffs thereupon paid an additional Court fee of Rs. 900 under s. 11 of the Court Fees' Act (VII of 1870). The defendants appealed to the High Court from the decree of the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiffs objected that the appeal lay to the District Judge, and not to the High Court.

Held, that the value of the subject-matter of the suit exceeded Rs. 5,000; the appeal, therefore, lay to the High Court under s. 26 of Act XIV of 1869.

APPEAL from the decision of Rao Bahadur Chunilal Maneklal, First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona, in suit No. 237 and 1888.

The plaintiffs sued for an account of partnership transactions from 1886 till the date of its dissolution on 13th December, 1887, and to recover what might be found due to them as their share of the profits.

[266] The plaintiffs valued their claim at Rs. 600, alleging that it was impossible for them to state the exact amount of their share of the profits before the accounts were taken, and undertaking to pay additional Court fees if more were found due to them.

The suit was filed in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree awarding to the plaintiffs a sum of Rs. 30,830-9-2.

The plaintiffs thereupon paid an additional Court fee of Rs. 900 under s. 11 of the Court Fees' Act (VII of 1870).

The defendants then appealed to the High Court from the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

[265] The defendant preferred an application under the extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule nisi requiring the plaintiff to show cause why the order of the Mamlatdar should not be set aside on the ground (inter alia) that the Mamlatdar had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, as the plaintiff was not in actual possession of the lands within six months before the institution of the suit.

Vasudeo G. Bhandarkar appeared for the opponent (plaintiff) to show cause.

Nagindas T. Marphatia appeared for the applicant (defendant) in support of the rule.

The Court (Parsons and Telang, JJ.) passed an order discharging the rule with costs. 13th September 1892.

JAN. 28.

APPELLATE CIVIL.
——
20 B. 265.

The respondents (plaintiffs) took a preliminary objection to the appeal, contending that the appeal lay to the District Court and not to the High Court.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for the respondents (plaintiffs).—The appeal in this case lies to the District Court, and not to the High Court—Act XIV of 1869, s. 26. This is a suit for an account. The claim was valued at Rs. 600 for purposes of Court-fees. That valuation must, therefore, be taken to be the valuation of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction also. Section 8 of Act VII of 1887 applies to this case; under that section the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction is the same as the valuation for purposes of Court fees; see Kushalchand v. Nagindas (1); Bhagvantrai v. Mehta Bajurao (2); Gulabsingji v. Lakshmansingji (3); Bai Varunda v. Bai Manegavri (4).

P. P. Khare, for appellants.—The suit was no doubt valued in the Court below at Rs. 600. But that was merely a nominal valuation of the subject-matter of the suit. The real valuation was Rs. 30,830-9 2, which was the sum ultimately found due to the plaintiffs, and upon which they have paid additional Court fees under s. 11 of Act VII of 1870. That being so, the value of the subject-matter of the suit is more than Rs. 5,000, and the appeal lies to this Court.

JUDGMENT.

[267] JARDINE, J.—The plaintiffs sued for an account in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the First Class. Under the Court Fees' Act, VII of 1870, s. 7 (iv), cl. (f), they valued the relief sought at Rs. 600. This valuation is subject to the provision of s. 11—Govindas v. Dayabhai (5) —Which section distinguishes the "fee actually paid" on the plaint and "the fee which would have been payable had the suits comprised the whole of the profits or amount" decreed. The decree obtained by the plaintiffs was for Rs. 30,830 9-2, and they have paid the additional fees under s. 11 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. On the defendants appealing to this Court, objection is taken that s. 26 of Act XIV of 1869 does not apply, and that the appeal lies to the District Court.

This objection is urged in the following argument. The case comes under the Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 8, being one to which these words apply; "where in suits * * Court fees are payable ad valorem under the Court Fees' Act, 1870, the value as determinable for the computation of Court fees and the value for purposes of jurisdiction shall be the same." The valuation, however, insufficient, stated by the plaintiffs at their option on the plaint governs the valuation of the defendants' appeal, s. 11 of the Court Fees' Act being ignored. By parity of reasoning the optional valuation of the plaint, no matter what greater amount may be awarded them by the decree, determines the forum of the appeal by the defendants, because that optional and preliminary valuation must be treated as the only value of the subject-matter in interpreting the words of s. 26 of Act XIV of 1869, which gives an appeal to the High Court "in all suits * * of which the amount or value of the subject-matter exceeds Rs. 5,000." The cases of Khushalchand v. Nagindas (1), Bhagvantrai v. Mehta Bajurao (2), Gulabsingji v. Lakshmansingji (3), where the Subordinate Judge had dismissed the suit, and Bai Varunda v. Bai Manegavri (4), where he rejected the plaint, were cited in support of the above propositions.

[268] We are of opinion that those authorities do not touch the present case, where the plaintiffs have been successful. The argument that the first optional and uncertain valuation is to determine the Court fee in appeal, and thereby the jurisdiction of appeal, is not supported by any authority. Section 7 (iv), cl. (f), of the Court Fees' Act refers to the relief sought in the memorandum of appeal as well as to that sought in the plaint, while s. 8 of the Suits Valuation Act deals only with suits. The word "determinable" in s. 8 of the Suits Valuation Act applies as much to the final and exact and judicial determination made under s. 11 of the Court Fees' Act as it does to the inexact and ex parte valuation in the plaint. "What prima facie determines the jurisdiction is the claim, or subject-matter of the claim, as estimated by the plaintiff"—Lakshman v. Babaji (1). But on principle as there explained this determination prima facie may, if unreasonable, be rejected. If, e.g., the present plaintiffs had been awarded Rs. 6,000, and then appealed on the ground that Rs. 30,000 were due to them, it would be unreasonable of them to value the relief sought in the memorandum of appeal as only Rs. 600, the valuation in the plaint.

The jurisdiction of appeal is determined by Act XIV of 1869, and depends on the amount or value of the subject-matter, which last term is treated in the above decision as meaning the amount demanded: which, as we have seen, is, even in a suit, not necessarily commensurate with the amount of Court-fees paid on the plaint. What the plaintiffs in this account-suit demanded was the amount that might be found due to them; and so long as they claim the Rs. 30,830-9-2 decreed to them, they cannot be allowed to say that the subject-matter is only Rs. 600 in value. The relief now sought by the defendants in their memorandum of appeal is more in value than Rs. 5,000. The Court of appeal is not bound by the decision of the Court below as to the stamp on the plaint—Motigavri v. Pranjivandas (2), and under any view of the circumstances, the judicial valuation for Court-fee purposes under s. 11 of the Court Fees' Act is the best valuation of the subject-matter of the suit. The Court, therefore, holds that this appeal lies here.

[269] RANADE, J.—I concur. The preliminary objection raised by the respondents' pleader as to the jurisdiction of this Court to entertain the appeal appears to me not to be supported by the record of the case. The plaint in this case stated that as the exact sum due to the plaintiffs on account of their share of the profits could not be ascertained until the accounts were properly taken, plaintiffs valued the relief claimed by them at a nominal figure of Rs. 600, and they offered to pay additional Court-fees on whatever sum might be found due. The Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge alone had jurisdiction in the matter of this suit, whether the claim was valued at Rs. 600, or whether it was valued at a higher figure than Rs. 5,000. There was, therefore, no occasion to value the claim at any particular figure for purposes of jurisdiction. A nominal valuation was made of the subject-matter, and plaintiffs expressly undertook to supply the deficient stamp duty. Plaintiffs evidently claimed a far larger sum than Rs. 5,000, for it appears that for the first two years for which accounts were made, they had received Rs. 17,000 as their share of the profits. As a matter of fact, the Subordinate Judge found that plaintiffs were entitled to recover more than Rs. 30,000 for their share of the profits for the two years covered by the suit. The judgment was pronounced on 22nd December, 1892, about the time that the Court was to close for the Christmas holidays. When the Court opened again, plaintiffs paid up on 3rd January, 1893, the deficient Court-fees, and the decree taxed plaintiffs' costs including the additional Court-fee of Rs. 900 paid on 3rd January, 1893. A further supplemental order about costs was made on 23rd January, 1893.

It is plain from these details that the suit was treated all along by the parties and the Court as a suit the subject-matter of which exceeded Rs. 5,000 in value, and an appeal from a decree awarding Rs. 30,830 in such a suit obviously lay to the High Court under s. 26 of Act XIV of 1869. The authorities relied upon by the respondents' pleader in support of his contention have, therefore, no application in the particular circumstances of the present case. It is only in certain classes of suits, and even in those cases where Court-fees are charged ad valorem, [270] that the valuation for the computation of Court-fees is the sāme as the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction. This rule does not apply to account suits such as the present, where the subject-matter of the claim admittedly exceeded Rs. 5,000 in value.

The appeal in such cases lies to this Court, and not to the District Court.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

KRISHNACHARYA (Original Defendant No. 2), Appellant v. LINGAWA (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent.

Possession—Ejectment—Title by possession—Mamlatdar—Finding by Mamlatdar as to possession—Subsequent contrary finding by civil Court—Mamlatdar's order not conclusive—Suit by party against whom Mamlatdar's order made—Limitation.

The plaintiff brought this suit to recover possession of certain land which had belonged to her nephew, and of which after his death in 1878 she had assumed the management. In 1881 she brought a possessory suit against the first defendant in the Mamlatdar's Court, which suit was dismissed in January, 1885, the Mamlatdar holding that she had not been in possession. In a civil suit, however, which (pending the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court) she had filed against the first defendant in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Haveri, the Judge found that she had been in possession since 1880, and awarded her damages against the first defendant (who was held to be her farm servant) for crops which had been taken away by him. In 1887 the second defendant as mortgagee from defendant No. 1 obtained a decree against plaintiff in the Mamlatdar's Court awarding him possession of the land, and in execution of that decree the plaintiff was dispossessed in December, 1887.

In 1890 the plaintiff filed this suit to recover possession and for mesne profits since 1887. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff had no title to the land and that the suit was barred by limitation, inasmuch as the plaintiff had not brought a suit to establish her right within three years after the Mamlatdar's order in 1885 dismissing her possessory suit.

Held, that the Mamlatdar's order of January, 1885, had no conclusive effect and was rendered ineffectual by the subsequent decree of the civil Court; and as the plaintiff continued in possession, notwithstanding that order, down to 1887, the present suit was not barred by limitation, and neither her remedy nor her right to the land was extinguished.

* Second Appeal No. 327 of 1893.

[271] Held, also, that the plaintiff's possession prior to 1887, confirmed as it was by the decree of the civil Court in 1885 and by the finding of the lower Court of Appeal in the present case, must prevail against the defendant, who claimed through plaintiff's farm servant only and whose possession commenced with the disturbance which compelled the plaintiff to bring the suit.

Possession is prima facie evidence of title and is primarily exclusive, and it is for him who impugns this exclusive title to show that the possession originated in a way not to affect his own right.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur V. V. Wagle, First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P.

Suit to recover land. Neither the plaintiff nor the defendant could prove any title to the land other than that of possession. The plaintiff's claim arose under the following circumstances:—

The plaintiff was the maternal aunt of one Fakirappa to whom the land originally belonged. He died in 1878 and the plaintiff subsequently assumed the management of his property. The first defendant was her nephew and a cousin of Fakirappa, and the plaintiff filed a possessory suit against him (defendant No. 1) in the Mamlatdar's Court, which suit, however, was dismissed in January, 1885, the Mamlatdar holding that she (the plaintiff) had not been in possession of the property.

In a civil suit, however, (No. 14 of 1885) which (pending the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court) she had filed in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Haveri, it was held that she had been in possession since 1880, and a decree was passed in her favour against the first defendant (who was found to be her farm servant) for the value of certain crops which had been taken away by him.

There was thus the order of the Mamlatdar of January, 1885, holding that the plaintiff had not been in possession, and the later order of the Subordinate Judge holding that she had been in possession

The second defendant had taken a mortgage of the property from the first defendant, and as a mortgagee he obtained a decree in 1887 against the plaintiff in the Mamlatdar's Court awarding him possession of the land and in execution of this decree the plaintiff was dispossessed on the 20th December, 1887.

[272] In 1890 the plaintiff filed this suit against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to recover possession of the land with mesne profits from 1887 to 1890.

The first defendant did not appear. The second defendant pleaded that the plaintiff had no title, and that the suit was barred by limitation.

The Court of first instance dismissed the plaintiff's suit, holding that the plaintiff had no title to the land, and that as she had not brought a regular suit in the civil Court within three years from the date of the Mamlatdar's order of January, 1885, the suit was barred under art. 47, sch. II, of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

This decree was reversed on appeal by the District Judge. He held that the suit was not barred by limitation, and that as the plaintiff was in possession up to 1887, when she was dispossessed under the Mamlatdar's order in the second defendant's suit, she was entitled to eject the defendants, who had no right whatsoever to the land in dispute. He, therefore, awarded the plaintiff's claim.

"The Subordinate Judge has held that this suit is barred by limitation, as the plaintiff failed to bring a regular suit within three years of the Mamlatdar's decree of 1885 against her. But the plaintiff has based the present claim on a new cause of action which accrued in 1887 when she was dispossessed by the defendants under the Mamlatdar's order of 1887 till which she is found to have been in possession. Moreover, it may also be said that the aforesaid decisions in suit No. 14 of 1885, which was instituted during the pendency of the dispute in the Mamlatdar's Court, virtually rendered the Mamlatdar's order ineffectual. I, therefore, hold that the present suit founded upon a cause of action in 1887 is not time-barred by the Mamlatdar's order of 1884. The respondent's vakil objected, in appeal, that the plaintiff ought to have sought for the recovery of possession in suit No. 14, and that she having failed to do so, the present suit must be held to be barred by s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. This objection also must fail for the same reasons."

Against this decision the defendant No. 2 preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Balaji A. Bhagvat, for appellant.—The plaintiff brought a possessory suit in the Mamlatdar's Court in 1884. That suit was dismissed. She did not bring any suit in the civil Court [273] within three years from the date of that order of dismissal. Her present suit is, therefore, barred under s. 21 of the Bombay Mamlatdars' Court's Act (III of 1876). It is also barred under art 47, sch. II, of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). Under these Acts not only is her remedy barred, but her title too became extinct after the lapse of three years from the date of the Mamlatdar's order—Nilo v. Rama (1) ; Bapu v. Baji (2) ; Chinto v. Vishnu (3) ; Annaji v. Daji (4) ; Badri Prasad v. Muhammad Yusuf (5). The lower appellate Court holds that the plaintiff's cause of action accrued in 1887, when she was dispossessed under the second order of the Mamlatdar. But limitation began to run from the date of the first order of the Mamlatdar of 1885. See N Ga Tha Yah v. Buru (6). The first order, not having been set aside within three years, became final and conclusive between the parties, and had the effect of extinguishing the plaintiff's title, if she had any. It is found that she had none, apart from her possession, which was not sufficiently long to give her even a prescriptive title.

Narayan V. Chandavarkar, for respondent (plaintiff).—The present case is distinguishable from the cases cited in this, namely, that shortly after the Mamlatdar's order in the possessory suit of 1884 the plaintiff obtained a decree in the civil Court awarding her damages for the crops taken away by defendant No. 1. This decree was based on the fact that the plaintiff was found to be in possession of the land at the time the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court were instituted. This finding renders the Mamlatdar's order ineffectual. Section 18 of the Mamlatdars' Courts Act (Bombay Act III of 1876) expressly provides that the Mamlatdar's decision on the question of possession is not conclusive ; see also Lillu v. Anaji (7) ; Basapa v. Lakshmapa (8) ; Mudkapa v. Ningapa (9). It is found as a fact by the lower appeal Court that notwithstanding the Mamlatdar's order, plaintiff continued in possession down to 1887, when she [274] was dispossessed by defendant No. 2. It is this dispossession which constitutes our cause of action. And as it accrued within three years before suit, the suit is not time-barred. And neither our remedy nor our

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—The contest in this case turns entirely upon the decision of the question of possession, both parties to the suit having failed to prove any other title.

The land in dispute admittedly belonged to one Fakirappa, who died in 1878, leaving his sister Nandyava as his heir. Nandyava is also dead, but has left a son and a daughter, the last being the wife of the original defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 1, however, did not claim any interest in the land in right of his wife, but he set up an adoption of himself by Fakirappa, which both Courts have held to be not proved. Defendant No. 2, who is appellant before us, claims only under a mortgage-bond from defendant No. 1, executed in 1885. The respondent is maternal aunt of Fakirappa, and as such, she has no claim to succeed as heir of Fakirappa.

Both parties have thus failed to prove any other title save possession, confirmed in the case of defendant No. 1 by a decision of the Mamlatdar, passed in January, 1885, in his favour, and adverse to the respondent, while respondent claims that her possession was confirmed by the decree of a civil Court in her favour in a suit which she brought for the value of the crops raised by her in the land in dispute in 1884, about the same time that she applied, in November, 1884, to the Mamlatdar to remove defendant No. 1's obstruction to the land. The respondent brought no suit in a civil Court to establish her right to recover possession within three years from the date of the Mamlatdar's order of January, 1885, but in the civil suit for damages, her claim was allowed, on the ground that she had possession, and that defendant No. 1 was only her farm servant.

[275] As a matter of fact, the lower Court of appeal has found in this case that the respondent (plaintiff) continued in possession till 1887, in which year she was unsuccessful in a second application to the Mamlatdar to remove the present appellant's obstruction. The present suit was brought by respondent within the time allowed by law from the date of this second order of the Mamlatdar, but the Court of first instance rejected the claim, on the ground that the suit was not brought within three years from the date of the first order of January, 1885. The lower Court of appeal held that the first order of the Mamlatdar was rendered ineffectual by the decision of the civil Court in the suit for damages, and that as respondent was proved to have been in possession down to 1887, she was entitled to succeed as against defendant who had no right whatsoever to the land, and whose possession was obtained solely under the Mamlatdar's order of 1887.

This statement of the respective contentions of the parties raises two questions—(1) How far respondent's failure to bring a suit within three years from the date of the Mamlatdar's order of January, 1885, barred not only her remedy, but destroyed her right, even if she was found never to have as a matter of fact lost possession till 1887;—and (2) how far respondent's possession down to the date of the Mamlatdar's second order would avail to dispense with the proof of any other title as against the present appellant, and defendant No. 1 through whom he claims as mortgagee.

(1) 6 B. 215.

APPELLATE CIVIL.
20 B. 270.

Both these points are not free from difficulties, as the case presents certain peculiar features not found in the authorities cited on both sides. On the one hand, the appellant's pleader Mr. Bhagvat argued that as the respondent failed to bring a suit within three years from the first order of the Mamlatdar, her right, as well as her remedy, became extinct under the combined effect of the provisions of the Mamlatdars' Act and the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). Mr. Bhagvat cited the following authorities in support of his contention:—Nilo v. Rama (1); Badri Prasad v. Muhammad Yusuf (2); Bapu v. Baji (3) and Chinto v. Vishnu (4). The decisions [276] in Nilo v. Rama and Badri Prasad v. Muhammad Yusuf had reference, however, to the provisions of s. 278 of Act XIV of 1882, and are not direct authorities on the point now in issue. The case of Annaji v. Daji(5) was also decided on another ground. It is true that in Bapu v. Baji this Court held that the principles which governed the decision in Nilo v. Rama were equally applicable to orders passed by Mamlatdars in possessory suits under the Revenue Courts' Act of 1838, which on this point is at one with the Mamlatdars' Act of 1876. The same point was more expressly decided in Chinto v. Vishnu, where it was held that a suit not brought within three years from an adverse order of the Mamlatdar was barred under art. 47 of Act XV of 1877. Mr. Bhagvat contended that limitation began to be operative from the date of the first order of January, 1885, and not from the date of the second order of 1887, and cited N Ga Tha Yah v. Buru (6) in support of his contention.

Mr. Chandavarkar for the respondent, however, argued that the present case was distinguishable from those referred to as authorities by the appellant in that, in this case, the respondent was found by the lower appellate Court not to have lost possession till 1887, and there was a civil Court's decree in respondent's favour in the suit for damages brought about the same time that she applied to the Mamlatdar's Court to remove defendant No. 1's obstruction, and in this suit respondent was held to have been in possession in 1884, thereby virtually rendering ineffectual the Mamlatdar's finding on the point of possession in defendant No. 1's favour. Mr. Chandavarkar further argued that the law has expressly provided that a Mamlatdar's order is not conclusive on the point of possession.

In Lillu v. Annaji (7) it was held that a Mamlatdar's order is not conclusive on the point of possession, and that it was open to the party in subsequent proceedings to show that possession was not delivered or lost, notwithstanding the order.

In Basapa v. Lakshmapa(8) and Mudkapa v. Ningapa (9) the reasons are stated why the orders of the Mamlatdar in [277] possessory suits were not intended by the Legislature to have a conclusive effect. The possession which is brought in issue in proceedings before the Mamlatdar is immediate possession, and the party thus dispossessed within six months is to be put in possession till the questions of possession and title are adjudicated upon in a regular suit. The purpose of the Act is temporary, and its procedure summary, and there is no appeal.

(7) 5 B. 387. (8) P. J. (1877), p. 58=1 B. 624 (625).
(9) P. J. (1877), p. 115.

In the present case, there were. as a matter of fact, two almost contemporaneous adjudications, one by a civil Court in the suit for the value of the crops, and the other by the Mamlatdar. Respondent succeeded in the civil Court on the strength of a finding in her favour on the point of her possession of the land, and her failure to remove defendant No. 1's obstruction in the possessory suit before the Mamlatdar was thus remedied by the decree of the civil Court, more especially when she is proved to have not lost possession till 1887. Section 28 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) does not apply to parties who rely on actual possession which has never been disturbed—Hargovandas v. Dajibhai (1) followed in Orr v. Sundra (2). Article 47 only applies to ejectment suits, and there was no occasion to the respondent to bring such a suit if she continued in possession notwithstanding her failure in the possessory suit. On the whole, therefore, we must hold that the Mamlatdar's order of January, 1885, had no conclusive effect, and was rendered ineffectual by the decree of the civil Court, and that as respondent continued in possession notwithstanding that order down to 1887, the present suit was not time-barred, and neither her remedy nor her right was extinguished.

The next question relates to the point as to how far respondent's possession entitles her to succeed in this suit as against defendants.

The leading case on this subject is the Full Bench decision in Pemraj v. Narayan (3), in which it was held that possession was a good title against all persons except the rightful owner, and entitled the claimant to maintain an ejectment suit against any other person than such owner who dispossessed him. In the [278] language of Westropp, C. J., the title of possession is good as against a person who seeks to disturb that possession, and who has not a colour of title to the land in dispute, and never had possession of it. The decision in this case has been followed in many subsequent cases, in which it was held that possession was prima facie evidence of title, and is primarily exclusive, and it is for him who impugns this exclusive title, to show that the possession originated in a way not to affect his own right—Sakalchand v. Sundarlal (4); Vithu v. Bapu (5); Vithoba v. Narayan (6). It is true Melvill, J., doubted the correctness of the Full Bench decision, which was in conflict with his own ruling in Dadabhai v. The Sub-Collector of Broach (7). That case was certainly not noticed in the judgment of the Full Bench, but the Judges who made the reference to the Full Bench noticed another unreported judgment of Sargent and Melvil, JJ., which was on the same lines as the decision in Dadabhai v. The Sub-Collector of Broach (7). The defendants in this case might indeed have pleaded an outstanding title in a third person, and if they had succeeded in doing so, they might have defeated the respondent-plaintiff. They, however, raised no such defence, and they set up a title by adoption, which they failed to prove. This title of a third party was successfully pleaded in the case of Wise v. Ameerunissa (8), to which Mr. Justice Melvill has referred in Trimbak v. Baji (9).

In the present case the respondent is distantly related to the last owner, and she is shown to have been in possession of the land for at least seven years before she lost it in 1887. Defendant No. 1 was held in the civil suit of 1885 to have been her farm servant, and he did not obtain possession of the land. His mortgagee, the present appellant, obtained possession in 1887 under the second order of the Mamlatdar. Under

SECOND appeal from the decision of J. L. Johnstone, District Judge of Dharwar, in appeal No. 273 of 1893.

On the 30th August, 1892, the plaintiff obtained a decree for redemption of certain property on payment of Rs. 703-0-7½ within six months.

The plaintiff did not apply for execution of this decree until after the six months had expired.

This darkhast was rejected by the Subordinate Judge as being made too late.

On appeal, the District Judge confirmed the order of rejection, on the ground that the Court in execution had no power to enlarge the time mentioned in the decree.

The plaintiff thereupon preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Shivram Vithal Bhandarkar, for appellant (plaintiff).—The plaintiff may redeem although the six months have expired under s. 93 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) [280] he has that right until a final order for foreclosure is made. Under the last clause of that section the Court has the power to enlarge the time for redemption for any sufficient reason. The cases of Mahant Ishwargar v. Chudasama Manabhai (1) and Chudasama Manabhai v. Mahant Ishwargar (2) are no longer applicable since the Transfer of Property Act was extended to this Presidency.

B. N. Bhajekar, for respondents.—The decree sought to be executed was passed before Act IV of 1882 was applied to this Presidency. Section 93 of the Act does not, therefore, apply in the present case.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—It is urged that s. 93 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) applies to decrees made before that Act was put in force, and that the procedure in the second clause of that section required the defendant-mortgagee to apply for an order debarring redemption on which, and not till then, the plaintiff would have opportunity to show good cause for extending the period fixed for payment. We are of opinion that as s. 93 relates only to proceedings to which s. 92 relates, the present decree is not governed by the Transfer of Property Act, the words in the first sentence of s. 92—"the Court shall pass a decree ordering"—clearly referring to uturity. We notice also that the effect of this Act does not appear to have been pleaded in the Courts below; nor any intimation given to either of those Courts that there was good cause for extending the time. The decree is confirmed with costs.

RAMCHAMDRA NARAYAN KULKARNI (Original Defendant NO. 2), Applicant v. DRAUPADI KOM NARAYAN (Original Plaintiff), *Opponent.

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879)—Special Judge—Ex parte order—Review—Reasonable exercise of discretion.

The Special Judge under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) has power to review an ex parte order made by him.

[R., 34 C. 677 = 6 C.L.J. 84 = 11 C.W.N. 803; 26 Ind. Cas. 46 = 27 M.L.J. 605.]

THIS was an application under the extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the decision of C. H. Jopp, Special Judge under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879).

The opponent (plaintiff) brought a redemption suit against the applicant Ramchandra Narayan Kulkarni (defendant No.2) and two others in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Madha in the Sholapur District. The Subordinate Judge having dismissed the suit, the opponent-plaintiff applied for revision to the Special Judge under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, who, without issuing notice, reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge and remanded the case for retrial. The applicant, having learnt after the remand that the decree of the Subordinate Judge had been reversed, applied to the Special Judge for a review of his order on the ground that the order was ex parte. The Special Judge accordingly ordered a notice to issue to the opponent (plaintiff) to show cause why the order reversing the Subordinate Judge's decree should not be set aside.

* Application No. 107 of 1894 under the extraordinary jurisdiction.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

20 B. 281.

The application came on for hearing before the Special Judge (C. H. Jopp, who had in the meanwhile succeeded Rao Bahadur Ranade), who rejected it with the following remarks :—

"The decision in Printed Judgments for 1887, p. 116 (1), may perhaps be reconciled [282] with that in Printed Judgments for 1886, p. 11 (2), by supposing that though the Special Judge is not obliged by law to issue notices at all, if he issue notices to one party he is bound to do so to the others. It may be, therefore, that when notices were issued and served on the other parties, a notice should have been served on defendant No. 2. But even if this is granted. I do not see what power I have to act in this matter. No power is given by the Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act to the Special Judge to set aside any order or decree passed ex parte by him. It has frequently been ruled that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code do not apply to the proceedings of the Special Judge. I have, therefore, no power to set aside the decree in this case under s. 108 of the Civil Procedure Code, and I see no reason for holding that the power to set aside a decree passed ex parte against a defendant or opponent is one inherent in every Court of justice."

Against this decision the applicant applied under the extraordinary jurisdiction and obtained a rule nisi calling upon the opponent to show cause why the decision should not be set aside on the ground that the Special Judge erred in holding that he had no jurisdiction to set aside the ex parte decree passed by his predecessor and to restore the case to the file.

[283] Gangaram B. Rele appeared for the applicant in support of the rule.—He relied on Vishvanath v. Aba (3), Badaricharya v. Ramchandra (4) and Ramsing v. Babu Kisansing (7).

Daji Abaji Khare appeared for the opponent to show cause.

(1) Decision in Printed Judgments for 1887, p. 116 :—

The Acting Special Judge issued a notice to the defendants to attend his Court at Sangola on the 18th or 19th February, 1886. This was served on the evening of the 18th, and on the 19th the defendants went 24 miles to attend the Special Judge's Court. The raznama (or journal) says they did attend it; but this is plainly wrong and is contradicted by the judgment. The Court was closed when the defendants arrived on the 19th, and the Acting Special Judge went away the next morning. He ordered the Subordinate Judge to get extracts from the first defendant's books. These were sent, but no new notice was sent to the defendants. The plaintiffs were heard on the review, but the defendants were not. It cannot, we think, be said that they failed to attend the Court through any neglect, and the Acting Special Judge ought to have given them a hearing before he, on the 31st March, 1886, reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge in their favour, a decision with which his own Assistant agreed. Justice required that, when the plaintiffs were heard against the judgment of the Subordinate Judge approved by the Assistant Special Judge, the defendants should be heard in support of it, unless there was a default of attendance on their part. We, therefore, set aside the decree of the Acting Special Judge and direct him to re-hear the review, giving an opportunity to both sides to be heard.

(2) Decision in Printed Judgments for 1886, p. 11 :—

Section 53 of Act XVII of 1879 does not expressly provide for notice being given to the parties; and having regard to the very special nature of the Act, we cannot, we think, assume on general principles that such notice was necessary before the power of revision could be exercised under that section. It is to be remarked that s. 74 only makes the Civil Procedure applicable to suits and proceedings before the Subordinate Judge; and, in the absence of any rule, regarding notice, made by the local Government under s. 75 of the Act of 1879, the conduct of the proceedings before the Special Judge must, we think, be deemed to be entirely in his own discretion. This was, apparently, the opinion of the Division Court, consisting of West and Nanabhai, JJ., in petition No. 89 of 1884, in which the same point was raised.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The Special Judge considers that a Special Judge has no power to set aside an ex parte order made by him, because no such power is given him by the Act, and it is not, he considers, a power inherent in every Court. We have already held in Vishvanath v. Aba (1) followed in Badaricharya v. Ramachandra (2) and Ramsing v. Babu Kisansing (3) that "the conduct of the proceedings before the Special Judge must be deemed to be in his own discretion; and in the last two cases it was held that the granting a review of judgment may be a most reasonable exercise of such discretion. Similarly the setting aside an ex-parte decree or order may well be a most reasonable exercise of discretion on the part of the Court.

For these reasons we think that the Special Judge was wrong in holding he had no power to entertain the application, and must, therefore, make the rule absolute, discharge the order of the Special Judge, and send back the application for his consideration on the merits. Costs to follow the result.

Rule made absolute.

[F., 10 M.L.J. 313; R., 19 Ind. Cas. 759=9 N.L.R. 54.]

THIS was a reference under s. 617 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) by Rao Bahadur Krishnamukh [284] Atmaram, Judge of the Provincial Court of Small Causes at Ahmedabad.

The reference was in the following terms:—

"The plaintiff sues to recover from the defendant Rs. 150 as damages owing to certain tortuous acts of the defendants in preventing the water of the plaintiff's house from going in a certain cesspit and thereby causing damage to his (plaintiff's) wall and house.'

"Rao Bahadur Lalshanker Umyashanker, who acted for me during my absence as Fourth Judge of the Bombay Court of Small Causes, returned the plaint to the plaintiff for presentation to proper Court. He does not give in his order any reasons for returning the plaint. The plaintiff presented the plaint to the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court. Then it was filed and registered and sent to the Joint Subordinate Judge for trial. The Joint Subordinate Judge returned it to the plaintiff, holding that the suit was one cognizable by a Small Cause Court. Thereupon it was presented to me. I am myself of opinion that a suit like this is cognizable by a Small Cause Court, as it cannot be said to be a suit relating to immoveable property. Incidentally questions relating to immoveable property will arise in the case but the suit is really one for damages, and does not come under any of the clauses given in sch. II of Act IX of 1887. But as this same Court presided over by my predecessor once returned this plaint to the plaintiff, I doubt if I can admit it. I, therefore, submit the following questions for the determination of the Honourable the Chief Justice and Judges of Her Majesty's High Court :—

"1. Whether a suit like this is cognizable by a Small Cause Court ?

"2. Whether I can register the plaint unless the High Court sets aside the order of my predecessor ?

"My opinion on No. 1 is that the suit is cognizable by this Court, and on No. 2 is that I cannot register it until the previous order of this Court is set aside by the High Court."

The reference was heard by a Division Bench (Jardine and Ranade, JJ.).

[285] Sitanath Gopinath Ajinkya (amicus curiæ) for plaintiff.—The present is a suit for damages for injury caused to immoveable property. There is no question of title directly involved in the suit. If a question of title be incidentally raised, that does not oust the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court—Manappa Mudali v. McCarthy (1); Alagirisami v. Innasi(2); Shumbhoo Chunder Mowlick v. Pran Kristo Mowlick (3) ; Radha Churn v. Gudadhur (4). The present case does not fall within any of the excepted cases given in sch. II to Act IX of 1887. The suit is, therefore, cognizable by a Small Cause Court.

Vishnu K. Bhatvadekar (amicus curiæ) for the defendant.—A Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit like the present. A question of title is directly involved in the suit. The plaintiff is not entitled to the relief he claims without proving his title to immoveable property, which the Court cannot finally determine. The plaint was, therefore, rightly returned under s. 23 of Act IX of 1887 for presentation to the proper Court. The suit falls under art. 35 (i), sch. II to the Act.

JUDGMENT.

PER CURIAM.—The Court answers the questions as follows :—(1) The suit is cognizable by the Court of Small Causes as one for damages caused by injury to a wall. The fact that the injury was caused by diversion of a water-course or obstruction of an easement is an accidental circumstance which does not bring the plaint within the exception of art. 35 (i) of Second Schedule to Act IX of 1887.

(2) The order returning the plaint being final under s. 27 of the Act, the Judge cannot register the plaint while that order is in existence.

[286] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir Charles Sargent, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Fulton.

MURARI (Original Defendant), Appellant v. TAYANA (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent. [4th February, 1895.]

Hindu law—Minor—Minor's estate—Power of mother of minor to sell her deceased husband's estate—Mother—Omission of the minor's name in the sale-deeds—Son bound by sale.

Under Hindu law, the mother as guardian of her minor son has authority to sell her husband's estate in order to pay off his debts, and the omission of any reference to the minor in the deed of sale does not render it ineffectual if it is proved that it was her intention to deal with the son's interest, and not merely with any interest which she might have herself.

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of A. S. Moriarty, Assistant Judge of Satara, reversing the decree of Rao Saheb G. G. Soman, Subordinate Judge of Tasgaon.

The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover possession of a part of a field, alleging that it was his property and that the defendant had been in wrongful possession for ten or twelve years during the plaintiff's minority, which had terminated about a year prior to the institution of the suit.

The defendant replied (inter alia) that the field in dispute had been purchased by him from the plaintiff's mother during the plaintiff's minority under two deeds, one for Rs. 100 dated the 8th February, 1876, and the other for Rs. 18, dated the 14th February, 1879, and he contended that the sales being made by the plaintiff's mother for his benefit were binding on him.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the sale to the defendant had been made for a necessary purpose by the plaintiff's guardian during his minority.

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge reversed the decree of the lower Court, holding that the plaintiff was not bound by the sale during his minority. He found also that the sale of the plot for Rs. 100 had been effected to satisfy a debt due to the defendant by the plaintiff's father which the plaintiff was bound to pay. He passed a decree directing that the plaintiff should recover [287] possession of the property on payment of Rs. 100 to the defendant. The defendant preferred a second appeal.

Mahadeo B. Chavbal, for the appellant (defendant).—The plaintiff's mother was de facto manager during his minority. The sale-deeds do not mention the name of the plaintiff; but from the documents it is clear that the defendant purchased the land for value, believing that he got the whole property. The plaintiff does not allege that his mother was not de facto manager during his minority. Further, the sale was effected in order to pay off a debt contracted by plaintiff's father Under these circumstances the sale is binding on the plaintiff—Succaram Morarji v. Kalidas Kallianji (1).

Ghanasham N. Nadkarni, for the respondent (plaintiff).—The sale-deeds do not say that the sale was effected by the plaintiff's mother in her representative capacity as de facto manager. The mother purported to sell the land as her property, and that being so, the sale cannot stand, as the mother had no saleable interest.

[SARGENT, C. J.—She sold the property to pay off her husband's debt.]

The plaintiff is totally ignored in the documents. What she sold was her right, title and interest in the property, and, therefore, the plaintiff acquired only those rights which she could sell and not the absolute estate—Gadgeppa Desai v. Apaji (1); Jatha Naik v. Venkatapa (2); Subbanna v. Venkatakrishnan (3).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The Assistant Judge has found that the plaintiff's mother during her son's minority sold to the defendant two plots of land for Rs. 100 and Rs. 18 respectively. The item of Rs. 100 was applied towards payment of the plaintiff's father's debts. It does not appear for what purpose the item of Rs. 18 was required. The deeds of sale dated the 8th February, 1876, and the 14th February, 1879, contained no mention of the minor's name, but purported to deal with the land as if it were the property of the mother.

As it has not been found that there was any necessity for the sale, for Rs. 18, of the second bit of land, the transaction is not [288] binding on the minor, who is entitled to recover the property in question.

But in regard to the first sale, which was effected in order to pay off the father's debts, we have to determine whether the omission of any reference to the minor in the sale-deed renders it ineffectual against him. For the respodent Mr. Ghanasham drew our attention to one passage in the deed in which the vendor said that she had sold whatever right, interest or inheritance she had, and contended that these words limited the conveyance to the mother's interest; but the earlier part of the document shows that she purported to sell the land itself, and it is clear that such must have been her intention, inasmuch as at the time of the sale she personally had no interest in the property excepting a charge for maintenance over the whole of her husband's estate.

It was not denied that by Hindu law the mother as guardian of her minor son had authority to sell the land in order to pay off her husband's debts. Such being the case, it appears to us that she had both the authority and the intention to sell at the time when she purported to do so, her act effectually conveyed the property to the defendant notwithstanding that it was not correctly described as belonging to her son. In arriving at this conclusion we are but adopting the opinion expressed in Judunath Chuckerbutty v. James Tweedie (4) by Peacock, C. J., who pointed out that a sale by a manager with necessity may be valid although the vendor does not describe himself as manager. The decision of Mahmood, J., in Makundi v. Sarabsukh (5) was to the same effect; for, though it is true that in that case the minor's name was incidentally mentioned in the deed, the judgment was based, not on this circumstance, but on the fact that it was clear from the deed that it was the share of the minor which formed the subject of the sale. In each case the language of the deed and the circumstances in which it was executed have to be considered. In the present case, as above pointed out, remembering that the mother had no proprietary interest in the land, it is certain, from the wording of the deed, that it was the land itself, and not merely any interest which she might be supposed to have, which formed the subject of the sale.

[289] The learned Assistant Judge has relied on three cases, Kuvarji v. Moti (1), Gadgeppa v. Apaji (2) and Bahur Ali v. Sukeea Bibee (3), but they do not seem to support his decision. In the first of these cases—Kuvarji v. Moti— the conclusion that the deed did not bind the minor was founded, not on the omission of his name, but on the fact that the mother had not obtained a certificate under Act XX of 1864, a defect which cannot now be held to affect the validity of the deed having regard to the more recent decisions of this Court in Manishankar v. Bai Muli (4) and Honapa v. Mhalpai (5). The second case—Gadgeppa v. Apaji—referred to has no bearing on the question under consideration, for the cause of action was a money bond executed by a mother, which did not purport to charge her son's estate. In the third case noticed—Bahur Ali v. Sukeea Bibee—the parties were Mahomedans, amongst whom the mother has not the same power of alienation of her minor sons' property as amongst Hindus, and as the defendant had merely alleged that the vendor was herself the owner of the property, the High Court on special appeal confined its attention to the question whether she had been in possession on her own account or as guardian of her children.

Under these circumstances, we must now vary the decree of the Assistant Judge by rejecting so much of the claim as relates to the land sold for Rs. 100 by the deed of 8th February, 1876, and by awarding the remainder of the claim in respect of the land purporting to be sold for Rs. 18 by the deed of the 14th February, 1879. The plaintiff must pay the defendant's costs throughout on the portion of the claim rejected, and will recover his costs throughout on the portion awarded.

Decree varied.

Held that, except in a case of fraudulent concealment, the registration of the mortgage was notice to subsequent purchasers. The property was, therefore, liable under the mortgage, and the auction-purchaser was bound by it.

SECOND appeal from the decision of G. C. Whitworth, District Judge of Nasik, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb L. K. Nulkar, Subordinate Judge of Sinnar.

Suit by a mortgagee for sale of the mortgaged property, &c. By a registered mortgage-deed dated 23rd June, 1886, the first and second defendants mortgaged the property in question to the plaintiff with possession. Subsequently the plaintiff obtained a money decree against them, not for the mortgage-debt, but in some other matter, and in execution of this decree the house was sold and purchased by the third defendant.

The plaintiff's darkhast for execution had stated that the house was to be sold subject to his mortgage lien, but in the proclamation of sale the lien was not mentioned, nor was anything said about it at the auction-sale.

The third defendant having purchased the property was put into possession by the Court. Thereupon the plaintiff applied to be restored to possession, and his application being rejected he filed [291] the present suit to establish his right as mortgagee and to recover the amount due on the mortgage by sale of mortgaged property and from the first and second defendants.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 did not appear.

Defendant No. 3 replied (inter alia) that he did not admit the plaintiff's mortgage lien; that the plaintiff did not reserve his lien upon the property when it was sold in execution; and he contended that he being a bona-fide purchaser for value without notice of the lien, the claim as against him should be rejected.

The Subordinate Judge found that the third defendant purchased the house without notice of the plaintiff's mortgage lien; that he was entitled to retain possession; and that the plaintiff should recover the mortgage-debt from the first and second defendants.

On appeal by the plaintiff the decree was confirmed.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Daji Abaji Khare, for the appellant (plaintiff).—The plaintiff is entitled to enforce his lien upon the property in the hands of the third defendant who bought it with notice of the mortgage. For the mortgage was registered, and registration is notice—Motiram v. Hari (1). The lower Courts have held that because the mortgage was not mentioned in the proclamation of sale or at the auction sale, it is not binding on the purchaser. But the only question is whether the purchaser had notice, and he had notice by the fact of registration. In our darkhast for execution we prayed that our lien should be declared.

Gangaram B. Rele, for the respondent (defendant No. 3).—The mere fact that the mortgage was mentioned in the darkhast cannot be considered to be equivalent to notice. Unless the mortgage was mentioned in the proclamation of sale, or proclaimed at the auction sale, it cannot effect the purchaser. It was incumbent on the plaintiff to announce the lien, because it was his own lien and not that of a stranger—Dullab Sirkar v. Krishna Kumar Bakshi (2); Agarchand v. Rakhma (3).

(1) P.J. (1877), p. 4. (2) 3 B.L.R. A.C.J. 407. (3) 12 B. 678.

[292] [JARDINE, J.—In the last case the lien was fraudulently concealed, and, therefore, it was held not binding.]

In the present case, though there is no finding that the lien was fraudulently concealed, still the very fact that it was not proclaimed, and that we purchased the property bona fide in the belief that we purchased an absolute estate, estops the plaintiff setting up the lien. We should not be made to suffer for the plaintiff's omission.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The plaintiff, being mortgagee of the property under a registered deed of 1886 executed by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, obtained a decree against them in some other matter, and in execution thereof had the property put up for sale at a Court sale, where it was bought by the defendant No. 3. In the present suit the Courts below have refused to make the property liable on the mortgage. It is found as a fact that the defendant No. 3 had no actual knowledge of the mortgage. This incumbrance had not been stated in the proclamation as s. 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires. Laying stress on this fact, the District Judge held that the defendant No. 3 had no notice at all.

But although Dullab v. Krishna (1) is cited to support the decision, it has long been settled in this Presidency that registration is notice to subsequent purchasers—Hasha v. Ragho (2); Lakshmandas v. Dasrat (3); Radhabai v. Shamrav (4); Dundaya v. Chenbasapa (5). In Agarchand v. Rakhma (6), a fraudulent concealment was held to create an exception; but in the case before us there is no fraud, but only omission. The case is thus on all fours with Motiram v. Hari (7) and resembles also Nanabhat v. Lakshman (8) discussed without disapproval by the Full Bench in Lakshmandas v. Dasrat. Mr. Rele has urged the Court to treat the omission of the plaintiff to declare his incumbrance at the time of sale as creating an estoppel. But this would be contrary to the decisions, e.g., Baswuntapa v. Ranu (9) and see also Sobhagchand v. Bhaichand (10). It would have been otherwise if the [293] decree in execution of which the Court sale occurred had been obtained on the mortgage—Khevraj v. Lingaya (11); Sheshgiri v. Salvador Vas (12).

We, therefore, amend the decree by adding to the relief thereby given a declaration that the plaintiff has a right to recover the amount due on the mortgage by sale of the property in suit, and a direction that the amount be recovered therefrom if he fails to recover it from the defendants Nos. 1 and 2; the defendant No. 3 to pay his own costs throughout and the costs of both appeals.

Decree amended.

Practice—Procedure—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 39—Pleader—Pleader duly appointed by a party to a suit cannot delegate his authority to another pleader —Ex parte decree.

The applicant (defendant No. 2) was one of two defendants in a suit in the Court of Small Causes in Bombay. He and his co-defendant (defendant No. 1) appointed separate pleaders (K. and W.) to conduct their case. On the day of hearing the applicant was unavoidably unable to be present, and his pleader (K.) being also engaged elsewhere requested W., the pleader of the other defendant in the suit, to hold his brief and to conduct the case for both defendants. W. did so. A decree was passed against both defendants. The applicant subsequently applied to the Full Court under s. 37 of the Presidency Small Causes Court Act (XV of 1882) for a new trial on the ground that he had not been represented at the hearing and that the decree had been passed against him ex parte. The Full Court refused the application, holding that the applicant had been represented by a pleader, and that the decree against him was not ex parte. The appellant then applied to the High Court in its extraordinary jurisdiction.

Held, discharging the order of the Full Court, that the decree against the applicant was an ex parte decree. K., who was the applicant's duly appointed pleader, could not delegate his authority to W., and as the applicant was not himself present, the decree was ex parte. W. was not the duly appointed pleader of the applicant and could not, therefore, represent him at the hearing: see s. 39 of the Civil Procedure [294] Code (Act XIV of 1882). The High Court sent back the case to the Small Causes Court to deal with the application for a new trial on its merits.

THIS was an application under the extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the decision of the Full Court (consisting of C. W. Chitty, First Judge, and M. H. Hakim, Fifth Judge) of the Bombay Court of Small Causes.

The applicant (defendant No. 2) was one of two defendants who were sued by the plaintiffs in the Court of Small Causes at Bombay. The hearing of the case was fixed for the 8th June, 1894. On that day the applicant was unable to appear, as he was obliged to attend in the Presidency Magistrate's Court, in which one of the plaintiffs had instituted criminal proceedings against him. The applicant and his co-defendant had instructed separate pleaders to appear for them in Small Causes Court, but when the case was called on for hearing on the 8th June the applicant's pleader (Mr. Kapadia) being engaged elsewhere, asked Mr. Warden, who appeared as pleader for the other defendant, to hold his brief and conduct the case on behalf of the applicant. Mr. Warden accordingly did so, and on behalf of both the defendants contested their liability to the plaintiffs' claim. The Court, however, passed a decree for the plaintiff. Against this decree the defendant applied to the Full Court under s. 36 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act (XV of 1882) for a new trial and for a re-hearing of the suit, but the Court rejected the application on the ground that the decree was not an ex parte decree, as Mr. Warden held Mr. Kapadia's brief on behalf of the defendant.

The defendant now applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, contending that the Full Court erred in law in holding that the decree was not an ex parte decree, and that he had no proper opportunity of cross-examining the plaintiffs' witnesses, nor of adducing his evidence. A rule nisi was granted calling on the plaintiffs to show cause why the order of the Full Court should not be set aside.

Sitanath G. Ajinkya appeared for the applicant (defendant No. 2) in support of the rule :—Mr. Kapadia was the pleader duly appointed by us to conduct our case. On the appointed day we [295] could not attend personally in Court, because we were obliged to appear in the Police Court to answer a complaint lodged against us by one of the plaintiffs. Mr. Kapadia, being engaged elsewhere, transferred his brief to Mr. Warden, who was engaged by our co-defendant to conduct his case. We had not given a vakalatnama to Mr. Warden and had not engaged him ; therefore he could not properly represent us in the suit, nor had he received any instructions from us in connection with the case. Under these circumstances the decree against us is an ex parte decree—Bhimacharya v. Fakirappa (1) ; Hira Dai v. Hira Lal (2) ; Ramtahal Ram v. Rameshar Ram (3); Doyal Mistree v. Kupoor Chund (4).

Jehangir Dorabji appeared for the opponents (plaintiffs) to show cause.—The defendant was properly represented by Mr. Warden. It is an old and established practice in the Bombay Court of Small Causes for one pleader to hold the brief of another pleader, and the practice is allowed by the Judges of that Court. An inveterate practice amounts to a rule of law—Assur Purshotam v. Ruttonbai (5) ; Joyner v. Weeks (6).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—Mr. Warden was admittedly not the duly appointed pleader of the defendant, and, therefore, had no authority, as required by s. 39 of the Civil Procedure Code, to represent him at the hearing. Mr. Kapadia, who was the duly appointed pleader, could not delegate his authority to Mr. Warden, and as the defendant was not himself present, the decree passed against him was an ex parte one. The Court below was, therefore, wrong in rejecting the defendant's application to set aside the decree on the ground that it was not an ex parte decree.

We think that under these circumstances we ought to exercise our extraordinary jurisdiction and make the rule absolute, discharge the order of the Small Cause Court, and send back the case for the Court to deal with the application on its merits. Costs to follow the result.

Rule made absolute.

SECOND appeal from the decision of C. E. G. Crawford, District Judge of Thana, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb K. S. Bodas, Subordinate Judge of Mahad.

The plaintiff sued to recover a sum due to him on a mortgage.

The following is a translation of the mortgage-deed :—

"We have taken from you for our own purposes Surti Rupees 700 in cash of Company's currency, in letters rupees seven hundred, and in security for this amount have mortgaged the following property :—" (Sets forth the property). "You should (therefore) carry on the vahivat of the said land by right of ownership (and) in accordance with the deed of partition in the same manner as we have (hitherto) done by right of ownership, and take every year the produce of the land whatever the land may yield in the dry season and in the rainy season (that is, throughout the year); and you should pay the Government assessment. Your money is not to run at interest, and as to the profits of our takshim, which you will take, you are not to pay any rent (to us) in respect of the same. At the harvest season in the month of Margashirsh (or) Poush in the year in which we may (offer to) pay your money (viz.,) Rupees seven hundred, you should accept the payment and deliver into our possession our mortgaged share as per deed of partition. Should any one cause obstruction to your vahivat we will answer for the same and will get the vahivat continued to you without interruption, in accordance with the terms stated above. Should an obstruction be caused to your vahivat, and should you (in consequence) sustain loss, we will make good the same. We have duly passed this deed of mortgage of our free will. * * * *

Signatures."

[297] The defendants pleaded that the mortgage-deed did not provide for a sale of the property, and that the plaintiff was, therefore, not entitled to have it sold. The lower Courts allowed the claim. The defendants appealed to the High Court.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Macpherson (with Daji Abaji Khare), for the appellants.—The mortgage is a usufructuary mortgage and does not give to the mortgagee the power of sale. There is no period fixed in the deed for the repayment of the debt. The mortgagee is to remain in possession and is to take the produce in lieu of interest. Under the terms of the deed he is bound to restore the property to the mortgagor on receipt of the principal to be paid by the mortgagor at his pleasure. It is, therefore, clear that the power of sale is not reserved to the mortgagee—Shaik Idrus v. Abdul Rahiman (1). Rupees 700 have been awarded for interest. The mortgage was with possession, and the mortgagee could recover possession if he was dispossessed. If by his own laches he has not got produce by way of interest, he cannot claim damages in the form of interest from us. He may have his remedy against his mortgagors.

Manekshah J. Tuleyarkhan, for the respondent (plaintiff).—The transaction in dispute cannot be said to be a usufructuary mortgage, because in a usufructuary mortgage the principal as well as the interest is paid out of the usufruct. Possession must, therefore, remain with the mortgagee till the principal and interest are paid off. In the present case we are not in possession. The transaction in dispute is, no doubt, a mortgage, and we as mortgagee are entitled to recover the debt by selling the mortgaged property. We should not be left to the mercy of the mortgagor, and should not be asked to receive the debt whenever the mortgagor may choose to pay. At present we do not get any produce or interest, and there is no chance of our recovering the debt if it be held that we are not entitled to sell the property.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—The mortgage in question is a usufructuary one under which the mortgagee was to take possession of the land and enjoy the profits in lieu of interest, and the mortgagor [298] was to be at liberty to recover possession in any year on payment of the sum of Rs. 700. There was no promise by the mortgagor to pay the money. It was simply provided that until he did pay the amount, the mortgagee was to retain the property. Under these circumstances, we think it was not the intention of the parties that the land should be sold, and that the deed contained a special agreement which took the case out of the provisions of cl. 3 of s. 15 of Reg. V of 1827, which was the law in force at the time the mortgage was effected.

We must, therefore, reverse the decrees of the Courts below and reject the claim, with costs on the plaintiff throughout.

Decree reversed.

PREMJI JIVAN BHATE, DECEASED, BY HIS HEIR AND EXECUTRIX OF HIS WILL HIS WIDOW MANEKBAI (Original Plaintiff), Appellant HAJI CASSUM JUMA AHMED (Original Defendant), *v. Respondent. [13th February, 1895.]

Encroachment—Stranger building on land of another - Acquiescence of owner—Standing by—Delay of owner in suing for possession—Form of decree where owner succeeds in suit.

It is well established law in England that if a stranger builds on the land of another, although believing it to be his own, the owner is entitled to recover the land with the building on it, unless there are special circumstances amounting to a standing by so as to induce the belief that the owner intended to forego his right or to an acquiescence in his building on the land. This is also the law in India, with the exception that the party building on the land of another is allowed to remove the building.

Delay by the owner in bringing a suit is not in itself sufficient to create an equity in favour of the person spending money on the land so as to deprive the owner of his strict rights.

The decree made by the High Court was that the plaintiff should recover the land with liberty to the defendant forthwith to commence to remove his building and to restore the property to the condition in which it was when he took possession, the same to be completed within one year from date of decree. In default, the plaintiff to be at liberty to remove the building at the expense of the defendant.

[299] THIS was a second appeal from the decision of W. H. Crowe, District Judge of Poona, amending the decree of Rao Saheb Vaman M. Bodas, Subordinate Judge of Havli.

Suit for the recovery of certain land and for the removal of a building which the defendant had erected upon it. The plaintiff complained that, by the building, 116 yards of his land had been appropriated by the defendant in October, 1888, and February, 1889. The suit was brought in 1890. Notice of encroachment was given to the defendant in March, 1889.

The defendant answered that the ground in dispute belonged to him and had been in his vahivat (management); that the suit was time-barred; and that the plaintiff had not objected to the building during the progress of the work.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for plaintiff directing the defendant to remove that part of his building which stood on the land in dispute and to deliver the land to the plaintiff. He also issued an injunction restraining the defendant from in any way interfering in future with the plaintiff's enjoyment of the land.

On appeal by the defendant the District Judge, relying on Benode Coomaree Dossee v. Soudaminey Dossee(1) and Navalchand v. Amichand(2), held that as the plaintiff failed to explain the delay of a year between the notice of encroachment to the defendant and the institution of the suit, she was entitled only to recover damages and not to have the building removed. He, therefore, remanded the case to the Subordinate Judge for the determination of the amount of damages, and the Subordinate Judge having fixed the amount at one hundred rupees, the Judge amended the decree by ordering the defendant to pay that amount to the plaintiff.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Macpherson (with Gangaram B. Rele), for the appellant (plaintiff).—There was no unreasonable delay on the plaintiff's part, and the defendant had notice of our objection to the encroachment. This is not a case for damages. The defendant intentionally [300] encroached on our land; therefore, he is not entitled to any consideration from the Court. His building should be removed and our land should be restored to us—Dattatraya v. Shridhar (1); Narayan v. Bholagir (2); Jamnadas v. Atmaram (3); Rama v. Raja (4); Ramsden v. Dyson (5).

Shivaram V. Bhandarkar, for the respondent (defendant).—The plaintiff ought to have brought the suit within a reasonable time after our encroachment began. It was not necessary for her to wait for one year after the second encroachment in 1889. Our building was completed before the suit was filed, and the plaintiff stood by during all that time. She having delayed to file the suit, there is now no equity in her favour. The decree for damages is the proper decree under the circumstances of the case—Benode Coomaree Dossee v. Soudaminey Dossee (6); Navalchand v. Amichand (7).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—It is well established law in England that if a stranger builds on the land of another, although believing it to be his own, the owner is entitled to recover the land with the building on it, unless there are special circumstances amounting to a standing by so as to induce the belief that the owner intended to forego his right or to an acquiescence in his building on the land—Ramsden v. Dyson (5); Plimmer v. Mayor &c., of Wellington (8); and see Dattatraya v. Shridhar (1). This is also the law in India, with the exception that the party building on the land of another is allowed to remove the building—Narayan v. Bholagir (2).

As to delay in bringing a suit, we agree with the Madras High Court that it is not in itself sufficient to create an equity in favour of the person spending money on the land and to deprive the owner of his strict rights —Rama v. Raja (4). In the present case there are no circumstances creating such an equity, but on the contrary the plaintiff's notice to the defendant in March, 1889, informed him that he (the defendant) was laying the [301] foundations of his new chawl on his (the plaintiff's) land and required him to remove them. The cases relied on by the District Court are all light and air cases and have no bearing on the present question. As the removal of the building is optional with the defendant, and is for his benefit, a mandatory injunction to the defendant is not the right order to make.

The decree of the Court below must be, therefore, reversed, and an order made that the plaintiff do recover the land in question with liberty to the defendant forthwith to commence to remove his building on the said land and to restore the property to the condition in which it was when

THE ADVOCATE GENERAL OF BOMBAY (Plaintiff) v. MOULVI ABDUL KADUR JITAKER AND OTHERS, (Defendants).*

Taxation—Charity suit—Defendants' costs as between attorney and client ordered out of the charity estate—Charges allowed and disallowed as against estate—Discretion of Taxing Master.

In a suit brought by the Advocate General at the instance of relators for the purpose of removing the defendants from the position of directors of a Mahomedan mosque, and for administration of the property of the mosque, &c., the decree ordered that the defendants should have their costs taxed as between attorney and client out of the charity funds. The attorneys of the defendants accordingly brought in their bill of costs, and in taxation it was contended that they should be allowed out of the charity funds all the sums which the Taxing Master certified they should pay their attorneys.

Held, that where the Taxing Master decided that certain items allowed against the defendants should not come out of the charity funds, his decision could not be disturbed.

It does not follow that because a charge is proper to be allowed between an attorney and a client, that the client, if a trustee, should be allowed that charge out of the trust funds.

[302] APPEAL from the Taxing Master.

This suit was brought by the Advocate General at the relation of certain persons to remove the defendants from the position of directors of a Mahomedan mosque in Bombay and for administration of the property belonging to the mosque, &c., &c. For a report of the trial, see I. L. R., 18 Bom., 401.

The decree ordered that the defendants (other than defendant No. 5) should have their costs out of the estate taxed as between attorney and client. Their attorneys sent in their bill of costs to the Taxing Master, who refused to allow out of the estate certain items which he allowed as between the defendants and their attorneys. The attorneys thereupon applied for and obtained his certificate, and the matter now came, by way of appeal, before the Judge in chambers.

JUDGMENT.

STARLING, J.—This was a charity suit brought in regard to the funds of the Juma Masjid in Bombay. By the decree the first, second, third, fourth, sixth, seventh and eighth defendants were allowed their costs, taxed as between attorney and client, out of the mosque funds. Their attorneys sent in their bill to the Taxing Master for taxation, and he has disallowed certain items in the bill which amount in the whole to a large sum. Some of the items have been disallowed altogether as between the attorneys and their clients the trustees, and some have been allowed between the parties, but disallowed against the mosque funds. Objections have been taken to the disallowance, by the Assistant Taxing Master, of all these items. And I have now to determine whether his certificate should be varied in any way. [After dealing with the items which had been disallowed as between attorney and client, His Lordship continued :—]

All the other items which have been allowed in favour of the attorneys as against the defendants have been either reduced in amount or disallowed entirely as against the mosque funds, and it is contended that as the defendants were ordered to have their [303] costs, as between attorney and client, out of the mosque funds, they ought to be allowed all the sums which the Taxing Master certified they ought to pay their attorneys. The Acting Advocate General as representing the charity said he thought the defendants were entitled to what they asked ; as, although the expenditure was high, he did not think it excessive, and great good had been done by the defendants for the charity. He, however, only represents the charity officially, and it would be difficult to hold that his consent was sufficient to bind the charity and to release me from the duty of determining whether the Master was right in disallowing what he did. In deciding this question I am, therefore, under the disadvantage of not having heard any argument in support of the Taxing Master's decision.

That trustees cannot always obtain from their cestui que trustent all that they pay the attorney they employ, is evident from the cases of Johnson v. Telford (1), Allen v. Jarvis (2) and Brown v. Burdett (3) ; but the case which seems to me to govern the present case is In re Brown (4), referred to in In re Robertson (5). In the former case Lord Romilly, M.R., says : "If a person, being a trustee, chooses to employ a solicitor for the purpose of conducting the affairs of the trust, which, of course, the solicitor is well aware of, there is a distinction between his employing that same solicitor for exactly similar purposes with regard to which he is not a trustee. Suppose for instance that he is not a trustee, but simply a client, and that he says to the solicitor, 'I wish you would make for me, or procure for me, copies of such and such deeds, and I want to have them fully explained to me and I come to you for that purpose.' The solicitor tells him 'You can have them if you wish, but they are not at all wanted, they are of no species of use.' The client says 'Never mind, I require it to be done.' When the bill is taxed, and that fact is stated, the client cannot complain. But take the case where he is a trustee. * * There it is the duty of the solicitor to tell him very well, it shall be done, but you must understand that this is not required for the purposes of the administration of the trust ; you cannot charge these costs [304] against your cestui que trust, and I cannot put them into the bill of costs which will have to be paid out of the trust estate ; therefore, if you require it to be done, you must pay for it personally, and you will understand it is a personal matter between you and me.' * * I think, therefore, it is the duty of the solicitor to tell the trustee. 'This is not wanted for the administration of the trust, and if you insist upon its being done, it is for your private convenience, and, therefore, cannot be charged against the trust estate.' So regarding it I have looked at this bill and I have no doubt that the client did order it all; but then the application of the rule I have mentioned appears to me to be necessary, and then comes this question, which is properly a question for the Taxing Master to determine, is it proper or necessary or fit for the administration of the trust that certain things should be done?" The Master of the Rolls then goes on to pay that the question of quantum and quoties is one in which the opinion of the Taxing Master as to how much of the trustees' bill ought to be charged against the cestui que trustent ought to be accepted.

I think I must follow this decision and refuse to disturb the decision of the Taxing Master that the items now under discussion ought not to come out of the mosque funds.

The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover certain property of which she alleged he had taken possession. Subsequently the "matters in difference in the said suit" were by a signed submission paper referred to arbitration. An award was made [305] ordering the defendant to pay to the plaintiff Rs. 6,000, and cancelling a certain account. It also decided the claim of the plaintiff to two ornaments, which was a matter not included in the "submission paper," but had been verbally referred to the arbitrator in the course of the arbitration. The plaintiff now applied that the submission and award should be filed as an agreement adjusting the suit under s. 375 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), or, in the alternative, that the award should be filed under s. 525. The defendant disputed the agreement and denied the validity of the award.

Held, that under s. 375 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court had jurisdiction to determine whether, as a fact, the alleged agreement adjusting the suit has been made, and if it was satisfied that it has been made, to record it. Whether that fact should be tried on affidavit or by oral evidence, is entirely for the discretion of the Court.

The Court accordingly, holding that this suit had been adjusted by the submission and award, ordered the same to be filed and the adjustment recorded.

Held, further, that the Court could make no order as to that portion of the award which dealt with matter not relating to the subject-matter of the suit. A separate application should be made with regard to the ornaments.

20 B. 304.

THE plaintiff and her sister Gomti were the only children of one Kanji Khimji who died in October, 1888, leaving them his only heirs and legal representatives. Kanji died possessed of a considerable amount of moveable and immoveable property.

On the 26th January, 1895, the plaintiff filed this suit against the defendant, who was her brother-in-law, the husband of her sister Gomti, alleging that he had taken possession of all Kanji's property on his death and that Gomti had died childless and intestate. The plaintiff claimed to recover from the defendant all the property left by her father Kanji, save such portion as was disposed of by Gomti during her life.

On the 30th March, 1895, the parties to the suit signed a document in the following terms, submitting the matters in difference to the arbitrators named therein :—

"To Thakur Versey Karumsey and Thakur Mowji Premji Tulsidas written by the undersigned Bai Samibai, wife of Thakur Walabhdas Hurry, and Thakur Premji Pragji, to wit: I, Bai Samibai, have filed a suit No. 40 of 1895, in the Bombay High Court against Thakur Premji Pragji. We, Bai Samibai and Thakur Premji Pragji, have appointed you sole arbitrators to decide the matters in difference in the said suit, and we and our heirs bind ourselves to abide by such orders as you both persons may make. Whatever decision shall be made by you shall be accepted by us two persons in Court. Your decision on the above matter should be made in two months.

"The 30th March, 1895.

[306] The time originally fixed for making the award was extended to the 1st July, and on the 30th June, 1895, the said arbitrators made their award as follows :—

To Bai Sami, wife of Thakur Walabhdas, dated the 7th of Asad Sud, 1951, the 30th June, 1895.

"We, the undersigned Thakur Versey Karumsey and Thakur Mowji Premji Tulsidas, (write as follows) :—Bai Sami, wife of Thakur Walabhdas Hurry, has filed a suit, No. 40 of 1895, against Thakur Premji Pragji in the Bombay High Court. We were appointed arbitrators to decide the questions relating to the subject. Having heard the arguments of both parties we give (our) decision as follows :—

"1. Thakur Premji Pragji shall pay to the plaintiff, Bai Sami, Rs. 6,000, namely six thousand, within 8 days from this date.

"2. Thakur Premji Pragji shall deliver to Bai Sami the chakur and chakri belonging to Bai Sami.

"3. The account of Rs. 2,000, which Thakur Premji Pragji has given to Bai Sami at Jamnagar in a book, shall be considered as cancelled. Dated the 7th of Asad Sud, 1951, the 30th June, 1895."

On the 17th July, 1895, the plaintiff applied by petition to have the award recorded as an agreement under s. 375 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) or filed as an award under s. 525.

The following was the concluding paragraph of the petition : —

"The plaintiff submits that the said submission and award are an agreement wholly adjusting the aforesaid suit, and prays that the same may be recorded under the provisions of s. 375 of the Civil Procedure Code, and a decree passed by this Honourable Court in accordance therewith, and in the alternative the plaintiff prays that the said award may be filed under the provisions of s. 525 of the said Code, and that all necessary directions may be given in that behalf."

On the 22nd July, 1895, the plaintiff served notice on the defendant calling on him to show cause "why the submission and award should not be filed as an agreement wholly adjusting the above suit, or why, in the alternative, the said award should not be filed."

The defendant in his affidavit contended that the award was not made until after the time fixed by the submission paper; that it included matters not referred to arbitrators and did not decide all the matters referred; that it was made without making due inquiry and without taking accounts; that it was made under the influence of the plaintiff's husband; and that the defendant [307] was unable to carry out the award, as he had not recovered all the moneys belonging to the plaintiff's father Kanji Khimji.

Inverarity, for the defendant, showed cause.—The agreement is disputed, and the Court cannot try whether the suit has been adjusted by agreement. The decision in The Goculdas Dulabdas Manufacturing Company v. James Scott (1) does not apply where a dispute has been referred to arbitration. If the Court deals with the matter, it should take oral evidence on the points raised by the defendant. Section 525 of the Code does not apply to this case. That section only applies when no suit is in existence.

Lowndes, for the plaintiff, contra.—The submission and award constitute an agreement adjusting the suit which may be recorded under s. 375—Dagdusa Tilakchand v. Bhukan Govind Shet (2).

JUDGMENT.

STARLING, J.—The plaintiff in this suit seeks as the surviving heiress of her father, one Kanji Khimji, to recover from the defendant the estate of her father alleged to be in his hands, and for discovery and accounts, if necessary. The defendant in his written statement denies his own liability; denies the title of the plaintiff; alleges that she, if entitled to anything, is only entitled to what was specifically bequeathed to her by her father's will, and that there had been an adjustment between the defendant and the plaintiff, and that in accordance therewith an account had been opened in his book in her name and Rs. 2,000 credited to her therein.

On the 30th March, 1895, the plaintiff and the defendant by a submission paper referred all matters in difference in the suit to the decision of two arbitrators, and on the 30th June, 1895, these two arbitrators published their award, whereby they directed the defendant to pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 6,000 and ordered that the account of the plaintiff in the defendant's books should be cancelled. They also decided the plaintiff's claim to two ornaments said to be in the possession of the defendant which was not referred to them by the submission paper, but which was said to have been verbally referred to them during the course of the arbitration.

[308] On the 18th July, 1895, the plaintiff presented a petition praying that the submission and award might be recorded under s. 375 of the Civil Procedure Code, as an adjustment of the suit, or else to be filed under the provisions of s. 525 of the Civil Procedure Code. The usual notices were issued, and the matter came on for argument on the 31st August, when the defendant contended that there was no jurisdiction to file the award, because he did not now admit that it was a valid one, and made certain allegations in support of his contention that it was not valid and binding upon him.

(1) 16 B. 202.

(2) 9 B. 82.

The first question to be decided is whether when one of the parties to a suit sets up an agreement whereby, it is alleged, the suit has been adjusted, but that agreement is disputed by the other, the Court has jurisdiction under s. 375 to determine the fact whether such agreement has been come to, and, if it is satisfied that such is the case, to record it. The point has been decided several times in Madras and Bombay in the affirmative—Karuppan v. Ramasami (1); Appasami v. Manikam (2); Ruttonsi Lalji v. Pooribai (3); and Goculdas Bulabdas Manufacturing Company v. James Scott (4).

I agree with the decisions in these cases rather than with that in Hara Sundari v. Kumar Dukhinessur (5). Section 375 does not say "if the parties agree that a suit is adjusted," nor "if the parties certify to the Court that a suit has been adjusted," but "if a suit be adjusted," which is a fact which is capable of being proved although one party may deny it. It is a fact which is alleged in the course of the suit, and which, in my opinion, ought to be tried by the Court in the same way as any other relevant fact which is alleged and denied in the course of the suit. Whether it should be tried on affidavit, or by oral evidence, is a matter, it seems to me, entirely for the discretion of the Court. If on such trial the Court finds that the suit has been adjusted, then it is the duty of the Court to record the act or document by which such adjustment is arrived at, and to pass a decree in accordance therewith as far as it relates to the suit.

[309] As regards that portion of the award which does not relate to the subject-matter of the suit, if the application that it should be filed had been a separate one and had been wrongly endorsed as in this suit, or if it had not been numbered at all, I should have had no hesitation in ordering the endorsement to be amended, or the application to be numbered as a suit. The numbering is the act of the Court through its officer, and is a mere formal matter intended simply for the convenience of reference, and has nothing to do with the merits of the case; and if an application has been made to the Court otherwise in proper form, and due notice has been given to the opposite party, he can sustain no damage through the application not having being numbered or having been wrongly numbered. This case, however, is different. A double application has been made in this suit, and it would be exceedingly inconvenient to have among the records of this suit those of another, and I shall, therefore, make no order on the application under s. 525 of the Civil Procedure Code, but leave the plaintiff to make a proper separate application with regard to the ornaments, or else bring a suit as she may be advised.

Having held that I have power to enquire whether there has or has not been an adjustment of this suit, the next thing I have to do is to determine that fact. [His Lordship then discussed the affidavits and continued:—] Holding that this suit has been adjusted by the submission and award, I order the same to be filed and the adjustment to be recorded, and do also order that the defendant do pay the plaintiff's costs of this application and order, and I pass a decree for the plaintiff for the sum of Rs. 6,000, and I order that the account for Rs. 2,000 in favour of the plaintiff in books given by the defendant to the plaintiff at Jamnagar be cancelled. As to the costs of the suit, I can make no order. The suit (which, of course, includes the costs) has been settled by the adjustment, and the award saying nothing about costs, I must assume that the Rs. 6,000 includes everything that can possibly be claimed in the suit, including costs.

HORMUSJI NOWROJI DAVUR (Plaintiff) v. DADABHOY NOWROJI DAVUR AND OTHERS (Defendants).* [30th September, 1895.]

Deed of settlement—Trust—Beneficiary—Proviso for forfeiture of interest in case of insolvency—Insolvency of beneficiary—Subsequent withdrawal of petition in insolvency—Effect of withdrawal of petition.

By a deed of settlement executed by the plaintiff's father, certain property was conveyed to trustees upon trust to recover the income thereof and to pay it to the settlor for life, and after his death to his seven sons, in equal shares, for the maintenance of them and their respective families. The deed provided that, in case any beneficiary became insolvent, "or do or suffer anything whereby his share or any part thereof would through his act or default or by operation of law" become vested in or payable to other persons, then the share and interest of such person should cease, and for the remainder of his life should be paid for the maintenance and support of the family of such persons. In July, 1894, the plaintiff, who was one of the sons of the settlor, filed his petition in insolvency, but on the 5th December, 1894, he withdrew it.

Held, that the forfeiture clause did not take effect, and that the plaintiff was entitled to be paid by the trustees his share of the income of the trust property.

ONE Nowroji Ardeshir Davur, a Parsi inhabitant of Bombay, the father of the plaintiff and the first defendant, by a deed dated 24th January, 1877, reciting that he was desirous of settling certain lands, &c., for the benefit of himself and his seven sons, conveyed the said lands, &c., to himself and three others, viz., his eldest son Dadabhoy (the first defendant), Mancherji Sorabji Wadia and Dadabhoy Bomanji Mottabhoy as trustees upon trust to receive the income thereof and to pay the same to himself for life, and after his death to his seven sons in equal shares for the maintenance of them and their respective families. The said deed contained the following clause :—

"And it is hereby declared that in case any person entitled under the trusts herein contained to any share or interest in the residue of the income of the said trust premises shall become a bankrupt or insolvent debtor within the meaning of some Act of Parliament or of the Legislative Council of India or Bombay for the relief of insolvent debtors, or shall convey, assign, charge or incumber such his or her share of the residue of the said income of the said trust premises, or shall do or suffer anything whereby the same or any part thereof would through his or her act or default or by [311] operation or process of law or otherwise if then belonging absolutely to him or her become vested in or payable to any other person or persons, then the share and interest of any such person in the residue of the said income shall cease and determine and the trustees or trustee for the time being of these presents shall during the remainder of the life of the person whose share and interest in the said residue of the said income shall have so determined, pay such share and interest to and for the maintenance and support of the wife and the son of the said person."

On the 10th July, 1894, the plaintiff, who was one of the sons of the settlor, filed his petition in the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in Bombay, but on the 5th December, 1894, he withdrew it.

In March, 1895, the plaintiff brought this suit against the trustees of the deed (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) praying for a declaration that he was entitled to be paid 1/7th of the income of the trust premises, and that the trusts created in his favour by the said deed might be enforced, and for a declaration that he had not forfeited his right under the said deed by filing his petition in insolvency.

The first and second defendants were the trustees of the deed at the date of suit, and the third and fourth defendants were the wife and son of the plaintiff.

At the hearing the questions discussed were—(1) whether on his becoming insolvent the plaintiff's interest under the deed had ceased, (2) whether on the withdrawal of his petition his interest under the deed had revived, and (3) whether the trustees should pay the plaintiff's share to him or to the other beneficiaries under the deed.

JUDGMENT.

B. TYABJI, J.—This suit was filed by the plaintiff Hormusji Nowroji Davur on the 22nd March, 1895, for the purpose of having it declared that the plaintiff is entitled to be paid by the first and second defendants 1/7th of the net residue of the rents of the trust premises mentioned in the plaint and also for a declaration that the plaintiff has not forfeited his rights and interests under the indenture of trust in the plaint mentioned, and further that the first and second defendants may be ordered to account for the rents received by them since the last distribution of rents among the cestuis que trust, and that the sum due to the plaintiff may be ascertained and paid to him.

The undisputed facts of the case are that one Nowroji Ardeshir Davur, the father of the plaintiff, settled certain properties upon certain trusts by deed of settlement dated 24th January, 1877 (Ex. A). The said settlor died in the year 1884, and the first and the second defendants are the present trustees of the said indenture. The trust-deed directs that the trustees should stand possessed of the trust premises as follows:—

"Upon trust to receive the income thereof, and thereout in the first place to re-imburse themselves or pay and discharge all the costs and expenses incurred in or about the administration of the trusts, and subject thereto upon trust to pay the residue of the said income of the said trust premises unto the said Nowroji Ardeshir Davur for his life, and after the decease of the said Nowroji Ardeshir Davur upon trust after such reimbursements and such payment of such costs and expenses as aforesaid to pay the said residue of the said income unto Dadabhoy Nowroji Davur, Nanabhoy, Mancherji, Hormusji, Dorabji, Kharsedji and Ardeshir Nowroji Davur in equal shares as tenants-in-common for the maintenance of Dadabhoy Nowroji Davur, Nanabhoy, Mancherji, Hormusji, Dorabji, Kharsedji and Ardeshir Nowroji Davur and their [313] respective families * * * Provided always and it is hereby declared that in case any person entitled under the trusts herein contained to any share or interest in the residue of the income of the said trust premises shall become a bankrupt or insolvent debtor within the meaning of some Act of Parliament or of the Legislative Council of India or Bombay for the relief of insolvent debtors, or shall convey, assign, charge or incumber such his or her share of the residue of the said income of the said trust premises, or shall do or suffer anything whereby the same or any part thereof would through his or her act or default or by operation or process of law or otherwise if then belonging absolutely to him or her become vested in or payable to any other person or persons, then the share and interest of any such person in the residue of the said income shall cease and determine, and the trustees for the time being shall during the remainder of the life of the person whose share and interest in the residue of the said income shall have so determined, pay such share and interest to and for the maintenance and support of the wife and the son of the said person."

The plaintiff filed his petition in the Bombay Insolvent Court (Ex. B) on the 10th July, 1894, but he withdrew it under the order of the Court (Ex. C) on 5th December, 1894, and sent a notice of demand (Ex. D) on the 1st February, 1895, and having received an unsatisfactory reply on the 12th February, 1895, he filed this suit, as already stated, on the 22nd March, 1895.

Under the circumstances the first question for my consideration is whether the proviso for the cesser of the plaintiff's interest under the trust-deed is void as repugnant, and, secondly, whether such proviso, if valid, took effect and came into operation on the insolvency of the plaintiff notwithstanding the fact that his petition was soon afterwards withdrawn as above stated.

It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the trust-deed contains a clear gift of a life-estate to the plaintiff, and that, therefore, the attempted defeasance of that estate by the proviso must be held void as being repugnant to the previous gift. Mr. Lowndes relied upon the case of Brandon v. Robinson(1) in which Lord Eldon said: "There is no doubt that property may be given to a man, until he shall become bankrupt. It is equally clear, generally speaking, that if property is given to a man for his life, the donor cannot take away the incidents to a life-estate; and, as I have observed, a disposition to a man until he shall become bankrupt, and after his bankruptcy over, is quite different from an attempt to give to him for his life with a proviso that he shall not sell or alien it. If that condition is so expressed as to amount to a limitation, reducing the interest, short of a life-estate, neither [314] the man nor his assignees can have it beyond the period limited." The general doctrine as to repugnant conditions being void is illustrated by the leading case of Bradley v. Peixoto (1).

The distinction, however, between the gift of a life-estate " until bankruptcy " and a life-estate with a proviso for its cesser or forfeiture on bankruptcy has been considered as too fine and technical, and has accordingly been disregarded in later cases, which construe the original gift and the proviso together as a conditional limitation; and I think it is now clear, on the authorities, that the estate will be determined in the event of bankruptcy, no matter which of the two forms of gift is adopted. I think this proposition is borne out by the case of Wilkinson v. Wilkinson(2) where the Master of the Rolls (Sir Thomas Plumer) said: " With respect to the validity of the proviso," (of forfeiture or cesser) "it is clear that a testator may thus modify the estate he gives; for though, in a case which has been mentioned, it is stated as the opinion of a very great Judge, that if an estate is given for life, the incidents of a life-estate cannot be taken away, and though it is better, therefore, when such a limitation is intended, to give the estate until bankruptcy or alienation, and not first to give it for life, and then to prohibit the attempt to alien, yet this is answered by considering that, in a will any condition or modification may be annexed which does not offend against any rule of law; and it is immaterial by what form of words the intention is executed, whether by a devise until the devisee shall have charged or encumbered it, or by a proviso with a limitation over upon such an event. Each mode is equally valid, and of the same effect." It is true that this was the case of a will and not of a deed inter vivos; but I don't think that any distinction can be usefully drawn on that ground, and I find that in Tudor's Leading Cases on Real Property (3rd Ed.), p. 978, the doctrine is laid down broadly in these words: " The principle " that of a grant conditions are void "would not be violated by a provision limiting over or making to cease a life-interest * * on the bankruptcy or insolvency of the owner, and it has accordingly been clearly held that a limitation over or a proviso determining a life-interest on bankruptcy is valid."

[315] I am of opinion, therefore, that the proviso for cesser is not invalid on the ground of repugnancy.

The question, however, arises whether the clause in question took effect in consequence of the plaintiff's insolvency on 10th July, 1894. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that inasmuch as the insolvency was annulled on 5th December, 1894, and that no distribution of the income took place during the insolvency, therefore, the forfeiture clause never took effect. The facts bearing on this point are that the last distribution of the trust fund prior to the insolvency was made on 31st March, 1894, and that the next distribution was not made till the 1st February, 1895, that is to say, till after the withdrawal of the plaintiff's petition. No distribution took place in the interval owing to the fact that there was no fund to distribute, as repairs to the trust premises were being made, and the income not being sufficient, money to the extent of about Rs. 1,200 had to be borrowed. Now, I think the cases of White v. Chitty (1), Lloyd v. Lloyd (2) and Ancona v. Waddell (3) clearly decide that if a bankruptcy is annulled in the interval between the time when the title to a fund accrues and the time when it becomes payable, the bankrupt is in the same position as if he had never been bankrupt, and is entitled to receive the fund if it has not been interrupted in the meantime. On the other hand, the cases of In re Parnham's Trust (4), Robertson v. Richardson (5) and Otway v. Otway (6) establish that forfeiture will not be prevented unless the annulment takes place before the fund becomes "an interest in possession" or at least before any payment in respect of it actually becomes due. I have had some difficulty in coming to a conclusion as to which of the two classes of cases the present case falls under. Considering, however, that the object of the settlor was to benefit his own sons directly and as long and as far as practicable; that all the authorities concur in laying down that the Court should strive to carry out the intention of the settlor as far as the law will permit; that no distribution was made during the pendency of the plaintiff's insolvency proceedings; that no money is proved to have been actually due or [316] become payable during the insolvency; that no claim or attempt to intercept it was ever made on behalf of the Official Assignee or by the donees under the limitation over; that the plaintiff was a free man and perfectly able to receive the money at the time when the next distribution did, or according to the deed could, take place, and considering that I should be better carrying out the intentions of the settlor by continuing the property direct to the plaintiff rather than to his wife and children —I have on the whole come to the conclusion that the mere filing of the petition and withdrawal of it within less than five months without the fund being in any way claimed or interrupted by the Official Assignee, or by the other donees is not such an insolvency as was contemplated by the settlor, and that the plaintiff's interest has not, therefore, ceased under the proviso, and that he is still entitled to his rights under the deed as if he had never become insolvent.

[3rd, 7th, 8th and 10th October, 1895.]

Hindu law — Undivided family — Ancestral property — Self-acquired property made ancestral by agreement—Operation of such agreement Effect of such agreement on accumulations and accretions of the property— Election — Estoppel—Minor members of undivided family—Interest of minors in property made ancestral by agreement—Minor bound by acts of his father as to such property.

Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy and his three sons Tribhovandas, Purshotamdas and Jugmohandas lived together as an undivided Hindu family. In 1881 the youngest son, Jugmohandas, filed a suit for partition (No. 444 of 1881) against his father and his two brothers. Being apprehensive that his other sons (the plaintiffs) might make a similar claim, Sir Mangaldas on the 28th June, 1881, entered into an agreement with [317] them (the plaintiffs) which recited (inter alia) that he (Sir Mangaldas) alleged that the only ancestral immoveable property belonging to him was the property specified in Part I of the sch. I annexed to the agreement, but that the plaintiffs (his sons) alleged that the immoveable property specified in Part II of that schedule was also ancestral property, and provided (inter alia) that, in consideration of the terms and conditions therein set forth, his sons (the plaintiffs) would not "claim a partition of the said property" during the lifetime of the said Sir Mangaldas.

The terms of this agreement were duly observed by the plaintiffs during their father's lifetime, and they continued to reside with him until his death.

In the interval, however, viz. in 1886, the partition suit (No. 444 of 1881), brought by Jugmohandas was decided, and by the decree it was declared that the immoveable property specified in sch. I of the aforesaid agreement was not ancestral property, but was the self-acquired property of Sir Mangaldas.

On the 9th March, 1890, Sir Mangaldas died, leaving a will dated 27th January, 1888. By this will he directed that his executors and trustees should take possession of all his property both ancestral and self-acquired, and, after referring to the agreement of the 28th June, 1881, and to the property in Part I of the schedule thereto, continued: "Whereas it has been decided by the Court of first instance, and such decision has been confirmed by the appellate Court, that such property (i.e., the property in Part I) is not ancestral property, yet I am unwilling to disturb the said deed as between my said two sons, and I, therefore, hereby confirm the same." Then after making some other provisions he devised and bequeathed to his trustees "all the residue of my self-acquired property," and he direcred that such residue when ascertained and realized should be handed over to the Chancellor and Senate of the Bombay University to be devoted to the founding of scholarships.

As directed by the will, the executors took possession of all the testator's property, including the property in Part I of the said schedule. This last named property was subsequently, viz., in December, 1890, conveyed by the executors to the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs now sued the executors, contending that the properties in Part I of the schedule to the agreement being ancestral under the agreement and will, they (the plaintiffs) were entitled not only to them, but to all the accumulations and accretions thereof, which amounted in value to about ten lakhs of rupees. The University, on the other hand, contended that the accumulations and accretions formed part of the self-acquired property of the testator, and went to the University under the residuary clause of the will.

Held (1) that the effect of the agreement was to make the property specified in Part I of the schedule thereto, ancestral property as between the parties to the agreement.

(2) That the agreement was confirmed by the will, and was binding on the executors.

(3) That, although the corpus of the said property became ancestral under the agreement, the accumulations and accretions thereof did not. They were the self-acquired property of the testator, and passed to the trustees under the residuary clause of the will.

[318] The plaintiffs had subsequently to the death of Sir Mangaldas taken possession of the properties in question, and had paid probate duty on them. The plaintiffs had taken conveyances from the executors and had given releases to the executors, and in a previous suit (No. 670 of 1892) the first plaintiff had in his evidence stated that he did not wish to dispute the will, and that he had elected to take under it.

Held, that by their conduct the plaintiffs had elected to take the properties in question under the will, and could not maintain a suit for an account of the rents and profits either under or in opposition to the will.

Held, also, that the sons of the plaintiffs (the minor defendants) were bound by the acts of the plaintiffs. The property in question was not really ancestral. It was only such for the purpose and by virtue of the agreement of 28th July, 1881, and the plaintiffs were entitled to waive it or rescind it if they pleased, and their sons could not prevent them from doing so.

[Reversed, 21 B. 349 ; D., 4 Bom. L.R. 257 (261).]

SUIT to recover accumulations and accretions of ancestral property.

The plaintiffs were the sons of Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, deceased. Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 were the executors of the will of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy.

Defendants Nos. 4, 5, 6 and 7 were sons of the first plaintiff. Defendant No. 8 was the son of the second plaintiff. Three of these defendants, viz., defendants Nos. 6, 7 and 8, were born after the death of Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy (1). Defendant No. 9 was the third son of Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy. Defendant No. 10 was the University of Bombay.

Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy was a wealthy Hindu inhabitant of Bombay. Up to the year 1880 he and his three sons, viz., the two plaintiffs and defendant No. 9, lived together as members of a joint and undivided Hindu family. In that year, however, disputes arose between the youngest son Jugmohandas (defendant No. 9) and his father, in consequence of which Jugmohandas ceased to live with the family and went to live apart.

In 1881 Jugmohandas brought a suit (No. 444 of 1881) against his father and two brothers for partition, alleging that the whole of his father's property was ancestral and that he was entitled to a share.

[319] Being apparently apprehensive that his other sons (the plaintiffs) might also separate from him and make a similar claim upon the property, Sir Mangaldas on the 28th June, 1881, entered into the following agreement with them :—

"Articles of agreement made and entered into this 28th day of June, 1881, between Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, Knight, C.S.I., of Bombay Hindu inhabitant, of the first part ; Tribhovandas Mangaldas, of Bombay Hindu inhabitant, son of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, of the second part ; and Purshotamdas Mangaldas, also of Bombay Hindu inhabitant, son of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, of the third part. Whereas the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy has three sons only, viz., the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas, parties

(1) Defendant No. 4 was born on the 19th October, 1886 ; defendant No. 5 on 25th June, 1888; defendant No. 6 on the 27th February, 1892 ; defendant No. 7 on the 1st September, 1893 ; and defendant No. 8 on the 9th October, 1894.

hereto, and a third son named Jugmohandas Mangaldas. And whereas the said Jugmohandas Mangaldas has left the protection of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy and has gone to reside apart from the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy and his said other two sons Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas and has preferred a claim against the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy for large sums of money by way of allowance and otherwise, the validity of which claim the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy disputes. And whereas the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas are living with the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy as members of an undivided Hindu family. And whereas having regard to the fact that differences have arisen as aforesaid between the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy and the said Jugmohandas Mangaldas and that in consequence thereof feelings of mutual distrust have arisen between the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy and the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas, and it is possible that the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas or one of them may desire to separate and live apart from the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy and prefer a claim against the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy either for payment to them or him of sums of money by way of allowance or for partition of the ancestral property of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy. And whereas the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy denies that such a claim on the part of his said two last mentioned sons or one of them could in such an event as aforesaid be enforced, and whereas the validity of any such claim could not be tried and decided in a Court of law without incurring great expense. And whereas in order to remove the aforesaid feelings of distrust and to promote feelings of mutual love and affection between the parties hereto and to avoid litigation, expense and disputes and the possibility of a partition of the ancestral property of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy being enforced in his lifetime and of such property consequently being to its great detriment divided into four parts it has been mutually arranged between the parties hereto that, in the event of the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas or either of them going to live apart from the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy whether of their or his own accord or owing to the directions or request of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy in that behalf, they the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas or such one of them as shall so separate shall accept from the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy and the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy shall pay the sums hereinafter mentioned in full discharge of all claims which they or such one of them as aforesaid may have against the said Sir [320] Mangaldas Nathubhoy or his property during his life. And whereas it is alleged by the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy that the immoveable property mentioned and described in Part I of the schedule hereinunder written and marked with the letter A is the only ancestral immoveable property of or belonging to him the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy. And whereas it is alleged by the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas that the immoveable property mentioned and described in Part II of the said schedule A is also the ancestral immoveable property of the said Sir Mangaldas, but the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy denies that the immoveable property mentioned and described in Part II of the said schedule forms part of his ancestral immoveable property, and it has been agreed that the question as to whether such last mentioned immoveable property is or is not the ancestral property of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy should remain an open question between the parties to these presents. Now these presents witness that, in order to effectuate the aforesaid objects and to carry out the said arrangement, and in consideration of the premises and of the covenants on the part of the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas hereinafter contained, he the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy covenants and agrees with the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas and with each of them as follows :—

"1. That if they the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas or either of them separate and go to live apart from the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy either of their own accord or in compliance with the wishes of him the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, then he the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy will give to each of his said two sons who may separate from him a monthly allowance of Rs. 600, a portion of the family jewels including the jewels which he (such separating son) may have at present in his possession for the use of himself and his wife and children amounting in value to the sum of Rs. 10,000 and a portion of the family furniture including posts, pans, plate and other articles together with a horse and carriage, all which last mentioned effects shall together be of the aggregate value of Rs. 5,000.

"And these presents further witness that, in consideration of the premises and of the covenant agreement hereinbefore contained on the part of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, they the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas do and each of them doth for himself, his heirs, executors and administrators, covenant and agree with the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy and with each other :—

"1. That they will not respectively, until they respectively separate and live apart from the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, claim from him the said monthly allowance of Rs. 600, nor the jewels, furniture and other articles respectively abovementioned.

"2. That if the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy shall express to them the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas, or either of them, his desire that they or he shall separate and live apart from him the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, they the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas or such one of them as shall be requested so to do by the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy shall separate and live apart with their respective families from and independently of him.

"3. That they the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas will not at any time during the life of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy claim a partition of any of his property, ancestral or otherwise, moveable or immoveable, nor [321] during his lifetime claim or seek to exercise any rights over any of his property other than what is abovementioned, whether the said Jugmohandas Mangaldas shall or shall not claim a partition of the said property or seek to obtain his share therein and whether or not he shall succeed in such claim or in obtaining possession of his said share or any part thereof or in obtaining from the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy any allowance, gift of money or property.

"4. That they will not respectively alienate their respective shares and interests in the ancestral property of Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy or do suffer or omit any act or thing whereby the same shall or may be incumbered or transferred to third persons.

"5. That they will not respectively interfere, or attempt to interfere, in any way, with the mode in which Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy may think proper to manage, invest or deal with his ancestral property unless he shall take any steps with the object of or which may have the effect of depriving his sons the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas of their respective shares therein, but such exception shall not have the effect of depriving the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy of making donations reasonable in amount and such as he has hitherto been in the habit of making out of such property.

"6. That, if in the event of the said Jugmohandas Mangaldas claiming and succeeding in obtaining a share of the ancestral property in the hands of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, the whole of the ancestral property of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy shall be required to be divided actually or constructively into four parts, to be allotted one part to each of them the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, Tribhovandas Mangaldas, Purshotamdas Mangaldas and Jugmohandas Mangaldas, the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas shall re-unite their parts with that of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy in order that they the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas may in accordance with the terms of this agreement legally be entitled to share according to Hindu law if they survive the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy the entire share which shall have actually or constructively as aforesaid fallen to the lot of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy to the exclusion of the said Jugmohandas Mangaldas.

"Provided always and it is hereby agreed by and between the said parties to these presents that the said monthly payments of Rs. 600 in the event of the same being made shall not be debited to the respective shares of the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas in the ancestral property of Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, but the value of the family jewels and the value of or the money paid for the furniture, horse and carriage which may be given to each of them the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas shall be debited to their respective shares in the aforesaid ancestral property: Provided also and it is hereby agreed that if the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas or either of them go to live separate as aforesaid and their or his aforesaid monthly allowance of Rs. 600 shall be withheld by the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, then the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas or either of them upon their or his allowance being stopped shall be at liberty to apply for a partition of the said property, but shall not otherwise be at liberty to compel the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy to pay the said monthly sum of Rs. 600."

[322] Annexed to this agreement was a schedule which set forth all the immoveable properties (seventy-nine in number) referred to in the agreement. Part I of the schedule comprised fourteen properties situate in the Fort of Bombay, Warli and Girgaon. Part II of the schedule comprised sixty-five properties situate in Bombay, Thana, Poona, &c.

Subsequently to this agreement and until his death the plaintiffs continued to reside with Sir Mangaldas.

In 1886 the above-mentioned suit for partition (No. 444 of 1881) brought by Jugmohandas (defendant No. 9) was decided. By the decree therein made it was declared that a certain portion of the property claimed by Jugmohandas was ancestral property. But a large portion of the property claimed, including the fourteen properties in Part I of the schedule to the agreement, was held to be not ancestral but self-acquired by Sir Mangaldas, to which, therefore, Jugmohandas had no claim. The suit was referred to the Commissioner to take accounts of the partible property. For the report of the case see I. L. R., 10 Bom, 528.

Sir Mangaldas died on the 9th March, 1890, leaving a will dated 27th January, 1888.

By his will he directed as follows :—

"I direct my executors and trustees immediately on my death to take charge of all my moveable and immoveable property of every description, both ancestral and self-acquired, and for such purpose I have given them a power of attorney to take possession of the same during my lifetime, and I direct them, except as is hereinafter specially provided, to retain the same after my death until it has been finally decided in the suit No. 444 of 1881 brought by my son Jugmohandas against me and my other two sons as to how much of my property is ancestral and what self-acquired, and after which they are to deal with the same in manner hereinafter directed."

Then after referring to the decree in suit No. 444 of 1881, which directed accounts to be taken, the will continued as follows :—

"And whereas the accounts are now being taken in the office of the said Commissioner for the purpose of carrying out the directions and orders contained in the said decree of the 30th July, 1885, and according to the above direction I have filed an account of the ancestral property on the 19th day of January, 1888. Now, I hereby direct that if the said suit or any appeal in connection therewith or the said proceedings in the Commissioner's office shall be pending and undetermined at the date of my decease, my said executors and trustees do and shall continue my defence to the said suit or to any appeal in which I am respondent, and also all proceedings in the said [323] Commissioner's office, and do and shall continue the prosecution of any appeal from any order or decree or from any report of the Commissioner, which may have been commenced by me, and do and shall also be at liberty in their discretion to institute and prosecute any appeal in the said suit from any report or order by the said Commissioner or hereafter to be made in the said suit by any Court as to them shall seem expedient in the interest of my separate estate, and to carry up such appeal to the appellate Court of Bombay, and shall be at liberty to defend all appeals whatever which may be instituted hereafter by the plaintiff or second and third defendants in the said suit from any such report or from any order by the said Commissioner or from any order or decree of any Court in India whether of original or appellate jurisdiction, and I do further direct that upon the final order for partition (if any) being made in the said suit my executors and trustees shall make over to my son Jugmchandas his fourth share in such of my property as shall be finally determined to be ancestral and to which he may be decreed to be entitled.

"I direct that as soon as such share has been made over to my son Jugmohandas Mangaldas in pursuance of such final decree, my said executors shall distribute the rest and residue of may ancestral estate including my one-fourth share therein amongst and for the benefit of my sons, viz., Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas and their issue according to the rules of Hindu law, or shall make over the same undivided to them as co-parceners according as my said sons Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas shall then elect and determine.

"And whereas although I consider that I was in law justified in contending that none of the property of which I am in possession is ancestral property, I have yet in a certain indenture bearing date the 28th day of June, 1881, made between me of the first part, my son Tribhovandas of the second part and my son Purshotamdas of the third part, in order to promote feelings of mutual love and affection between me and my said sons and to avoid at the time litigation, expense and disputes admitted that the immoveable property mentioned and described in part I of the schedule, under the said indenture written (which is the immoveable property mentioned and described in the said schedule hereunder written) is ancestral property; and whereas it has been decided by the Court of first instance and such decision has been confirmed by the appellate Court that such property is not ancestral property, yet I am unwilling to disturb the said deed as between my said two sons, and I, therefore, hereby confirm the same. I direct that my said executors and trustees shall divide and distribute such part of my estate as is mentioned in the schedule hereto (except the property No. 14 in the said schedule) amongst and for the benefit of my two sons named, respectively, Tribhovandas Mangaldas and Purshotamdas Mangaldas, and their issue according to the rules of Hindu law. I devise and bequeath all my property at Girgaon Back Road and Khetvadi Road, as well as all the furniture, pictures, glass and crockery-ware and cooking utensils, that it may contain at the time of my death to my said executors and trustees upon trust for my son Tribhovandas and his heirs from the time of my death to allow him to occupy and use the same, and to enjoy the income thereof, and after the death of my said son Tribhovandas in trust to allow his widow to occupy and use the same and enjoy the income thereof, and after the death of my said son Tribhovandas in trust to allow his widow to occupy and use the same and enjoy the income thereof during her life; but if the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas [324] shall die without leaving male issue him surviving, then in trust (after the death of the survivor of them without leaving such male issue) to my son Purshotamdas and his heirs according to the rules of Hindu law.

"I devise my bungalow at Malabar Hill with its two separate compounds, out-houses and the furniture, pictures and cooking utensils, which shall be therein at the time of my death, unto my son Purshotamdas to be transferred to him twelve months after my decease.

"I devise all my property at Poona, moveable and immoveable, to my son Purshotamdas as an absolute devise, but the above devise to my said son Purshotamdas of my house and property at Malabar Hill and my property at Poona are only made on condition that he gives up to his brother Tribhovandas all his right and interest to the property or share in the property mentioned in the said schedule hereto, as piece of garden ground at Girgaon outside the Fort, and containing 12,000 square yards, and numbered 14 in such schedule hereto attached, being a portion of the ground under the bungalow and in the compound of my Girgaon residence, which is part of the subject-matter of the said deed of 28th June, 1881, and in the event of the said Purshotamdas not being willing to give up his claim to the said property, then I devise my said house and furniture at Malabar Hill and my said Poona property to my said son Tribhovandas."

Then after making various bequests the will gave the residue of the testator's self-acquired property to the University of Bombay as follows:—

"I devise and bequeath to my said trustees all the residue of my self-acquired property, both moveable and immoveable. I empower and direct my said trustees to sell and convert the same into money immediately after my decease and to recover all outstandings and to invest the proceeds in Government securities, and I direct that such conversion and investment shall, if possible, take place within six months after my decease and notwithstanding that the said suit No. 444 of 1881 shall be still pending, and that the said residue shall be unascertained, it being my wish that all the residue of my property shall be invested in Government paper so soon as possible after my decease. I direct my said trustees as soon as such residue has been finally ascertained and realized in manner aforesaid to devote the whole of the said residue to the founding of as many scholarships as possible at the Bombay University of the following description, and on the following conditions and to hand over all such residue to the Chancellor and Senate of the Bombay University on their agreeing to such conditions."

(Then followed the conditions).

In December, 1890, the executors agreed to deliver over to the plaintiffs such portions of the estate of Sir Mangaldas as were specifically or otherwise devised or bequeathed to them by his will, and (inter alia) they handed over the fourteen properties comprised in part I of the schedule, annexed to the agreement of the 28th June, 1881, and referred to in the above clause of the will.

[325] The plaintiffs now sued the executors, contending that the said fourteen properties being ancestral under the agreement and the will, they (the plaintiffs) were entitled not only to them but to all the accumulations and accretions thereof, which amounted in value to ten lakhs of rupees or thereabouts.

The University of Bombay (defendant No. 10) on the other hand claimed that the accumulations and accretions of the said properties formed part of the self-acquired property of Sir Mangaldas, and went to the University as part of the residue under the concluding clause of the will.

The following clauses of the plaint set forth the plaintiffs' claim :—

"9. The plaintiffs say that the executors of the said Sir Mangaldas have given possession to the plaintiffs of the said immoveable property mentioned in the said schedule hereto annexed and marked B as the ancestral property of the said Sir Mangaldas, but they have not delivered over to the plaintiffs the accumulations and accretions of and to the said ancestral property and which accumulations and accretions amount as the plaintiffs believe to the sum of rupees ten lakhs or more, on the ground that the same do not form a part of the said ancestral estate and that the same are or may be required for the purpose of paying the legacies directed to be paid by the said will, and that the same forms a part of the residue under the said will.

"10. The plaintiffs, however, charge and submit that the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy had no power or authority to dispose of the said ancestral property or its accumulations or accretions as aforesaid, and that such ancestral property and its accumulations and accretions are and must be deemed to be entirely unaffected by the said will of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy and belong to the plaintiffs and their heirs.

"11. The plaintiffs' further charge and submit that on a true construction of the said will of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy neither the said ancestral property nor its accumulations or accretions have been disposed of to the prejudice of the plaintiffs and their heirs, and that the intention of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy was that the legacies and payments directed by his will should be paid out of his self-acquired property only, and not otherwise.

"12. The defendants, the University of Bombay, however, contend that the aforesaid accumulations and accretions form a part of the self-acquired property of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, and they accordingly claim the said accumulations and accretions as a part of the residue under the residuary clause of the said will.

"13. The plaintiffs, however, submit that the said contention is groundless and invalid in law, and that the plaintiffs and their heirs are entitled to the said accumulations and accretions as a part of the said ancestral property."

"(1) That it may be declared that the will of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy is wholly inoperative and void so far as it purports to dispose of or to deal with the ancestral property, or any part thereof.

"(2) That it may be declared that as between the plaintiffs and the defendants (Nos. 4 to 8, the plaintiffs' children) Kissondas, Jamnadas, Goverdhandas, Ambadas, and Baba Purshotamdas on the one hand, and the executors of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy on the other hand, the said immoveable properties mentioned in the said schedule B and all their accumulations and accretions are ancestral property, and as such devolved upon the plaintiffs and their heirs according to Hindu law irrespectively of the said will.

"(3) That an account may be taken of the accumulations and accretions of the said ancestral property left by the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy and come to the hands of his executors, and that such accumulations and accretions may be ordered to be handed over to the plaintiffs for the benefit of themselves and their issue as members of an undivided Hindu family.

"(4) That it may be declared that as against the plaintiffs and their heirs the said accumulations and accretions do not form a part of the self-acquired property of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, and that no part thereof was or could be validly disposed of by the will of the said Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, and that no part thereof is or could be made available for paying any of the legacies directed to be paid by the said will.

"(5) That it may further be declared that the defendants, the University of Bombay, are not entitled to any part of the said accumulations and accretions, and that the same wholly belong to the plaintiffs and their heirs as aforesaid.

The executors put in a written statement in which they denied the plaintiffs' claim, and raised the various contentions which were subsequently discussed at the hearing.

The University of Bombay filed a merely formal written statement submitting its rights and the construction of the will to the Court, and at the hearing the counsel who appeared on its behalf withdrew after the issues were raised, and did not appear to argue the case.

The main points raised at the hearing were as follows:—

1. The properties comprised in part I of the schedule to the agreement of 28th June, 1881, having been declared by the decree in suit No. 444 of 1881 to be the self-acquired property of Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, what was the effect of the agreement of the 28th June, 1881, between him and his two sons (the plaintiffs) based upon his admission therein that these properties were [327] ancestral, and of the confirmation of that agreement by his will and the direction therein that the said properties should be divided and distributed between his two sons and their issue according to the rules of Hindu law?

2. Whether, if the corpus of the said properties became ancestral by virtue of the agreement confirmed by the will, the accumulations and accretions thereof were also ancestral?

OCT. 10

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

20 B. 316.

3. Whether the will was not inconsistent with the agreement and did not override its provisions, and whether the will did not purport to dispose of the said properties ?

4. Whether Sir Mangaldas could dispose of the said properties, or the accumulations thereof, by his will ?

5. Whether the plaintiffs had not, in fact, elected to take the said properties under the will, and not as ancestral property independently of the will, and were not now estopped from claiming the properties as ancestral ?

6. Whether the claim of the minor defendants to the properties as ancestral property could be barred by any election or estoppel of the plaintiffs ?

7. Whether the accumulations and accretions of the said properties were not the self-acquired property of Sir Mangaldas and were not devised by the residuary clause of his will to the University of Bombay ?

On the questions of election and estoppel, the defendants (executors) contended that the plaintiffs by their conduct had clearly elected not to assert their alleged rights to the properties in question, but to take them under the will which had been duly proved and the provisions of which they had observed and obeyed since the death of Sir Mangaldas. The executors relied (inter alia) on a deed of indemnity dated the 1st December, 1890, passed to them by the plaintiffs from all liability in respect of any of the testator's properties specifically devised or bequeathed to them by the said will which the executors had made over, or might thereafter make over, to the plaintiffs, pending the suit No. 444 of 1881, by which the ancestral estate was to be ascertained ; also upon another release, dated 23rd July, 1891, passed by the plaintiffs to the executors which released the latter from " all actions, suits, [328] accounts, claims and demands for or in respect of the said properties or the rents and profits thereof;" also upon certain evidence given by the first plaintiff (Tribhovandas) in a previous suit (No. 670 of 1892) in which he said : "I don't wish to dispute any of the provisions of the will. I have considered my position and elected to take under the will ;" and upon correspondence which had passed between the executors and the plaintiffs.

Vicaji (Lowndes with him), for the plaintiffs.—We take the properties in question as ancestral and also their accretions. The properties in dispute were no doubt declared by this Court in 1886 (suit No. 444 of 1881) to be the self-acquired property of Sir Mangaldas. But self-acquired property may be treated as ancestral property and may by agreement acquire that character—Mayne's Hindu Law (5th Ed.). para. 254; Gopalasami v. Chinnasami (1) ; Krishnaji Mahadev v. Moro Mahadev (2) ; Shankar Baksh v. Hurdeo Baksh (3). By the agreement of 28th June, 1881, it was agreed that these properties should be ancestral. That agreement was a family arrangement, and is binding. It was acted upon, and the plaintiffs observed its provisions until the death of Sir Mangaldas—Leake on Contracts (3rd Ed.), p. 289; Stapilton v. Stapilton (4). The property having thus been made ancestral by agreement, Sir Mangaldas could not dispose of it by will even if he desired to do so. But he clearly did not intend to dispose of it. He recognises in his will that the property had become ancestral, and expressly confirms the agreement which made it ancestral, and directs that the property should be distributed according to the rules of Hindu law. But by Hindu law, if the corpus of property is ancestral, its accumulations are also ancestral: see Mayne's Hindu Law (5th Ed.), para. 251. Neither the corpus of these properties nor their accumulations, therefore, vested in the executors, but devolved at once, on Sir Mangaldas' death, on the plaintiffs and their children who were joint with him (Act V of 1881, s. 4)—Henderson on Wills, p. 314. No doubt the will directs that the executors should take possession of the ancestral property, and they did so; but that was permitted by the plaintiffs merely out of respect for their father's wishes [329] and did not affect their legal rights. As to estoppel, the releases only relate to the rents or profits subsequent to the death of Sir Mangaldas —Leake on Contracts (3rd Ed.), pp. 796, 797; Turner v. Turner (1). There is no case here of election—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 167; Serrell on Election), 94. They also referred to Hurpurshad v. Sheo Dyal (2); Rampershad v. Sheochurn (3).

Kirkpatrick (Russell with him), for the minor defendants Nos. 4 to 8 in the same interest.—The agreement of June, 1881, was not that the properties in question should then for the first time become ancestral. It was a formal declaration and admission that they were then and had previously been ancestral in Sir Mangaldas' hands, i.e., ancestral according to Hindu law. That was the basis of the agreement. The agreement does not limit the sense of the word, and Hindu law recognises no limitations or variety in its use and meaning. There are not different classes of ancestral property with different incidents. If once property is ancestral, the legal result is that its accumulations are also ancestral. Therefore, in the absence of any limitation, the effect of the admission in the agreement was that the corpus and the then existing accumulations were ancestral. A fortiori all the accumulations since the agreement have been ancestral. The plaintiffs' children (the minor defendants) at birth took an interest in all his ancestral property. Sir Mangaldas could not dispose of any part of such property by will, and he recognises that he had no power to do so by the provisions with respect to the Girgaon property.

There is no case of election here. In order to put the plaintiffs to election, there must be, in the will, a clear intention on the part of the testator to give property not his own (White and Tudor, 6th Ed., Vol. I, p. 409). There is no such intention apparent. The will does not give the plaintiffs anything not the testator's own. Even if it be held that it gives them the properties in dispute (which we deny), it only gives them what was their's already by law. And it does not give them anything which should of right go to other persons. How, then, are the plaintiffs put to election? They, no doubt, have [330] allowed the executors to convey these properties to them and to pay probate duty on them and have executed releases, &c., but these acts were wholly unnecessary. Mere careless expenditure of the estate in this way could not affect their legal rights in that estate. In his evidence in suit No. 670 of 1892 the plaintiff did not use the word 'elect' in its legal sense. Further, the plaintiffs have never been in a position to elect, as the accounts have not been taken (White and Tudor, 6th Ed., Vol. I, pp. 429, 430).

But, in any case, the minor defendants are not bound by the plaintiffs election or estoppel. They have an interest independent of the plaintiffs in all ancestral property, and the plaintiffs' conduct could not destroy their right. They claim only their own. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were living at the death of Sir Mangaldas.

Nor is there an estoppel. The plaintiffs make no claim against the executors personally. The contest is with the case made by them on behalf of the University. The plaintiffs' conduct towards the executors cannot estop them as against the University. A plaintiff claiming against one party is not estopped by his conduct towards another. The executors are mere trustees and ought to be passive in this matter. The University does not plead the election or estoppel of the plaintiffs. It only submits its rights to the Court. The executors ought to be indifferent. They have no right to fight for one claimant at the cost of the estate. A claimant should fight his own case and at his own risk. But in no case could dealings with the executors estop the plaintiffs as against the University. They cited Gopalasami v. Chinnasami (1).

Scott (with Inverarity), for the executors.—The properties in question were self-acquired, and were declared to be so by the decree in suit No. 444 of 1881. The accumulations are, therefore, also self-acquired. The agreement only dealt with the corpus of the properties. But the agreement did not make the properties ancestral. It only estopped Sir Mangaldas from dealing with them as self-acquired. He could not deal by will with the plaintiffs' share, but he could deal with his own share, and he [331] could deal with the accumulations. The latter he has bequeathed as residue to the University.

Next, we say the plaintiffs clearly elected to take these properties under the will and not as ancestral property. The will vested the whole estate in the executors and directed them to divide his estate. The will was proved, and the executors took possession without objection. Probate duty was paid on all the estate, including the properties in question. The plaintiffs have taken conveyance of them from the executors, who paid all the costs of the conveyance. The executors have dealt with the properties since Sir Mangaldas' death, and the plaintiffs have recognised their right to do so under the will. They cannot now claim to ignore the will.

No claim for these accretions was made by the plaintiffs until the 14th July, 1893, and then the claim was only for the accumulations between the date of agreement and Sir Mangaldas' death. We rely on the correspondence between the executors and the plaintiffs, which shows that the plaintiffs elected to take under the will. We also rely on the releases given by the plaintiffs to the executors dated 1st December, 1890, and 23rd July, 1891, by which the executors were released from all liability in respect of these properties, and on the evidence given by plaintiff No. 1 in suit No. 670 of 1892, where he explicitly stated that he elected to take under the will. They referred to Howkins v. Jackson (2), Antaji v. Dattaji (3).

ancestral property or its accumulations and accretions, and for a declaration that the properties mentioned in sch. B to the plaint and all the accumulations and accretions are ancestral property, and as such devolved upon the plaintiffs and their heirs according to Hindu law irrespective of the said will, and for an account of such accumulations and accretions, and that the same may be handed over to the plaintiffs for the benefit of themselves and their issue as members of an undivided Hindu family.

[332] The undisputed facts of the case are as follows. Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, a well-known and wealthy inhabitant of Bombay, died on 9th March, 1890, having previously made his will, dated 27th January, 1888, probate of which was obtained by the first, second and third defendants on 8th May, 1890. At the time of his death, Sir Mangaldas had three sons, namely, the plaintiffs Tribhovandas and Purshotamdas, and the defendant Jugmohandas. The defendants Kissondas and Jamnadas, who are both sons of the plaintiff Tribhovandas, were also born before and living at the time of Sir Mangaldas' death. The defendants Gordhandas and Ambadas, who are sons of the plaintiff Tribhovandas, and also the defendant Baba, who is son of the plaintiff Purshotamdas, were all born after Sir Mangaldas' death. The defendant Jugmohandas had separated from Sir Mangaldas some time before his death, but the plaintiffs and their sons, who were living at Sir Mangaldas' death, were joint with Sir Mangaldas during the whole of his life, and are now still members of an undivided Hindu family.

It appaers that some time before 1881 there were disputes between Sir Mangaldas and his son Jugmohandas and that there was apprehension of similar disputes arising between Sir Mangaldas and his other sons; and for the purpose of quieting and settling such disputes an agreement was made between Sir Mangaldas of the first part, the plaintiff Tribhovandas of the second part, and the plaintiff Purshotamdas of the third part. This agreement, which is dated 28th June, 1881 (Ex. A), recites (inter alia) as follows:—[His Lordship read the agreement as above set forth, and continued:—]

It is admitted by the parties to the suit that, as a matter of fact, the properties mentioned in part I of the said schedule to the said agreement was not ancestral property, but was in reality the separate and self-acquired property of Sir Mangaldas, and that they were so declared in suit No. 444 of 1881, a decree in which was passed on 30th July, 1885, and was confirmed on appeal on 30th April, 1886 (Exs. D and E). This suit (No. 444 of 1881) was a partition suit brought by Jugmohandas alone against his father Sir Mangaldas and his brothers the plaintiffs Tribhovandas and Purshotamdas.

[333] By the will dated 27th January, 1888, Sir Mangaldas appointed the first, second and third defendants to be his executors, and directed (inter alia) as follows:—[His Lordship read the passages of the will above set forth and continued:—]

Under these circumstances it was argued before me on behalf of the plaintiffs,

1st. That the effect of the agreement was to make the property mentioned in part I of the schedule to that agreement absolutely ancestral.

2ndly. That the proceedings and decree in suit No. 444 of 1881, by which the said property was declared to be self-acquired, did not affect the agreement.

3rdly. That the agreement was confirmed by the will, and was, therefore, binding upon the executors.

OCT. 10.
ORIGINAL CIVIL.
20 B. 316.

4thly. That the corpus of the property being ancestral, all the accretions and accumulations, both prior and subsequent to the agreement, are also ancestral and have become a part of the ancestral property.

5thly. That the property and the accretions and accumulations being ancestral, the will is invalid and inoperative so far as it purports to dispose of the same.

I will deal with these contentions in their order :—

1st. It seems to me that the whole object of the agreement was to settle the disputes between Sir Mangaldas and his two sons amicably as far as possible. It is clear that one main dispute was as to the nature of the property in the hands of Sir Mangaldas, and, if no arrangement had been come to on that point, litigation would have certainly arisen between the parties. They came to an absolute agreement as to the nature of the property in part I of the schedule. As between the father and the sons it was, I think, declared to be ancestral. The rights of the parties were regulated and safeguarded on that footing, and I think, therefore, that whatever be the real nature of the property, it must as between the parties to the agreement be treated as ancestral.

2nd. As to the second point, I do not think it is necessary for me to decide it, as I am clearly of opinion that the third point [334] must be decided in favour of the plaintiffs. Sir Mangaldas in his will specially recites the decision of the Court in suit No. 444 of 1881, and says in express terms that he is unwilling to disturb the agreement, and indeed expressly confirms it.

As to the fourth point, it is no doubt true that under the general Hindu law the accretions and accumulations of the ancestral property would become a part of such property—Jugmohandas v. Sir Mangaldas (1). In this case, however, the property itself is not only decided by the Court to be self-acquired, but has been expressly admitted before me to have been of that nature. If it is to be treated as ancestral, it is not because it was so in reality, but because it is so admitted in the agreement, and because Sir Mangaldas himself was estopped, and, therefore, his executors are now estopped from disputing its character as ancestral property. But I find no provision in the agreement that the accretions and accumulations of the property were to be treated as ancestral. Indeed, the agreement in express terms leaves the nature of his other properties described in part II of the schedule, a part of which must according to the plaintiffs' contention have been acquired out of the accretions and accumulations of the property which was admitted to be ancestral, as an open question. In other words, Sir Mangaldas was in his lifetime and, therefore, his executors are now entitled to contend that all Sir Mangaldas' property (including the accretions and accumulations in question except that mentioned in part I of the schedule) was and is Sir Mangaldas' self-acquired property. If the other property was, in fact, acquired out of the rents and profits of the property in part I of the schedule, it would, in my opinion, be self-acquired property, because the property from which it was derived was in reality self-acquired, though admitted to be ancestral for the purposes of the agreement. In fact, I hold that there is no estoppel against Sir Mangaldas or his executors in regard to the nature of the accretions of the property, though there is an estoppel as regards the corpus of the property itself.

The fifth point assumes that both the corpus and the accretions [335] and accumulations of property must be treated as ancestral ; but, as I have already pointed out above, that is not necessarily the case here, and I am, therefore, of opinion that the will is inoperative only as regards the corpus of the property (which is ancestral by estoppel) and not necessarily as regards the accretions and accumulations, as to which there is no estoppel. In connection with the above points it must be remembered, that under the express terms of the agreement, Sir Mangaldas had wide powers of dealing with the ancestral property and of making donations out of it, unless they were made with the object of depriving his sons of their shares in such property.

The next question I have to determine is whether, as a matter of fact, Sir Mangaldas has disposed of the accretions and accumulations of the so-called ancestral property or not under the residuary clause of his will. It is to be observed that throughout the will he uses the expression "ancestral property" as equivalent to the immoveable property mentioned in the schedule to his will which corresponds with part I of the schedule to the agreement A. It is this property which he wishes to be divided between his two sons, Tribhovandas and Purshotamdas. All the rest of the property, whether immoveable or moveable, he evidently treats as self-acquired, and I am, therefore, of opinion that the expression "my self-acquired property, both moveable and immoveable," as used in the residuary clause of the will, must be construed to mean all property which was really self-acquired, except only so much of it as was included in part I of the schedule to the agreement A which Sir Mangaldas was desirous should be treated as ancestral property. I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the accretions and accumulations of any of the property mentioned in part I of the said schedule, being in reality self-acquired property, passed to the trustees under the residuary clause, although the corpus of the property was treated both under the agreement and the will as ancestral property.

I am, however, further of opinion that, having regard to the conduct of the plaintiffs and to the deeds passed by them subsequently to the death of Sir Mangaldas, they must be held to have accepted the will in its entirety, and to have acquiesced in all its provisions, and to have elected to take under it, and that it is now [336] too late for them to contend that they are entitled to an account of the accretions and accumulations of the so-called ancestral property. On 1st December, 1890, both the plaintiffs passed a deed of indemnity to the executors. On the same day the plaintiff Purshotamdas executed a release to the plaintiff Tribhovandas in respect of the 12,000 square yards forming a part of the Girgaon property. On the 11th July, 1891, both the plaintiffs obtained conveyances from the executors of the property devised to them under the will (Exs. I, J. K). Similarly, the executors conveyed to Purshotamdas the Poona property on 1st December, 1890 (Ex. No. 10), and obtained from Purshotamdas a release in respect of such property (Ex. No. 11). They also conveyed the Malabar Hill property to Purshotamdas on 15th March, 1893 (Ex. No. 12), and obtained from Purshotamdas a release in respect of such property, &c., on 25th March, 1893 (Ex. 13). Moreover, the petition for probate was filed on 17th April, 1890, and citation was served upon both the plaintiffs, but no objection was made by them. Further, both the plaintiffs were not only parties to, or cognizant of, the correspondence, accounts, receipts, &c., collectively put in as Ex. No. 1, but actually executed a release to the executors on 23rd July, 1891 (Ex. L). which, after reciting that the executors had rendered account of the rents and profits to Tribhovandas and Purshotamdas with which they were satisfied, and that they had requested the executors to hand over to them the properties in pursuance of the directions contained in Sir Mangaldas' will, provides that,

"In consideration of the premises, each of them the said Tribhovandas and Purshotamdas doth hereby release the executors and every of them and their and every of their heirs, executors and administrators estates and effects of and from all actions suits accounts claims and demands for or in respect of the said properties or the rents or profits thereof or any part thereof or for or in respect of the said direction contained in the herein-before recited will regarding the distribution of the said properties between the said Tribhovandas and Purshotamdas or for or in respect of any act or thing made, done or omitted by them the said executors or any of them in or about the execution of the trusts of the said will of the said testator Sir Mangaldas so far as relates to the said properties specified in the schedule hereto or in anywise relating thereto."

It must be observed that this schedule to the release (Ex. L.) corresponds with part I of the schedule to the agreement [337] A. The release (Ex. L) is, therefore, a complete release, not only in respect of the corpus of the so-called ancestral property, but also in respect of the "rents and profits thereof and all actions, suits, accounts, claims and demands for or in respect of the same."

It seems to me, therefore, impossible for the plaintiffs to contend that they can now maintain a suit for an account of the rents and profits of the so-called ancestral property either under or in opposition to the will. How completely the plaintiffs have, or at least the plaintiff Tribhovandas has acquiesced in the will, is further shown by Tribhovandas' own evidence in suit No. 670 of 1892 (Ex. 5) in which he says: "I don't wish to dispute any of the provisions of the will. I have considered my position and elected to take under the will."

On the whole, therefore, I am of opinion that the plaintiffs are not now in a position to maintain this suit for an account of the accretions and accumulations of the so-called ancestral property even if they could have done so immediately after Sir Mangaldas' death and before they so completely acquiesced in the provisions of the will, or at least before they had executed a complete release to the executors.

It was contended before me that the release must be so construed as to confine its operation to the plaintiffs' claims which accrued subsequently to the death of Sir Mangaldas. I am, however, of opinion that, having regard to the circumstances under which the release was executed, its construction ought not to be so limited, and that it was intended to extend to all claims in respect of the properties in question up to the date of the execution of the release.

It was also contended by Mr. Kirkpatrick that any acts of the plaintiffs prejudicial to the interests of their sons in regard to the property in question could not bind the sons after the property was once admitted to be ancestral. I do not think that this contention is well founded. The property was not in reality ancestral. It was only such for the purposes and by virtue of the agreement and I am of opinion that the plaintiffs, who made the agreement, were entitled to waive it or to rescind it if they [338] pleased, and that their sons could not prevent them from doing so. Under any circumstances this is a suit by Tribhovandas and Pursbotamdas (and not by their sons), and in my opinion they could not maintain it. I record my findings upon the issues as follows :—[His Lordship stated his findings.]

I, therefore, dismiss this suit; but, having regard to the complicated and difficult nature of the case, I think the most equitable course is to direct that the costs of all parties (those of the executors to be taxed as between attorney and client) should come out of the estate, that is, out of the estate which is not ancestral.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

DAVALAVA AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. BHIMAJI DHONDO AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), *Respondents.

[14th February, 1895.]

Mortgage—Mahomedan family—Mortgage by Mohomedan father—Suit by mortgagee against minor son after mortgagor's death—Decree—Possession—Minor son represented by his mother—Widow represents heirs—Decree—Daughters not parties, but bound by decree—Subsequent suit by daughters as heirs of mortgagor for redemption.

When in a mortgage suit the debt is due from the father, and after his death the property is brought to sale in execution of a decree against the widow or some of the heirs of the mortgagor, and the whole property is sold, then the heirs not brought on the record cannot be permitted to raise the objection that they are not bound by the sale simply because they are not parties to the record. This principle of law applies as much to a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law as to a Mahomedan family.

[339] Hari v. Jairam (1) and Khurshetbibi v. Keso (2), referred to and followed.

One Nur Saheb mortgaged his property in 1862 to Bhimaji and died in 1864, leaving a widow, a son and two daughters. In 1864 Bhimaji (the mortgagee) sued the minor son represented by his mother for possession as owner under the gahan lahan clause and got a decree on 30th September, 1864, and obtained possession in 1865. To this suit the daughters of Nur Saheb were not parties. Bhimaji held the land till 1887 and then sold it to Somana (defendant No. 2). In 1890 Nur Saheb's daughters brought this suit against Bhimaji and Somana to redeem the mortgage of 1862, contending they were not bound by Bhimaji's suit in 1864, not having been parties to it.

Held, that the plaintiffs could not redeem. They were bound by the decree obtained by the mortgagee in 1864.

contained a gahan lahan clause (i.e., a provision that, in default of payment within a certain period, the land should become the property of the mortgagee).

Nur Mahomed (the mortgagor) died leaving a widow Badana, a son Husein, and two daughters Davalava and Biyama.

In 1864 the mortgagee Bhimaji sued the minor son Husein, represented by his mother Badana, for possession of the land as owner under the gahan lahan clause in the mortgage-deed. He obtained a decree and got possession in 1865; and the land was then transferred to his name in the revenue books.

To this suit the daughters of Nur Saheb (Davalava and Biyama) were not parties.

Bhimaji held the land until 1887, in which year he sold it to Somana Fakira, whose name was then entered in the revenue books, and Somana (defendant No. 2) was in possession at the date of suit.

In 1890 the two daughters (Davalava and Biyama) of Nur Mahomed, his son Husein and his widow Badana brought this suit against Bhimaji and Somana to redeem the mortgage of 1862.

The Subordinate Judge held that the decree of 1864 was conclusive against Husein and Badana, but was not binding against the daughters Davalava and Biyama, as they had not been parties to that suit, and he decreed that they might redeem their shares in the land.

[340] On appeal the District Judge of Dharwar dismissed the suit, holding that all the plaintiffs were bound by the former decree. He observed :—

"That decree was passed against plaintiff No. 4 as representing her then minor son, plaintiff No. 3. It appears to me that this decree cannot now be questioned by plaintiff No. 3 or plaintiff No. 4 who were parties to the suit, and that plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 are also estopped from questioning defendant No. 1's ownership and defendant No. 2's ownership derived from defendant No. 1 by bona-fide purchase for valuable consideration.

"The plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 were represented by their mother, plaintiff No. 4, in that litigation. They have all along stood by and acquiesced in defendant No. 1 holding as owner for twenty-two years and defendant No. 2 for three years. As against defendant No. 2, they are estopped, as they stood by and gave him no warning of their claim. Plaintiff No. 1 became major in 1874-75, and plaintiff No. 2 became major in 1880, at the latest sixteen years after her father's death. The plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 have not sued to set aside the decree of 1865 within three years of their having attained majority. Their claim is also time-barred."

Against this decision the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Balaji Abaji Bhagvat, for the plaintiffs (appellants).—Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 are the daughters of the mortgagor and are sharers by Mahomedan law. Their mother Badana did not represent them in the former suit—Akoba v. Sakharam (1). They were not parties to it, and their rights are, therefore, not affected by the decree, and they have a right to redeem. Their rights are several, not joint rights. A Mahomedan mother, though de facto manager, does not represent her minor daughters. See Sita Ram v. Amir Begam (2) and Baba v. Shivappa (3). The case of Daulat Ram

v. Meher Chand (1) was with reference to a Hindu joint family. The rule laid down by it and other cases does not apply to Mahomedans. This suit is not barred by limitation, as sixty years is the time within which a redemption suit can be brought.

Manekshah Jehangirshah, for the defendant, respondent No. 2 (Somana).—The law on this point has been considerably modified by the decision of the Privy Council in Girdharee Lal v. Kantoo Lall (2). In the former suit and the proceedings therein the daughters and the son of Nur Mahomed (plaintiffs Nos. 1, 2 and 3) [341] were represented without fraud or collusion by their mother (plaintiff No. 4). Their interests, therefore, passed to the defendants. See Hari v. Jairam (3) and Khurshetbibi v. Keso (4).

Bhimaji got the property as owner by the decree of 1864, and the land was transferred to his name in the revenue register. His possession thus became adverse from 1865. Defendant No. 2 is a bona fide purchaser for value from him who was in possession without notice. He cannot, therefore, be ousted—Vasudeva v. Krishna (5); Venkatesh Appa v. Pira Saiba (6).

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—The first two appellants in this case are the daughters, the third appellant is the son, and the fourth appellant is the widow, of one Nur Saheb who mortgaged the land in dispute with respondent No. 1 in 1862. Respondent No. 1 brought suit No. 333 of 1864 on his mortgage-bond against the appellant No. 3, a minor represented by his guardian and mother, appellant No. 4. Appellants Nos. 1 and 2 were not parties to this suit.

The mortgage-bond contained a gahan lahan clause, and on the strength of this provision respondent No. 1 claimed to recover possession of the land as owner. An ex-parte decree was passed on 30th September, 1864, directing appellant No. 4, as representing appellant No. 3, heir of the deceased mortgagor, to make over possession of the land to respondent No. 1, and he accordingly obtained possession of it on 12th September, 1865. The khata of the land was soon after transferred from appellant No. 3's name to that of respondent No. 1. Respondent No. 1 remained in possession of the land till 1887, in which year he sold it to respondent No. 2.

The present suit was brought in 1890 by the four appellants as heirs of the deceased Nur Saheb to redeem the mortgage of 1862. Both the lower Courts held that the decree in suit No. 333 of 1864 was conclusive against the claims of appellants Nos. 3 and 4, who were parties to that decree. The Court of first instance, however, held that as appellants Nos. 1 and 2 were not parties to the former suit, it was still open to them to sue for [342] redemption to the extent of their 7/16ths share, and partial redemption was accordingly decreed. The District Judge in appeal held that all the appellants were estopped from redeeming the land by the decision in the former suit, in which appellant No. 4 represented her minor daughters as much as her minor son, and that the claim was also time-barred, as it was not brought within three years from the time when appellants Nos. 1 and 2 attained majority.

In second appeal, it was contended before us that appellants Nos. 1 and 2, not being parties to the former suit, could not be estopped by the decision in that suit, as appellant No. 4 did not, and as mother could not, under Mahomedan law, represent appellants Nos. 1 and 2, and further the suit was not barred, as sixty years' limitation applied to the redemption suit.

As regards the first point, the Courts were no doubt at one time inclined to hold, especially in the case of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, that only the right, title and interest of a father or other manager passed to the purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree against him, and that the interest of his sons or co-sharers, not parties to the record, remained unaffected. In the leading case on the subject—Deendyal v. Jugdeep Narain (1)—their Lordships of ther Privy Council, following two earlier rulings—Nugendar Chunder v. Kaminee (2) and Baijun v. Brij Bhookun (3)—appear to have ruled not only that the interest of a son, who was not a party to the suit against his father, did not pass to the auction-purchaser at the execution sale, but that the question of legal necessity could not be inquired into in the son's suit, and that the son was entitled to recover possession of the property, subject to the auction-purchaser's right to demand partition in a separate proceeding. This ruling in Deendyal's case governed the decisions in Jatha Naik v. Venktapa (4); Maruti v. Lilachand(5); Akoba v. Sakharam(6); Lakshman v. Kashinath (7); and was extended by these decisions to mortgage suits, which do not appear to have [343] been contemplated in Deendyal's case. In Assamathem v. Roy Lutchmeeput (8) the same principle was applied to Mahomedan claimants. A sister, who was not made a party to the record, was held not bound by a mortgage decree and an execution sale to which other heirs of her deceased father were parties. The facts of that case closely resemble those in the present dispute, and if the view therein upheld was accepted as still authoritative, the appellants Nos. 1 and 2 in the present case would be certainly entitled to succeed.

The authority of the cases noted above, however, has been considerably shaken by subsequent decisions. Their Lordships of the Privy Council had indeed in Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (9) following an earlier ruling (Hunoomanpersaud v. Mussamut Babooee(10) held that the interest of the son, who was alive, and not a party to the suit, would pass to a purchaser in an execution sale of the right, title and interest of the father under certain circumstances where the whole property was put up to sale by order of the Court. This view was more explicitly laid down by Sir Barnes Peacock in what has been since regarded as the leading case on the subject—Ishun Chunder v. Buksh Ali (11). Sir Barnes Peacock decided that if the debt for which the property is sold is not the widow's but her husband's debt, and the property sold also belongs to the husband, the widow, though a party to the record, must be held to have been sued in her representative character (as representing her husband's estate), and the proceedings against her as such representative would be effectual against the estate, notwithstanding that the son, who in that case brought his suit to set aside the sale, was not a party to the suit. This decision was re-affirmed in many subsequent decisions by the Calcutta High Court —Hakeem Bebee v. Khajah Gowhur Ali (12); Pursid Narain v. Honooman

In The General Manager of the Raj Durbhunga v. Maharajah Coomar Ramaput Singh (7) their Lordships of the Privy Council affirmed the correctness of the principle laid down in Ishan Chunder Mitter v. Buksh Ali Soudagar (8). The same point was similarly decided by their Lordships in Bissessur Lall v. Maharajah Luchmessur (9).

In Mussamut Nanomi v. Modun Mohun (10) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the decision in Deendyal's case did not bind them to hold that only the interest of the judgment-debtor, party to the record, passed by the auction sale to the purchaser. The last case on the subject is the decision of the Privy Council in Daulat Ram v. Meher Chand (11); see also Bhagbut v. Girja Koer (12). The decision in Daulat Ram's case was expressly relied upon by Sir C. Sargent, C. J., and Candy, J., in Vishnu v. Venkatrao (13) where it was held that if the entire equity of redemption was found to have been sold to the auction-purchaser the interest of the plaintiff in that suit (one of five brothers who was not a party to the record in the execution proceeding), would pass. This same doctrine was again affirmed in Jairam v. Joma (14) and Hari v. Jairam (15); and in this last case, their Lordships (Birdwood and Jardine, JJ.) expressly overruled the decisions in Maruti v. Lilachand (16) and Lakshman v. Kashinath (17) noticed before. It may, therefore, be now regarded as settled law that when, in a mortgage suit, the debt is due from the father, and after his death the property is brought to sale in execution of a decree against the widow or some of the heirs of the mortgagor, and the whole property is sold, then the heirs not brought on the record cannot be permitted to raise the objection that they were not bound by the sale simply because they were not parties to the record.

[345] It is, however, contended that this ruling is based on the peculiar constitution of a Hindu joint family, and that the analogy does not hold good in the case of Mahomedans. There is, however, no foundation for such a contention. One of the cases noted above related to Mahomedans, and the same principle was made applicable to them—Assamathem v. Roy Lutchmeeput (18) also Hukeem Bebee v. Khajah Gowhur Ali (19). In Assamathem v. Roy Lutchmeeput (18), this point was expressly considered by the Full Bench, and both the Chief Justice and Markby, J., held that the Mahomedan law is, if possible, more strict in its recognition of the obligation to pay debts. The succession is of the kind known as universal, and any one of the heirs of a deceased person stands as litigant on behalf of all the others with respect to anything due by the estate of the deceased. The creditor can seek his relief against one of several heirs in a case when all the effects are in the hands of that heir. If, as in the present case, the property was in the hands of the widow, appellant No. 4, that heir could be sued by the creditor as representing the entire estate, and a decree obtained against her would be binding against the other heirs. This view was given effect to by this Court in Khurshetbibi v. Keso (20), where it was held that the daughter of the deceased Mohomedan was bound by the sale in execution of a decree obtained against the son whose name appeared on the record. The present case is on all fours with this case. If possible, the present respondent's claim is stronger, as the property sold was mortgaged with respondent No. 1.

On a careful consideration of all these authorities, we have come to the conclusion that the decree passed in 1864, giving effect to the gahan lahan clause, bound the appellants Nos. 1 and 2 equally with appellants Nos. 3 and 4. The rights of a decree-holder who obtains possession as owner are, if possible, stronger than the case of execution purchasers, for there can be no room for doubt here that the whole property passed into respondent No. 1's possession under the forfeiture clause of the bond.

[346] It was, indeed, urged by appellant's pleader that appellant No. 4 could not act as guardian of appellants Nos. 1 and 2, as she was their mother, and our attention was drawn to Sita Ram v. Amir Begam (1) and Baba v. Shivappa (2). The point thus urged does not appear to arise in the present case. The widow and the son represented the estate, and it was immaterial whether the widow could or could not act as guardian. It may also be noted that, under Mahomedan law, the sons make the daughters residuary heirs only, and it is easy to understand the reason why the minor daughters were passed over by the creditor who brought the son's name on the record. We accordingly confirm the decree of the lower Court, and reject the appeal with costs on appellants.

JARDINE, J.—I concur. It has been admitted by the pleader for the appellants that the whole property had been mortgaged and was liable for the debt, and passed under the decree. If, then, the appellants were members of a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, there would be no difficulty in upholding the decision of the District Judge on the strength of Hari v. Jairam (3) and the judgments of the Privy Council there expounded. The present case is one of a Mahomedan family, to which in Khurshetbibi v. Keso (4) similar principles were applied. I follow that authority.

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of T. Walker, Assistant Judge of Ratnagiri, amending the decree of Rao Saheb R. B. Chitale, Subordinate Judge of Dapoli.

Suit for redemption. The plaintiff sued to redeem a mortgage. The defendants contended that the plaintiffs were not entitled to redeem without also paying off certain money debts secured by bonds which (they alleged) were by the terms of the bonds to be paid off before the mortgage was redeemed.

The lower Court passed a decree for redemption on payment of the bonds as well as of the sum due upon the mortgage.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Vasudeo R. Joglekar, for the appellants (plaintiffs).—The Judge was wrong in holding that we could not redeem the mortgage before the amount of the money bonds was paid. The decree passed by the Judge has clogged the equity of redemption. Supposing that the amount of the money bonds was a charge on the land, still as the suit was filed after the expiration of twelve years from the dates of the bonds, the claim for the amount is time-barred—Narayan v. Raoji (1).

[SARGENT, C. J., referred to Yashvant v. Vithoba (2).]

Ganesh K. Deshamukh, for the respondent (defendant.)—We rely on Hari Mahadaji v. Balambhat (3); Sundar Malhar v. Bapuji Shridhar (4).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—Having regard to the decision in Yashvant Shenvi v. Vithoba Sheti (2) affirming the validity of an agreement embodied in a mortgage-deed to postpone redemption of the mortgage until payment of another debt which had not been made a charge on the land, we are unable to hold that a similar agreement contained in a subsequent deed executed for a fresh consideration is invalid.

We, therefore, confirm the decree with costs.

[21st February, 1895.]

Police Act (XIII of 1856), s. 35, cl. 1—Fraudulent possession of property—Property reasonably suspected of being stolen—Duty of the prosecution to prove to the satisfaction of the Court that there exist reasonable grounds of suspicion– Onus probandi.

A person cannot be called on to account for his possession of property under s. 35, cl. (1) of the Police Act, XIII of 1856, unless there is evidence which satisfies, not the police officer, but the Court, after judicial consideration, that such property "may be reasonably suspected of being stolen or fraudulently obtained."

THIS was an application under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) for the exercise of the High Court's criminal revisional jurisdiction.

The accused was a carpenter employed by merchants in the Prince's Dock to open cases of liquor.

He was charged under s. 35 of Act XIII of 1856 (1) with having in his possession certain articles, (viz., two bottles of beer, some rectified spirit, three glass tumblers, and a quantity of figs and walnuts) reasonably suspected of being stolen or fraudulently obtained, and failing to account satisfactorily how he came by the same.

The accused was tried summarily on the above charge: the only evidence tendered for the prosecution was that of the shed supervisor in the Prince's and Victoria Docks, who said that, in consequence of certain information he had received, he called the police, who examined the accused's box, and found the above articles of which the accused could not give any satisfactory account.

The Chief Presidency Magistrate convicted the accused and sentenced him to one month's rigorous imprisonment

[349] Against this conviction and sentence the accused applied to the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction.

Macpherson (with him J. D. Neemuchwalla), for the accused.—Section 35, cl. 1 of Act XIII of 1856 is based on 2 and 3 Vic., c. 71, s. 24. It is copied word for word from the English Act. as appears from the Proceedings of the Legislative Council of India, Vol. 2, p. 258. As to the construction of this clause, I have not been able to find any reported decision either under the Indian Act or under the English Statute. The meaning of the clause appears to be that the accused cannot be called upon to account for the property in his possession until the prosecution prove to the satisfaction of the Court that there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that the property is stolen, or fraudulently obtained. There is no such proof offered in the present case. The conviction is, therefore, bad.

There was no appearance for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—An important question of construction arises in this case as to the meaning of s. 35, cl. 1 of Act XIII of 1856, which is as follows :—"Whoever has in his possession, or conveys in any manner, anything which may be reasonably suspected of being stolen or fraudulently obtained, shall, if he fails to account satisfactorily how he came by the same, be liable to a penalty not exceeding one hundred rupees or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding three months." These words are taken from 2 and 3 Vic., c. 71, s. 24, as appears from comparison and from the discussion in the Legislative Council of India. The assiduity of Mr. Macpherson, who appears for the accused, has failed to discover any case dealing with the construction of the clause either in the Indian Act or the Act of Parliament, or of the similar clause in the English Statute about naval stores. We have, therefore, to construe the words by principle without the help of direct authority. It being a penal enactment which shifts the burden of proof of innocence at a certain point on to the accused, it has to be construed strictly. We are of opinion that, before the accused can be called on to account for the property, there must be evidence amounting to proof to the satisfaction, not of the [350] police officer or witness, but of the Court, that the accused possessed or conveyed a thing of which this may be predicated—we mean after judicial consideration by the Court—viz., that the thing "may be reasonably suspected of being stolen or fraudulently obtained." This phrase is used as an adjective; and unless it applies, accused ought not to be called upon to account nor to be convicted. The phrase is different to that used about the information on which the police may under s. 93 proceed to search—"reasonable cause for suspecting, &c." The words in both sections imply reasonable grounds for suspecting that there has been a theft or fraud.

(1) Section 35, cl. (1', Act XIII of 1856, provides as follows :—"Whoever has in his possession, or conveys in any manner, anything which may be reasonably suspected of being stolen or fraudulently obtained, shall, if he fails to account satisfactorily how he came by the same, be liable to a penalty not exceeding Rs. 100, or to imprisonment' with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding 3 months."

In the present case no evidence was given that any theft of articles of the sort found with the accused had taken place at the docks; nor that the accused had been seen under any circumstances of suspicion near the place where the merchants keep such things; or had concealed the things found with him, or that they were articles of a sort so unique or strange or precious as might raise reasonable suspicion of his honesty. We are of opinion that the case of Reg. v. Spencer (1), though more apposite to the words of s. 95, is in accordance with our view. There the words in 25 and 26 Vic., c. 114, s. 2, "good cause to suspect" used as regards the powers of the police to search poachers are interpreted. Baron Martin said: "Good cause to suspect means a reasonable ground of suspicion upon which a reasonable man may act." That case makes it doubtful whether in the one now before us the police were justified in making the search. The ground of suspicion is not disclosed in the evidence.

The Court, therefore, sets aside the conviction and sentence.

Where in execution of a decree a person not a party to the suit is dispossessed, his dispossession does not give him a cause of action within the jurisdiction of the Mamlatdar. Section 332 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) applies.

The delivery of possession under s. 263 of the Civil Procedure Code contemplates the decree-holder being placed in actual possession by possibly dispossessing, in the eye of law, a third person who is not affected by the decree. The mere formal delivery of possession cannot of itself effect such dispossession unless the deprivation of possession be complete as a fact, a conclusion which the Court has to form on the whole of the evidence. It does not make any difference if such a decree is in a partition suit.

the decision of Rao Saheb K. B. Bhide, Mamlatdar of Chikodi in the Belgaum District.

The applicant Ramchandra Subrao obtained a Civil Court's decree against Ramchandra Shripat and another for partition of certain lands and recovery of possession of a third share therein, and in execution of that decree recovered possession through the Collector of Belgaum.

The opponent Ravji bin Vithu Parit then brought a possessory suit against the applicant in the Mamlatdar's Court, alleging that he had been in possession and enjoyment of the lands for many years, and that the applicant (defendant) Ramchandra wrongfully obstructed his enjoyment thereof. He prayed for the removal of the obstruction.

[352] The Mamlatdar finding, on the evidence, that the opponent (plaintiff) had been in actual enjoyment of the lands, and was not present when possession was given to the applicant (defendant), awarded the claim and passed a decree for the plaintiff.

The applicant thereupon applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule nisi calling on the opponent Ravji to show cause why the Mamlatdar's decree should not be set aside.

Balaji A. Bhagvat appeared for the applicant (defendant) in support of the rule.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan appeared for the opponent (plaintiff) to show cause.

The case came on for argument before a Division Bench composed of Bayley, Acting C. J., and Fulton, J., who referred the point involved in the case to a Full Bench with the following remarks :—

Judgment.—Entertaining some doubt whether in this case we ought to follow the decision in Ramaji Govind v. Yaswada (1) we refer to a Full Bench the following questions which appear to arise in this application :—

Whether a delivery of possession in execution of a decree for partition has the effect of dispossessing a third person not a party to the suit who was previously in possession and was not present when the delivery took place ?

If so, whether such dispossession constitutes a cause of action under the Mamlatdars' Act ?

Attention is called to the decisions in Gulabbhai v. Jinabhai (2) and Vinayak v. Jankibai (3).

The point was argued before a Full Bench consisting of Sargent, C. J. and Jardine and Candy, JJ.

Balaji A. Bhagvat, for the applicant (defendant).—Where a party is dispossessed in execution of a decree of a Civil Court, [353] a Mamlatdar has no jurisdiction to entertain a possessory suit filed by that party. Even when a decree-holder is put in formal possession of the property, the remedy of the person in actual possession is under the Civil Procedure Code and not in the Mamlatdar's Court. The fact that the person dispossessed in execution of a Civil Court's decree was not present at the time of the delivery of possession is immaterial—s. 332 of the Civil Procedure Code ; Ramaji Govind v. Yaswada (1).

Manekshah J., Taleyarkhan, for the opponent.—We had nothing to do with the Civil Court's decree, as we were not a party to that decree.

(1) P J. (1878), p. 56. (2) 13 B. 213. (3) P. J. (1894) p. 195.

We had been for a long time in possession of the land. Our possession was legal, and it was wrong to deprive us of our possession in our absence by proceedings of which we had no notice and with which we were in no way connected.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by

SARGENT, C.J.—The delivery of possession, which is directed to be given by s. 263 of the Civil Procedure Code, contemplates the decree-holder being placed in actual possession, and the language of s. 332 of the Civil Procedure Code shows that the possibility is assumed that in effecting such delivery a third person may become dispossessed, by which must be understood that such a state of things may have occurred as would amount to his dispossession in the eye of law, or what is sometimes called juridical dispossession. The mere formal delivery of possession, which consists in the reading by the officers on the land of the order for putting the decree-holder in possession, and taking a receipt from him, cannot of itself effect such dispossession. Whether what occurs on the occasion of giving such formal delivery has that effect, is a question of law and fact; but it is clear, we think, on the authorities, that there is no dispossession in the eye of the law, unless the deprivation of possession is complete as a fact, a conclusion which the Court has to form on the whole of the evidence—see Lindley's Jurisprudence, p. cxxiii—although what may occur may amount to a disturbance or obstruction of possession.

[354] Again, he who occupies land in the absence of the possessor does not, according to Savigny, "at the moment acquire juridical possession:" Savigny, p. 261. In other words, it must be followed up by other acts of possession of which the third party has notice. This would seem to afford the only possible answer to the abstract question referred to us; for as regards a third person—assuming, as we do, that he was not affected by the decree—it cannot matter that the decree was in a partition suit. In Ramaji Govind v. Yaswada (1) it is quite possible that the Court considered that the third person was present and did not obstruct.

With respect to the second question, we are of opinion that, in the case of dispossession of a third party in execution of a decree, s. 332 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies, and that it does not constitute a cause of action within the jurisdiction of the Mamlatdar.

In cases not falling under s. 117 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), a denial of the lessor's title prior to suit is, notwithstanding s. 84 of the [355] Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879), a sufficient cause of action to enable the lessor to recover possession without notice to quit.

The object of s. 84 of the Land Revenue Code is to define the nature of contract of tenancy, but the landlord's right of forfeiture arising from denial of his title is no part of the contract of tenancy, but is a right which the law implies in all cases from the relationship of landlord and tenant. If the Legislature had intended to exclude the right of forfeiture in cases of annual tenancies, there would have been express provision to that effect.

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of Rao Bahadur Kashinath Balkrishna Marathe, First Class Subordinate Judge of Ratnagiri with Appellate Powers, reversing the decree of Rao Saheb S. M. Karandikar, Second Class Subordinate Judge of Devgad.

Suit by the plaintiffs to recover possession with mesne profits of certain land leased to defendant No. 1 and for the removal of a cattle-shed erected by him. The plaintiff based his claim on a rent-note of 1887 executed by defendant No. 1 as principal and defendant No. 2 as surety, or in the alternative on his general title.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for the plaintiff, holding defendant No. 1 was an ordinary yearly tenant of the plaintiff under Bombay Act I of 1880, s. 8.

Defendant No. 1 appealed and at the hearing of the appeal contended that the plaintiff had given him no notice to quit, and that without such notice he could not be ejected.

The plaintiff on the other hand alleged that in a previous suit brought by him against the defendant he (the defendant) had denied his title, and that, therefore, notice was not necessary.

The appellate Court reversed the decree and dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiffs were not entitled to eject the defendant without giving him notice to quit. The following is an extract from the judgment:—

"My finding on the said issue (namely, Is the plaintiff entitled to eject the defendant without giving him notice to quit?) is in the negative; for,

* Second Appeal No. 883 of 1892.

† Section 84 of the Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879):—

"84. An annual tenancy shall, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be presumed to run from the end of one cultivating season to the end of the next. The cultivating season may be presumed to end on the 31st March.

"An annual tenancy shall require for its termination a notice given in writing by the landlord . . . at least three months before the end of the year of tenancy, at the end of which it is intimated that the tenancy is to cease. Such notice may be in the form of sch. E, or to the like effect."

under s. 84 of the Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879), every landlord can turn out his tenant only upon giving him a formal notice in time. The plaintiff-respondent's pleader urges that the defendant denied his title in the written statement filed in the suit which he withdrew with permission to bring the present suit. The pleader files a copy of the written statement (vide Ex. 11 of the appeal record). I do not think that the former written statement or the written statement filed in the present suit contains any disclaimer of the plaintiff's title to sue for rent. The [356] defendant admits that he has been paying an amount of rent to meet the dasta or assessment, and the defendant admits that, as mortgagee, at least of the khoti, the plaintiff is entitled to receive some rent. The defendant doubtless denies the plaintiff's absolute ownership and possession, but he concedes to the plaintiff being mortgage-owner of the khoti, and thus entitled to treat the defendant as his khoti tenant. The tenant-defendant is, therefore, entitled to a notice before he can be ousted. The plaintiff's former suit and the present are, however, a continuation of the same suit, and if a disclaimer is entered at any stage of the suit, the plaintiff cannot plead the non-necessity of a formal notice to quit according to the ruling in I. L. R., 15 Bom. 407."

The following is the translation of the defendant's written statement in the previous suit referred to in the above extract :—

"Written statement of Lakshman Devji Kandar, defendant No. 1, is as follows :—

"1. The thikan (plot) mentioned in the plaint does not belong to the plaintiff by right of ownership, nor is it under his vahavat, nor did I pass to the plaintiff the kabulayat referred to in the plaint, and there was no reason for me to give it in writing. As there is disagreement between plaintiffs and us, the plaintiffs with the aid of persons acting in collusion with them and their debtors fabricated the said kabulayat with the intention of taking away my property.

"2. The village of Mauje Bavsi is a vatan khoti village belonging to us and other bhaubands; and out of the said village, the plot in dispute belongs to us by right of khasgi (private) ownership, and the possession thereof has been with us by right of ownership from the time of our ancestors.

"3. The khoti right in connection with our village has gone to the plaintiffs by mortgage from the ancestors of us and other bhaubands, and they have been carrying on the vahivat of the khoti as such (i.e., mortgagees). Therefore we have paid to the plaintiffs every year 0—3¾, three maunds and three quarters of paddy and rupee one in cash as assessment of the land in dispute. Accordingly we offered the amount of assessment for the year in dispute, but the plaintiffs did not take it. I am willing to pay the same to the plaintiffs.

"4. As I am not a private tenant of the plaintiffs, I am not liable to pay them the amount of khand or income, and no statement made in the plaint is true.

"5. The suit filed by the plaintiffs without ground may be rejected and my costs awarded from them."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan appeared for the appellants (plaintiffs).

Nagindas T. Marphatia appeared for the respondent (defendant No. 1).

JUDGMENT.

The second appeal came on for hearing before Bayley, Acting C. J., and Fulton, J., and the following judgment referring the case to a Full Bench was delivered by [357] FULTON, J.—In this case the plaintiffs sued to recover possession of land leased to the defendant under a rent-note and for rent and mesne profits. The Second Class Subordinate Judge, while holding that the rent-note was not proved, awarded the claim on the ground that the defendant was an ordinary or yearly tenant within the meaning of s. 8 of Bombay Act I of 1880. On appeal, the First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., reversed the decree for want of the notice, which, under s. 84 of the Land Revenue Code, was required to terminate the tenancy. The plaintiffs have now appealed; and on their behalf Mr. Manekshah has urged that no notice was necessary, as previous to the institution of the suit the tenant had disclaimed the landlord's title. The question then arises, whether there has been a legal termination of the tenancy.

The 84th section of the Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879) is as follows:—

"An annual tenancy shall in the absence of proof to the contrary be presumed to run from the end of one cultivating season to the end of the next. The cultivating season may be presumed to end on the 31st March.

"An annual tenancy shall require for its termination a notice given in writing by the landlord to the tenant or by the tenant to the landlord at least three months before the end of the year of tenancy at the end of which it is intimated that the tenancy is to cease. Such notice may be in the form of sch. E or to the like effect."

It will be observed that unlike the corresponding provisions of s. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), which declare a tenancy from year to year to be "terminable" by notice without excluding the operation of the other modes of termination recited in s. 111, s. 84 of the Land Revenue Code enacts that an annual tenancy shall require a notice for its termination, and thus uses language which seems to preclude the suggestion that it can be terminated otherwise. Mr. Manekshah endeavoured to distinguish between the termination of a tenancy and its forfeiture; but we are unable to see how it can be held that any proceeding which brings to an end the relationship [358] of landlord and tenant does not involve a "termination" of the tenancy. The phraseology of s. 111 of the Transfer of Property Act, and the remarks in s. 9 of chap. VIII of Woodfall's Treatise on the Law of Landlord and Tenant, show that where the doctrine of forfeiture prevails, a disclaimer of title is treated as determining the tenancy at the election of the landlord.

Consequently, as the law of this Presidency provides that an annual tenancy shall require a written notice for its termination, it seems at least doubtful whether such a tenancy can be terminated in any other way, unless there has been an agreement between the parties (as in the case of a surrender accepted by the landlord) to waive the requirements of the section.

It was contended, however, that apart from the section the decisions of this Court showed that a tenancy can be terminated in consequence of a disclaimer of title prior to suit. The subject is very fully discussed in Vithu v.

Dhondi (1), in which the learned Judges, dissenting from Baba v. Vishvanath (2), held that a plaintiff seeking to dispossess an annual tenant must allege a cause of action prior to suit and could not rely on a subsequent disclaimer, and doubted whether the setting up of a permanent tenancy was such a disclaimer as would work a forfeiture. In Krishna v. Ladu (3) Sargent, C.J. and Telang, J., said : " We agree in the opinion expressed by the Court in Vithu v. Dhondi that the setting up by the defendant of a permanent lease does not constitute such a denial of title as to relieve the owner from giving notice to the tenant." The question, however, still remains, whether by a denial of title prior to the suit there can be a termination, in this Presidency, of an annual tenancy of an agricultural holding. No decision expressly on the point has been cited to us, and, apart from the cases, of which Baba v. Vishwanath is the type, in which the defendant in his written statement denied the annual tenancy, and was, therefore, held to have waived his claim to notice, we have not been able to find any case in which an annual tenant has been ejected on the [359] ground that he had denied his landlord's title prior to the institution of the suit. Gopalrao v. Kishor (4) may perhaps be relied on ; but it is not clear whether the decision that the plaintiff was under no obligation to prove notice was based on the defendant's plea or on the fact of his previous denial of title. It must, however, be conceded that in Vithu v. Dhondi, Raghunath v. Kika (5) and Krishna v. Ladu it appears to have been assumed that an express disclaimer of the landlord's title by the tenant prior to suit would operate as a forfeiture ; but it is to be observed that the wording of s. 84 was not discussed.

Under these circumstances it seems, having regard to the uncertain state of the law in India about forfeiture as shown by the conflicting nature of the decisions noticed in Purshotum v. Dattatraya (6) and further illustrated in Vithu v. Dhondi and subsequent cases, desirable to refer to a Full Bench the question now under consideration. On the one hand, there has been a considerable expression of opinion that under certain circumstances a disclaimer may work a forfeiture of an annual tenancy, and on the other there are the terms of s. 84, which may have been intended to place the relationship of landlord and tenant on a secure basis and to prevent unnecessary litigation by removing all uncertainty as to the method by which it may be terminated. The corresponding provisions of s. 43 of Bombay Act I of 1865 were differently worded.

In case it be held that a disclaimer of title may operate as a forfeiture of an annual tenancy, the further question will arise whether Ex. 11, on which Mr. Manekshah relies, contains such a disclaimer. On this point the recent decision that the mere setting up of a permanent tenancy is not such a denial of title as to relieve the owner from giving notice to the tenant (which seems to show that in this respect Vivian v. Moat (7) cannot safely be followed in India) leaves it uncertain whether such a statement as is recorded in Ex. 11 can be looked upon as sufficient to justify the landlord in determining the tenancy without notice.

[360] The questions to be referred are :—

(1) Whether in this Presidency a disclaimer of the lessor's title by the annual tenant of a holding to which s. 84 of the Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879) applies, is, if made prior to suit, a sufficient cause of action to enable the lessor to recover possession without proof of notice to quit ?

(2) If so, whether the statements contained in Ex. 11 constitute a disclaimer of title ?

If these questions are decided in favour of the plaintiffs, the appeal will have to be remanded on the other points raised in it ; and in any case it will have to go back for decision as to the plaintiffs' right to recover rent for the years in dispute. This point appears to have been overlooked in the lower appellate Court. It was also passed over in the memorandum of second appeal ; but as Mr. Manekshah has explained that the omission was due to oversight, we have allowed him to raise it in argument.

The reference was argued before a Full Bench composed of Sargent, C.J., and Jardine and Candy, JJ.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan, for the appellants (plaintiffs).—The defendant did not admit his tenancy but set up his title as absolute owner. He denied our title before the suit. He thus waived his right to notice to quit—Vithu v. Dhondi(1); Jamsedji v. Lakshmiram (2); Vivian v. Moat(3). There are various modes of terminating a tenancy, and a notice to quit is only one of those modes—Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant, Chap. VIII.

Nagindas T. Marphatia, for the respondent (defendant No. 1).—The Judge has found that there was no denial on our part of plaintiff's title. Section 84 of the Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879) is applicable to the present case, and the tenancy must be put an end to in the way mentioned in that section—Vithu v. Dhondi (1). The language of the section is imperative, and no tenancy can be determined without notice. See also ss. 111 and 117 of Act IV of 1882.

[361] The next point is whether the defendant's written statement (Ex. 11) amounts to a denial of the plaintiff's title. We submit that it does not. We say in it that we are entitled to hold the land on payment of the assessment. Under the Khoti Act (Bom. Act I of 1880) assessment is considered as rent. The fact that there is a dispute between the parties does not amount to a denial of the landlord's title—Krishna v. Ladu (4).

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by

SARGENT, C. J.—The first question for determination is, whether by a denial of the lessor's title prior to suit there is in this Presidency, having regard to s. 84 of the Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1874), a sufficient cause of action to enable the lessor to recover possession without notice to quit in the case of an annual tenant to which that section applies. The object of s. 84 is to define the nature of the contract creating an annual tenancy, which, it is to be remarked, may be for agricultural or other purposes both as regards the period during which it runs and the landlord's power of determining it. The landlord's right of forfeiture, however, arising from disclaimer of his title, although it is treated as determining the tenancy at his election, is no part of the contract of tenancy, but is a right which the law implies in all cases from the relationship of landlord and tenant. Had it been the intention of the Legislature to exclude the right of forfeiture in the case of all annual tenancies, we should have expected to find it expressly provided for.

Section 111 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), which gives the right of forfeiture, is, in common with all the provisions of Chap. V of the Act, declared to be inapplicable by s. 117 of the Act in the case of all leases for agricultural purposes, except so far as the Local Government may have otherwise declared. That Act, however, did not become the law of this Presidency before January, 1893, subsequent to the institution of this suit. In Vithu v. Dhondi (1), which was a case in which it was assumed that notice was required by s. 84 of the Land Revenue Code, it was not contended that the right of forfeiture had been taken away by the section.

[362] We think, therefore, that the first question should be answered in the affirmative assuming the case not to be governed by s. 117 of the Transfer of Property Act. To the second question, viz., whether the disclaimer contained in Ex. 11 constituted a disclaimer of title, the only answer we can give to it is that it depends upon the construction of Ex. 11 read in connection with the evidence in the case.

The Full Bench having sent back the case to the Division Bench which had made the reference to the Full Bench for final disposal, the following judgment was given :—

JUDGMENT OF THE DIVISION BENCH.

The First Class Subordinate Judge A. P. has not found as to the nature of the defendant's tenure, and it, therefore, is impossible for us, having regard to the judgment of the Full Bench, to determine whether the statements in Ex. 11 constitute a disclaimer of title such as to enable the plaintiffs to recover possession without notice to quit.

Under these circumstances we must reverse the decree of the lower appellate Court and remand the appeal for a fresh decision on the various points which arise, including the question as to the plaintiffs' right to recover rent for the years in dispute. Costs to follow the result.

Decree reversed and case remanded.

Under s. 2 of the Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869) a District Court has jurisdiction to make a decree for dissolution of marriage upon being satisfied that the adultery charged has been committed in India without going into evidence as to the place of the marriage of the parties.

[363] After the District Court had passed a decree for dissolution of marriage, but before the confirmation of the decree by the High Court, the petitioner, in ignorance of the law, married another woman, but he ceased to cohabit with the woman on discovering his mistake. Under the circumstances the High Court made the decree absolute, holding that under s. 14 of the Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869) it had a discretion to do so.

The decree having awarded damages against the co-respondent, and he not having appealed on the question of damages, it was contended that the High Court could only deal with that part of the decree which dissolved the marriage.

Held, under the Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869), that the Court had the fullest power to deal with the case according as justice might require, including the award of damages by the Court below.

Ravenscroft v. Ravenscroft (1) followed.

THIS was a reference by W. H. Crowe, District Judge of Poona, submitting for confirmation his decree in suit No. 2 of 1894 under s. 17 of the Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869).

Suit by the plaintiff for dissolution of his marriage on the ground of his wife's adultery with the co-respondent, or, in the alternative, for judicial separation on the ground of desertion. He also claimed damages from the co-respondent.

The respondent did not appear in the lower Court.

The co-respondent denied the adultery charged.

The Judge found that the alleged adultery with the co-respondent was proved ; that the petitioner was entitled to a decree for dissolution of marriage, and that he was entitled to damages to the extent of Rs. 500 from the co-respondent. The following are extracts from his judgment :—

"This is a suit brought by petitioner C. J. Kyte for a dissolution of his marriage with K. Kyte on the ground of her adultery with the co-respondent T. C. Cooke. The fact of the adultery having been committed by the respondent is not disputed. She admits in her deposition that she was married on the 9th February, 1891 ; that she left her husband about four months after, that she returned to him subsequently for a few days at a time, and finally left him on the 15th October, 1891. She admits also that she was delivered of a child in the month of January, 1893, in Bombay. She denies that it is the child of the co-respondent, as she states other friends visited her and came up to her sitting-room after her shop was closed. The birth of the child fifteen months after the respondent left the petitioner is conclusive proof that adultery has been committed. The question now arising is whether it is proved that the respondent committed adultery with the co-respondent. * * * The [364] acts of familiarity of the co-respondent and the daily intimacy deposed to, afford the strongest grounds for believing that adultery must have been committed. The petitioner under s. 34 of the Divorce Act has claimed Rs. 5,000 as damages. It has also been contended that the petitioner is not entitled to any damages, as there is no proof that he has suffered any loss in reputation, comfort, happiness, &c., and that the parties had lived separate for so long a time, and further that there has been unjustifiable delay in bringing his petition. I do not find that there is any unreasonable delay in seeking the aid of this Court. The child was born in January, 1893, and the petition was filed within a year. The separation of the parties was due to the respondent leaving her husband's roof. There is nothing to show that he consented thereto. There is no doubt that the loss of the companionship of his wife must have caused the petitioner considerable mental pain and disturbance, and his domestic happiness has been destroyed. The measure of damages in these cases is the value of the wife. Looking at all the circumstances as disclosed by the correspondence between the petitioner and the respondent during the short period of their married union, I am of opinion that the sum of Rs. 500 will be an appropriate amount to be paid by the co-respondent to the petitioner, and I decree accordingly that the petitioner is entitled to a dissolution of his marriage with the respondent and to recover the sum of Rs. 500 from the co-respondent as damages. Costs on co-respondent. The decree is subject to the decision of the High Court."

The case came up for confirmation under s. 17 before a Full Bench consisting of Sargent, C. J., and Jardine and Fulton, JJ.

Mahadeo V. Bhat appeared for the co-respondent.—There is no evidence produced to prove the marriage and the place where it took place. No issue was raised with respect to the fact of the marriage.

[FULTON, J.—No one denied the marriage.]

Marriage must be proved. Non-denial or even mere admission of marriage would not do—Bai Kanku v. Shiva Toya (1).

[SARGENT, C. J.—Strict proof of marriage is not necessary. The mere fact that people apply to a Court for divorce raises a presumption of marriage.]

This is not a case for damages. Damages are awarded "for the injury done to the husband in alienating his wife's affections, destroying the comfort he had from her company and raising children for him to support and provide for." See Mayne on Damages, p. 490. Here the evidence shows that the petitioner and his wife had not lived happily together before the co-respondent knew them. No damages should, therefore, be awarded.

[365] The respondent, who appeared in person, being at this stage called on to state what she had to say, informed the Court that the petitioner had married a second wife since the decree, and she produced papers to support her statement. The petitioner's pleader, who was not aware of this fact, thereupon asked for time to inquire into the matter. The Court granted a fortnight's adjournment. The petitioner in the meanwhile filed an affidavit stating that he was ignorant that he could not re-marry before the confirmation of the decree by the High Court, and that as soon as he came to know that it was illegal for him to do so, he had ceased cohabiting with his second wife.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan for the petitioner.—The petitioner has filed an affidavit alleging complete ignorance of law forbidding him to marry again before the confirmation of the District Judge's decree by the High Court. He has ceased to cohabit with the woman whom he has married.

Under these circumstances the decree should be made absolute. It is within the discretion of the Court to do so—Wickham v. Wickham (2).

The question of damages cannot be gone into in this Court, as the co-respondent has not appealed against the award of damages (ss. 17, 34, 39 and 55 of the Indian Divorce Act IV of 1869). There is no reason to interfere with the order of the lower Court. In England the damages are assessed by the jury, and they are not interfered with.

Mahadev V. Bhat in reply.—The order awarding damages is part and parcel of the decree for dissolution of marriage. This Court has to examine the decree as a whole. No appeal is necessary against the order for damages under the Divorce Act.

APPEL-LATE CIVIL.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by

JARDINE, J.—The District Court took no evidence as to the place of the marriage of the petitioner and the respondent. It had, however, jurisdiction under s. 2 of Act IV of 1869 to make a decree for dissolution upon being satisfied of the adultery being committed in India.

Two points of law arose at the hearing, which, following s. 7 of the Act, we determined upon the practice of England. It was objected for the respondent that, since the District Court passed its decree, the petitioner went through a form of marriage [366] with another woman. He has filed an affidavit, alleging bona fide ignorance of the law, and that on discovering his mistake he ceased to cohabit with that woman. The question is whether the Court should refuse now to make the decree absolute. This is within its discretion—Noble v. Noble (1) ; Wickham v. Wickham(2). Looking at the publicity of the fact of the marriage, we give credence to the statement of the petitioner that he acted bona fide, believing that he had been released by law from his previous wife, and with an absence of any intention to commit adultery. The adultery ought not, therefore, to stand in the way of a decree absolute. Our discretion under s. 14 of the Act is similar to that of the English Court under s. 31 of 20 and 21 Vic., c. 85.

The other point of law was raised by Mr. Manekshah for the petitioner, to the effect that as the co-respondent had not appealed against the award of damages, this Court could only deal with the part of the decree which dissolves the marriage. Sections 17, 34, 39 and 55 of the Indian Act were referred to and compared with 20 and 21 Vic., c. 85, s. 33, and 23 and 24 Vic., c. 144, s. 7. We ruled—following the Judge Ordinary in Ravenscroft v. Ravenscroft (3)—that the intention of the Act of 1869 was to give the Court the fullest power to deal with the case according as justice might require, including the award of damages by the Court below.

The merits of the case are to be considered in two aspects. First as regards the respondent. There is evidence that in January, 1893, she gave birth to a child, which must have been conceived in adulterous intercourse, a fact substantially admitted. The decree for dissolution must, therefore, be made absolute.

Then we have to consider the case of adultery as regards the co-respondent. There is evidence of a long continued familiarity, extending over periods both before and after the birth of the child. The respondent deposed that during November and December, 1892, she lived in a hotel at Byculla under the name of Stewart. The manager and butler of the hotel depose to a man [367] paying her weekly visits under the name of Mr. Stewart ; the butler identifies the co-respondent, and the manager thinks he is the same person. Cooke has not called his sister or other person to explain his frequent visits at Poona.

On the whole the conclusion of the District Judge is supported by the evidence ; and the decree as against the co-respondent must be confirmed, and he must pay the petitioner's costs in this Court.

Decree made absolute.

NOTE.—Any marriage by one of the parties, the other living, before the expiration of six months from the date of the decree or before the time for appealing has expired is null and void. See Macrae on the Indian Divorce Act.—Notes to s. 57, p. 146.

MOTI GULABCHAND AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. MAHOMED MEHDI THARIA TOPAN (Original Defendant), *Respondent.

[2nd August, 1895.]

Evidence—Burden of proof—Promissory notes—Proof of consideration—Suit by professional money-lender against a young man recently come of age—Presumption—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 44, 45 and 118—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114, illus. (c).

Professional money-lenders sued a young man recently come of age to recover certain loans of money alleged to have been advanced by them to him on promissory notes. The defendant, who under the will of his father was entitled to a large property but had not yet come into possession of it, was of an extravagant and reckless character. He pleaded, as to part of the consideration for the notes, that he did not receive it, and as to a further part, that the consideration was immoral. In dealing with the case the Court laid down the following propositions, not as rules of law, but as guides in considering the evidence in such a case :—

(1) That upon the above facts the ordinary presumption that a negotiable instrument has been executed for value received was so much weakened that the defendant's allegation that he had not received full consideration was sufficient to shift the burden of proof and to throw upon the money-lenders (the plaintiffs) the obligation of satisfying the Court that they had paid the consideration in full. That is the practical effect of illus. (c) to s. 114 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872).

(2) Where the plaintiff, in answer to such a defence, affirmed that he had paid [368] the consideration in full, and was corroborated by his books and witnesses, the onus of proof again shifted over upon the defendant.

(3) The burden of proof thus thrown upon the defendant could only be met by a perfectly truthful and harmonious statement which the Court felt able to rely upon with confidence. In the absence of this, the ordinary presumption laid down in s. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) must prevail, viz., until the contrary is proved the presumption should be made that every negotiable instrument was made for consideration.

SUIT to recover Rs. 4,500 on three promissory notes for Rs. 1,500 each executed by the defendant (respondent) to the plaintiffs on the 15th June, 1894.

The defendant admitted execution of the notes, but alleged that he had received only Rs. 1,080 in respect of them, and he submitted that the plaintiffs were, "in any event, only entitled to the said sum of Rs. 1,080, with reasonable interest thereon, such sum being the only valid consideration for the said notes."

At the hearing, issues were raised as to whether the defendant received any valid consideration for the notes except the sum of Rs. 1,080, and whether the plaintiffs were entitled to recover anything more than that amount.

The defendant was a young man, only recently come of age. The plaintiffs were professional money-lenders.

The lower Court (Fulton, J.) found the first of the above issues in the defendant's favour, and passed a decree for the plaintiffs for Rs. 1,080 with interest, and ordered the parties to pay their own costs.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—This was a suit in which the plaintiffs sought to recover the amount of three promissory notes for Rs. 1,500 each from the defendant. The defence was that, as to part of the consideration for the notes, the defendant did not receive it, and as to a further part that the consideration was immoral. The defendant admitted that he had received consideration to the extent of Rs. 1,080, and [369] brought that sum into Court, his doing so having been made a condition of his being granted leave to defend the suit. The plaintiffs allege, on the other hand, that they paid full consideration for the notes. The question between the parties is thus one of pure fact.

The law which allows the defendant to dispute the consideration for the notes is contained in ss. 44 and 45 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881). It is unnecessary in this case to have recourse to the doctrine of equity, which relieves expectant heirs from unconscionable bargains. The Division Court accepted the defendant's version of the transaction as correct. From that finding the plaintiffs have appealed.

Before adverting to the facts, which it will be necessary for us to do in some detail, we desire to state how the onus of proof in a case like this, irrespective of the order in which the evidence is given, substantially lies. The defendant, when he executed the notes sued upon, was a young man who had only attained his majority nine months previously. He appears to have been of an extravagant and reckless character. He was entitled to a large amount of property under the will of his father, the late Sir Tharia Topan of Zanzibar, but had not come into possession of it, as on account of family disputes it was, in common with the rest of the family estate, in the hands of a receiver appointed by this Court. The plaintiffs are a Marvadi firm who are by profession money-lenders.

These facts being admitted (apart from the technical rule laid down in s. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act) the ordinary presumption that a negotiable instrument has been executed for value is so much weakened, that the allegation of the young man that he has not received full consideration is sufficient to shift the burden of proof and to throw upon the money-lender the obligation of satisfying the Court that he has paid the consideration in full. This is, we think, the practical effect of illustration (c) to s. 114 of the Evidence Act, and its explanation. Where the plaintiff in answer to such a defence affirms that he has paid the consideration in full, and is corroborated by his books and witnesses (if any), the onus again shifts. The strength of the case to be rebutted will depend upon the credit to be given to the testimony adduced by the plaintiff as tested by cross-examination, the weight to be attached to his [370] books arising from the manner in which they are kept, and the presence or absence of suspicious circumstances in connection with them, and upon its inherent probability. When these circumstances concur in the plaintiff's favour, a heavy onus is thrown upon the defendant which can only be met by a perfectly truthful and harmonious statement which the Court feels able to rely upon with confidence. In the absence of this, the ordinary presumption laid down in s. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act must prevail: "Until the contrary is proved. . . . . the presumption shall be made that every negotiable instrument was made for consideration." We do not lay down the above propositions as rules of law, but we state them as the guides which we have placed before us in examining the evidence which has been recorded. [His Lordship then examined the evidence at length, and the appellate Court varied the decree and gave judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed.]

TESTAMENTARY JURISDICTION.

Before Mr. Justice Starling.

A. M. KER (Plaintiff,) v. A. MEAKIN AND OTHERS (Defendants).*
[14th October and 6th November, 1895.]

Probate—Will—New page of will not duly executed substituted by testator after execution of will—Defendant relative—Revocation.

After the death of the testator (H. G. Meakin) his will was found among his private papers in a sealed envelope with the words "H. G. Meakin's will, not to be opened until after death" written in his handwriting on the face of the envelope. The will was wholly in his writing and was written on four separate sheets of paper pinned together. The first, third and fourth pages were of blue paper and of the same size, and each of them was signed at the bottom by the testator and by two witnesses. The fourth page stated the date of the will (28th November, 1892) and was signed by the testator and was duly attested by the said two witnesses. The actual execution of the will took place (as was proved by [371] evidence) in March or April, 1894. The second page, however, was of a different kind of paper from the other pages and of smaller size and was signed by the testator, but not by witnesses. This second page contained a bequest to a child who was born in May, 1894, i. e., some months after the will was executed. The executor propounded the will.

Held, that probate must be refused.

APPLICATION for probate. This was an application by an executor for the probate of the will of one Henry George Meakin, of Poona, who died on the 1st June, 1895, at Carlsbad in Austria, leaving a large amount of property in India.

The will in question was wholly in the testator's handwriting and was written on four separate pages of foolscap paper pinned together. The first, third and fourth pages were of blue paper and of the same size, and each of them was signed at the bottom by the testator, and each page also bore the signature of two witnesses, viz., S. Armstrong and R. W. Hughes. The fourth and last page stated the date of the will as the 28th November, 1892, and bore the signature of the testator, and the attestation clause signed by the above two witnesses.

The second page, however, was of white paper and of smaller size than the others, and was headed "Sheet No. 2," the other papers having no such headings. It was signed by the testator at the bottom like the others, but it did not bear the names of any witnesses. There were no corrections in the will, nor any break of sentence between the first and second pages or between the second page and the third.

The whole document was found, all the pages being pinned together, after the testator's death among his private papers in a sealed envelope with the words "H. G. Meakin's will, not to be opened until after death," written on the face of the envelope in the testator's writing.

As above stated, the date of the will on the fourth and last page was the 28th November, 1892. The attesting witnesses, however, deposed that they saw the testator sign the several pages of the will at the end of March or beginning of April, 1894, and that they, on that occasion, wrote their names at the foot of the attestation clause at the end of the will, and also on several preceding pages. Neither of them, however, could say how many pages of the will were signed by the testator or by themselves, nor could they say what was [372] written on any of the pages, as they saw nothing but the blank space at the bottom of each page where they signed their names, and the attestation clause at the end of the will.

At the time of the execution of the will, the testator's family consisted of his wife, two sons and three daughters, all of whom survived him.

From the evidence it appeared that, immediately after the will had been thus executed in March or April, 1894, the testator (on the 12th April, 1894) went from Poona to Ootacamund, where he stayed for some time, and there in May, 1894, his wife gave birth to a daughter who was afterwards named Doris May. This child died a few weeks after the testator, viz., on the 13th July, 1895. The second page of the will contained a bequest to Doris May.

Lowndes, appeared for the executor.

Russell, for the testator's children.

Inverarity, for the testator's widow.

The following issues were raised :—

1. Whether the document propounded by the executor, or any and what part thereof, is the last will and testament of H. G. Meakin, deceased ?

2. Whether the same, or any part thereof, is entitled to probate ?

Inverarity, for the widow.—We wish, if possible, that probate should be granted of the will as it stands, but if that cannot be done, then we say there is no will at all of which probate can be granted, and there is an intestacy. The second page is not duly executed and was evidently written by the testator after the birth of Doris May, and substituted for a page which he destroyed. The new page is probably identical with the old, except that it contains the legacy to the recently born daughter Doris May. But we say that the testator although he removed and destroyed the old second page, did not intend to revoke it except in the belief that the new page which he substituted for it would form part of his will. But the new page is not duly executed, and cannot, therefore, form part of the will. The result is that there was no effectual revocation of the old page, and, therefore, although it is not forthcoming it still forms part of [373] the will. It is, however, not propounded, and there is no evidence of what it contained.

The matter then stands thus. The executor is asking for probate of a will a substantial part of which he cannot prove. Probate, therefore, cannot be granted. It is a case of dependent relative revocation—Williams on Executors (9th Ed.), p. 126, et seq.; In the goods of McCabe (1). The document now before the Court cannot be said to be the last will of the testator, or, if it is, there is an important part of it missing and of which there is no evidence. It is as if the will had been lost, and the Court was asked to grant probate of such parts of it as could be remembered. The Court cannot grant probate of a part even by agreement— In the goods of Pearse (2); Woodward v. Goulstone (3).

Russell (for the testator's children).—We ask that probate should be granted of the will as it stands. The Court will struggle against an intestacy—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 25; Cooper v. Bockett (4); Greville v. Tyler (5); In re Gaussen (6); Singleton v. Tomlinson (7); In the Goods of Pearse (2).

JUDGMENT.

6*th November*, 1895. STARLING, J.—In this case, the plaintiff, as one of the executors, propounds in solemn form a paper alleged to be the last will of H. G. Meakin, and asks for probate thereof. All the parties are willing that probate should go of the will as it now stands if the Court can see its way to follow that course. Although, as at present advised, assuming this to be a "suit," a compromise between the parties thereto would be admissible—see Norman v. Strains (8)—yet no compromise has apparently been come to, and counsel do not suggest that such is the case, but simply that the parties are willing that the Court should grant probate of the will as it stands, if in law that can be done. A compromise to that effect would raise different considerations, because I should have to consider, amongst other things, whether it was for the benefit of the infant children that that course should be pursued, and it seems to me, at first sight, that such a compromise would not be for the benefit of the infant daughter at any rate. I must, therefore, decide the case on the merits.

[374] The will is wholly in the handwriting of the testator, and is written on three half-sheets of foolscap and the first page of another whole sheet. It, therefore, consists of four pages. The first page is headed "The will of H. G. Meakin;" the second, "sheet No. 2;" and the third and fourth pages have no heading. It is properly executed and attested at the end, and the first and third pages bear at the foot the signatures of the testator and the two attesting witnesses. These three pages are of blue foolscap. The second page at the foot bears only the signature of the testator, is slightly smaller than the others, and is of white foolscap. The whole document was found, all the pages being tied together, after the testator's death, amongst his private papers, in a sealed envelope, with the words "H. G. Meakin's will, not to be opened until after death" on the front in the testator's handwriting.

The attesting witnesses deposed to having, in Poona, seen the testator sign the will at the end, and also some preceding sheets in the presence of both of them, and to having themselves subsequently signed at the end of the will, and on certain preceding sheets, but neither of them can say how many preceding sheets were so signed by the testator or by them, nor can they say what was on any of the sheets, as they saw nothing but the blank spaces where they were to sign, and the attestation clause at the end.

The will is dated the 28th November, 1892, but was signed and attested at the end of March or beginning of April, 1894; and on the 12th April, H. G. Meakin went from Poona to Ootacamund, where he remained several months, and there on the 25th or 28th May, 1894, his wife gave birth to a daughter, who was subsequently named Doris May. The testator died on the 1st June, 1895.

Now looking at sheet No. 2, it is evident that it could not have been part of the will of the testator which was executed by him and signed by the attesting witnesses in March or April, 1894, because there is in it a legacy to Doris May, who was not then born. That and the facts that the sheet is of a different colour and size, and is signed at the foot by the testator only, point to the conclusion that it must have been inserted by him subsequently to the execution of the rest of the will, and consequently it cannot be admitted to probate. [375] Looking further to the fact that the clauses at the top of sheet No. 2 run on naturally and sensibly from those at the bottom of p. 1, and that those at the bottom of sheet No. 2 run on naturally and sensibly to those at the top of p. 3, the natural inference to be drawn is that the testator removed the original p. 2, and substituted for it the present "sheet No. 2," in which he inserted the name of Doris May as a legatee, but whether he made any other and what alterations therein cannot be determined, as there is no evidence forthcoming as to what were the contents of the original p. 2.

Looking at the facts disclosed in this case, this seems to me to be a case of dependent relative revocation, and that the testator removed the original p. 2, and substituted the present one under the impression that he was thereby making a substitution which was good in law, and that he would not have revoked what was in the original page except under that belief; consequently, if there had been any evidence as to what the contents of the original page were, I should have granted probate of the will as it originally stood, as was done in the case of Duncan v. Crabb (1) and in the goods of McCabe (2). If there had been such evidence, this case would have been on all fours with the former of those just cited. There being no such evidence, what remains of the original will consists of a legacy to Mrs. Meakin of the testator's plate and household effects and stores, the appointment of trustees, and a bequest to them of his real and personal estate not otherwise disposed of, directions for the management of such estate, a residuary clause distributing the residue among his sons and daughters, the appointment of his wife and the trustees as executrix and executors, and a bequest to each of the trustees who should act as executors. We have, therefore, little more left than the appointment of trustees and executors and the residuary clause, while there is evidence in the document as propounded that there were in the original will legacies to the sons and daughters at any rate, and no provision is now made for the maintenance of the testator's widow, although he and his wife lived together on affectionate terms up to the time of his death. Can I, then, grant probate of the will as it would stand after removing sheet No. 2? Mr. Inverarity argued that I could [376] not, relying on the dicta of Lords Herschell and Fitzgerald in Woodward v. Goulstone (1). The dicta in that case seem to have been referred to in the case of Treloar v. Lean (2), the facts of which were very similar to those of the present one, except that three sheets had been substituted in an already executed will instead of one. In that case, Butt, J., refused to grant probate of the will or any part of it. Since then there seems to have been no other case on this point.

Acting upon the opinion of Lords Herschell and Fitzgerald in the House of Lords case above cited, and following Treloar v. Lean, I feel bound to refuse probate of that portion of the will now propounded which remains after removing sheet No. 2. To hold otherwise would be to give effect to a portion only of the testator's last will under a state of circumstances in which the Court would be unable to determine whether the part missing was the most or least important of the whole will, and in many cases the result would be to give the bulk of the testator's property to persons on whom he had intended to bestow only what remained after others had been made partakers of his bounty. This distinguishes this case from In the goods of Woodward (3) and In the goods of Maley (4), in both of which cases it was apparent that the portions destroyed were small or unimportant so far as the distribution of the testator's property was concerned. Costs of all parties, taxed between attorney and client, to come out of the estate.

JAYNARAYAN MEGHRAJ AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. ISMAIL KARAMALI AND OTHERS (Defendants).* [12th December, 1895.]

Execution—Decree—Property attached in execution of decrees of Small Cause Court and High Court—Execution proceedings in Small Cause Court transferred to High Court—Property realized in execution—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 295.

The plaintiffs obtained a decree in the High Court against the defendant and in execution attached goods in the defendant's shop. These goods, however, were already under attachment in execution of certain decrees obtained in the Small Cause Court against the defendant. On the 4th September, 1895, by an order of the High Court made on the application of the plaintiffs the execution proceedings in the Small Cause Court suits were transferred to the High Court, and it was ordered that the attached property should be realized by the High Court. The records of the execution proceedings in those suits were lodged in the Prothonotary's office. On the 26th September, 1895, the decree-holder in one of the Small Cause Court suits obtained an order from the Judge in chambers directing the Sheriff to take charge of the attached property and realize it by sale. The Sheriff accordingly sold the property and certified the sale to Prothonotary's office. The plaintiffs subsequently (under the rules of the Sheriff's office) applied to the Prothonotary for payment to them of the amount realized or so much

Held, that the holders of the Small Cause Court decrees were entitled to share rateably with the plaintiffs in the High Court suit in the proceeds of the property sold in execution by the Sheriff.

IN chambers.

This was an execution matter arising as follows :—On the 21st January, 1895, the plaintiffs obtained a decree in the High Court against Karmali Khakibhai (father of defendant) for Rs. 5,839 and costs, and in execution attached certain goods in the defendant's shop. These goods, however, were already under attachment in execution of a Small Cause Court decree (No. 346/27498 of 1895) obtained by one Rajbai against Karmali and also in another decree in another Small Cause Court suit. The plaintiffs' attachment was, therefore, effected under s. 272 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) by a letter, dated 20th July, addressed to the [378] Registrar of the Small Cause Court requesting him to hold the property until the further order of the High Court. By a similar letter dated the 1st March, 1895, other goods in a godown belonging to the said Karmali were also attached by the plaintiff.

By an order of the High Court, on the Appellate Side, made on the 4th September, 1895, on the application of the plaintiff, the execution proceedings in the Small Cause Courts suits were transferred to the Original Side of the High Court, and it was ordered that the attached property should be realized by the High Court. The records of the execution proceedings in those suits were accordingly lodged in the Prothonotary's office.

The Small Cause Court suits having thus been transferred, Rajbai, the decree-holder in one of them, applied ex parte on the 26th September, 1895, to the Judge in chambers, and obtained an order directing the Sheriff to take charge of the attached property and realize the same by sale. The Sheriff accordingly sold the property and filed his certificate certifying the sale in the Prothonotary's office, dated 30th November, 1895.

Rules Nos. 4, 7 and 8 of the Rules of the Sheriff's office are as follows :—

(4) Such certificate shall be filed in the office of the Prothonotary and the Prothonotary shall at the request of the judgment-creditor at whose instance the realization was made, certify what persons, if any, have within twelve months prior to the realization applied to the Court for execution of decrees for money against the same judgment-debtor, together with the amount appearing in the Register of Suits to be payable under such decrees.

(7) Should the judgment-creditor at whose instance the realization was made, neglect or refuse to apply for the certificate, or to serve the notice hereinbefore mentioned, any other person entitled to share in the assets shall he at liberty to apply for such certificate and serve such notice.

(8) If the Prothonotary shall certify that no person has within twelve months prior to the realization applied to the Court for execution of a decree for money against the judgment-debtor, the judgment-creditor may at once apply to the said Prothonotary for an order directing the Sheriff to pay to him the amount realized or so much thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy his decree.

No application having been made by Rajbai or the other Small Cause Court decree-holder under the above Rule No. 4, the decree-holder in the High Court suit (Jaynarayan) applied under the above Rule No. 7 for the certificate required under Rule 4, and on the 27th [379] November, 1895, the Prothonotary granted the certificate stating that Jaynarayan was the only person who had applied.

Under the above Rule No. 8, Jaynarayan then applied to the Prothonotary for an order for payment. The Prothonotary referred the matter to the Judge in chambers, who directed Jaynarayan to give notice of the application to Rajbai.

The matter now came on for hearing before the Judge in chambers.

Macpherson, for the plaintiff, admitted that the plaintiffs in the Small Cause Court suits had applied for execution in that Court in those suits.

JUDGMENT.

B. TYABJI, J.—I do not intend that my judgment in this case should in any way throw doubt upon the cases cited by Mr. Macpherson, as, in my opinion, they do not touch the state of facts which exists here. In this case this Court has made an order consolidating all the execution proceedings in the two cases in the Small Cause Court and brought them up here to be dealt with in conjunction with the case now before me in this Court. Under these circumstances, I hold that this Court has adopted all the proceedings in execution in the Small Cause Court, and will deal with them as if they had taken place here. Consequently I must hold that the applications for execution made in the Small Cause Court by the plaintiffs in the suits in that Court are applications for execution under s. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and enure to the benefit of these plaintiffs in the same manner as if they had themselves transferred their decrees to this Court, and [380] thereafter made applications for execution here. These plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to share rateably with the plaintiffs in this suit in the proceeds of the property sold in execution by the Sheriff.

Before Sir Charles Sargent, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Fulton.

R. A. HILDRETH (Original Defendant), Applicant v. SAYAJI PIRAJI CONTRACTOR (Original Plaintiff), *Opponent. [21st February, 1895.]

*Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 100, 108 and 157—Presidency Court of Small Causes—Adjourned hearing—Absence of defendant—*Ex parte decree—Practice—Procedure.

A defendant is entitled to avail himself of s. 108 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) where an ex parte decree is passed against him at an adjourned hearing.

[F., 31 M. 505=4 Ind. Cas. 1167=19 M.L.J. 222=4 M.L.T. 216; R., 2 N.L.R. 179 (189).]

THIS was an application, under the extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882), against the decision of the Full Court (consisting of C. W. Chitty, First Judge, and M. H. Hakim, Fifth Judge) of the Bombay Court of Small Causes.

The applicant (defendant) was sued by the opponent (plaintiff) in the Court of the Fifth Judge of the Bombay Court of Small Causes to recover the sum of Rs. 507. At the first hearing of the case on the 7th May, 1894, the defendant appeared, denied the plaintiff's claim, and applied for a postponement to enable him to produce his witnesses. The case was consequently adjourned till the 14th June. The defendant did not appear in the Court on that day, and a decree was passed in the plaintiff's favour.

On the 16th June the defendant went to the Court, and he was then informed that a decree had been passed against him. On the 11th July he applied to the Judge that the decree should be set aside, and obtained a rule nisi for a new trial. The rule was subsequently made absolute, and a day was fixed for the re-trial of the case.

[381] In the meantime the plaintiff applied to the Full Court to set aside the order for re-trial under s. 108 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and obtained a rule nisi calling on the defendant to show cause why the order for re-trial should not be set aside, and after argument of the rule the Full Court set aside the order for re-trial, holding on the authority of Sitalal Hari v. Hiralal (1) that as the decree was passed at an adjourned hearing it was not ex parte.

The defendant now applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction and obtained a rule nisi calling on the plaintiff to show cause why the order of the Full Court should not be set aside.

R. A. Hildreth (the applicant) appeared in person in support of the rule.—The Full Court was wrong in holding that the decree was not ex parte. I submit that the decree is ex parte, and I am entitled to relief under s. 108 of the Civil Procedure Code. Section 157 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) is applicable to the present case, and it provides that the Court should dispose of the suit in one of the modes prescribed by chap. VII. Section 108 is included in chap. VII, and, therefore, I am entitled to the benefit of that section. See Doyal Maistree

v. Kupoorchund (1) ; Ramtahal Ram v. Rameshar Ram (2), Hira Dai v. Hira Lal (3).

B. R. Bamanji (with S. F. Billimoria), appeared for the opponent (plaintiff) to show cause.—It was at the request of the defendant that an adjournment was granted in order that he might be able to produce his witnesses. He had, therefore, notice of the adjourned hearing, and having failed to appear on the appointed day it is not now open to him to say that the decree is ex parte. The reference in s. 157 to Chap. VII of the Code indicates merely the procedure to be followed. It does not necessarily give to the defendant the relief which he would have been entitled to if the decree had been passed under that chapter. The Privy Council have in Zain-ul-abdin Khan v. Ahmad Raza Khan (4) pointed out the distinction between a case [382] decided ex parte in the absence of one of the parties at the first hearing and a case decided in the absence of the defendant on the date to which the hearing of the suit was adjourned at the defendant's request. The Calcutta High Court followed the Privy Council ruling in Sital Hari v. Hiralal (5) which, we submit, is applicable to this case.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The Small Cause Court has decided on the authority of Sital Hari v. Hiralal (5) that s. 108 does not apply where an ex parte decree has been made at an adjourned hearing.

The question turns upon the construction to be put on the words in s. 157, that the "Court may proceed to dispose of the suit in one of the modes directed in that behalf by Chap. VII or make such other order as it thinks fit." Section 100 is the only section in that chapter applicable to the case under which the Court could proceed to dispose of the suit, and one of the modes which the Court may adopt as provided by clause (a) of that section is that it may make a decree ex parte. Section 108 of the same chapter, however, says that "in any case in which a decree is made ex parte against a defendant he may apply to the Court for an order to set it aside." The Calcutta Court say that "the reference in s. 157 to Chap. VII is merely to indicate the procedure of the Court and not to give a defendant the privilege to which he is entitled, if the suit was decided ex parte strictly within the terms of s. 100." No doubt it provides for the procedure of the Court, but if such procedure includes the making an ex-parte decree, there would appear to be no sufficient reason for holding that the decree is not subject to the usual incident of such decrees (viz., an application by the absent defendant to set it aside and have the suit restored, as provided by s. 108 of the chapter). It is plain that the absent defendant may be able to show a perfectly good reason for his absence on the day of the adjourned hearing, and if he can do so, the injustice of deciding behind his back would be just as great as on the first hearing.

We think that, in the absence of clear words to show a contrary intention, the defendant is entitled to avail himself of s. 108. This is the view taken by the Allahabad High Court in Hira Dai [383] v. Hira Lal (3). In the judgment of Oldfield, J., it is pointed out that the decision of the Privy Council in Zain-ul-abdin Khan v. Ahmad Raza Khan (4), to which the Calcutta Court refers, is only a decision on the words of s. 111 of Act VIII of 1859, and has no bearing on the point in question. GOVINDRAM AND OTHERS (Decree-holders) v. TATIA (Judgment-Debtor.)* [12th March, 1895.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), ss. 7 and 8, and art. 179—Decree—Execution—Joint decree-holder—Minority of joint decree-holder—Application for execution after attaining majority—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 231.

Govindram and his two minor nephews, Shankarlal and Davlatram, obtained a decree on 1st December, 1885. Govindram applied for execution on the 24th November, 1886, and died in May, 1887. Shankarlal attained majority on the 15th December, 1891, and on the 24th July, 1894, applied for execution, no application having been made since November, 1886.

Held, that the application was not barred by limitation. Under s. 231 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), Shankarlal was entitled equally with the other judgment-creditors to apply for execution of the whole decree for the benefit of all the decree-holders; and as he was a minor when the decree was passed, and when the last application for execution was made, he was entitled to the benefit of s. 7 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and could apply for execution within three years of attaining majority. Section 8 of the Limitation Act, (XV of 1877) applies only to those cases in which the act of the joint owner is, per se, a valid discharge. Section 7 applies where only some of the judgment-creditors, and not all, are affected by a legal disability.

[384] THIS was a reference made by Rao Saheb Ezra Reuben, Acting Subordinate Judge of Rahuri, in the Ahmednagar District, under s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

One Govindram and his two minor nephews, Shankarlal and Davlatram, obtained a decree against Tatia on the 1st December, 1885. Govindram died on the 21st May, 1887, leaving a minor son. Shankarlal attained majority on the 15th December, 1891, and on the 24th July, 1894, applied for the execution of the decree. The last preceding application for execution having been made on the 24th November, 1886, the question now arose whether the application was time-barred. The Subordinate Judge, therefore, referred the following question to the High Court:—

"Whether the minority of one of several judgment-creditors saves the execution of the decree from being time-barred during the period of minority of the minor plus three years?"

The opinion of the Subordinate Judge was in the affirmative.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The facts of this case are stated to be as follows:—The decree, of which execution is now sought by an application dated 24th July, 1894, was passed on the 1st December, 1885, in favour of Govindram and his undivided minor nephews Shankarlal and Davlatram. The last preceding application for execution was made on the 24th November, 1886. Govindram died on the 21st May, 1887, leaving a minor son. Shankarlal came of age on 15th December, 1891, and within three years of that date presented the application for execution now under consideration. The question referred is—whether the minority of one of several judgment-creditors saves the execution of the decree from being time-barred during the period of minority of the minor plus three years?

[385] To this question the answer must be in the affirmative, in the circumstances of the case now before us. Under the provisions of s. 231 of the Civil Procedure Code, Shankarlal was entitled equally with the other judgment-creditors to apply for execution of the whole decree for the benefit of all the decree-holders; and as he was a minor when the decree was passed, and when the last application for execution was made, he is entitled to the benefit of s. 7 of the Limitation Act, and can apply for execution within three years of attaining majority.

We agree with the opinion expressed in Seshan v. Rajagopala (2) that s. 8 of the Limitation Act applies only to those cases in which the act of the adult joint owner is, per se, a valid discharge. But we are unable to hold that s. 7 does not apply where only some of the judgment-creditors, and not all, are affected by a legal disability. The reasoning in Perry v. Jackson (3) referred to by the Madras High Court does not really touch the point under consideration, inasmuch as s. 7 applies to an application like the present one, which any one of the judgment-creditors may present by himself under the provisions of s. 231 of the Civil Procedure Code.

For these reasons, we agree with the Subordinate Judge in holding that Shankarlal is, in the circumstances, entitled to obtain execution of the decree. This is also the view of the Calcutta High Court in Anando Kishore Dass v. Anando Kishore Bose (1).

Order accordingly.

Hindu law—Joint family—Money decree against father—Execution against son after the death of the father—Ancestral property in the hands of the son liable—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 234, 244 and 278.

[386] A money-decree obtained against the father of an undivided Hindu family can be executed after his death against his sons to the extent of the ancestral property that has come into their hands even if the debt has been incurred for the sole purposes of the father, provided that it is not tainted with immorality or illegality. If the son against whom the decree is sought to be executed as representative of his father takes the objection that the debts are tainted with immorality, he can do so under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

THIS was an application under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the decision of J. B. Alcock, District Judge of Surat, confirming the decree of Khan Saheb J. E. Modi, Second Class Subordinate Judge of Oipad, in an execution proceeding.

Umed Hathising obtained a money-decree against one Bhaiji, the father of the minor opponent, and after Bhaiji's death proceeded to execute it by attachment and sale of his land in the hands of the opponent. The opponent through his mother and guardian applied to have the attachment removed on the ground that the land was ancestral undivided property, and was not liable for Bhaiji's debts after his death, and that the debt in dispute was not contracted by Bhaiji for family purposes. The applicant contended that the debt for which the decree was obtained had been incurred by Bhaiji for the benefit of the family and that the opponent succeeded to the ancestral estate burdened with the payment of his father's debt.

The Subordinate Judge treated the opponent's application as falling under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) and removed the attachment.

On appeal by the applicant, the District Judge confirmed the decision of the Subordinate Judge.

The applicant now applied under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court, and obtained a rule nisi calling on the opponent to show cause why the order of the District Court should not be set aside.

The High Courts at Madras and Allahabad have held that it is not binding, while the High Courts at Bombay and Calcutta have held that it is binding.

There was no appearance for the opponent.

The following authorities were cited in argument :—Maganlal v. Soma Hirachand (1) ; Sakharam Ramchandra v. Govind Vaman (2) ; Jagabhai Lalubhai v. Vijbhukandas (3); Cooverji Hirji v. Dewsey Bhoja (4) ; Nanomi v. Modun Mohun (5); Punchanun Bundopadhya v. Rabia Bibi (6) ; Lachmi Narain v. Kunjilal (7) ; Karnataka Hanumantha v. Andukuri Hanumayya (8) ; Ariabudra v. Dorasami (9) ; Mayne's Hindu Law, arts. 321 to 323 : White's Act (Bom. JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The question which we have to decide is whether when a money-decree has been obtained against the father of an undivided Hindu family, execution can be had after his death against his sons to the extent of the ancestral property that has come into their hands. The matter has recently been considered, and the question answered in the negative by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Lachmi Narain v. Kunjilal (7) ; but the decision cannot be reconciled with the judgment of this Court in Jagabhai v. Vijbhukandas (3), in which it was held that ancestral property in the hands of sons could be attached in execution of a money-decree against their deceased father with whom they had remained united until his death.

It cannot be denied that the wording of s. 234, Civil Procedure Code, presents an obstacle to proceedings in execution against the sons as the legal representatives of their father in respect of the ancestral property as it vests in them by birth and survivorship, and cannot be described as the property of the deceased which has come into their hands. But the answer to the question turns upon the inference to be drawn from the recent [388] decisions of the Privy Council as to the right of creditors to realize their claim against the father out of the entire estate. In Jagabhai v. Vijbhukundas Mr. Justice West says, in reference to the decision of the Privy Council in Mussamut Nanomi v. Modun Mohun (5), which it is to be observed was the case of a money-decree, "The father in fact is made the representative of the family, both in transaction and suits, subject only to the right of the sons to prevent an entire dissipation of the estate by particular instances of wrong-doing on the father's part." It will be safer perhaps to rely on the language of Lord Hobhouse, who delivered the judgment of the Privy Council in the above case, as to the principle laid down by the decisions of that Court. He says : "Destructive as it may be of the principle of independent co-parcenary rights in the sons, the decisions have for some time established the principle that the sons cannot set up their rights against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt, or against his creditors' remedies for their debts, if not tainted with immorality." Again His Lordship says : "If the debt was of a nature to support a sale of the entirety, he might legally have sold it without suit, or the creditor might legally procure a sale of it by suit. All the sons can claim is that, not being parties to the sale or execution proceedings, they ought not to be barred from trying the fact of the nature of the debt in a suit of their own."

Such being the general principle as to the power of the father to bind the interest of the sons in a suit against the father, there may doubtless be cases in which having regard to the execution proceedings it is to be inferred that it was only the father's estate which was intended to be sold, such as Deendyal v. Jugdeep (1), Hurdey Narain v. Baboo Rooder(2), Mahabir v. Rai Markunda(3), which are important decisions as showing the nature of the distinctions which may be drawn having regard to the nature of the suit and the execution proceedings; but it being distinctly established by the Privy Council's decisions that the creditor can attach and sell the entirety of the estate in execution of a money-decree against the father, we are unable to agree [389] with what is said by the Madras High Court in Arnabudra v. Dorasami(4), and which is much relied on in the judgment of the Allahabad High Court in Lachmi Narain v. Kunjilal (5), that the obligation of the sons to satisfy their father's debts is not within the scope of the decree against the father. On the contrary it appears to us that the judgment of Lord Hobhouse above referred to treats it throughout as being so, whether on the ground of representation of the sons by their father as stated by West, J., in Jagabhai v. Vijbhukandas(6) or on the ground that the creditor has the power to attach and sell the entire interest in the land in execution proceedings against the father. If the son, against whom the decree is sought to be executed, as the representative of his father, takes the objection that the debts were tainted with immorality, he can do so under s. 244 as decided by the majority of the Full Bench in Seth Chand v. Durga Dei(7) in the analogous case in which the objection was taken by the sons, that the property sought to be attached was not assets in their hands or at any rate under s. 278, Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), which Tyrrel, J., considered to be the proper course. The Subordinate Judge has noticed that in the case of Jagabhai v. Vijbhukandas the debt was incurred for the benefit of the family, but the result would have been precisely the same if it had been incurred for the sole purposes of the father, provided it was not tainted with immorality or illegality.

Under these circumstances we think that in refusing in this case to entertain the execution proceedings against the sons to the extent of the ancestral property that had come into their hands, the lower Courts failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in them by law, inasmuch as it was their duty to grant execution to such extent unless the sons who had been made parties to the record as representatives of their deceased father succeeded in proving that the debt was not one for which they could be made liable by Hindu law.

We accordingly discharge the orders of the lower Courts and direct the Subordinate Judge to restore the darkhast to his file [390] and dispose of it in conformity with the above remarks. The applicant to have his costs of this application if he should succeed in the execution proceedings.

In October, 1887, the plaintiff purchased certain lands at a sale held in execution of a decree passed on an unregistered mortgage effected in 1862. The defendant was in possession as mortgagee under a subsequent registered mortgage of 1867. He was not a party to the suit and decree of 1887. The plaintiff sued for possession. The defendant claimed that the plaintiff could not recover possession without paying off his (the defendant's) claim.

Held, that at the execution sale the plaintiff bought the property in dispute free from all subsequent incumbrances, subject only to the right of the defendant, if he so desired, to retain possession.

Held, also that the plaintiff as purchaser stood in the place of the prior mortgagee and had a right to possession; that the defendant as subsequent mortgagee could not compel the plaintiff to pay off his (the defendant's) mortgage, but that the defendant not having been a party to the suit on the prior mortgage had a right, if he wished to retain possession, to pay off the plaintiff's claim.

SECOND appeal from J. Fitz Maurice, Assistant Judge of Ahmedabad.

Suit for possession of a godown and certain lands.

In February, 1862, one Nathubhai and his sons mortgaged the property in question by an unregistered san-mortgage-deed to Bhogilal and Kalidas.

[391] In 1887 the mortgagees obtained a decree on the mortgage, and on the 30th October, 1887, sold the property in execution to plaintiff.

In attempting to obtain possession the plaintiff was resisted by Desai Lallubhai Jethabhai (defendant No. 7) and two others (defendants Nos. 8 and 9).

The plaintiff, therefore, brought this suit against the original mortgagors (defendants Nos. 1—6) and Desai Lallubhai (defendant No. 7) and defendants Nos. 8 and 9.

Lallubhai (defendant No. 7) claimed possession of some of the land under a registered mortgage from Nathubhai and his sons, dated 1st January, 1867, which was renewed in May, 1883, and of the godown under registered mortgages dated 1873 and 1883. He contended that he being in possession under a registered mortgage the plaintiff had bought subject to his claim, and that the plaintiff must satisfy his mortgage-debt before he could recover possession.

Defendants Nos. 8 and 9 claimed other parts of the property sold at the execution sale in 1887, but the plaintiff compromised the suit as against them, and sold them the land they claimed.

The Subordinate Judge held that as Lallubhai had not been a party to the mortgagee's suit in 1887 he should be permitted to redeem the mortgage under which the plaintiff claimed, and directed that he should pay within six months the full amount (Rs. 1,448) of the decree of 1887 into Court to the credit of the plaintiff, and in default that the plaintiff should recover possession.

On appeal the Assistant Judge varied the decree by permitting the defendant Lallubhai to redeem on payment Rs. 751-8-0 instead of the whole amount of the decree in 1887 on the ground that Lallubhai had possession of only part of the lands comprised in the original mortgage, the rest being in the possession of the defendants Nos. 8 and 9 with whom the plaintiff had compromised his claim by selling these lands to them. He said :—

"I think, however, that the Subordinate Judge erred in requiring defendant No. 7 to redeem by payment of the full amount of the decree obtained against the mortgagors. For under the [392] decree other property besides that with defendant No. 7 was sold ; that other property was also the subject of the prior mortgage. It was in the possession of defendants Nos. 8 and 9 in this suit, and plaintiff has compromised the suit as against them by selling that property to them for Rs. 600 (vide purshis in appeal). I think, therefore, it would be inequitable to throw the whole burden of the amount decreed on the prior mortgage on the portion of the property which is with defendant No. 7."

Defendant No. 7 was, therefore, permitted to redeem on payment of Rs. 751-8-0 only within six months from the date after the decree in appeal.

Against this decision Lallubhai (defendant No. 7) preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—There are only two points which demand consideration in this case, the first being concerned with the relative rights of prior and subsequent incumbrancers inter se, and the second has reference to the operation of s. 50 of the Registration Act III of 1877.

The respondent (original plaintiff) purchased the property in dispute at a Court sale held on 30th October, 1887, in execution of a decree on an unregistered san-mortgage-bond of 1862. When he proceeded to take possession of the land, the appellant (original defendant No. 7) obstructed him on the ground that he was in possession under a registered mortgage-bond of 1887, renewed in 1883, and that respondent was bound to satisfy his mortgage before he could recover possession of the lands under his certificate of sale. The contest is thus between the purchaser in execution of a decree on a prior unregistered san-mortgage of 1862, and the defendant in possession under a subsequent registered mortgage of 1883, a renewal of one effected in 1867.

The authorities—Namdar Chaudhri v. Karamraji (1). Muhammad v. Man Singh (2), Gajadhar v. Mul Chand (3), Mohan Manor v. Togu Uka (4) —are quite clear on the points (1) that the purchaser [393] stands in the place of the prior mortgagee, and (2) that he has a right to recover possession, (3) that the subsequent mortgagee cannot compel him to redeem his own mortgage, but (4) has a right himself, in case he has not been made a party to the suit on the prior mortgage, to pay off the prior incumbrance if he desires to retain possession. The case of Gaya Prasad v. Salik Prasad (5) had special features, but even in that case Oldfield, J., admitted that he had seen reason to change the view once held by him, and stated, following the ruling in Gopee v. Kalee (6) that the subsequent incumbrancers have only a right to pay off the debt on account of which the estate was sold, and to treat the purchaser as the owner of the estate subject to their claim.

The facts of the present case are on all fours with those in Mohan Manor v. Togu Uka (4), and on the authority of that decision and the cases referred to therein—Kasandas v. Parajivan (7), Damodar v. Naro (8) —we must hold that the respondent bought at the execution sale the property in dispute free from all subsequent incumbrances, subject only to the right of the appellant to redeem him if he so desired—Wasudev v. Narayan (9) ; Mansukh v. Turbhovan (10). The law under s. 75 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) is the same—Venkata v. Kannam(11) ; Shivaram v. Genu (12) ; Naran v. Dolatram (13) ; Sankana v. Virupakshapa (14), Radhabai v. Shamrav (15).

The question of registration appears to present no difficulty. Registration under Act III of 1877 does not operate so as to exclude instruments executed before Act XX of 1864 came into operation, on the ground of their non-registration—Tirumala v. Lakshmi (16). The Bombay decision in Khandu v. Tarachand (17), is to the same effect. As the execution-sale took place in respect of a san-mortgage in Gujarat, the question of want of possession can have no significance. We accordingly confirm the decree. Appellant to pay all costs.

Nothing but fear of instant death is a defence for a policeman who tortures any one by order of a superior. The maxim respondeat superior has no application in such a case. Under the Bombay Police Act (IV of 1890) every police officer is bound to shelter a person in custody, and to arrest persons committing assaults likely to cause grievous bodily injury. If he omits to perform this duty, he is guilty of abetment.

When the law imposes a duty to act on a person, his illegal omission to act renders him liable to punishment.

APPEAL from the conviction and sentence recorded by A. H. Unwin, Sessions Judge of Nasik, in the case of Queen-Empress v. Chunilal and Latifkhan.

The accused No. 1 (Chunilal), a police constable, was charged with voluntarily causing hurt to extort a confession, under s. 330 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860).

Latifkhan (accused No. 2), who was also a police constable, was charged with abetment of the offence.

The facts of this case were briefly as follows:—

One Chandri reported to the police patil and to the two constables (the accused in the present case) that her neighbour Mahadu had committed theft of her property during her absence from her house. Mahadu was thereupon arrested and remained in close custody. His house was searched after 11 P.M., but no part of the stolen property was found. Then ashes were spread on the ground, and he was made to walk or stand on them. Accused No. 1 (Chunilal) beat him with his fist and kicked him with his booted foot for the purpose of extorting a confession. But no confession could be [395] extracted from him. Accused No. 2 (Latifkhan), who was present at the beating, did not remonstrate with accused No. 1, or prevent him from offering violence to Mahadu. Mahadu remained a prisoner on his verandah guarded by accused No. 2. Within a short time after the beating, Mahadu died.

The Civil Surgeon who examined the corpse was of opinion that the immediate cause of death was rupture of the spleen. He attributed the rupture to some external violence, such as blows and kicks, although there were no external marks of injury.

The Sessions Judge, differing from the assessors, found both the accused guilty of the offences charged, and sentenced accused No. 1 to rigorous imprisonment for four years, and accused No. 2 to rigorous imprisonment for two years.

Against these convictions and sentences the accused appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—Before dealing with the questions of law, I will state the views I take of the facts which in most points are those expressed by this Court in its oral judgment upholding the conviction and sentence passed on Chunilal. I gave great weight to the remarks of the learned Judge on the demeanour of the witnesses; he heard them, and that is one recognized way of estimating them. His estimation is confirmed by several things. 1st, the assessors have nothing to say against Sukrani, whom he believes. 2nd, she has not varied her story in any substantial particular. 3rd, the other witnesses, Chandri and Yesha, after first denying the assault, have sworn to her story in most details. The patil who denies any assault, is not to be believed. He and Yesha are both police officers and took a part in the improper, and seemingly unreasonable, arrest and search which preceded the death of Mahadu; in screening the prisoners they screen themselves. It is possible, as no marks were found on the skin, that Sukrani has exaggerated the assault: one blow or kick near the spleen might have produced the rupture, but the evidence is that several were given: this also is possible. Everything [396] shows that there was no circumstance showing a reasonable ground of suspicion that Mahadu was guilty of the theft alleged by Chandri; the whole evidence is that the endeavour of Chunilal was to induce a confession, in lieu of evidence, from Mahadu, and that he denied it. It was not the interest or intention of any one to do serious bodily harm such as would leave marks. Such behaviour is full of risk. It was the intention by threats, and gestures full of threats, such as light blows or kicks, to get the man to confess. This is the evidence.

Section 163 of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882) forbids every policeman whosoever to do such a thing; and no superior is to be obeyed who dares to set himself above the law. Sections 165 and 103 require the police officer to use some publicity in making a search: he must require two or more respectable inhabitants of the locality to be present. This is a certain check on malpractices. It was not observed; and these dark proceedings went on at night. The prisoner Latifkhan was present, and the first question about him is, what did he do? It is admitted that he did not strike the deceased. His presence is consistent with the absence of any mens rea as to torture, or extortion of confession. It is easy to depose to words or gestures of a sort to implicate him in this crime. Therefore, the evidence must be carefully and cautiously examined. I attach no great importance to the discrepancy in Sukrani's two statements as to whether the slap she says Latifkhan gave her was before or after the first blow given by Chunilal to Mahadu. I do not regard her as a false witness. The more reluctant witness, Chandri, says Latifkhan waved her off. The other reluctant witness, Yesha, says he waved his right hand at her, saying don't make a row, but whether his hand touched her or not, he did not see. From the mouths of such persons, I treat these statements as unwilling corroboration. The common intention of Chandri, Yesha, the patil and Chunilal was to induce a confession. The waving off of Sukrani, the telling her not to make a row, seem to me things done by Latifkhan to effect that result. I see nothing improbable in Sukrani's assertion that Latifkhan said "Let us beat them both and then they will confess." The Sessions Judge was in a better position than this Court to say whether she is a truthful witness or not. I take it that she is.

[397] Taking this view of the facts, I am of opinion that Latifkhan was rightly convicted, and I would sustain the conviction on two grounds: his proved encouragement of Chunilal, his proved omission to perform his legal duty. Under the Bombay Police Act IV of 1890 every police officer is always on duty in his district—s. 32, and bound to shelter every person in custody--s. 52, and to arrest persons committing assaults like that on Mahadu—s. 51. He has not pleaded the order of a superior or coercion by a superior; and there is nothing to show that Chunilal had authority over him, both being ordinary constables, Chunilal being of the first class, but neither of them head constables. Mr. Justice Ranade thinks, however, that the prisoner was under Chunilal's orders. Mahadu was in their joint custody when the kicks and blows were given, which caused rupture of the spleen. After such a horrible occurrence, the remarks of the Sessions Judge on the illegal doings of the men will doubtless receive serious attention.

To prevent such disgraceful malpractices in future, it will be well for the Bench to declare what the law is and on what doctrine founded. The Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 329, 330 and 331, punishes those who use torture to extort discovery or confession. The following are two of the illustrations to s. 330:—(1) A, a police officer, tortures B in order to induce Z to confess that he had committed a crime. A is guilty of an offence under this section. (2) A, a police officer, tortures B to induce him to point out where certain stolen property is deposited. A is guilty of an offence under this section. The punishment may extend to seven years' imprisonment and fine. Both of these illustrations might have been framed from the evidence in the case before us. In such matters, Mr. Mayne in his commentary on s. 79 of the Indian Penal Code points out that the command of a superior, whatever his rank, is no defence. Where by command of a jamadar then present some constables tortured a woman, they were held guilty—Queen v. Behary Singh (1). No such excuse is a defence at law unless it is definitely accepted by the law itself as a defence; and then it is usually enacted as a general or special exception to the ordinary law. Nothing but fear of instant death is a defence for a policeman who tortures a man or woman by superior order. This interpretation is placed on s. 94 of the [398] Penal Code in Queen v. Sonoo (2), where the prisoners pleaded that a police inspector had coerced them to make false statements. This case is quoted with approval in the leading case, Queen-Empress v. Maganlal (3), where the same interpretation is placed on s. 94 by Bayley, J., and myself. When the law places a duty to act on a person, his illegal omission to act is to be judged by the same principles. It may be a form of abetment under s. 107; while s. 116 takes particular notice of the omission of a police officer whose duty it is to prevent a crime. So where a police officer purposely kept out of the way, knowing that some persons were likely to be tortured to get confessions out of them, he was pronounced guilty of abetment—Queen v. Kali Churn (4). In the present case, the law required Latifkhan to prevent Chunilal using torture, but he did not even expostulate. The law, therefore, punishes his failure to act. Otherwise any single policeman might by overawing the Queen's subjects by surrounding them with a force of acquiescing constables proceed to torture and murder one person after another, the presence of these officers of the law being the means of breaking the law. See Lord Macaulay's note cited at p. 132 of Maganlal's case (3). It would, therefore, have been no defence, if pleaded by Latifkhan, that he acted under some sort of obedience to Chunilal. There may be a habit of thought of this kind among the police, a tradition to this effect, a feeling of helplessness diffused among them. These are the excuses made for the corrupt Mamlatdars by Sir Raymond West, which were considered in Maganlal's case (see p. 130), and were pronounced vain before the law. The police no more than the Magistrates will be allowed to plead cowardice: the law by the threat of punishment compels them to act up to their duty and forces each one of them to interpose his authority and prevent the other torturing their prisoner. Here the maxim respondeat superior has no application; the only superior is the law. This telling a prisoner that he is guilty and using threats or violence to make him confess, are treated by Lord Coke as malpractices contrary to the great provision of the Great Charter which forbids any judgment or punishment of the subject except by the Courts of law—2 Inst. 54 on Magna Charta, Cap. 29. Even when the words legam terræ were held to [399] import the prerogative (see David Jardine's Reading on Torture) and to sanction the practice of torture by the King's command, they were never held to sanction it on the part of lower officers. This great provision is at the foundation of our law ; and, as an old lawyer says quaintly, Magna Charta is so troublesome a fellow that he will have no superior.

It behoves the District Magistrate to make due inquiry into the behaviour of the police patil and his reasons for reporting that Mahadu died of fever. He is the officer on whom the law imposes the duty, in cases of violent death, of holding an inquest and finding a verdict. Although he may rightly have left the inquest to the Magistrate called upon specially by s. 176 of the Code to make solemn inquiry whenever a person dies in police custody, he had no right to report anything untrue. I say that when a man is killed under torture, even by such an unforeseen thing as rupture of a diseased spleen, especially if the torture is applied by the agents of the law, it is solemn duty of Her Majesty's servants, to fulfil her Coronation oath, to make such use of our criminal law and procedure as will prevent such offences taking place again. It is not creditable that, on the mere suspicion of the women Chandri, both village and district policeman should proceed to such violent measures as to arrest Mahadu, keep him in custody for hours, search his house at night, threaten him to make him confess, and then not state the true facts or lay them before the inquest.

Coming to the sentence passed, I think it right to say that in several recent cases where murders have occurred the petty officials have shirked their duty or falsified the evidence, pleading laziness or cowardice or showing corrupt or partial behaviour. It is not to be tolerated that the lowest class of officers shall in these ways interfere with the due detection and punishment of the highest crimes known to the law. I have doubts, however, whether until Maganlal's case (1) came before this Court, the frailty, as a defence, of such excuses as cowardice, helpness and traditional ways of thought was fully understood. It was even urged by the Advocate General in a later case (Queen-Empress v. Chagan (2)) that the Government of Bombay believed that much considered judgment has misled the Magistrates. I do not think that was the case, as s. 94 of the Penal [400] Code is clear, and no lawyer had ever suggested, until the matter of the Mamlatdars arose, that cowardice or corruption amounted to legal necessity unless fear of instant death were proved. I am glad that there is no doubt now on the doctrine of the laws : for it is of course the plain duty of every police officer actively to prevent any other from doing such an act as torture, which everyone knows to be criminal, which often causes far more serious injury to the body than the criminal intends, and which is so likely to impair the bond of allegiance between the subject and the Crown.

The view of the facts taken by my learned colleague logically induces him to propose some reduction of the sentence, and though not disposed to interfere with the discretion of the Judge on that ground, I do not think it necessary to burden the time of a third Judge on this point, but concur for reasons to which we both give weight. The chief offender has been brought to justice as a result of the prompt inquiry by the magistracy and police of Nasik. The prisoner may not have been fully aware of the law about abetment, where one policeman stands by acquiescing in an assault on a prisoner committed by the other. It may possibly be that there was some foundation for the unusual argument of Mr. Latham in Chagan's case that even the Magistrates did not fully understand the law about accomplices.

As the judgments in Mayanlal's case (1) and Chagan's case (2) declare it clearly in regard to corrupt offers of money, so this judgment now delivered will, we hope, remove any doubts that the inferior police may have as to their duty when another policeman assaults a prisoner to induce him to confess. The result will be to deter people from such doings in the future. We, therefore, reduce the sentence to one year of rigorous imprisonment.

RANADE, J.—We have already disposed of the appeal of accused No. 1, Chunilal. The case as against Latifkhan, accused No. 2, was reserved for fuller consideration. He was charged with having been present at and abetted the torture, under ss. 330 and 114 of the Code. It is admitted that accused No. 1 was a police constable, first class, and Latif was a constable, second class. The committing Magistrate had charged both accused with offences under ss. 331 and 304, but they were actually tried in the Sessions Court, the first accused under s. 330, and the second as abetting under [401] s. 114, the offence committed by accused No. 1. The committing Magistrate in his statement of the reasons for committal observed that No. 2 accused was not only in company with No. 1 accused when he assaulted the deceased Mahadu, but that, by giving a slap on the face of the prosecutrix, he prevented her from interfering with accused No. 1 when he committed the assault on the deceased. The Sessions Judge, differing from the assessors, found it proved that accused No. 2 was not only present when No. 1 accused kicked the deceased Mahadu, but that he suggested the idea that both the prosecutrix and the deceased should be beaten to make them confess, and that accused No. 2 struck the prosecutrix, not with a view to make her speak, but to prevent her from interposing for Mahadu's protection. I have accordingly to consider how far this story that No. 2 accused actively encouraged No. 1 in the fatal assault, and that he himself co-operated in it by slapping the prosecutrix on her face, is supported by the evidence.

In the case of No. 1 accused, the testimony of the prosecutrix Sukrani was corroborated by the evidence of Chandri and Yesha, who, though they had denied the alleged beating before the police and the Mamlatdar, stated in the Sessions Court that accused No. 1 gave blows with the fist, and two or three kicks with his boot. This agreement between the evidence of the three prosecution witnesses evidently influenced the Sessions Judge in coming to the conclusion he did as regards the guilt of No. 1 accused. In regard to No. 2 accused, however, there is not only no such agreement, but a positive contradiction between the evidence of Sukrani and that of Chandri and Yesha. Chandri stated that accused

(1) 14 B. 115.

(2) 14 B. 331.

No. 2 did not strike Sukrani. He warned her off with his hand to lie down at a little distance and that he did not touch her person. Chandri also did not state that accused No. 2 used any words suggesting that both Mahadu and the prosecutrix should be beaten to make them confess. Yesha also stated that accused No. 2 waved his hand, saying to Sukrani "do not make a row," and Yesha did not see if this hand touched Sukrani or not. He also did not state that accused No. 2 suggested that both should be beaten. When both Chandri and Yesha made these statements, they were not under any fear of the accused. They had apparently under fear at first denied all knowledge of the beating and kicking charged to No. 1 accused, but before the Sessions Court [402] there was no such fear. There was, if possible, the strongest motive to exaggerate the offence, and it cannot easily be conceived why, when they gave evidence so freely against No. 1 accused, they should have contradicted Sukrani as regards both the statement and the act which Sukrani attributes to accused No. 2. This contradiction between Sukrani's statement and the evidence of Chandri and Yesha materially diminishes the credibility of Sukrani's allegations against No. 2 accused. The Sessions Judge appears to have formed a favourable impression of Sukrani's honesty, but he does not notice the fact that, in so far as accused No. 2 is concerned, not only is she contradicted by Chandri and Yesha, but the story told by her to the Mamlatdar is in flat contradiction to her statements in the Sessions Court. Before the Mamlatdar she stated that "First the Musalman constable slapped me on the cheek." Thereupon Mahadu remonstrated, and "afterwards the sepoys began to beat Mahadu." Her story in the Sessions Court was that the slap on her face was the last act of assault, and that it was resorted to after Mahadu had been beaten, chiefly to make her remain silent. Sukrani was unable to explain away this contradiction. It is plain, therefore, that this whole story of accused No. 2 having beaten Sukrani to make her remain silent was an afterthought, and had no foundation in fact.

This examination of the evidence leaves no room for doubt that the two particular allegations made against accused No. 2 to prove that he abetted No. 1 accused cannot be accepted as proved by any consistent or reliable testimony. There still remains the fact that No. 2 accused was in the company of No. 1 accused when the latter committed the assault. Mere presence at the commission of an offence cannot be construed as instigation or abetment unless such presence was intended or calculated to have that effect. Thus it was held that while the priest who officiates at a bigamous marriage abets the offence, strangers casually present at the celebration are not abettors of the same. No 2 accused was no doubt a subordinate of No. 1 accused, but his presence on the occasion, if not intended, was certainly calculated to give countenance to the offence committed by accused No. 1. He cannot plead coercion, for this excuse is only good under s. 94, Indian Penal Code—Empress v. Sonoo (1); [403] Queen-Empress v. Maganlal (2)—when the fear is of instant death. In less serious cases, this circumstance can only be pleaded in mitigation of the punishment. The Sessions Judge would certainly not have sentenced the accused No. 2 to two years' rigorous imprisonment but for his conviction that No. 2 accused actively supported No. 1 accused, and that he took part himself in the torture. Even though I hold that the evidence does not support this view, yet as he was a police officer on duty at the time, and as he joined with No. 1 accused in the illegal search at night without the usual precautions of a panch to watch the proceedings, the accused No. 2 by his silent acquiescence was an accessory to the offence of his principal. In the view I have taken of the facts I think a sentence of one year's imprisonment would be sufficiently deterrent punishment under the peculiar circumstances of the case.

CHARLES AGNEW TURNER, OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE AND ASSIGNEE OF THE ESTATE AND EFFECTS OF A.G. ALMOND, AN INSOLVENT (Applicant) v. PESTONJI FARDUNJI AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), *Opponents. [12th March, 1895.]

Insolvency—Attachment before judgment—Insolvency of defendant whose property has been attached before judgment—Right of Official Assignee to attached property—Practice—Procedure—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 278, 281, 487, 351—Indian Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vic., C. 21).

Plaintiffs filed a suit in a subordinate Court and attached before judgment some moveable property of the defendant. Before the hearing of the suit, the defendant filed a petition in Bombay under the Insolvency Act, and a vesting order was made.

Held, that the Official Assignee was entitled by an application to the Court, in which the suit was filed, to have the attachment raised before the defendant was declared an insolvent.

Where a vesting order is made after attachment, and before decree, the title of the Official Assignee takes effect, and prevents the attaching creditor from obtaining satisfaction of his decree by a sale. In such a case the Official Assignee can move by an ordinary motion instead of a regular suit.

[404] Java v. Jadowji (1), referred to.

Shib Kristo v. Miller (2) and Sadayappa v. Ponnama (3), referred to and followed.

APPLICATION under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) to the High Court in its extraordinary jurisdiction.

In a suit brought against one Almond in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Surat, certain property belonging to him was attached before judgment by the plaintiffs (Dinshaw Fardunji and Co.)

On the 26th June, 1894, before the suit came on for hearing, Almond filed his petition in insolvency in the High Court of Bombay, and by the vesting order made on that day all his estate became vested in the Official Assignee under s. 7 of the Indian Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vic., c. 21).

On the 30th June, the Official Assignee applied in the Surat Court under ss. 278 and 487 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) to have the attachment before judgment removed, and the attached property handed over to him for the benefit of the insolvent's creditors.

The Subordinate Judge, Khan Bahadur M. N. Nanavati, rejected the application as being premature, because Almond had not yet been declared an insolvent under s. 351 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and he observed: "If the attachment be raised now, and if Almond's application be dismissed, or he be not declared an insolvent, the attaching creditors would lose all the benefit of the attachment before judgment to the defeat of the principle vigilantibus non dormientibus leges et æquitas subveniunt."

The Official Assignee then applied to the High Court under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) and obtained a rule nisi calling upon the plaintiff in the suit (Dinshaw Fardunji and Co.) to show cause why the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Surat should not be set aside.

Macpherson (with A. V. Sakhardande), for the applicant (the Official Assignee) in support of the rule.—An attachment before [405] judgment is void as against a vesting order. See Gamble v. Bholagir (1), Shib Kristo v. Miller (2) and Sadayappa v. Ponnama (3).

The application was not premature.

The case of Java v. Jadowji(4) relied upon by the Subordinate Judge was decided under s. 246 of the former Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859). That s. 246 has been split up into ss. 278, 280, 281 and 282 of the present Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and those sections only apply to property attached in execution of decrees, the words "Or under any order for attachment passed before judgment" in s. 246 of the old Code having been omitted in the new Code. The Official Assignee can, therefore, apply under s. 487 of the new Code. Section 278 merely shows the manner in which the investigation of his claim is to be made. The later sections, viz., 279, 280 and 281, do not apply to attachments before judgment at all.

In the case of insolvents under the Indian Insolvent Act (Statute 11 and 12 Vic., c. 21), the title of the Official Assignee is finally completed by the vesting order. The words "declared insolvent" in s. 351 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) are not to be found in the statute. The lower Court's order, therefore, is erroneous.

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—Dinshaw Fardunji and Co. having filed a suit against A. G. Almond in the Subordinate Court, Surat, attached before judgment certain moveable property of the defendant. Before the hearing of the suit, Almond filed his petition in Bombay under the Insolvency Act, and the usual vesting order was at once made. The Official Assignee then applied to the Subordinate Judge, Surat, under ss. 487, 278, Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) to raise the attachment; but the Subordinate Judge dismissed the application on the grounds that (a) Almond had not been declared an insolvent; (b) in the case of Java v. Jadowji (4), the application, under s. 246, Act VIII of 1859, (answering to s. 278, present Code) had been dismissed. He, therefore, rejected the application as premature, the Official Assignee being at liberty to make it on Almond being declared an insolvent.

[406] On the Official Assignee applying to this Court under s. 622, a rule nisi was granted, and notices were issued. Dinshaw Fardunji and

Co. have intimated that they have no objection to the attached property being handed over to the Official Assignee. But it is expedient to intimate our views on both the points taken by the Subordinate Judge.

(a) Almond having himself made a petition in insolvency, it was impossible to hold that the Official Assignee's application was premature till Almond had been declared an insolvent. This was not a case in which a creditor had asked the debtor to be declared an insolvent, or where a declaration of insolvency could be made under s. 351, Civil Procedure Code.

(b) In the case of Java v. Jadowji (1), the facts were as stated by the Subordinate Judge. But it is clear that in the opinion of the Chief Justice, Sir M. Sausse, it was the duty of the Court, on the fact of the vesting order being brought to its notice, to remove the attachment. So here the Subordinate Judge shoud have adjudicated on the question, and not declined to deal with the facts brought to his notice, on the ground that the application was premature.

We agree with the majority of the Judges of the Calcutta High Court in Shib Kristo v. Miller(2) and with the Madras High Court in Sadayappa v. Ponnama(3) that where a vesting order has been made after attachment and before decree, the title of the Official Assignee takes effect and prevents the attaching creditor from obtaining satisfaction of his decree by a sale. But the right of the Official Assignee to have the attachment before judgment removed, and his right to resist the claim of the attaching creditor to have the decree satisfied by the sale of the attached property, would seem to stand or fall together. We can see no reason, on principle, why the Official Assignee should be forced to assert his right by a regular suit instead of bringing the facts to the notice of the Court by ordinary motion. The latter procedure is apparently followed by the Calcutta High Court (see Bank of Bengal v. Newton (4)). It has, as [407] shown above, been followed on the Original Side of this Court; and we see no reason why it should not be followed in the Subordinate Courts of the Presidency.

This conclusion seems consistent with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. By the terms of s. 487, any claim to property attached before judgment shall be investigated in the manner before provided for the investigation of claims to property attached in execution of a decree for money. The section dealing with the manner of investigating such claims is s. 278, which directs that the Court shall proceed to investigate the claim with the like power as regards the examination of the claimant and in all other respects as if he were a party to the suit, and the provisions of this section must be applied to the investigation of claims to property attached before judgment. But s. 281, which in certain cases prevents the release from attachment of property attached in execution of a decree, has not been applied to claims to property attached before judgment, for s. 487, which prescribes the manner of investigation, is silent as to the result. If, then, it be found that by operation of law, the defendant has ceased to have any interest in the property, and that there is nothing left to justify the maintenance of the attachment, it is clear that the attachment ought to be raised, for when the law directs the claim to be investigated, it

SECOND appeal from the decision of John Fitz Maurice, Assistant Judge of Satara, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb S. B. Gole, Subordinate Judge of Vita.

The plaintiff Datto was the assignee of a bond executed to one Babajibhat by the defendant Vithu, who had borrowed a sum of money from Babajibhat, and had given the bond, dated the 12th September, 1876, as security. The plaintiff in 1891 sued to recover the money due on the bond by a sale of the lands mentioned in it.

The bond provided that both principal and interest were to be paid within a year from its date, and that, in case of default, the creditor should recover the amount from the land which was in the possession of the debtor. The following is a translation of the provision in the bond:—

which two numbers do you take satisfaction for the said money; and if it should be insufficient, I will personally make satisfaction"

The lower Court held that the bond merely created a charge on the lands and was not a mortgage; that art. 132 and not art. 147, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applied; and that the suit was barred.

Balaji A. Bhagvat appeared for the appellant (plaintiff).

Vishnu K. Bhatavdekar, appeared for the respondent (first defendant).

The second appeal came on for hearing before a Division Bench, consisting of Jardine and Ranade, JJ., who, in view of the conflict of decisions on the point as to whether the transaction in suit should be held to be a charge on immoveable property or mortgage, made a reference to a Full Bench in the following terms:—

JARDINE, J.—After hearing able arguments we determine to refer to a Full Bench the question whether art. 132 or art. 147 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applies to the present suit. The suit is based on a bond which contains the following condition as to security and repayment:—"The security-pledge (taran gahan) for this is our own property, Survey Nos. 170 and 778 in the village Ped, on all the land of which two numbers do you take satisfaction for the said money; and if it should be insufficient, I will personally make satisfaction."

This bond resembles that in Khemji v. Rama (1), in that it gives no possession, nor right of entry, nor, in our opinion, power to sell without the intervention of a Court. There it was held by Birdwood and Jardine, JJ., that art. 132 applied. But in Onkar Ramshet v. The Firm known as Govardhan Parshotamdas(2), Scott and Telang, JJ., in a similar case, took the contrary view, holding art. 147 to apply. In Venkatesh v. Narayan (3), which also is on all fours, Sargent, C.J., and Telang, J., held art. 147 to apply. The decisions in these two cases are influenced by the views expressed by Sargent, C.J., and Nanabhai, J., in the Full Bench case [410] Motiram v. Vitai(4), which, though, as expressly remarked in Venkatesh v. Narayan, it was not necessary for the decision of the case to consider what limitation applies to a bond like the present, throw some doubt on the decision in Khemji v. Rama. In Bavaji v. Tatya (5), Sargent, C.J., and Candy, J., treat the Full Bench case as if it overruled the latter.

There is thus a conflict of decisions on the very question on which the decision of the present appeal depends.

The conditions of the bonds in the Full Bench case and in Bulakhi v. Tukaram (6) are, in our opinion, distinguishable and have been correctly distinguished by the Courts below.

The learned Judges who have expressed opinions doubting the correctness of the decision in Khemji v. Rama do not appear to have had their attention drawn to the judgment of the Full Bench at Madras in Rangasami v. Muttukumarappa (7) on the same point. It has since been determined by a Full Bench at Calcutta in Girwar Singh v. Thakur Narayan Singh (8). Both of these judgments dissent from the majority of the Full Bench in the Allahabad Court in Shib Lal v. Ganga Prasad (9) whose views are expressly followed in the Bombay Full Bench case. These Full Bench decisions at Madras and Calcutta support the views expressed in Khemji v. Rama. In order that the important question may, as regards this Presidency, be solemnly determined, we refer it to a Full Bench of this Court.

RANADE, J.—A series of decisions of this Court commencing with the ruling in Tukaram v. Khandoji (1) and ending with Venkatesh v. Narayan (2) have been (with the exception of the decision in Khemji v. Rama (3)) in favour of treating simple hypothecation bonds as mortgages, and not as charges, in so far as the application of art. 132 or 147 of the Limitation Act is concerned. The authority of the decision in Khemji v. Rama (3) has been much questioned, if not overruled, in the later decisions, one of them a Full Bench decision, viz., Kane Lakshman Prabhu v. Lakshman (4) ; Onkar Ramshet v. [411] The Firm known as Govardhan Parsholamdas (5) ; Firm known as Nanaji Madhavrav v. Pandu (6) ; Bavaji v. Tatya (7) ; Motiram v. Vitai (8), and Venkatesh v. Narayan (2). The Allahabad High Court has also taken the same view as that of this Court in the cases cited above. See Shib Lal v. Ganga Prasad (9). On the other hand, the High Courts of Madras and Calcutta have taken the opposite view, that which found support in Khemji v. Rama (3), and one of these decisions was passed after a full review of the authorities on the other side, viz., Girwar Singh v. Thakur Narayan Singh (10) and Davani v. Ratna (11).

In this state of the law on the point, the Courts in this Presidency are bound to follow the rulings of this Court in preference to those of the other High Courts. If that view were followed, the decisions of the lower Courts in the present case will have to be reversed. As, however, the authority of the decision in Khemji v. Rama (3) has not been expressly overruled by the later decision in Motiram v. Vitai (8), I think the present is a fit case for reference to a Full Bench, and I, therefore, agree with Mr. Justice Jardine in his order of reference.

The reference was argued before a Full Bench composed of Sargent, C.J., Jardine, Farran, Ranade and Fulton, JJ.

Balaji A. Bhagvat, for the appellant (plaintiff).—The expression taran gahan in the document literally means 'security mortgage,'—that is, mortgage without possession. With respect to payment, the words in the document are zaminivar aple rupayacha ulagada karun ghyava,—that is, "you should realize your money on the land." The expression taran gahan has been held to mean "mortgage without possession"—Onkar Ramshet v. The Firm known as Govardhandas Parshotamdas (5). The current of decisions of this High Court has been that bonds which contain no power of sale or right of entry are mortgage transactions—Venkatesh v. Narayan (2). The Full Bench ruling in Motiram v. Vitai (8) has practically decided the question. There it has been distinctly held [412] that transactions like the one in dispute are mortgages governed by art. 147, sch. II of the Limitation Act.

[SARGENT, C. J.—If the money is to be realized from the land, that means that the money is to be realized by the sale of the land.]

Yes. If the money is to be realized by the sale of the land under the document, then the transaction is a mortgage and not merely a charge on immoveable property. This contention is strengthened by a subsequent clause in the document, namely, ani kami alyas mi jativar bharun dein,—that is, "and if less be realized, I will pay (the balance) personally." The decisions which are in conflict with the aforesaid current of authorities are Khemji v. Rama (1), Rangasami v. Muttukumarappa (2), Girwar Singh v. Thakur Narayan Singh (3). The practice of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts is different from the practice of this and the Allahabad High Court, which takes the same view as this Court does—Krishnalal v. Gangaram (4).

Narayan G. Chanadavarkar (for Vishnu K. Bhatvdekari) appeared for respondent No. 1 (defendant No. 1).—The documents in the cases relied on, contain one or other of three conditions, namely, either a right of entry or a right of redemption, or a right of sale. As the document in the present case contains none of these conditions, we submit that it is not a mortgage, but it merely creates a charge on immoveable property. The term 'charge' is defined in s. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). A charge differs from a mortgage—Barlinson v. Hall (5); Ramdin v. Kalka Pershad (6).

[RANADE, J.—The document in dispute does contemplate a sale for the recovery of the money.]

No doubt it does contemplate a sale, but that circumstance alone would not make the transaction a mortgage.

[JARDINE, J.—The words in the document are taran gahan; the word gahan means mortgage.]

[SARGENT, C. J.—We are all agreed that we should follow the ruling in Motiram v. Vitai (7).]

JUDGMENT.

[413] The judgment of SARGENT, C. J., and FARRAN and FULTON, JJ., was delivered by SARGENT, C. J.—We think that the instrument in question would probably be regarded by an English lawyer as a hypothecation bond falling under s. 132 of the Statute of Limitations, and such we cannot doubt would be the view taken of it by the Madras High Court—Rangasami v. Muttukumarappa (2). But, as regards this Presidency, the question as to the article of the Statute of Limitations applicable to such an instrument must, we think, be regarded as concluded by the decision of the Full Bench in Motiram v. Vitai (7) subsequent to the decision in Khemji v. Rama (1). In that case it was held (differing doubtless from the Calcutta High Court) that the object of the Legislature by the introduction of art. 147 was to provide a special article for suits by mortgagees, leaving art. 132 in its original form to apply to charges other than those which arise from loans, and further that the article was applicable to simple mortgages without possession on right of entry, on the ground that they constituted a large class of instruments which were not only in every-day use, but regarded and described by the natives of this country as mortgages, and treated as such by all the Courts of the Mofussil. These conclusions enunciated in the judgment of the majority of the Court were acted upon in Venkatesh v. Narayan (8) and Bavaji v. Tatya (9) The principle of stare decisis is one of the utmost importance in questions of this nature as producing uniformity of practice. We must, therefore, answer the question by holding that art. 147 is applicable to the instrument in question.

JARDINE, J.—The material part of the bond is the following:—"The security-pledge (taran gahan) for this is our own property, Survey Nos. 170 and 778, in the village Ped, on all the land of which two numbers do you take satisfaction for the said money; and if it should be insufficient, I will personally make satisfaction." Zaminivar rupayacha ulgada karun ghyava; ani kami alyas mi jativar ulgada karun dein.

The Maratha words used are terse and vague; but after consideration, it is admitted by the pleaders on both sides that the meaning [414] is that the debt is to be realized out of the land, and if not so realized, the debtor is to be personally responsible. The words do not say how the debt is to be realized from the land; but as there is no power of entry, nor possession given, and as it is not the practice of the creditor to sell without first obtaining a decree, it is also admitted that the necessary implication is that the debt might be recovered by sale through a Court. We all concur in these constructions of the bond.

The question for decision of the Full Bench is whether art. 132 or art. 147 of the Limitation Act of 1877 applies to the suit to recover the debt by sale of the property. The conflicting decisions of this Court are noticed in the referring minutes. With regard to them the question may be stated to be whether the bond creates, a charge or a mortgage within the meaning of the above articles.

Until the new enactment, art. 147, became law, the bond would have been treated by the High Courts as coming under the word "charge," and covered by art. 132 of the Limitation Act of 1871. In the Full Bench case —Rangasami v. Muttukumarappa(1)—the learned Judges treat such bonds as hypothecations, to be distinguished from mortgages, and coming under art. 132 of the Act of 1877. Their reasons are largely special, much influenced by the maxim stare decisis, a rule based on policy and of great weight in the quieting of titles. Applied to Bombay the result is different, as bonds like that in suit have for long been treated by this Court as mortgages and dealt with on the same principles. Let it be admitted that, as pointed out by the learned Judges at Calcutta in the Full Bench case—Girwar v. Thakur Narayan Singh (2)—the word "charge" in art. 132 may be applied to this bond. It may yet be urged that art. 147 by its language includes this suit specifically and thus excludes it from art. 132 impliedly. The transaction, as such, may be called a mortgage, following the remark in the first page of Coote, that for the ordinary purposes of conveyancers a mortgage has been considered as a pledge of real or personal estate evidenced by deed for securing the repayment of money. The word "charge" unaided by context may in an Act drawn by English lawyers be conceived to mean such provisions as are found in family [415] settlements, rent-charges and other incumbrances to which redemption and foreclosure do not apply. Where the language of a statute is doubtful, the argument derived from convenience has weight in determining the meaning. It coincides with the maxim above quoted and the apparent breadth of the term mortgage. This argument may be based on two considerations. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council have in Ramdin v. Kalka Pershad (3) noticed the inconvenience which would be caused if mortgagees were by reason of short terms of limitation forced into litigation. Our own experience tells us that prolonged and expensive Litigation will increase if this Court requires the Courts under its superintendence to draw fine distinctions between mortgage and hypothecation in the construction of bonds. The simplicity and vagueness of those executed in the Mofussil of this Presidency cause misunderstandings between parties and difficulties to the interpreting Courts. These inconveniences will be greatly increased if such distinctions are encouraged.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that the decision in Khemji v. Rama (1), though based on a possible construction of the enactment, does not declare the correct construction ; and it ought, therefore, to be overruled.

The opinion taken by the learned Judges in Girwar Singh v. Thakur Narayan (2) was partly influenced by special circumstances of Bengal legislation and partly by a mode of interpreting art. 147, which was dissented from by the Full Bench here in Motiram v. Vitai (3). In a case of equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds—Manekji v. Rustomji (4)—Parsons, J., and myself followed our own Full Bench on this point. The correct view of the law is stated there by Sargent, C. J.

"Under the prior Limitation Act of 1871, the only article applicable to suits for sale of mortgaged property under any mortgage instrument was art. 132 by treating mortgages as creating a charge. It may be fairly doubted whether it was the intention of the Legislature, when the Act of 1871 was passed, to include mortgages [416] in that article ; but in the absence of any article expressly referring to mortgages, art. 132 was, as a matter of practice—with which we may presume the framers of art. 147 of the Act, 1877, were acquainted—applied to the case of mortgages, and, therefore, art. 147 of that Act, which in terms applies to mortgages generally, doubtless introduced a very important change in the relation of mortgagee and mortgagor ; but we do not feel the force of the argument much relied on by the Calcutta High Court, that such a change, if intended, would have been made by an alteration in art. 132 itself. On the contrary, the more obvious and natural mode of effecting that intention would seem to be to introduce a special clause for suits by mortgagees, leaving art. 132 in its original form to apply to all other charges."

I would, therefore, answer the question stated by saying that art. 147 applies.

RANADE, J.—The questions invovled in this reference are two : one relates to the proper construction and legal import of the document on which the claim is based, and the other is concerned with limitation. The document is called a security mortgage, or taran gahan, i.e., mortgage without transfer of possession. There is a personal covenant to repay the money within one year, at the end of which period the creditor is authorized to take satisfaction of the debt due on (or from) the land, and in case there is a deficiency, the debtor holds himself personally responsible for the balance. The first question to be considered is whether, as far at least as this Presidency is concerned, such an instrument with such covenants is a mortgage of immoveable property, or whether it creates only a charge. The Calcutta and Madras High Courts have held that such instruments are not mortgages in the sense of being transfers of interest in immoveable property by way of security for the payment of debt —Girwar Singh v. Thakur Narayan Singh (2) ; Aliba v. Nanu (5) ; Davani v. Ratna (6). A Division Bench of this Court also in Khemji v. Rama (1) took the same view, and held that where the bond did not expressly confer a power of sale, or transfer possession, or allow a right of entry to the creditor, there was no mortgage, and only a charge was created by it. This view was admittedly based on the definition [417] of mortgage contained in s. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act. The instrument in the present case is not governed by that Act, and it may be noted that it is unlike the instrument which was considered in Khemji v. Rama (1), in that it does provide for a satisfaction of the debt on or from the land, which was not the case in the second of the two documents chiefly considered in that case. The definition of a mortgagee-deed in the Stamp Act is more general in its terms than that in s. 58 of Act IV of 1882, and all instruments transferring, or creating a right over specified property, to, or in favour of, a creditor, are there stated to be mortgages. The right of bringing a particular property to sale with a preferential claim to the proceeds (vide s. 295 of Civil Procedure Code and s. 97, Act IV of 1882) is a right over specified immoveable property conferred on the creditor within this definition.

The four classes of mortgages expressly defined in s. 58 of Act IV of 1882 do not, moreover, exhaust all possible kinds of mortgage instruments, for s. 98 provides for what it calls anomalous mortgages, which do not fall under any of the four principal classes. These considerations lead to the conclusion that instruments which create a right in favour of a creditor over specified immoveable property are mortgage instruments. The present instrument, as creating such a right of compulsory sale, and preferential claim in favour of the creditor, must be regarded as a mortgage. The narrower view taken by the High Courts of Madras and Calcutta has not much been favoured on this side of India, and long before, as also since the decision of the Division Bench noticed above, it has been ruled that simple bonds securing the repayment of money advanced on specified immoveable property were mortgages. This was expressly held to be the case in Tukaram v. Khandoji (2) by Sir R. Couch, C. J. In Parmaya v. Sonde Shrinivasapa (3), Sir Michael Westropp affirmed the same view, and noticed that such instruments were in constant use. West and Nanabhai, JJ., took the same view in Mahabaleshwarbhat v. Ratnabai (4), where the bond did not confer any right of possession. The decision in Khemji v. Rama (1) was thus in conflict with many previous decisions, none of which were referred to by the Judges who decided that case, and it was disapproved in [418] many subsequent rulings, chief of which were the Full Bench decision in Motiram v. Vitai (5) followed in Onkar Ramshet v. The Firm known as Govardhan Parshotamdas (6); Venkatesh v. Narayan (7); Kane v. Lakshman (8); Bavaji v. Tatya (9); Firm known as Nanoji Madavarav v. Pandu (10).

In all these cases, the instruments were of the nature of simple mortgages, nazar or taran gahan, or security mortgages without immediate transfer of possession. There was, indeed, in Motiram v. Vitai (5) a right of entry on default, and on this account Mr. Justice Birdwood, who was one of the Judges who decided that case, gave in his adhesion to the views of the present Chief Justice and other Judges. In the other cases noticed above, there was only a power of sale through process of Court, as in the present case. These decisions must, therefore, be held to have clearly established the position that the bond sued upon in the present case is of the nature of what has been all along generally understood in this Presidency to be a mortgage, and is not a mere money-bond which created a charge, but transferred no interest to, or created no right in favour of, the creditor in specific immoveable property. This Court has generally been in agreement on this point with the rulings of the Allahabad High Court—Shib Lal v. Ganga Prasad (1). It may be that the current of decisions in the Madras and Bengal Presidencies has been influenced by the special peculiarities of the course of dealings in those provinces, and the authority of their decisions cannot, therefore, be accepted as binding on the Courts on this side of India for the reasons mentioned above.

The question of limitation still remains to be considered, and as the inquiry into the legal import of such documents comes up chiefly for consideration in connection with the question of limitation, it is of importance to have an authoritative decision on this aspect of the case also. The same considerations which led the High Courts of Madras and Calcutta to hold what were called hypothecation bonds to be not included under mortgages, led them to hold that art. 147, which provides a period of sixty years for suits by mortgagees for foreclosure or sale of mortgaged property, did not apply to suits [419] on such bonds, when the relief allowed by the bond was by way of Court-sale, and that art. 147 applied only to English mortgages. It was further held that, in respect of suits on simple mortgages, art. 132 applied, and the period of limitation was twelve, and not sixty, years. This was also the view taken by the Division Bench which decided Khemji v. Rama (2). This Court has, however, all along agreed with the Allahabad High Court in its view that art. 147 applied to all mortgages, and that art. 132 had reference only to charges as distinguished from mortgage transactions. Previous to Act XV of 1877 there was no room for this conflict of views, for there was no special article which provided a separate period of limitation for suits brought by mortgagees to recover the debt due to them by the sale of mortgaged property. The old art. 132 of the Act of 1871 was, in the absence of any specific provision, held to apply to charges and mortgages alike—Sheoratan Kuar v. Mahipal Kuar (3); Lallubhai v. Naran (4); Davani v. Ratna (5); Ramdin v. Kalka Pershad (6). The Limitation Act of 1877 for the first time inserted a new article for suits by mortgagees for foreclosure or sale, and also made very significant changes in the wording of the old arts. 132, 148. The High Courts of Madras and Calcutta have held that this new insertion and these changes were not intended to have any wide range, and that, in so far as simple mortgages were concerned, they left the law on this point where it stood before Act XV of 1877 was passed. Except the ruling in Khemji v. Rama (2), this Court, agreeing with the Allahabad High Court, has taken a contrary view of the effects of this change, and held that charges and mortgages were intended to be separately provided for by the two arts. 132, 147. The decision of the Division Bench noticed above, though dissented from and distinguished in subsequent cases, has not, however, been expressly overruled, and this circumstance suggested the necessity of the present reference. The various considerations which have been urged in support of the narrower and the more liberal interpretation of these articles, in the several Full Bench rulings of the different High Courts, may with advantage be brought together here to see on which side the balance of arguments leans.

[420] (1) The usual rule of construing statutes in their natural and ordinary sense is certainly violated when the general words used in art. 147 are held only to relate to one class of mortgages, namely, to English mortgages, as has been done in the Bengal and Madras decisions. These English mortgages are not very numerous even in Presidency towns, and are absolutely unknown in the Mofussil. If the Legislature had intended this restricted application of art. 147, it would certainly have used qualifying words to that effect.

(2) The narrower interpretation does violence to the wording of art. 147 in another way when it reads suits for foreclosure or sale, not distributively, but as if the words used were suits for foreclosure and sale, as remedies open to the mortgagee on an English mortgage-bond.

(3) It is not absolutely necessary in English mortgages that the mortgagee should bring a suit for the sale of mortgaged property. He can exercise his right of private sale, which does not appear to be contemplated in art. 147, coupled as suits for sale are with those for foreclosure. The words must, therefore, obviously refer to suits for sale by mortgagees generally, i.e., in the Mofussil by process of Court, private sales being unknown, and held to be undesirable—Keshavrav v. Bhavanji (1).

(4) The narrower interpretation takes no account of the admitted reciprocity of the rights of mortgagors and mortgagees. The Legislature, in inserting the new art. 147 immediately before art. 148, appears to have recognized this reciprocity, and the two articles must be read together, and when so read, art. 147 must be construed as being as general in its scope as art. 148 admittedly is, for sixty years is the period for all redemption suits.

(5) This view is further strengthened by the fact that the words "to redeem" have been expressly added in the new art 148, in which the words before used were confined to mortgagors' suits to recover possession.

(6) While too great importance need not be attached to the contemporaneous drafting of the Bill, which subsequently became Act IV of 1882, with the Limitation Act of 1877, it certainly cannot be lost sight of that the words "monies charged" used in art. 132 [421] were intended to refer to charges other than mortgages as defined in ss. 58 and 100 of Act IV of 1882. The intention is still more clearly manifested by the illustration to art. 132 referring to malikana and other haks. The other charges must clearly refer to similar claims, such as those referred to in s. 95 of the Transfer of Property Act, or to dower, or maintenance charged on land, or the claim for unpaid purchase-money, &c. The changes made in law appear thus to have been intended to remove the doubts and anomalies formerly felt in applying art. 132 to mortgage claims, and this could best be done by adding a new article distinguishing mortgages from charges by a clear line of separation.

(7) The smaller periods of time provided for suits for possession brought by mortgagees furnish no analogy in respect of suits for sale, because suits for possession do not deprive the mortgagor of his rights, which is the effect of a sale in execution of a mortgage decree. The analogy of suits for sale is more complete with foreclosure suits, with which they are linked distributively.

(8) Limitation laws must always be strictly construed in the interest of the party prejudicially affected by these limits.

(9) The shortening of the periods of limitation in England from twenty to twelve years furnishes no reason of policy for a similar contraction in this country, where the circumstances are so different, and where, since 1871 at least, it has been the steady policy of the Legislature to protect the indebted classes by discouraging, as far as possible, premature or forced sales. The narrower interpretation would force mortgagees to sell up their debtors' lands, when otherwise they would prefer to wait.

These considerations satisfy me that, both on grounds of policy and in accordance with will-accepted rules of construction, the interpretation which has been placed by this Court on arts. 132 and 147 of the Limitation Act of 1877 is correct, and that the arguments for narrowing the scope of art. 147 derive no support from general considerations such as those alluded to above.

On the whole, therefore, I feel satisfied that, both on the question of limitation, as also of the legal import of the document, the decisions of this Court favour the view that security mortgages, nazar gahan or taran gahan mortgages are mortgages proper, even though [422] there be no express power of sale, or right of entry, of words transferring possession, and that the power of compulsory sale to realize the debt implied in such a transaction, unless specially excluded, is itself a right and interest in immoveable property transferred to the creditor, which satisfies s. 58 of Act IV of 1882, and the requirements of the definition of mortgage under the Stamp Act, and that the period of limitation for suits for sale in respect of such mortgages is that laid down by art. 147, as such a transfer of right is not meant to be included in the charge transactions to which alone art. 132 applies. The correctness of the decision in Khemji v. Rama(1) has already been questioned in previous decisions, and it must now be held to be overruled both on the point of limitation and on the nature and scope of mortgage transactions.

The case subsequently came back to the appellate Court where the following decision was given:—

JUDGMENT.

As the Full Bench has decided that art. 147 of the 1st schedule to the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applies to this suit, and the District Court had held the suit to be time-barred under art. 132, we reverse the Assistant Judge's decree, and remand the cause to the District Court for re-hearing of the appeal on the merits: costs to be allotted when a new decree is passed.

bin Pommanna as security for the repayment of loans amounting to Rs. 2,000. Subsequently both Ramchandrarao and Bhau having died, Bhau's son and heir Anna brought two suits in the Court of the District Judge at Satara against the heirs of Ramchandrarao, namely, his two widows Vithabai and Anandibai, the latter a minor represented by the Collector as her administrator, for the recovery of Rs. 2,000 as principal and Rs. 2,000 as interest by the attachment and sale of the mortgaged property if necessary.

The Judge on the 24th March, 1886, awarded the plaintiff's claims. The Collector in his representative capacity preferred appeals Nos. 67 and 68 of 1886 to the High Court at Bombay which confirmed the decrees of the Judge on the 28th September, 1888.

On the 13th August, 1891, the Judge issued an order for the attachment and sale of the lands in satisfaction of the plaintiff's decrees and sent the decrees to the Collector for execution. But as the lands to be attached and sold were deshamukhi service lands which could not be alienated beyond the lifetime of the mortgagor, the deceased Ramchandrarao, the Collector granted two certificates under s. 10 of the Vatan Act and forwarded them to the High Court in order that the order of the Civil (High) Court ordering the sale of the [425] lands might be set aside, and he asked for the cancellation of the orders of the District Court for the attachment and sale of the lands.

On receipt of the Collector's certificates the Court ordered that, before taking further action in the matter, notice should be given to the parties and the Government Pleader, as the question might arise as to whether the case fell under s. 10 of the Vatan Act (Bombay Act III of 1874).

Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar (Government Pleader), appeared for the Government of Bombay.

Inverarity (with Balaji A. Bhagvat) appeared for the plaintiff (judgment-creditor).

Bhaishankar Nanabhai appeared for the defendants (judgment-debtors).

SARGENT, C.J.—In the present state of the authorities, I think it advisable that the question, whether the provisions of s. 10 of the Vatandar Act are applicable in the case of a vatan in respect of which a settlement has been made under Gordon's Settlement, should be referred to a Full Bench.

CANDY, J.—The question is whether this Court is compelled to act on the certificate submitted by the Collector under s. 10, Bombay Act III of 1874.

It is clear from the record of the case, in which the decree in question was passed, that the land which is to be sold under the decree is admittedly part of a deshamukhi service vatan, the liability to service connected therewith having been commuted by Gordon's Settlement.

The sanad granted under that settlement has not been produced in the present proceedings, but it is not disputed that in this case there was no condition of the settlement expressly allowing alienation of the vatan property.

The Division Bench of this Court, which confirmed the decree of the District Court permitting the attachment and sale of this property, as appears from the notes of the learned Judges, relied upon the ruling of the Full Bench in Radhabai v. Anantrao (1) on the third [426] question submitted to the Full Bench in that case, viz., that lands of a service vatan become alienable when the services are abolished.

But, as pointed out in Appaji v. Keshav(2), the decision in the above case on that question had reference exclusively to a settlement under Bombay Act II of 1863 ; and the nature and effect of a Gordon Settlement was determined in the last quoted case, in which it was shown that at the time when the Gordon Settlements were made, service lands were regarded as the remuneration of the hereditary officer, and made inalienable by Reg. XVI of 1827 (as construed by the Courts) beyond the life of the actual incumbent, and that the settlements made by Gordon's Committee, unless it was otherwise specially provided by any particular settlement, were not intended by either party to those settlements to convert the vatan lands into the private property of the vatandars with the necessary incident of alienability, but to leave them attached to the hereditary offices, which, although freed from the performance of service, remained intact, as shown by the definition of hereditary office in the declaratory Act III of 1874.

The decision in Jagjivandas v. Imdad Ali (3), by Westropp, C.J., and Kemball, J., showed that the fact that the services appertaining to a vatan had been commuted would not make a vatan alienable ; and the intention of the Legislature to include within the terms of Bombay Act III of 1874 those vatans the services appertaining to which had been commuted by Gordon's Settlement, is, as shown in the case before quoted, apparent from the definition of hereditary office in Bombay Act III of 1874. It may be remarked that the expression "ceased to be demanded" with reference to the services originally appertaining to a vatan has apparently direct application to the terms of the sanad usually given in cases under Gordon's Settlement, in which it is recited that "the said lands and cash allowances shall be continued without demand of service." (See Cordeaux's Compilation, p. 142.) The expression cannot apply to those vatans, the services appertaining to which were useful to the village community, but which have now fallen into desuetude, for the term "hereditary office" in Bombay Act III of 1874 is limited to offices held for the performance of duties connected with the civil administration, whether those duties are now demanded or not.

[427] The result of these considerations is that prima facie a vatandar under Gordon's Settlement is within the terms of Bombay Act III of 1874, which so far changed the old law that, whereas the prohibition against alienation under s. 20 of Reg. XVI of 1827 was restricted by the interpretations put on the section by the Sadar Adalat to alienations exceeding the lifetime of the incumbent or co-sharer, the alienation prohibited by s. 5 of Bombay Act III of 1874 was any alienation without the sanction of Government. By Bombay Act V of 1886 the prohibition was confined to alienations without the sanction of Government beyond the life of the alienor.

Now it is clear that the object of s. 10 of Bombay Act III of 1874 was to give practical effect to the prohibitions against alienations by vatandars as provided by ss. 5 and 7 (see Shankar v. Babaji(4). If, then, a vatandar under Gordon's Settlement comes within the provisions of s. 5, the Collector can, in his case, act under the provisions of s. 10.

But, it is said, the object of the provisions of s. 10 is obviously to enable the Collector to preserve the vatan property for the purposes of the office. The general object is that land should be always forthcoming for the remuneration of the office—Radhabai v. Anantrav (1). But where the services have ceased to be demanded, what interest has the Collector in interfering to protect the property? The successive vatandars might assert their rights in the civil Courts under the law prohibiting alienation (whether generally or beyond the lifetime of the alienor), but there is no apparent reason why the Collector should interfere.

The answer to this argument is that, as shown above, vatandars under Gordon's Settlement were purposely included within the terms of Bombay Act III of 1874. Otherwise there was no object in the peculiar definition of "hereditary office." If, as the reports of the Gordon's Committee show, Appaji v. Keshav (2), the intention both of Government and of the vatandars was to leave the vatan lands attached to the hereditary offices, then there is no reason why the Collector should not intentionally have been given a discretion, enabling him to keep the lands so attached. Since Bombay Act V [428] of 1886 was passed, this discretion in the case of "unassigned" vatans would be limited to alienations without the sanction of Government and beyond the lifetime of the alienor. In the present case, the mortgage was effected in 1873 and by the then law was good only for the lifetime of the alienor. The alienor is now dead. It is clear that by the civil Court's order, dated 13th August, 1891, directing the attachment and sale of the property, part of the vatan in question may pass into the ownership or beneficial possession of a person not a vatandar. It is sufficient, then, for the Collector to certify that this property is part of a vatan. It "is, therefore, inalienable," and this Court must set aside the order for sale and cancel the decree. It has been held in Kasturchand v. Balvantrav(3), that the Collector acting under s. 10 acts judicially, and his certificate, therefore, cannot be questioned by the Court. (See also The Queen v. Collins (4).) It was argued that the use of the word such in describing "unassigned" vatans in s. 10 must be taken as showing that a vatan to come within the terms of that section must be assignable. I cannot agree with that argument. Read strictly the words would mean "any vatan assigned under s. 23, but not so assigned," which would be nonsense. I take it, therefore, that the word such is superfluous and must be rejected. As was said in Radhabai v. Anantrav (5). "By s. 5 of the Act the alienation of any vatan or part thereof is forbidden without the sanction of Government to any person not a vatandar of the same vatan, and by s. 10 power is given to the Collector to set aside any sale or transfer thereof." If vatans under the Gordon Settlement are within the terms of s. 5, then there is nothing to exclude them from the provisions of s. 10. No doubt after the decision of the Full Bench in Radhabai v. Anantrav (5), and dated January, 1885, that vatan lands become alienable when the services are abolished (a decision now admitted to have been founded on the erroneous idea that the settlement of a service vatan could be made under Bombay Act II of 1863), the idea was prevalent in some quarters that s. 5 of Bombay Act III of 1874 could not be applicable to vatandars settled under the Gordon Settlement. Comparing the general rules in force in the Revenue Department, known as "Cordeaux's Compilation,"

p. 127, with [429] the edition of the same compilation now being issued, p. 192, it would seem that Government in Resolution No. 4235, dated 27th May, 1885, expressed that opinion, which naturally followed on the decision of the Full Bench just quoted, dated January, 1885. But the Legal Remembrancer had always held the contrary opinion (see Cordeaux's Compilation, pp. 141, 142), and accordingly Bill No. II of 1885 to amend Bombay Act III of 1874 was introduced and became law (Bombay Act V of 1886). If it is shown that vatandars under the Gordon Settlement did come within the provisions of Bombay Act III of 1874, and that the decision of the Full Bench on the 3rd question referred to them was founded on an erroneous idea, then the fact that Bombay Act V of 1886 was entitled an amending Act, instead of amending and declaratory, would not prevent the words of Bombay Act III of 1874 having the meaning which must be reasonably attached to them. As the difficulty in this case mainly arises from the decision of the Full Bench in Radhabai v. Anantrav (1) on the third question submitted to the Full Bench in that case, regard being specially had to the paragraph beginning "it seems that this result" on p. 214 of the report down to "landed property of the district" on p. 215, I concur in the proposed reference to a Full Bench of the question now before us, viz., whether s. 10 of Bombay Act III of 1874 applies to a service vatan (deshamukhi) the liability to service connected therewith having been commuted under what is known as the "Gordon Settlement" without any condition as to power of alienation.

The question being referred to a Full Bench, it came on for argument before a Full Bench composed of Sargent, C.J., and Jardine and Candy, JJ.

Macpherson (with Balaji A. Bhagvat) appeared for the plaintiff (judgment-creditor)—The Collector was a party to the suit in his capacity as the administrator of the minor's estate, and he contended that the property being deshamukhi service vatan was inalienable under the provisions of the Vatan Act. We answered that as the service was commuted, the property became alienable like any other private property against the heirs of the mortgagors—Radhabai v. Anantrav (1). The service was commuted under the Gordon Settlement. [430] The effect of the Gordon Settlement is the same as that of the Summary Settlement Act. We submit that a commuted vatan does not fall under s. 5 or s. 10 of the Vatan Act. The amending Act (V of 1886) not being retrospective has no application to the present case, because the alienation in dispute was made in 1873—Bai Hariganga v. Tulsidas Kasandas (2).

[SARGENT, C. J.—If the service be commuted, the hereditary office ceases, and then what remains is the vatan property minus the hereditary office.]

Just so. The whole object of s. 10 is to secure and preserve the vatan property for the satisfactory performance of the duties of the office. Section 10 applies to vatans entered as such in the revenue records or under the Act, and assigned under s. 23 of the Act. When service has been commuted, the vatan is incapable of assignment under s. 23, and so we say that s. 10 has no application.

of converting a vatan into the private property of the vatandar and alienable as such—Appoji v. Keshav (1). The object of the Vatan Act is to preserve the vatan property intact, whether service in connection with the vatan is rendered or not, and that being so, and the Gordon Settlement not having made any charge in the nature of the vatan property, s. 10 of the Vatan Act is applicable, and the Collector was justified in granting the certificates. The action of the Collector in granting the certificates was judicial, and the Court cannot question the validity of the certificates—Kasturchand v. Balvantrao (2).

Bhaishankar Nanabhai appeared for the defendants (judgment-debtors).

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by

SARGENT, C.J.—The question referred to us is whether s. 10 of the Vatandar Act III of 1874 (Bombay) is applicable to vatans, which had been the subject of the Gordon Settlement prior to the [431] passing of the Act. The object of s. 10 is to supplement the prohibition contained in s. 5 against alienation by a vatandar to a person not a vatandar by enabling the Collector to undo an alienation which may have been effected since the passing of the Act by a decree or order of a civil Court. It will apply, therefore, wherever s. 5 is applicable. By s. 1 of the Amending Act V of 1886, that section is amended by restricting the prohibition to an alienation beyond the life of the vatandar, and also by making the section so amended applicable in the case of any vatan in respect of which a service commutation settlement has been made prior to the Act of 1874.

The important question arises as to what was the object with which this last amendment was made, was it to extend the operation of the Act to such vatans or to remove a doubt as to their being included in the Act of 1874. We think that looking at the definition of a vatan in the latter Act, and having regard to the circumstance that doubts had been entertained whether such vatans were within the contemplation of the Act, the latter was the true object. The definition of a vatan in the Act includes the case of a vatan in which the services have ceased to be demanded—language which appropriately expresses the state of things existing in the case of a vatan, the subject of a Gordon Settlement, for it is worthy of remark that the language of the sanads issued under the Gordon Settlements is that Government undertake in the future not to require the services to be performed. But it remains to consider whether the Act was intended to have a retrospective effect. We think that such an intention is to be gathered from the language of s. 15, cl. (2), which would appear to have been introduced on the assumption that vatans, the subject of a settlement before the Act, were included in the Act, but required to be placed by express terms on the same footing as those which the Act contemplated becoming the subject of a settlement by virtue of the power in that behalf of the Act itself. We must, therefore, answer the question in the affirmative.

The Full Bench having decided the question, the case was sent back to the Division Bench (Sargent, C.J., and Candy, J.), which made the

APPELLATE CIVIL.

CIVIL REFERENCE UNDER SECTION 46 OF THE INDIAN STAMP ACT.* [15th March, 1895.]

Stamp—Stamp Act (I of 1879), sch. I, art. 21—Company—Winding up—Transfer of property by old to new company—Conveyance.

An instrument, which is in terms a conveyance of property at an agreed value, is a sale of such property at that price, and is governed by art. 21, sch. I of the Indian Stamp Act (I of 1879). The circumstance that the transaction is a part of a larger transaction, cannot affect the character of the instrument.

THIS was a reference by J. M. Campbell, Collector and Superintendent of Stamps, Bombay, under s. 46 of the Indian Stamp Act (I of 1879).

A certain deed of conveyance proposed to be entered into between the Chartered Mercantile Bank of India, London and China, Limited, of the first part, the liquidators of the said bank of the second part, and the Mercantile Bank of India, Limited, of the third part, having been taken to the Collector under s. 30 of the Indian Stamp Act (I of 1879) for adjudication of the stamp duty which the deed required, and a question having arisen as to whether, for the purposes of the stamp duty, the deed was a conveyance or merely a transfer of property from one company to another for consideration, the Collector made a reference in the following terms :—

" By deed of conveyance proposed to be entered into between the Chartered Mercantile Bank of India, London and China, Limited, (hereinafter referred to as the old bank) of the first part, the liquidators [433] of the old bank of the second part, and the Mercantile Bank of India, Limited, (hereinafter referred to as the new bank), after reciting that the old bank was seized and possessed of certain immoveable property in the city of Bombay, and that the old bank, being a company registered under the English Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890, by a special resolution, resolved to wind voluntarily, and the liquidators (parties of the second part) appointed invested with power under s. 161 of the Companies Act of 1862 to enter into an agreement with the new bank under certain terms, and that by an agreement dated 3rd February, 1893, between the old bank and the liquidators of the one part and the new bank of the other part, it was agreed that the old bank and its liquidators should transfer to the new bank all the lands, buildings, goods, chattels, moneys, credits, debts, bills, notes, &c., of the old bank, the undertaking, business and the good-will thereof, with the full benefit of all contracts and engagements, &c., and all other real and personal property of the old bank, subject to all charges, liens and incumbrances. The new bank in consideration of such transfer agreed to pay and discharge all debts, liabilities and obligations of the old bank, to fulfil all its contracts and engagements, and to keep the old bank and its liquidators and contributories indemnified against such debts, liabilities, obligations, contracts and engagements, and against all actions and proceedings in respect thereof, and to pay the costs and expenses of winding up the old bank and of carrying the said transfer into effect, and in further consideration of such transfer it was agreed that every member of the old bank should, in respect of each share of £25 held by him or her, be entitled as of right to claim an allotment to himself or herself or his or her nominees of one B share of £25 in the new bank, with the sum of £12-10 per share audited and paid up thereon, and that the said new bank should allot the shares claimed. It also recited that to carry into effect the said agreement of the 3rd February, 1893, the old bank and its liquidators had agreed to transfer to the new bank its immoveable property at Bombay. Also that the premises stood in the books of the old company at the value of Rs. 1,50,000, which was the value at which the same were to be taken over, and was, therefore, the appropriate value of the consideration mentioned in the agreement of the 3rd February, 1893, which represented the transfer of the said hereditaments. [434] It witnessed that in consideration of the said agreement and of such proportionate part of the consideration mentioned in the agreement as represented Rs. 1,50,000, the old bank granted, and the liquidators confirmed to the new bank, its successors and assigns, all that piece of land measuring 532 square yards, &c., at Elphinstone Circle, Bombay, with the buildings thereon then in the occupation of the new bank, to hold the same unto and to the use of the new bank, its successors or assigns for ever. Then followed the usual covenants of title."

The Collector submitted the following question :—

"Whether the above-mentioned document required any and what stamp ?"

The opinion of the Collector was that the document should be stamped as a conveyance under art. 21 of the first schedule of the Stamp Act, and that it was not merely a transfer of the property from one company to another, in consideration of the exchange of shares of equal or less nominal value in the new company for shares in the old company share for share.

Lang (Advocate General with Little, Government Solicitor) appeared for the Government of Bombay.—We contend that the document is a conveyance on sale and not merely a reconstruction of the company. The stamp must cover the amount of Rs. 1,50,000, which is the value of the property belonging to the bank—The Great Western Railway Company v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue (1); Nagindas Jeychand v. Halalkore Nathwa Gheesla (2).

The next question is whether, under the provisions of s. 24 of the Stamp Act, the stamp should also cover the liabilities of the old bank which the new bank has undertaken to pay.

There was no appearance on behalf of the bank.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by

SARGENT, C. J.—We think that the Collector is right in holding that the instrument in question is a conveyance, the stamp on which is fixed by art. 21 of sch. I to Act I of 1879. The instrument is by its very terms a conveyance of the property mentioned [435] in it at the agreed value of Rs. 1,50,000. In other words, it is a sale of such property at that price.

The circumstance that the transaction is a part of a larger transaction as provided by the agreement, between the banks, of the 3rd February, 1893, and that the Rs. 1,50,000 is a part of the larger consideration for that agreement, cannot affect the character of this particular instrument. The parties have fixed the price at Rs. 1,50,000, which by agreement between them is to be paid to the vendor's creditors. The remarks of the Judges of the Appeal Court in The Great Western Railway Company v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue (1) are applicable to the present case as showing that it is substantially a purchase and sale of the property. The stamp will be determined on the Rs. 1,50,000 stated in the instrument to be the consideration for the conveyance.

Order accordingly.

A loan was made to the defendant out of joint family funds, and a bond for the amount was given in the name of one of the members of the joint family. He sued the defendant on the bond.

THIS was a reference by Rao Saheb Vishvanath Vaikunth Vagle, Subordinate Judge, Vengurla, in the Ratnagiri District, under s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The plaintiff sued to recover from the defendant Rs. 34-12-0 due in respect of a money-bond passed by him to the plaintiff alone on the 30th July, 1890. The following is a translation of the bond :—

"Debt-bond. (I) Mahadu Dad Gavda Dicholkar, residing at the sea-port town of Vengurla, give (this) debt-bond in writing as follows :— This day I took from you [436] for my use Rs. 20 (twenty) in cash of the Queen's currency. I received this amount from you in cash. Interest thereon is agreed to be paid at the rate of 3 (three) pies per month per rupee. After paying, in one year from this day, the said principal sum of rupees twenty, together with interest thereon, I will take back this debt-bond released. Should I fail to pay the amount in the fixed time, and should there remain any balance, I will pay you whatever balance, including interest, may have remained due to you, together with interest thereon calculated at the aforesaid rate. I will plead no excuse whatever. To this effect I have duly given this debt-bond in writing of my free will."

The defendant admitted the bond, but pleaded non-joinder of parties. He alleged that the plaintiff had two undivided brothers, Vishnu and Govind; that all the three brothers were present when the loan was made and the bond executed; that Govind paid him the money, but took the bond in Hari's name, and that the money was advanced from the joint family funds. He contended that the plaintiff's brothers were necessary parties.

At the hearing it was admitted that the loan had been made out of the joint family funds, and that the bond was obtained in the plaintiff's name.

The Subordinate Judge referred the following questions:—

(1) Whether the plaintiff's brothers were necessary parties?

(2) Whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover the sum due on the money-bond sued upon."

The opinion of the Subordinate Judge was that the plaintiff's brothers were not necessary parties to the suit, and that the plaintiff alone was entitled to recover the debt.

Vasudeo G. Bhandarkar (amicus curiæ), for the plaintiff:—The bond was passed to the plaintiff in his individual capacity; he can, therefore, maintain the present suit. His brothers are not necessary parties —Jagabhai Lallubhai v. Rastamji Nasarwanji (1); Yeknath Ramchandra v. Waman Brahmadev (2).

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan (amicus curiæ), for the defendant.—It is admitted that the loan was advanced to the defendant from the joint family funds; therefore, the plaintiff alone cannot sue. His brothers are as much interested in the recovery of money as he himself is, and as they are not joined as parties, the suit must fail.

[437] [PARSONS, J., referred to Bungsee Singh v. Soodist Lall (3).]

ORDER.

SARGENT, C. J.—The opinion of the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff could sue alone on the bond is correct. Costs to be costs in the case.

BABASAB VALAD LODSAB, CURATOR AND MANAGER OF THE PROPERTY OF DECEASED DADASAB KANTY, (Plaintiff) v. NARASAPPA BIN IRAPPANNA (Defendant).* [21st March, 1895.]

Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), s. 4—Curator—Act XIX of 1841.

A curator appointed under the Curator's Act (XIX of 1841) is not a person claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person whose estate he is appointed to manage, and is not required to take out a certificate under s. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889) before he can obtain a decree.

[R., 37 C. 754 (758)=12 C.L.J. 252=6 Ind. Cas. 416.]

THIS was a reference by Rao Bahadur G. V. Limaye, First Class Subordinate Judge of Dharwar, under s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The plaintiff was appointed curator of the estate of one Dadamiya valad Hatelsaheb under Act XIX of 1841, and as such he sued to recover rupees ninety due on a bond passed to the deceased by the defendant on the 27th August, 1891.

The defendant contended (inter alia) that the plaintiff could not sue without a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889).

The Subordinate Judge thereupon submitted the following question :—

"Is the curator entitled to sue without production of a succession certificate under Act VII of 1889 ?"

The opinion of the Subordinate Judge was in the negative.

[438] Manchubhai N. Choksi (amicus curiæ), for the plaintiff.—In the present case the certificate which has been granted to us under the Curator's Act (XIX of 1841) expressly authorizes us to institute suits. Therefore, a succession certificate is not necessary for the maintenance of the suit. Further, it is not necessary for a curator appointed under s. 9 of the Curator's Act to obtain a certificate contemplated by s. 23 of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), because a curator does not become entitled to the effects of the deceased as his representative, but as a person appointed by the Court to take charge of his property.

Dhondu P. Kirloskar (amicus curiæ), for the defendant.—Section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889) applies to the case of a curator. The plaintiff sues in a representative capacity. He is identified with the persons eventually entitled to succeed to the estate of the deceased by right of inheritance or otherwise. He is thus a person claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased within the meaning of s. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act.

OPINION.

PERSONS, J.—We are of opinion that a curator appointed under Act XIX of 1841 is not a person claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person whose estate he is appointed to manage within the meaning of s. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), and that he is not required to take out a certificate under it before he can obtain a decree. He is not a representative of the deceased person, but is merely entrusted by the Court with certain powers over the estate for a temporary purpose, amongst which is the power to sue in his own name given him by s. 9 of Act XIX of 1841. We are confirmed, in this opinion, by the provisions of s. 23 of the Succession Certificate Act, for which there would have been no necessity had the provisions of s. 4 applied to the curator, since it contemplates his exercising his authority until a certificate under the Act has been granted.

Order accordingly.

SARAFALI TYABALI (Plaintiff) v. SUBRAYA BATERAYA AND NAROTAMDAS CANDAS (Defendants).*

[13th, 15th and 17th September, 1895.]

Lease—Assignment—What amounts to—Terms appropriate to freehold and fazendari land—Forfeiture by assignment without license—Waiver of forfeiture, what amounts to—Result of waiver of forfeiture—Damages on forfeiture for breach of covenant to repair.

An assignment by way of mortgage of leasehold property in terms appropriate to fazendari property, the lease and mesne assignments being handed over to the mortgagee on execution of the deed, and a subsequent assignment of the equity of redemption of same property in terms appropriate to freehold property will, in the absence of any circumstances to lead the assignees to believe that the assignor had any further interest in the property, operate as assignments of the lease.

Where there is a proviso in a lease for forfeiture on assignment without previous license of the lessor, the acceptance by the lessor of rent or insurance premia from the assignee without license or the entering into an agreement with him in respect of repairs operates as a waiver of any and all causes of forfeiture of which the lessor is at the time aware.

Where assignments of leaseholds are invalid as being in breach of a covenant not to assign without previous license and so causing forfeiture of the lease, but are valid in all other respects, on waiver of the forfeiture the assignments become operative, and those taking under them become assignees of the lease with the consent of the lessor, and are subject to all the liabilities of such assignees.

The rule in Joyner v. Weeks (1) that when there is a lease with a covenant to leave the premises in repair at the end of the term, and such covenant is broken, the lessee must pay what the lessor proves to be a reasonable and proper amount for putting the premises into the state of repair in which they ought to be left applies where a term has ceased by forfeiture as well as where it has expired by efflux of time.

BY a lease dated the 16th February, 1891, the plaintiff and his two brothers Mahomedali and Esofali demised to one Hariram Deoji and another certain land and premises in Bombay for the term of ninety-nine years from the 1st October, 1890, at the quarterly rent of Rs. 525 payable in advance by four quarterly payments in each year.

The lease contained (inter alia) the following covenants by the lessees, their executors, administrators and assigns :—

(1) to pay the rent on the dates specified ;

[440] (2) within two months from the date of the lease to repair thoroughly the old chawls Nos. 1, 2 and 3 marked in the plan annexed thereto, and throughout the said term at their own expense well and sufficiently repair, maintain and keep the said premises and all fixtures and additions thereto in good and substantial repair and condition ;

(3) to insure and to keep the said premises insured against loss or damage by fire ;

(4) not to assign, mortgage and charge the said premises, or any part thereof, without the previous license in writing of the lessors, their heirs or assigns ;

(5) at the expiration or sooner determination of the said term to deliver up the said premises and all new fixtures and additions thereto in good and substantial condition and in such state and condition as should be consistent with the due performance of the said several covenants.

The said lease also provided that if the rent should be in arrears, or if and whenever the lessees, their executors, &c., should assign, mortgage or charge the said premises without such license as aforesaid, and whenever there should be a breach of any of the covenants aforesaid, the lessors, their heirs and assigns might at any time during the said term re-enter upon the said premises, and thereupon the term of ninety-nine years should absolutely determine.

In the year 1893 the said lease was with the lessors' consent assigned to one Shetiba Enkati Silam.

On the 28th September, 1893, the said Shetiba Enkati Silam mortgaged the said premises to the second defendant (Narotamdas Candas) for Rs. 7,000. The mortgage-deed contained no mention of the lease, and the mortgage was made without the knowledge or consent of the lessors. The lease and mesne assignments were, however, handed over to the second defendant on execution of the deed.

On the 2nd February, 1894, the said Shetiba Enkati Silam assigned the equity of redemption in the said leasehold to the [441] first defendant (Subraya Bateraya) without the knowledge and consent of the lessors.

The plaint alleged that the rent due under the said lease having fallen into arrear, and Shetiba Enkati having neglected to repair and insure the premises, the lessors through their attorneys sent him a letter on the 21st April, 1894, setting forth his breaches of the covenants in the lease and giving him notice that they intended to exercise their right of re-entry in accordance with the terms of the lease and calling upon him to give up possession within eight days from the service of such notice, &c.

On the same day the lessors having been informed of the mortgage to the second defendant sent him a notice stating that they did not in any way recognize him as having any interest in the property, as the mortgage to him was made in breach of covenant and without their consent.

On the 25th April, 1894, Shetiba Enkati Silam's solicitors sent a letter to the lessors informing them that he had assigned the said leasehold to the first defendant (Subraya), and on the same day they sent another letter to the second defendant (Narotamdas) calling upon him forthwith to comply with the covenants in the lease, and adding " in the event of your failing to do so, and if any steps are taken by the fazendars against our client in respect thereof, our client will hold you responsible for the costs and consequences."

On the 27th April, 1894, the solicitors for the first defendant wrote to the lessors' solicitors tendering the plaintiff Rs. 1,050 " being the ground rent now due by him together with Rs. 37-8, the premium paid by your client." On the 28th April the lessors' solicitor wrote a reply refusing to accept the amount tendered, unless the covenants of the lease in respect to repairs of the property were forthwith complied with or unless some guarantee was given that the premises would be repaired. A correspondence subsequently took place, the result of which was that the first defendant paid to the lessors the rent then claimed by them and undertook to do the necessary repairs after the monsoon of 1894.

[442] On the 16th October, 1894, by a partition deed executed between the lessors the said premises subject to the said lease became vested in the plaintiff.

The plaintiff filed this suit on the 10th June, 1895. He alleged that the repairs had not been effected and that the first defendant had committed a further breach of covenant in not having paid the rent as provided by the lease. He claimed Rs. 1,050 as due for rent. He also alleged that the first defendant had failed to insure the premises, and he claimed Rs. 37-8 as the sum paid by himself for insurance.

The following paragraph of the plaint sets forth the plaintiff's case as against the second defendant:—

"The plaintiff is informed and believes that the said second defendant has been in possession and receipt of the rents and profits of the said premises since the date of the alleged mortgage to him as aforesaid, and the plaintiff says that the second defendant is liable to pay damages, as hereinafter prayed, for the non-repair of the said premises and the sum hereinafter claimed for the insurance thereof. The plaintiff will also contend that the said alleged mortgage to the second defendant is void and of no effect as against the plaintiff."

The plaint prayed for a declaration that the lease had been forfeited and that the mortgage to the second defendant was void and inoperative as against the plaintiff; that the defendants should give up possession, and that they or either of them should pay Rs. 1,050 due as rent on the 1st April, 1895 and such further sums as might accrue due up to the date of re-entry. It also prayed for damages for non-repair and for Rs. 37-8 paid for insurance charges, &c.

The following issues were raised at the hearing:—

(1) Whether as against the first defendant there has been a forfeiture of the lease?

(2) Whether the plaintiff has not waived such forfeiture, if any?

(3) Whether the first defendant is not entitled equitably to be relieved from the effect of such forfeiture, if any, and, if so, on what terms?

(4) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover from the second defendant the sum of Rs. 1,050, or any further sum, as prayed in clause (d) of prayer?

(5) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover from the second defendant the sum of Rs. 37-8 mentioned in cl. (e) of prayer?

(6) Whether the second defendant is under any obligation to the plaintiff to repair the premises?

[443] (7) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover damages from the second defendant for non-repair as claimed in cls. (f) and (g) of prayer?

(8) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover any and what amount of damages from the first defendant?

The plaintiff had notice of the mortgage to the second defendant before the 20th April, 1894. Subsequently to that he received Rs. 3,000 as rent from the first defendant. That is a waiver of forfeiture—Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, p. 337; see also pp. 343 and 344. and for insurance; and it was provided that on breach of any of these covenants the lessors should be at liberty to re-enter. By divers valid assignments the lease was from time to time assigned, and in 1893 the remainder of the term became vested in one Shetiba Enkati.

On the 28th September, 1893, Shetiba Enkati mortgaged the demised property to the second defendant; and on the 2nd February, 1894, transferred his equity of redemption therein to the first defendant, both transactions being without the consent in writing, or in any other way, of the lessors. These two transactions ought, if done regularly, to have been carried out by an underlease to the second defendant, and an assignment of the term, subject to the underlease, to the first defendant. This has [445] not been the case. Hence it is necessary to determine what is the real effect of the transactions which took place.

The mortgage recites that Shetiba under an assignment of leasehold property of the same date as the mortgage was absolutely entitled to the premises in dispute, and it grants, releases, conveys and assures the same unto the second defendant, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns as if they were what is called fazendari land, subject to redemption. It makes no provision for payment of a rent to the so-called fazendar; all that it does is to provide that the mortgagee is at liberty to credit the mortgagor with the rents of the property after payment of fazendari dues, rates and taxes and proper outgoings. At the time of the execution of this deed the original lease and the mesne assignments were handed to the second defendant.

What, then, is the effect of this transaction? In Cruise's Digest, Vol. IV, s. 18, p. 88, it is stated that no particular words are necessary for an assignment of a term, and "that give, grant, &c.," are as good and effectual as "assign, &c.," which are the ordinary terms. In Beardmore v. Wilson (1), it was held that an underlease for the whole remaining portion of the term operates as an assignment of the term; and from the cases cited and acted on therein it appears that an underlease for a term exceeding that of the original lease has the same effect. Seeing, then, that when this mortgage was executed the lease and assignments were handed over to the second defendant, and that there is no evidence to show that there was anything to lead him to believe that Shetiba had any further interest in the premises mortgaged, I consider I am justified, on these authorities, in holding that the mortgage-deed operated as an assignment of the lease.

The deed to the first defendant of the 2nd February, 1894, commences as if it were a conveyance of freehold property, and it grants and conveys the property to the first defendant, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, but only to have and to hold the right, title and interest of Shetiba therein, subject to the mortgage of the second defendant. I can see no substantial [446] difference between these two deeds, and I must hold that this also operates as an assignment of the lease.

The execution of these deeds, or either of them, without the consent of the lessors operated as a breach of the covenant not to assign without a license in writing, and gave the lessors the right at any time thereafter to re-enter upon the demised premises. On the 21st March, 1894, when the lessors first gave notice to Shetiba with respect to other breaches of covenant, they seem to have been unaware of the latter of these two above-mentioned breaches, but they knew of the former, as they sent a letter to the second defendant enclosing a copy of their notice to Shetiba, but apparently only as a warning of what might happen, as they expressly write that they do not recognize the second defendant as having any interest in the property, as the mortgage was made without their written consent. The case in the Privy Council hereinafter cited shows that this protest on the part of the lessors need not be taken into account. Shetiba on the 25th April 1894, disclaimed all liability on the ground that he had assigned to the first defendant If on that day the lessors had brought a suit against the first and second defendants for ejectment, and nothing else, there would have been no defence to it, and a suit would have lain against Shetiba for rent and damage for not insuring and non-repair, which he could not have defended, as he was still the assignee of the lease, his two deeds, being made without the written consent of the lessors, not operating in his favour as an assignment so as to relieve him in any way of liability to perform the covenants of the lease.

On the 27th April, however, the first defendant sent to the lessors the amount of rent and fire-insurance premium claimed by them, which they accepted, and thereafter accepted an agreement from him as to the repair of the premises within a certain time, taking from him a deposit of Rs. 500 for the due fulfilment of the conditions. By this act, in my opinion, the lessors waived the forfeiture caused by any and all causes of forfeiture, which they then knew. See Doe v. Pritchard (1); Croft v. Lumley (2); Davenport v. Reg (3). Consequently, the two defendants [447] being entitled to the demised property by assignments were thereafter in the position of assignees of the lease with the consent of the lessors.

On the 16th October, 1894, the plaintiff became the sole owner of the reversion. In June, 1895, rent was again in arrears, and repairs had not been done properly; and on the 6th June the plaintiffs' solicitor wrote to the second defendant telling him that while they did not in any way recognize him as having any interest in the property, they would proceed to eject him and get such further relief as the plaintiff might be entitled to, unless he paid up the rent then due together with the fire insurance, and undertook to put the premises in repair. The second defendant of course did not comply with the plaintiff's request, as he would thereby have effectually estopped himself in the future from denying that he was assignee of the term—Williams v. Heales (4). His cautiousness cannot, however, avail him in this case.

On the 9th June the plaintiff filed this suit against both the defendants. After setting out the various breaches of covenants he prays against both the defendants' possession, and that one or both of them may be ordered to pay rent due and damages for non-performance of covenants to insure and repair. The first defendant practically confesses his liability, and asks for the forfeiture of the lease to be set aside on such terms as the Court may think fit, and I may, therefore, proceed for the present as if the first defendant were out of consideration altogether.

The plaintiff in the 7th paragraph of his plaint alleges the mortgage to the second defendant, but says it was made without his knowledge or consent. In para. 17 the plaintiff charges that the second defendant has been in possession of the property and is liable to pay rent and damages for non-insurance and non-repair.

The second defendant in his written statement alleges that the mortgage to him was executed with the knowledge and acquiescence of the plaintiff, apparently thereby claiming to possess [448] a valid assignment of the premises, but submits his rights to the Court.

Now all the prayers seem to me to be proper in the present case. Mr. Russell unnecessarily tried to support the prayer for damages as against the second defendant as a mortgagee in possession. A mortgagee in possession of a term ought to pay the landlord's rent and keep the premises insured and repaired, but for non-performance of these duties he is liable to his mortgagor and to no one else, and the plaintiff is not his mortgagor. Consequently this prayer cannot be supported on that ground; but as I hold the second defendant is an assignee of the lease, he is liable to be ejected for breach of the covenants contained therein, and he is also liable in damages for his breach of them.

Supposing, however, that I am wrong as to the effect of the payment of rent by the first defendant, I am of opinion that the effect of the charge in the 17th paragraph and the double set of prayers which are inconsistent unless the second defendant is an assignee of the lease, the plaintiff not indicating which set he is going to press against the second defendant, but up to the end trying to press both, is to cause a waiver of forfeiture by pleading, and that estops him from relying on the breach of covenant—Evans v. Davis (1), so that he could not eject the second defendant, but must be content with a decree for damages. This view would, however, result in a rather complicated decree, and in my opinion is not so correct as the former one.

I, therefore, hold that by reason of non-payment of rent since the payment by the first defendant in June, 1894, and by reason of the premises being allowed to continue in a state of non-repair and from their not having been insured, the plaintiff is now entitled to re-enter, and that both the defendants are liable for the rent, the amount of fire insurance already paid by the plaintiff, and for damages for non-repair.

The next question to be determined is, what is the amount of those damages. Under the lease of 16th February, 1891, a piece of land with four chawls on it was demised to Hariram Deoji, and he was within two months thoroughly to repair the three [449] chawls mentioned therein to the entire satisfaction of the lessors. That was never done; but defendants are not liable for that breach of covenant. There was a further covenant to well and sufficiently maintain and keep all the demised premises and fixtures and additions thereto in good and substantial repairs. This covenant has been broken by the defendants.

It was alleged by the defendants, and admitted by the plaintiff, that Hariram Deoji erected a new chawl after the demise to him; but, so far as I can judge, that can only be true if there were only three chawls on the demised land; whereas the lease shows there were four, and I cannot see on the plan attached thereto where there was room for another. If there was another erected, I am of opinion that the covenants in the lease do not apply to this newly-erected chawl. There is nothing said in the lease about separate buildings which might be erected on the demised land, it only provides for additions to present buildings; and under the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) I think the lessee would be entitled to remove any buildings in respect of which there was no covenant in the lease requiring them to be delivered up at the expiry thereof. Consequently, the lessee would not under the lease be bound, in the meantime, to keep such buildings in repair. The defendants, however, are liable to pay damages for the breach of the covenant to repair in respect of all the buildings on the land at the time of the demise, and the amount to which they are liable is thus laid down by the Court of Appeal in Joyner v. Weeks (1): "When there is a lease with a covenant to leave the premises in repair at the end of the term, and such covenant is broken, the lessee must pay what the lessor proves to be a reasonable and proper amount for putting the premises into the state of repair in which they ought to be left." The Court was there dealing with a case in which the term had expired by efflux of time. Here the term has ceased by reason of forfeiture; but I see no reason to draw any distinction between the effect of the cesser of the term for these two reasons. The case would be different if this had been a suit to recover damages for breach of a covenant to repair while the term was still in existence. The case must be referred to the [450] Commissioner to ascertain the amount which it will take to put these premises into a state of good and substantial repair, having regard to the original character of the buildings and the purposes for which they are used.

There will be decree for the plaintiff against the defendants for the amount of rent Rs. 1.050, the cost of fire-insurance premium Rs. 37-8-0, and the amount found to be due for the damages. The amount of rent and fire insurance will be payable forthwith, but execution for the amount of damages for non-repair will be suspended for three months.

If the rent and fire insurance be paid forthwith and within three months, the premises be put into a state of good and substantial repair, and in the meantime all covenants in the lease other than that relating to repairs be observed, then I relieve from the forfeiture of the lease; otherwise the lease to stand forfeited and the defendants must give up possession of the demised property to the plaintiff and pay the damages hereinbefore given against them.

ANANDRAO VINAYAK (Plaintiff) v. THE ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF BOMBAY AND OTHERS (Defendants).*

[27th September and 4th October, 1895.]

Hindu will—Construction—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 101, 102, 159—Power of dispossession of moveable property, effect of—Subsequent void gift does not cut down—Gift of balance of rents of immoveable property in hands of trustees—Evidence of intention to limit duration of enjoyment of bequest—Gift by implication, what is necessary to consitiute—Estates according to Hindu law in ancestral property, Court will not presume intention to create by will—Assent to provision of will by son of Hindu testator, effect of, where there is doubt whether property ancestral or self-acquired.

[451] Where it is doubtful whether the property with which the will of a deceased Hindu purports to deal is ancestral or self-acquired, the assent of his only son to the provisions of the will, some of which are favourable and some unfavourable to his interest and that of his sons, will bind the latter as well as himself.

A direction in the will of a Hindu to the following effect " my remaining moveable property shall be dealt with by my son G. according as he may think proper ; and when the sons of my son G. shall attain the age of twenty-one years, the same shall be divided and duly received by G. and his sons in equal shares " confers an absolute gift on G. If the gift over to G's sons, on their attaining the age of twenty-one years, were valid, the absolute estate of G. would be liable to be divested on a son or sons of G. attaining the age of twenty-one years, and asking for a division ; but that gift being clearly void under ss. 101 and 102 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) its insertion has no effect on the words of absolute gift preceding it.

A direction in the will of a Hindu that immoveable property should be retained in the hands of trustees appointed by the will and that the balance of the rents, profits, &c., after the payment of expenses should be used and enjoyed by the testator's son G. in such manner as he might think fit, with a provision empowering the sons of such son to call him to account for the management of the property on attaining the age of twenty-one and with a direct, though void, gift over to the grandsons of such son, confers only a life-estate on the son G.,—the vesting the property in trustees, the right of G.'s sons to ask for an account, and the gift over to G.'s grandsons all showing an intention on the testator's part that the enjoyment of the bequest should be of limited duration within the meaning of s. 159 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865.)

To constitute a gift by implication in a will there must be a reasonable degree of certainty as to the persons intended to take and the nature of the estates which they are intended to take. A direction that until the son or sons of the tenant for life of immoveable property should attain a certain age, no person on behalf of such son or sons should ask the tenant for life for an account or raise any objection, does not sufficiently define the persons to take or the estates in which they are to take to constitute a gift by implication.

It would be difficult, if not impossible, for a Hindu to create by express terms the estates which arise by virtue of the doctrine of Hindu law in regard to the rights of male issue in ancestral property, and even where the hypothesis that the testator intended (under a misapprehension of the law) to create such estates affords a key to the will and gives an adequate explanation of the various estates which would have to be implied in order to give full effect to the different directions contained in the will, yet if the estates cannot be implied from the words used in the will, the Court cannot create such estate for the testator by implication, since to do so would be to construct a will for him based upon his supposed intention, not on the words which he has used.

SUIT for construction of the will of one Parmanandas Jivandas.

Parmanandas Jivandas died on the 17th November, 1890. He left a son Govardhandas Parmanandas and two grandsons [452] (defendants Nos. 3 and 4), the sons of Govardhandas, him surviving. Defendant No. 3 was born in August, 1886, and defendant No. 4 in May, 1888. Subsequently to the testator's death, viz., on the 1st March, 1894, a third son (defendant No. 5) was born to the said Govardhandas.

By his will dated the 16th October, 1890, Parmanandas Jivandas appointed his son Govardhandas and the plaintiff Anandrao Vinayak to be his executors. They duly proved the will on the 6th April, 1891.

The will was in the following terms :—

"1. The 'wills,' 'codicils' or other disposition papers which I may have made prior to this 'will' are all null and void.

"2. After my decease my funeral outlays and the outlays which will have to be made for twelve months agreeably to the custom of (my) caste, my son Bhai Govardhandas shall make out of my estate in such manner as he may think fit.

"3. Out of my estate Rs. 20,000, namely twenty thousand, shall be paid to my daughter Bai Vijkuvarbai as a 'legacy.'

"4. To each of my mehtas and clerks and servants and menials a sum amounting to twelve months' pay of each person respectively shall be paid as a legacy : from among them to the Bhaya Ajodha Prasad besides the said (legacy) Rs. 5 shall be paid every month as pension, and if the said Bhaya Ajodha should go to perform a pilgrimage, then Rs. 400 shall be paid (to him).

"5. There are my immoveable properties in Bombay and in places abroad. If it should be necessary to repair them, the same shall be repaired out of my estate.

"6. As regards my immoveable estate situate in Bombay and in places abroad or to which I am entitled, I appoint my son Bhai Govardhandas and Mr. Anandrao Vinayakrao, in all two persons, 'trustees' of the whole of such 'estate.' They shall administer my aforesaid immoveable property and recover the rents and profits (thereof), and if it should be necessary, or if a good price is realized, (they) shall sell (the same); (with) the money that may be produced by such sale another immoveable property shall be purchased, and the immoveable property which shall be purchased shall form part of my aforesaid 'trust' account, and until another immoveable property can be purchased, Government (loan) notes shall be purchased and kept (intact). With regard to the rents and profits of the aforesaid 'trust' property and interest on moneys which may be produced after the expenses shall have been deducted therefrom, the balance that may remain over is to be used and enjoyed by my said trustee my son Bhai Govardhandas in such manner as he may think fit.

"7. Excluding the same immoveable property as to my remaining moveable property (consisting of) ready money, (Government loan) notes and shares and outstanding debts and ornaments and trinkets and jewellery and silver vessels and copper and brass vessels and house furniture, carriages and horses, &c., which may remain over out of the same after the amounts in respect of the above-mentioned outlays and expenses [453] for repairs and legacies, &c., shall have been deducted, the residue that may remain over shall be dealt with by my son Bhai Govardhandas agreeably to what he may think proper. And when the (male) issues, that is to say, sons of my (son) Bhai Govardhandas, shall attain the age of twenty-one years, the same shall be divided and duly received by Bhai Govardhandas and his (male) issues, that is to say, sons in equal shares.

"8. I appoint my son Bhai Govardhandas and Anandrao Vinayakrao 'executors' of this 'will.' Dated this at Bombay the 15th of October in the year 1890.

"Fresh Clause.—As long as my son Bhai Govardhandas or any of his son (or sons) are alive so long the immoveable property mentioned in the aforesaid sixth clause cannot be sold, nor shall they make a partition of and take the same between themselves. But after the lifetime of my son Bhai Govardhandas and his (male) issues, that is to say sons, the same immoveable property shall duly be divided and given to Bhai Govardhandas' son's son (or sons) on (his or their) attaining the age of twenty-one years. Until the said Bhai Govardhandas' son (or sons) shall attain the age of twenty-one years, no person on behalf of his son (or sons) shall ask Bhai Govardhandas for an account, nor shall (he) raise any objection."

On the 22nd June, 1891, the plaintiff transferred the management of the moveable property of the testator to Govardhandas, and he managed it until his death.

On the 29th March, 1894, Govardhandas died intestate, leaving his widow (defendant No. 2) and his three sons (defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5) him surviving.

On the 14th August, 1894, the Administrator-General of Bombay (defendant No. 1) obtained letters of administration to the estate of Govardhandas, and claimed and obtained the possession and custody of the moveable property in the possession of Govardhandas at his death as belonging to his estate. The plaintiff as surviving executor of Parmanandas contended that Govardhandas left no estate of his own, but that everything left by him really belonged to the estate of his father Parmanandas.

The plaintiff as surviving executor of Parmanandas now brought this suit praying as follows :—

"(a) That the will of the said Parmanandas Jivandas may be construed by this Honourable Court, and the rights of the said Govardhandas Parmanandas and his widow and sons, second, third, fourth and fifth defendants, may be ascertained and declared, and that the duties of the plaintiff as executor and trustee with regard to the estate of the said Parmanandas Jivandas may be defined and declared.

"(b) That it may be declared what portion of the property, immoveable and moveable, aforesaid belongs to the estate of the said Parmanandas Jivandas, and what portion thereof belongs to the estate of the said Govardhandas Parmanandas Jivandas.

[454]" (c) That the first defendant may be ordered to hand over to the plaintiff, as executor aforesaid, all the property in his possession belonging to the estate of the said Parmanandas Jivandas."

In his written statement the first defendant as administrator of Govardhandas submitted to the Court whether under the will, Govardhandas was not absolutely entitled to the immoveable and moveable property of Parmanandas.

Defendant No. 2 (the widow of Govardhandas) died pending the suit.

Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 (sons of Govardhandas) contended that they having been in existence at the death of Parmanandas were alone entitled to his estate under his will.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.
20 B. 450.

Defendant No. 5 (son of Govardhandas born after the death of Parmanandas) contended that the property was ancestral in the hands of Parmanandas, and consequently that he had no right to dispose of it by will. The point arose in this way. The grandfather of Parmanandas Jivandas was one Canji Chattur, who had carried on business with his two brothers (Ramji and Premji) whose property at their death came to him. He died in 1859 and by his will he divided his property between his two sons Ranchordas and Jivandas. Under this will they took the property in moieties as tenants-in-common (1). Jivandas died intestate in 1859, leaving his son Parmanandas (the present testator) him surviving. Ranchordas died subsequently without issue, leaving a will in which he stated that by the death of his brother Jivandas he had become the heir to the whole of their father's property, and that regarding his nephew Parmanandas as his son his executors were to hand over the whole of the said property to him when he attained twenty-one years of age.

Defendant No. 5 now contended that, " having regard to the origin and nature of the property which Parmanandas purported to dispose of by his will, " the property was not validly disposed of thereby—at all events so far as regarded the moiety to which Parmanandas had succeeded on the death of his father Jivandas intestate.

[455] Defendant No. 5 further contended that in any event he was entitled to a one-third share of the property purported to be disposed of by the will of Parmanandas or found to belong to the estate of Govardhandas.

In addition to the issues raised by the defendants the plaintiff raised the following :—

1. Whether Parmanandas Jivandas died intestate in respect of any and what part of his property ?

2. Whether defendant No. 5 is entitled to raise the question of Parmanandas' property being ancestral property in the hands of Parmanandas ?

The suit was ordered to be heard before two Judges, and now came on for hearing before Farran, C.J., and B. Tyabji, J.

Macpherson (Acting Advocate-General) and Inverarity, for the plaintiff (the executor).—As executor the plaintiff does not take a contentious part. He submits that the property was all self-acquired in the hands of Parmanandas, and that he, therefore, had power to dispose of it. As to the immoveable property, we submit that the effect of the will is to give a life-estate in this property to Govardhandas, and beyond that there is an intestacy. As to the moveable estate, Govardhandas took a life interest in the income of it until his sons attained the age of twenty-one. They referred to the Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 101.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—This suit was filed by the plaintiff, who is the surviving executor of the will of Parmanandas Jivandas, to have the will construed by the Court and to obtain a declaration of the rights which Govardhandas Parmanandas, the son of the testator, took under the will; and of the rights which the widow and sons of Govardhandas, in the events which had happened, took in the estate after the death of Govardhandas. Since the suit was filed, Manghu Vahu, the second defendant, the widow of Govardhandas Parmanandas, has died. The only persons now who can have an [457] interest in the estate of the testator Parmanandas, or in that of his son Govardhandas, or the infant defendants Dwarkadas and Haridas (defendants Nos. 3 and 4), the sons of Govardhandas by his first wife, and the infant defendant Kaku, their half-brother, the son of Govardhandas by his second wife Manghu Vahu.

As the right of the testator Parmanandas to make the will in question has, on behalf of the defendant Kaku, been called in question by reason of the alleged ancestral nature of the property dealt with by the will, it will be desirable to consider that question in the first instance. For this purpose it is necessary briefly to refer to the history of the family and the origin of the property of the testator disclosed by the evidence and exhibits in the cause.

As to Chatur, the remote ancestor of the testator, there is no evidence except that he had three sons—Ramji, Premji and Canji. It may, however, be inferred that he left no family property, from the fact of each of his sons at their respective deaths dealing by will with the whole property which each of them left. Ramji died in 1835 leaving by his will the residue of his property to his brothers Premji and Canji whom he appointed his executors. They proved his will. It is dated the 8th June 1835 (Ex. A).

Premji died in 1836, leaving by his will the residue of his property to his brother Canji. The brother proved this will. It is dated the 2nd July, 1836, (Ex. B). Canji survived his brothers by many years and died in 1859. He made his will which is dated the 25th October, 1852 (Ex. C), and a codicil thereto, which is dated the 11th May, 1853 (Ex. D). The terms of his will and codicil show that he considered and dealt with all the property of which he died possessed as his own absolute property. As to the property which he acquired under the respective wills of his brothers, he writes "that every remaining property they gave to me and departed. I am the owner, having the full control thereof. No one has any claim or title thereto."

This property in the 9th clause of his will he includes in his own property, and (subject to legacies) deals with the aggregate as follows. We transcribe the clause:—

"After making the payments agreeable to what was written by my brothers, 2 persons, the remainder of their property having been given to me by my brothers Premji [458] Chatur and Ramji Chatur, 2 persons, they assigned full authority to me and departed. All that property is mine. No one has any claim upon it. All their property is entered in my account books. The same comprises 'estates' and 'notes' and outstanding claims to be recovered, and 'shares.' All that property is mine. Whatever debts there may be are to be paid out of the same, and of the balance which may remain I am the owner. And as to the vouchers and claims which there may be in the name of brother Ramji Chatur, or which there may be in my name, I am the owner of all these. As regards them, in the event of my decease, the funeral outlays after me and the religious and the charitable donations and what is to be transferred to my wife and daughter, and the legacies and what is to be paid outside, are mentioned below. The same being deducted out of my property, my sons Bhai Ranchoddas Canji and Bhai Jivandas Canji, 2 persons, are owners of the balance which may remain. In the event of my decease they have full powers."

Canji died on the 13th February, 1859, and his younger son Jivandas Canji died on the 2nd March following, leaving an only son the testator, Parmanandas Jivandas, then a boy of about eight years of age. Ranchoddas Canji proved his father's will and entered into possession of the property left by the latter.

From the fact of the several wills which we have referred to having been made, and from their terms which are very definite upon this point, and from their having been proved and acted on, we think that the proper inference to draw is that the property left by Canji Chatur was his self-acquired property. His sons Jivandas and Ranchoddas, therefore, took it under his will as their self-acquired property—Jugmohandas v. Sir Mangaldas (1). Down to this point the case does not, we consider, present any difficulty.

Ranchoddas Canji soon after proving his father's will died on the 14th May 1859 (Ex. D). He left a will dated the 12th of May, 1859 (Ex. E). In it he recites that by reason of his brother Jivandas having died without making a will, he had become the heir to the whole of the moveable and immoveable property which their father had left, apparently treating the devise to him and to his brother as a joint devise. He bequeathed several legacies and gave various directions and appointed Bhanabhai Dwarkadas and four other gentlemen as his executors. The residue of the property he dealt with as follows :—

"The right of inheritance of us two brothers to the moveable and immoveable property has been mentioned in the will made by our said father, and it is stated that [459] whatever property may be left, after defraying the expenses, shall be enjoyed by both the brothers; and my younger brother the said Jivandas, who is dead, has left a son named Bhai Parmanandas of the age of about eight years, and I have no issue. Therefore Bhai Parmanandas being considered by me as my son, the said Bhai Parmanandas has a right of inheritance to the whole of the moveable and immoveable property; and when he attains the age of twenty-one years, the executors appointed by me and mentioned below shall entrust to Bhai Parmanandas the whole of my property, moveable and immoveable, that may remain after defraying the expenses agreeably to all the conditions stated in this will."

In the event of Bhai Parmanandas dying before attaining the age of twenty-one years, the property was to be divided into moieties and given in charity.

The executors appointed by the will of Ranchoddas (with the exception of two) proved it and took possession of the property and managed it until Parmanandas Jivandas attained the age of eighteen years. On the 23rd January, 1868, Parmanandas Jivandas took out letters of administration to the estate of his late father Jivandas Canji. In his affidavit dated 21st October, 1867, (Ex. K) he had described the property which was likely to come to him under such letters "as an undivided half share of the property left by Jivandas Canji."

On the 4th May, 1870, the executors of Ranchoddas Canji reciting that the shares of Jivandas and Ranchoddas Canji in the estate of Canji Chatur had not been divided, and that they had managed both, and that Parmanandas Jivandas had taken out letters of administration to the estate of his father Jivandas, and was satisfied with their administration, made over the whole property, except some which had been given in trust for charity, to Parmanandas Jivandas on his executing a release in their favour (Ex. F). In this release Parmanandas clearly recognized the will of his uncle Ranchoddas as a valid will; subsequently in his written statement in Suit No. 204 of 1876 (Ex. K 4), in his plaint in Suit No. 566 of 1877 (Ex. K 3), and in his written statement in Suit No. 237 of 1877 (Ex K 2), Parmanandas set up the case that the will of his uncle Ranchoddas was null and void on the ground that the property with which he dealt by his will was ancestral and joint, but his allegations were then made to defeat the legacies under his uncle's will and are not entitled to weight. The Privy Council in the case of Parmanandas [460] Jivandas v. Vinayak Wasudev (1) found it unnecessary to determine what estate Ranchoddas had in the property which he purported to devise, but Sir Michael Westropp adopted a view upon that question unfavourable to the contentions of Parmanandas. With that view we agree and hold accordingly that Parmanandas had a self-acquired estate in the moiety of the property which he took under the will of his uncle Ranchoddas.

It will not be necessary for us to come to any decision as to the nature of the estate which he took in the other, in the view which we have taken as to the construction of his will. The will is dated the 16th October, 1890. Govardhandas, the only son of the testator, was then of adult years. He endorsed the will with these words : " This will is agreed to by me."

Dwarkadas, the eldest son of Govardhandas, was born on the 18th August, 1886. Haridas, his second son, was born on the 17th May, 1888. The testator died on the 17th November, 1890. Kaku, the third and youngest son of Govardhandas, was born on the 1st March, 1894, and consequently after the death of the testator.

The executors named in the will, namely, the plaintiff Anandrao Vinayak and Govardhandas, proved it on the 6th April, 1891 (Ex. G). In accordance with an agreement between them (Ex. K2) the moveable property of the testator was made over to Govardhandas, while Anandrao Vinayak and Govardhandas jointly managed the immoveable estate until the death of Govardhandas, which took place on the 19th March, 1894. He died intestate. On the 14th August, 1894, administration of his estate was granted to the Administrator General. As we have already stated, he left three sons, the infant defendants and his widow Mangu Vahu, who has since died. The property in suit is of considerable value.

We now proceed to consider the construction and effect of the will. It opens with directions as to the funeral ceremonies of the testator and with the gift of certain legacies, and then in cls. 5 and 6 deals with his immoveable property. Clause 7 then deals with the residue of his moveable property, and the 8th [461] clause appoints executors. A fresh clause more fully explains his wishes as to the immoveable property, and with this the will closes.

It is contended by counsel for the fifth defendant Kaku that the will does not dispose of the corpus of the property of the testator, but only recognizes the rights of his descendants in it and gives directions as to its management ; and that the property consequently as ancestral property devolved upon Govardhandas, and after him upon his sons the infant defendants in co-parcenary. He argues that Ranchoddas by his will treated the property similarly, allowing it to descend to Parmanandas, and that it was ancestral property in the hands of the latter, and was considered and treated by him as such. The argument is not without force, but we think that the depositions in the will extend so far beyond mere directions as to management that we are unable to accept it, and that we must hold that Parmanandas by his will intended to direct the succession to, and to confer ownership in, his property after his death, and that his will must be construed on that footing, and according to the canons of construction laid down in the Indian Succession Act.

Though the testator intended to tie up the property for a lengthened period, he ultimately deals with the corpus and does make direct gifts in the interim. Both these circumstances differentiate the case from Shookmoy v. Monohari (1). It is very different from the case before us. The testator has divided the property into two distinct classes, moveable and immoveable, according to its nature, and has dealt with each in a different manner. The directions which he has given as to the one do not appear to us to throw light upon or afford assistance in construing the directions which he has given as to the other, except the assistance which may be derived from contrasting the one set of directions with the other. The immoveable property he has manifestly regarded in the light of family property, and the directions which he has given in regard to it seem to be intended rather to provide that it should be kept in bulk for the benefit of the family than that any individual of the family, except perhaps Govardhandas, should have any separate beneficial ownership therein. The disposition which he has made of the residue of [462] the moveable property is peculiar. He clearly contemplates, as to it, an absolute beneficial ownership being vested in his grandsons at a not very distant date. The difficulty is to determine how he has dealt with it—what estate (if any) he has conferred in it during the intervening period.

The provision as to the residue of the moveable property is as follows (His Lordship read the clause and continued :—) The "repairs" referred to in that clause have reference, we think, to those mentioned in the fifth clause of the will, and not to such as shall from time to time be necessary for the upkeep of the immoveable property which are otherwise provided for.

The fifth clause contemplates the immoveable property being at once put in repair out of the capital. It runs thus : "There are my immoveable properties in Bombay and in places abroad. If it should be necessary to repair them, the same shall be repaired out of my estate." This direction has to be provided for. The provision is accordingly found in cl. 7 : "out of the same" (the bulk of the moveable property), "after the amounts in respect of the above-mentioned outlays and expenses for repairs and legacies, &c., shall have been deducted, the residue that may remain over shall be dealt with by my son Govardhandas agreeably to what he may think proper."

The expenses for repairs are thus placed between two other capital outlays which have to be made before the residue of the personalty is ascertained, but when the residue is ascertained after the capital outlays have been made, it appears to us that no trust for the upkeep of the immoveable property is imposed upon it.

What, then, is to be done with the residue ? It is all treated alike—horses, cash, pots, jewellery, shares, &c. It is all to be dealt with by Govardhandas as he pleases. It must, we think, have been intended that it should be made over to Govardhandas. How else could he deal with it as he pleased ? It is not, be it observed, the income of the residue which Govardhandas is to deal with, but the residue itself. And it appears to us that when you come to the conclusion that the residue is to be made over to him, and that he is to deal with it as he pleases, you have all the [463] elements of an absolute gift. Such, in our opinion, the words of the testator confer upon him.

This conclusion is not, we think, weakened by the subsequent contingent provision for the sons of Govardhandas on their attaining the age of twenty-one years. The intention seems to be that if Govardhandas' son attain twenty-one, and ask for a division of the moveable property as it shall then exist, Govardhan is to divide it with them. Until that time he is to be the owner, but his absolute estate is then to be divested, as to all but his own share, by his sons. It is unnecessary to imagine what his share in this event would be, as the gift over in favour of the sons is clearly void under ss. 101 and 102 of the Succession Act. See Bentinck v. Duke of Portland (1) ; Jobson v. Richardson (2) ; Drakeford v. Drakeford (3) ; In Re Featherstone's trust (4).

This conclusion covers the whole of the moveable property, ancestral or not, as the assent of Govardhandas to the provisions of the will, some of which are favourable and some unfavourable to his interest and that of his sons, was, we think, binding on the latter as well as on himself. It was in the nature of an assent to a family arrangement intended for the welfare of the whole family.

We rule, therefore, that the moveable property in the suit belonged to Govardhandas and on his death devolved upon his sons jointly.

It is contended that Govardhandas similarly took the immoveable property absolutely. As to it the testator has directed that it shall be held in trust and administered by his executors Govardhan and Anandrao, and after giving minute instructions as to changing its investment he concludes the original clause relating to it as follows:—" With regard to the rents and profits of the aforesaid 'trust' property and interest on moneys which may be produced, after the expenses shall have been deducted therefrom, the balance that may remain over is to be used and enjoyed by my sâid trustee my son Bhai Govardbandas in such manner as he may think fit."

[464] It is to be remarked upon that clause that, unlike the clause relating to the residue of the moveable property which the testator contemplates being made over to Govardhan, it provides for the property being retained and kept up by his trustees, and directs only the surplus income to be used and enjoyed by Govardhan. Now, it is true that under s. 159 of the Succession Act, where the interest or produce of a fund is bequeathed to any person, the principal as well as the interest shall belong to the legatee; but that rule only applies where the will affords no indication of an intention that the enjoyment of the bequest shall be of limited duration. It is impossible, we think, to hold that the will before us does not indicate such contrary intention. The very clause itself investing the property in trustees and providing for its being kept up by the trustees and giving the balance of the income only to Govardhan, affords some indication that the testator did not intend Govardhan to take the estate absolutely, but the matter is, we think, placed beyond doubt by the terms of the fresh clause. That contemplates the sons of Govardhan calling him to account for his management when they attain twenty-one, and makes a direct gift over to his grandsons after the death of Govardhan and his sons. That gift over no doubt may be void, but it is none the less indicative, on that account, of the intention of the testator not to confer an absolute estate on Govardhan. That is really the answer to Mr. Scott's argument that the provisions of the fresh clauses are inoperative to cut down the absolute estate previously given by the sixth clause (which he supported by the case of Shaw v. Ford) (1) viz., that they do not cut down the absolute estate, as no absolute estate is either given or intended to be given by the sixth clause. We think, therefore, that Govardhan took, at the utmost, only a life estate in the immoveable property.

We have now to inquire how the property is dealt with after the death of Govardhan. And as to this we think that the gift in favour of the grandsons is clearly invalid both under the Succession Act and the rule laid down in the Tagore Case. It may be altogether disregarded. The question then remains, is there a gift to the sons or issue of Govardhan after his death, and is it [465] valid? There is clearly no direct gift

OCT. 4.
ORIGINAL CIVIL.
20 B. 450.

Is there a gift by implication? We think not. There is no doubt an inference suggested by the fresh clause that the testator expected that the sons of Govardhan should have some interest in the property, but it is impossible, we think, to imply a gift when there is no certainty as to the persons who are supposed to take under it or as to the estate which they are to take by implication. There must be a reasonable degree of certainty as to those important matters before a gift can be implied. Here all is uncertain. Who are to take? Is it the sons of Govardhan, or such sons and the sons of deceased sons together, or such sons and the sons of such living sons jointly? There is absolutely nothing to show the nature of the estate which is devised to the supposed devisees. It would be mere guess-work to construct a bequest out of the materials which the vague inferences to be drawn from the fresh clause suggest. One possible inference is that he intended Govardhan's sons to take no vested estate until the age of twenty-one years. But if that is so, the gift in their favour would be invalid as offending against the 101st and 102nd sections of the Succession Act. We feel quite unable to imply, from the provisions in the will before us, a gift of the immoveable estate or of its income in favour of any one between the death of Govardhan and the decease of his last surviving son.

We are, however, disposed to think that the most probable explanation of the different clauses of the will, and the best way of understanding and reconciling them, is by the hypothesis that the testator thought that his son Govardhandas would take under the will an ancestral estate in all the property, both moveable and immoveable. Until the decision of the appellate Court in Jugmohandas v. Sir Mangaldas(1) there was an impression, amongst many in Bombay, that property acquired by a son from his father by virtue of a will would be of the nature of ancestral property. If we suppose the testator to have been under the same impression, the whole of his will becomes intelligible. He would imagine that the property in the hands of Govardhandas although acquired by him under his father's will, would still be ancestral, and, therefore, Govardhandas' sons and grandsons would by virtue [466] of their birth take an interest in it. Starting under this impression the testator's object would seem to have been to devise a scheme for the management of the property until partition, but to restrict the partition beyond the period at which the Hindu law would give the sons and descendants of Govardhandas the right to claim it. This hypothesis, we think, affords a key to the will and gives an adequate explanation of the various estates which would have to be implied in order to give full effect to the different directions contained in the will. These are estates, however, which cannot be implied from the words used in the will. They only arise by virtue of the doctrine of the Hindu law in regard to the rights of the male issue in ancestral property. It would be difficult, if not impossible, for a testator to create such estates by express terms. If we were to attempt to do so by implication, we should be constructing a will for the testator based upon his supposed intention, not on the words which he has used in his will.

The result, therefore, is that there has been an intestacy as to beneficial interest in the immoveable property of the testator after the death of Govardhan, and that the trustee now holds it in trust for the heirs of the testator who are the three sons of Govardhan. The conclusions which we have thus arrived at, will enable us to find on the issues.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Kashinath B. Marathe, First Class Subordinate Judge with appellate powers of Ratnagiri, in appeal No. 487 of 1892.

Suit for possession. The plaintiffs sued to recover exclusive possession of certain land, complaining that they had been dispossessed by the defendants under a Mamlatdar's order. In the alternative they prayed to be put into joint possession with the defendant, and they asked for a declaration that they were so entitled, the land being the joint ancestral property of the parties.

The defendants denied (inter alia) that the land was joint property, but contended that, even if it were joint, the plaintiffs' proper remedy was a partition suit, and that the claim was time-barred.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. He held that the property was joint, but that the plaintiffs could not obtain the relief prayed for.

This decision was upheld, on appeal, by the Subordinate Judge, A.P., who held that the plaintiffs' remedy was a suit for partition.

The plaintiffs thereupon preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Manekshah Jehangirshah, for respondents.—The parties to this suit are each in exclusive possession of parcels of the family property. In this state of things, one co-sharer cannot claim to be put into joint possession of the other's parcel.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The case has been argued on the assumption that the parties are co-parceners in an undivided Hindu family. It appears that they each hold parcels of the undivided family property in exclusive possession. How that state of things arose, is not found.

The plaintiffs having failed to prove exclusive possession of the parcel in suit, that ground of claim fails. But, in the alternative, they claimed to be put in joint possession with the defendants, and for a declaration to that effect. The lower Court of appeal decided in the negative a preliminary issue, "Whether the plaintiffs' claim for joint possession of the land in dispute can lie without a claim for partition of all common property?" No authority for holding that an undivided co-parcener cannot make such a claim, has been shown. Prima facie, such a co-parcener is entitled to a joint benefit in every part of the undivided estate: and it lies on the other co-parceners to plead and prove some reason for withholding that benefit in the parcel. A case may be conceived where two co-parceners A and B agree, as a temporary arrangement, each to hold $\frac{1}{3}$ in exclusive possession and the remaining $\frac{1}{3}$ in joint possession. If B excludes A from the last $\frac{1}{3}$, A has a right to be restored to joint possession thereof. Again, if A sued B for joint possession of the $\frac{1}{3}$ agreed to be given into B's exclusive possession, B might plead the agreement. Where neither party desires to litigate anything except the right to joint or exclusive possession of a parcel, and where they admittedly retained their original status as undivided brethren, and, therefore, joint sharers and not tenants-in-common (see Appovier's Case (4)), neither Hindu [469] law nor any rule of equity insists on a general partition either of possession or of the property itself. We are unable to deal with the question of limitation of the merits, as the lower Court of appeal only dealt with the preliminary issue of law. We, therefore, reverse its decree and remand the appeal for a rehearing: costs on the respondents.

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 15 D—Suit for account—Such suit no bar to subsequent suit for redemption—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 43.

Under s. 15 D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) as amended by Act XXII of 1882, an agriculturist mortgagor can sue for an account upon a mortgage, without at the same time asking for redemption. Such a suit will not bar a subsequent suit for redemption. The section was expressly intended to remove the bar created by s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882).

APPEAL from an order of remand passed by Rao Bahadur C. N. Bhat, Joint First Class Subordinate Judge A. P. at Satara.

The plaintiff filed a suit (No. 278 of 1884) under s. 15 D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) (1) for an account of the principal and interest remaining unpaid on a certain mortgage.

[470] In this suit the Court passed a decree to the following effect:—

"On the date of the suit, Rs. 103 and Rs. 107-4-0 were due on the mortgage to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 respectively. Defendants should get interest at 9 per cent. per annum from the date of suit, and should account for the profits, which amounted to Rs. 45-8-0 per year."

The plaintiff then filed a fresh suit, No. 127 of 1893, for redemption of the mortgaged property.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed this suit, holding that it was barred by s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). He was of opinion that s. 15 D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act gave the

(1) The following are the sections referred to :—

15 B. (1) The Court may in its discretion in passing a decree for redemption, foreclosure or sale in any suit of the descriptions mentioned in section three, cl. (y) or cl. (z), or in the course of any proceedings under a decree for redemption, foreclosure or sale passed in any such suit, whether before or after this Act comes into force, direct that any amount payable by the mortgagor under that decree shall be payable in such instalments, on such dates and on such terms as to the payment of interest, and, where the mortgagee is in possession, as to the appropriation of the profits and accounting therefor, as it thinks fit.

(2) If a sum payable under any such direction is not paid when due, the Court shall, except for reasons to be recorded by it in writing, instead of making an order for the sale of the entire property mortgaged or for foreclosure, order the sale of such portion only of the property as it may think necessary for the realization of that sum.

15 D. (1) Any agriculturist whose property is mortgaged may sue for an account of the amount of principal and interest remaining unpaid on the mortgage and for a decree declaring that amount.

(2) When any such suit is brought, the amount (if any) remaining unpaid shall be determined under the same rules as would be applicable under this Act if the mortgagee had sued for the recovery of the debt.

(3) At any time before the decree in the suit is signed, the plaintiff may apply to the Court to pass a decree for the redemption of the mortgage, or the mortgagee, if he would then have been entitled to sue for foreclosure or sale, may apply to the Court to pass a decree for foreclosure or sale (as the case may be), instead of a decree merely declaring the amount remaining unpaid, and the Court may, if it thinks fit, grant the application.

agriculturist mortgagor the option to convert a suit for an account into one for redemption, and that, if he failed to exercise this option, a second suit for redemption would be barred by s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge A P. held that the suit was not barred by s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. His reasons were as follows :—

"The lower Court has properly held that s. 15 D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act was passed after the decision of the case at I. L. R., 7 Bom., 378. The section was apparently intended to remove the inability of bringing a suit for an account of the principal and interest due on a mortgage without seeking redemption. If the omission to seek redemption bars a suit for redemption, the application [471] for a redemption decree can scarcely be called optional. The lower Court has failed to notice that the Court is not bound to grant such application. If the Court refuses to grant the application for passing a redemption decree, a new suit for redemption evidently will not be barred, and I see no reason why it should be barred under other circumstances. The lower Court has also failed to notice that by refusing plaintiff's suit for redemption because he did not make the application referred to in para. (3) of s. 15 D, it has practically decreed foreclosure in favour of the defendants, although they did not make the application required by that clause. The s. 15 D is intended to give the parties power to reserve the right of redeeming the property or recovering the mortgage by another suit, or to conclude the matter finally by an application to be made by one party or another as laid down in cl. 3 thereof. The Court has, however, the power of interfering by granting or refusing the application, so that there may be no hardship in any particular case."

V. R. Joglekar, for the appellants:—The suit is barred both under s. 13, expl. 3, and s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure—Bhau Balaji v. Hari Nilkanthrav (1). Section 15 D of Act XVII of 1879 does not permit a fresh suit for redemption. If it did, each time a suit for an account is brought, a fresh suit would lie for redemption, and the mortgagee would be harassed by a multiplicity of suits.

B. A. Bhagvat, for respondent (plaintiff):—The case cited does not apply. It was decided before s. 15 D was introduced by the Amending Act XXII of 1882. Under this section the Court has a discretion to grant or refuse redemption. If it refuses redemption, can it be contended that the mortgagor who has brought a suit for an account loses his right to bring a redemption suit? Section 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not, therefore, bar such a suit.

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—The principal point in issue in this appeal turns upon the construction of s. 15 D, cls. 1, 3, of Act XVII of 1879 (as modified by the Amending Act XXII of 1882), and the extent to which his special provision relaxes the strictness of the bar created by s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The point has not expressly come before this Court on any previous occasion, the decisions in Shankarapa v. Danapa (2), Hari v. Lakshman (3) and Bhau v. Hari (1) being passed in reference to the old law as it stood before the Amending [472] Act of 1882 introduced s. 15D as a part of Act XVII of 1879.

Under the old law, it was no doubt ruled that cl. (a) of s. 3 and s. 16 of Act XVII of 1879 did not refer to suits for account in mortgage transactions, and that the mortgagor-agriculturist could only sue for an account in a redemption suit. It was felt that this was a serious hardship, and the Legislature introduced the s. 15D which declares in cl. 1 that an agriculturist may sue for an account of the principal and interest remaining unpaid on a mortgage effected by him, and for a decree declaring that amount. The Court of first instance appears to be under the impression that, if this clause had stood alone, the present suit for redemption brought by the respondent might be maintained, notwithstanding that he had in 1884 brought a suit for a mortgage account, and obtained a decree declaring that amount. That Court, however, was of opinion that cl. 3 of this same section was intended to restrict this freedom of the mortgagor-agriculturist, and that the mortgagor-plaintiff who first brought a suit for account, if he desired redemption of the mortgaged lands, was bound to avail himself of the permission granted by cl. 3, and turn his account suit into a redemption suit, and that if he failed to do so, he could not bring a separate suit for redemption, because of the bar created by s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. The lower Court of appeal took a different view of the scope of this Amending Act of 1882, and held that cl. 3 was not meant to restrict the effect of the general permission given to agriculturist-mortgagors to bring account suits with a view to ascertain the balance due in respect of their mortgage dealings.

Clause 3 provides that before a decree in an account suit brought under cl. 1 is signed, the mortgagor-plaintiff may apply to the Court to pass a decree for the redemption of the mortgage, or the mortgagee may apply to the Court to pass a decree for foreclosure, instead of a decree merely declaring the amount remaining unpaid, and the Court may, if it thinks fit, grant the application. The power conferred on the Court to turn an account suit into a suit for redemption, is, in the first place, a power in which the fullest discretion is left to the Court. [473] It is, moreover, balanced by an alternative power to turn the account suit into a suit for foreclosure or sale, if the mortgagee applies for such conversion, and the Court sees fit to grant his application. The appellants' pleader admitted that this permission to turn an account suit into a foreclosure suit cannot be construed into a prohibition to the mortgagee to bring a separate suit for foreclosure or sale, if he does not avail himself of cl. 3, or if the Court sees no reason to grant his application. By parity of reasoning, the discretionary power conferred upon the Court to turn an account suit into a redemption suit must be similarly construed. The mortgagor may apply for such conversion, and the Court may grant his application, or refuse it at its own discretion. Such a power so worded could never have been intended to restrict the general scope of cl. 1 of s. 15 D. It could only have been intended to be an additional facility afforded to the litigant parties to settle their disputes without unnecessary litigation, which is one of the most important objects aimed at in this relief legislation. The law had already provided separately for redemption suits under cl. (z) of s. 3, and for account suits under cl. (a), s. 3, and s. 16. The decisions of this Court construed ss. 3 and 16 in a way to prevent agriculturist-mortgagors from availing themselves of cl. (a), s. 3, and s. 16 without at the same time incurring the risks and responsibilities involved in suing for redemption under cl. (z), s. 3. The Legislature expressly intervened to remove the hardship thus caused, and introduced a new section removing all doubts, and permitting agriculturist debtors to bring account suits in respect of mortgage dealings without at the same time seeking for the redemption of their mortgaged lands.

The amendment appears thus to have been expressly intended to remove the bar created by s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code, and this seems to us to be the most reasonable construction of the entire section. The present suit was brought for the redemption of the mortgaged lands; and the prayer for this relief was based on the relief already accorded in the previous account suit. Before the amendment, the mortgagor-plaintiff was not entitled, under the general law, to sue for accounts except as ancillary [474] to the relief implied in a redemption proceeding. Since the amendment, he became so entitled, and his first suit thus included the whole of the claim in respect of his separate cause of action for accounts. There was, therefore, no relinquishment or omission on his part in separating the two causes of action, and the terms of s. 43 are thus in every respect satisfied. The decision in the account suit was, in effect, a settlement of accounts and a determination of the debt found due. A private settlement of the accounts between mortgagor and mortgagee would not come in the way of a redemption suit, and the judicial settlement could not alter the nature of the transaction. The decisions on s. 43, moreover, recognize a distinction between causes of action which must be and those which might be joined together, but which the party interested is not bound to join. A suit, for instance, by a mortgagee against his mortgagors does not bar a subsequent suit to enforce the mortgage lien against purchasers or mortgagors and subsequent mortgagees—In the matter of Huree Mohun Paramanick (1); Raja Ram Tewary v. Luchmun (2); Hira Lal v. Prosunno (3); Hafiz Mahomed Khan v. Abdul Gunny (4).

We feel accordingly satisfied that the lower appellate Court acted properly in remanding the case back to the Court of first instance for disposal on the merits.

We reject the appeal and confirm the order. Appellants to pay the costs of this appeal.

JARDINE, J.—I concur. The present suit of 1892 for redemption is governed by the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) as amended by Act XXII of 1882, s. 15 D. So was the same plaintiff's suit for account of 1884. The Amending Act was passed in consequence of the decisions of this Court. The older law is clearly interpreted in Hari v. Lakshman (5). The general rule was laid down as follows:—"Ordinarily a suit for an account upon a mortgage cannot be maintained by a mortgagor unless he asks also for redemption. The 42nd and 43rd sections of the Civil Procedure Code are opposed to the maintenance of such an action, inasmuch as it would not afford ground [475] for a final decision, and would not include the whole of the plaintiff's claim in respect of the cause of action." The Court then went on to hold that the Act XVII of 1879 had not created a special rule or privilege for agriculturist mortgagors. The Amending Act by s. 15 D (1) does create the exception by allowing suit for account. The power given in cl. 3 to either the plaintiff-mortgagor or the defendant-mortgagee to apply to the Court to deal with redemption or foreclosure is comparable to an application to amend the plaint or otherwise enlarge the scope of the suit. I think the power to apply to, and the discretion conferred on, the Court may have been given to advance the remedy and at the same time check the annoyance to the mortgagee pointed out at p. 620. It is evident, however, that s. 15 D (2) was passed to avoid the operation of ss. 42 and 43 of the Code, which would have barred a later suit for redemption if, at the time of filing an earlier suit for account, the redemption suit might have been brought then. We ought, therefore, to interpret s. 15 D (3) as giving a separate cause of action, i.e., one concerned with account only, and, therefore, distinct from the right to demand redemption. In this view, s. 43 creates no bar, for "the correct test is whether the claim in a new suit is, in fact, founded on a cause of action distinct from that which was the foundation of the former suit"—Moonshee Buzloor v. Shumsoonnissa(1) followed in Rajah of Pittaapur v. Sri Rajah Venkata (2).

An entry of a record prepared under s. 108 of the Land Revenue Code, Bombay Act V of 1879, by the survey officer, describing certain lands as khoti [476] is by force of s. 17 of the Khoti Act, Bombay Act I of 1880, conclusive and final evidence of the liability thereby established, and shuts out the evidence of a prior decision otherwise relevant under s. 40 of the Evidence Act as proof of res judicata whereby a civil Court adjudged the land to be dhara.

Gopal v. Sakhojirao (3) referred to and followed.

[R., 21 B. 235 (242) ; D., 21 B. 480 (488).]

THE plaintiff sued as managing khot for the years 1888—90 to recover Rs. 30-8-7 with interest as thal (share of the value of the crops) of certain land in the village of Mandki.

The defendant pleaded that the land was dhara land and not khoti, and that he had always held it as such. He relied on the decision in a former suit that the land was dhara.

The Subordinate Judge held the land to be khoti land, and passed a decree for the plaintiff.

He relied upon an entry (Ex. 35) produced by the plaintiff contained in records (botkhat) prepared under s. 108 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) by the survey officer which described the lands as khoti.

On appeal the District Judge of Ratnagiri reversed the decree, holding the land to be dhara land. His judgment on the point was as follows :—

"The lower Court has decided that the plaint land is not dhara land and that it is khoti land on the strength of an entry in the botkhat (see extract Ex. 35) where, in a column for entries whether the survey number or sub-division is inam, khoti or dhara, neither the words inam, khoti or dhara are entered, but a certain person is described as khatedar kul, which appears to be a phrase compounded by a translator as a rendering of occupancy tenant (whether privileged or not does not appear), rather than a colloquial term: for the designation 'occupancy tenant' is itself a product of comparatively modern evolution. 'Occupancy tenant' is described in the Khoti Act (Bombay Act I of 1880), s. 3, cl. 8, to mean a holder of khoti land who has a right of occupancy in such land.

"In former litigation about the very Chambar Pal Thikan in suit instituted by the managing khot this thikan has been decided to be dhara land and not khoti (see Ex. 8 in appeal No. 58 of 1884). It is obvious that, if any question had been raised to the knowledge of the appellant before the above entry was made in the botkhat, or any opportunity had been afforded to him to have any such question decided by the survey officer or the special settlement officer appointed under s. 18 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879), the appellant would not have consented to the land in question being described as other than dhara land.

"Under ss. 20, 21, 22 of the Khoti Act the civil Court would not have been [477] open to the unsuccessful party dissatisfied with such decision, as such a decision is not made final by the Act.

"There is nothing to show that the entry in the botkhat above quoted embodies any decision of any survey officer or special settlement officer under s. 16 of the Khoti Act or s. 103 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879), or that the defendants ever had any opportunity of getting such a decision passed, or that they were ever informed, even if they did ever hear of the entry 'Khatedar kul,' that this was intended to be a decision or entry that the plot in question is khoti and not dhara land.

"Under s. 16 of the Khoti Act 'if a survey number is held by one or more privileged occupants, the said register shall further specify the tenure on which such number is held.'

"If there had been an entry in the botkhat that the plaint land is khoti land, and if it had been shown that such entry was duly made under s. 108 of the Land Revenue Code and s. 16 of the Khoti Act, then it might have been contended that such entry is conclusive and final evidence under s. 17 of the Khoti Act 'of the liability thereby established.'

"Neither of these circumstances are shown in this case.

"On the other hand, looking to the evidence of enjoyment it is manifest that the khots have never received thal for the plaint land, and that the occupant has never paid more than the Government assessment thereon and local-fund cess.

"In the receipt-books relied upon by the respondent, thal is debited, but is not credited.

"Under these circumstances I hold that the lower Court was wrong in deciding the plaint land to be khoti land. The defendants proved in the affirmative that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover more in respect of the plaint land than the Government assessment and local-fund cess; and if the entry in the botkhat, on which the plaintiff relied to prove the contrary, is capable of the construction which the plaintiff (respondent) seeks to put upon it, though it does not describe the plaint land as khoti, s. 22 of the Khoti Act (Bombay Act I of 1880) already indicates the procedure which the appellant should follow in order to get the revenue record amended by the Collector and the land in question which has been twice judicially decided to be dhara land entered as such in the revenue record."

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Ganesh Krishna Deshmukh, for the appellant (plaintiff).—The entry is conclusive under s. 16 of the Khoti Act.

"Khatedar kul" has been translated by the Government Translator as "occupancy tenant." Every occupancy tenant is a privileged occupant.

Ghanasham Nilkanth Nadkarni, for the respondent (defendant).—Under s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) [478] the question as to whether the land is dhara or khoti is res judicata. The entry in the botkhat as khatedar kul is not conclusive in the face of the prior decision that the land was dhara.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—If the original of Ex. 55 is one of the records prepared under s. 108 of the Land Revenue Code, Bombay Act V of 1879, by the survey officer "in accordance with such orders as may from time to time be made on this behalf" by Government, then by force of s. 17 of Bombay Act I of 1880 any entry duly made as to "the nature and amount of rent payable to the khot by each privileged occupant according to the provisions of s. 33 of this Act" * * "shall be conclusive and final evidence of the liability thereby established." The Courts cannot look behind the entry—Gopal v. Sakhojirav(1). The words last quoted "have the effect of shutting out any other evidence on the subject which might be adduced before the civil Court." This authoritative judgment had not been given when the District Judge decided the present cause in appeal. No objection has been taken to the proof by certified copy of the contents of the record; the copy comes from the taluka kacheri.

Assuming for the moment that the conclusiveness of the entry extends to the tenure, viz., that a duly made entry that the occupant is a dharekari or an occupancy tenant is conclusive, we must see how the District Judge impeaches the entry. He evidently thinks that there is an onus on the plaintiff khot to justify the entry by proving that the survey officer passed a decision under s. 16 of the Khoti Act or s. 103 of the Land Revenue Code, or by proving that the defendants were informed of the entry made or came to know of it. This is another form of the error which the above decision corrects; and, moreover, the presumption is that the survey officer's acts were regularly performed—Taylor on Evidence, s. 1429.

Next, says the Judge, s. 17 would apply to give finality if the record had described the land as khoti. No requirement of statute or statutable rule to that effect has been shown us. Whether the defendants are dharekaris or occupancy tenants [479] as they and the plaintiff respectively contend, they are privileged occupants within the definition. Section 16, cl. 2, requires the register to specify the tenure; this is done by entry of the words khatedar kul—the Marathi translation of the words occupancy tenant—which by the definition means a holder of khoti land who has a right of occupancy in such land. The term is used as a sample in the Government form; and being one so fully and clearly defined by the Act, no better way of complying with the requirement about entry of tenure can be conceived. The record appears to us to be, on its face, such as the law and rules require; and the District Judge ought not to have treated it as invalid. The evidence of a decision otherwise relevant under s. 40 of the Evidence Act as proof of res judicata earlier than the date of the survey entry, whereby a civil Court adjudged the land to be dhara, and the evidence that the khots have never received thal, are inadmissible under the decision above quoted. They were matters which the defendants might have shown to the survey officer before he arrived at the decision of which the record is the entry.

It has not been argued that the entry of the tenure made in the record is outside the finality given by s. 17. It is obvious that the items in s. 33 to which the finality is given, depend on a previous decision of the class of the privileged occupant as s. 33 clearly shows. Anyhow the nature and amount of the rent have been entered, and the decision applies to them, and the suit is conformable to the entries thereof.

The Court reverses the decree of the District Judge and restores the original decree; costs of both appeals on the respondent.

Zanzibar—Jurisdiction of High Court over Consular Court of Zanzibar—High Court at Bombay—Power of revision—Appeal—Jurisdiction—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 622—Zanzibar Order in Council, 1884, arts. 7, 8, 9, 21, 27, 30.†

The High Court at Bombay has no power of revision over civil cases tried by the Consular Court at Zanzibar, though it is authorized to hear appeals from the decisions of that Court as a District Court by the Zanzibar Order in Council of 1884.

A power of revision is not an incident of appellate powers, but on the contrary can only be exercised where there is no appeal, and had it been intended to give such powers to the High Court at Bombay, it would necessarily have been expressly provided for.

Per JARDINE, J. (dissenting):—Under any circumstances the Consular Court at Zanzibar is bound to obey a writ issued by the High Court for certifying the papers of a civil case. Under ss. 9 and 10 of the Bombay Civil Courts' Act (XIV of 1869, taken with art. 21 of the Zanzibar Order in Council of 1884 and s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), the High Court is competent to exercise revisionary jurisdiction in civil matters tried by the Consular Court at Zanzibar.

[481] One Fatmabai died in the year 1872-73, leaving a will disposing of her property and appointing executors. The will was duly proved by the executors and the estate administered, and a release was passed by the petitioner to the executors.

The petitioner was the nephew of Fatmabai's deceased husband. Alleging that he had ascertained that much more property had come into the hands of the executors than had been disposed of by the will he applied to the Consular Court at Zanzibar for an order directing the executors to file an inventory of the estate and an account of their administration. The Judge of the Consular Court issued a rule nisi calling on the executors to show cause why they should not file an inventory or an account. The executors having appeared and showed cause, the Judge discharged the rule and made the following order:—"No order. This application should never have been made at this late date. I do not think in view of the release this man has any right, but he is, in view of all the circumstances, out of all reasonable time."

On 21st December, 1894, the applicant obtained a rule from the High Court of Bombay in its extraordinary jurisdiction to set aside the order of the Judge.

The Judge on receipt of the notices containing the rule nisi served them on the executors, and certified the service to the High Court, but declined to send up the record of the case on the ground that, under art. 21 of the Zanzibar Order in Council of 1884, the High Court of Bombay had only an appellate and not a revisional jurisdiction over the Consular Court at Zanzibar.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan appeared for the applicant in support of the rule nisi.—Article 8, sub-clause (b), of the Zanzibar Order in Council makes the Civil Procedure Code applicable to Zanzibar, which is put on the same footing as a district in the Bombay Presidency.

[SARGENT, C.J.—So far as civil matters are concerned, the expression used in art. 21 of the Zanzibar Order is that the High Court of Bombay shall be deemed to be "the highest Civil Court of appeal," but with respect to criminal matters the expression used in art. 9 is that the High Court of Bombay shall be" deemed to be the High Court." The difference in the [482] language seems to show that in civil matters the High Court is not invested with revisional jurisdiction.]

The High Court is not given any power of interference under the Mamlatdars' Act (Bombay Act III of 1876), and yet the High Court has been interfering under its revisional jurisdiction with orders passed under that Act. By analogy the High Court can, under its extraordinary jurisdiction, review the order passed by the Consular Court at Zanzibar.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—We are of opinion that this Court has no power of revision over cases tried by the Consular Court at Zanzibar. This High Court derives its jurisdiction over the administration of civil justice in the Courts of Zanzibar created by the Order in Council of 29th November 1884, by art. 21 of that order (1). That section provides "that the Code of Civil Procedure shall have effect as if Zanzibar were a zilla or district in the Presidency of Bombay. The Consul General shall be deemed to be the District Judge of the district, and his Court the District Court or Principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction in the district. The High Court of Bombay shall be deemed to be the highest Civil Court of Appeal for the district and the Court authorised to hear appeals from the decisions of the District Court." This Court is, therefore, by the above provision, created an appellate Court to hear appeals. But no such power of revision is given to it as belongs to the High Court over the Courts of the Presidency, and which, it is to be remarked, this Court possesses as a High Court by the express terms of s. 622 of Civil Procedure Code, and not by virtue of its being a Court of appeal. A power of revision is not an incident of appellate powers, but on the contrary can only be exercised where there is no appeal, and had it been intended to give such power to this Court it would necessarily have been expressly provided for. This view derives confirmation from the difference of language used in art. 9 relating to criminal matters, where it is provided that the High Court of Bombay shall be deemed to be the "High Court" and not merely an appellate Court for the purpose of applying the Code of Criminal Procedure and also from [483] the provision of arts. 27 to 30 with regard to making up the record to be sent to this Court which is confined to the case in which a memo. of appeal has been presented.

It was contended in argument that by sub-clause (b) of art. 8 of the Order of Council the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 is made applicable to Zanzibar, and that all its provisions can be called in aid by the persons to whom by art. 6 the Order is made applicable, but art. 8 deals with the jurisdiction and procedure of the Courts in Zanzibar, and for such purposes no doubt the appropriate provisions of the Civil Procedure Code are to be applied, and can thus as constituting "provisions of the Order in Council" be properly invoked as provided for by art 7. For these reasons we think that the rule should be discharged.

BAYLEY and PARSONS, JJ., concurred.

JARDINE, J.—Although I have the misfortune to differ from the rest of the Bench, and, therefore, have doubts, I am not prepared to hold that the learned Judge who issued the writ acted without jurisdiction; and under any circumstances I think it was the duty of the Consular Judge to obey the writ as s. 10 of Act XIV of 1869 expressly requires. The omission doubtless occurred from his overlooking that enactment.

The Foreign Jurisdiction Acts 6 and 7 Vict., c. 94, 41 and 42 Vict., c. 97, and 53 and 54 Vict., c. 37, are intended for the government of persons; and to this end Courts and procedure are provided. The Zanzibar Order in Council of 1884, made under one of the earlier Acts, expressly applies to British subjects in Zanzibar, among others by art, 6. By art. 8, cl. (b), certain laws, including the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860), are made applicable to Zanzibar; and thus, in my opinion, impose duties and confer rights on the persons to whom the Order in Council applies. This introduction of a system of personal law is more direct than that introduction of law by effect of charters creating Courts which has been considered by some authorities as the means whereby English law was introduced into British India—Naoroji v. Rogers (1). Among [484] these laws is the Bombay Civil Courts Act, 1869 (some parts being excepted), s. 10 of which taken with art. 21 of the Order in Council requires the Judge at Zanzibar to obey all writs, orders or processes issued to him by the High Court, and to furnish such reports and returns and copies as may be called for by this Court. This and the requirement of s. 9, that the Judge shall refer matters here where a rule ought to be made, go a certain way in conferring superintendence on this Court even without our jurisdiction of appeal. See Pirbhai v. B. B. & C. I. Railway Co. (1) and In the matter of John Thomson (2). Among other laws the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) has been extended in its entirety, subject, however, to the other provisions of the Order and to treaties. Among other provisions of the Order are the directing and modifying powers retained by the Secretary of State, e.g., art. 8, cl. (d). A later Order in Council, dated the 16th May, 1893, makes substitutions and amendments of the Code of Civil Procedure effectuated by the Governor General of India in Council in a legislative capacity take effect without special order of the Secretary of State.

It results, then, that s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure is in force under the Order in Council, and neither the Code nor the Bombay Civil Courts Act, 1869, indicated any other tribunal but the High Court of Judicature at Bombay as competent to exercise the revisionary jurisdiction which s. 622 contemplates. The words of s. 622 imply that the Court subject to revision is one from which appeals lie. Under art. 8, cl. (d), ii, the Secretary of State has power to appoint a revisional tribunal. It is plain that he has not done so specifically. The argument of Mr. Manekshah was that the introduction of the Code in its entirety, plus the language of art. 21 of the Order, should lead this Court to hold that the person under Her Majesty's jurisdiction at Zanzibar has the same right to apply for revision as the subject in any district of this Presidency, and by necessary implication that the Secretary of State has recognized the revisionary jurisdiction of this Court. I [486] would point out that when the Secretary of State makes an exception of part of a Code applied as law to the settlement, his practice appears to be to use specific language as in art. 8 (b) dealing with the Bombay Civil Courts Act, 1869, art. 32 (b) excluding this Court's jurisdiction where Zanzibar subjects are concerned, and the Order in Council, dated the 17th July, 1893, excluding Chap. 33 of the Criminal Procedure Code from the law applied by art. 8 of the Order in Council of 1884.

I admit the force of the considerations that in art. 9 dealing with the Code of Criminal Procedure the expression is that this Court "shall be deemed to be the High Court," whereas in art. 21 dealing with Civil matters, it is that this Court "shall be deemed to be the highest Civil Court of appeal for the district," but I think the last expression must be considered with art. 7, cl. 3. I do not think art. 7, cl. 3, intends to exclude the Privy Council. I admit also the force of the argument that if the Secretary of State had meant to confer on this Court power of revision in Civil matters he might easily have used specific language. But I think that having introduced a personal law, to take effect as if Zanzibar were a district under Bombay, and making the local Court into a District Court by art. 21, he may have considered that the subject or other person to whom the Order in Council applies by art. 6 would by force of the Code and the Order have a right to come to this Court for the relief contemplated by art. 21. The extension of certain substantive laws and laws of procedure to a class of persons by the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts of the Indian Legislature is noted in the judgment of Sargent, C.J., in Queen Empress v. W. D. Edwards (3); and the Secretary of State is of course aware of the high controlling powers this Court possesses noticed in that case by Scott, J. I do not think the Order in Council of 1884 shows an intention merely to confer a right under s. 622, and then render that right futile by refraining to appoint a tribunal where the relief can be obtained. Thus the argument against clutching a jurisdiction used by the counsel in In re the Judges of the Supreme Court of Bombay (1) does [486] not apply in the absence of any other tribunal to which the person aggrieved can go for redress. I think, then, that the maxim "est boni judicis ampliare jurisdictionem" is applicable in this matter.

FARRAN, J.—In my opinion the High Court has no jurisdiction in the matter. By s. 1 of Statutes 29 and 30 Vict., c. 87, repealed by and re-enacted in Statutes 53 and 54 Vict., c. 37, Her Majesty by Order in Council is empowered to confer on any Court in any of her possessions (out of the United Kingdom) any jurisdiction, civil or criminal, original or appellate, which Her Majesty in Council might lawfully by any such order confer on any Court in any country or place out of her dominions within which Her Majesty has power or jurisdiction, subject to such provisions and regulations as to Her Majesty may seem fit. This section enables Her Majesty to confer upon the High Court of Bombay such jurisdiction over Zanzibar Courts as Her Majesty may think expedient. Over her subjects aud others in Zanzibar, Her Majesty has jurisdiction by reason of other powers and authorities comprised in or conferred by various treaties and statutes to which it is unnecessary to refer. They are all recognized and legalised by Statutes 29 and 30 Vict., c. 87.

The question which we have to determine is not, I think, what law or procedure Her Majesty has by Her Order in Council of the 29th November, 1884, introduced into Zanzibar, but what jurisdiction, by virtue of the above quoted section, she has conferred on the High Court. Part II of the Order defines the persons in Zanzibar to whom it applies, and Part III points out the general laws and principles which Her Majesty's Courts in Zanzibar are to apply in cases, civil or criminal, coming before them, and determines the practice and procedure by which they are to govern themselves. Part IV deals with criminal matters. Part V deals with "civil matters," and in it art. 21 provides that, subject to the other provisions of the Order, "'the Code of Civil Procedure,' 'the Bombay Civil Courts' Act, 1869,' 'the Indian Succession Act' and the other enactments relating to the administration of Civil Justice * * * for the time being [487] applicable to Zanzibar shall have effect as if Zanzibar were a zilla or district in the Presidency of Bombay, the Consul General shall be deemed to be the District Judge of the District and his Court the District Court or Principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction in the District. The High Court of Bombay shall be deemed to be the Highest Civil Court of appeal for the District and the Court authorized to hear appeals from the decision of the District Court." Pausing there, it cannot, I think, be doubted that the High Court of Bombay while it is directly authorized to hear appeals from Zanzibar Courts is not directly authorized to act as a Court of Revision over such Courts. The latter authority, if it is conferred upon the High Court, can only be impliedly conferred on it by reason of the provision that the Code of Civil Procedure and the other enactments relating to the administration of Civil Justice shall have effect as if Zanzibar were a zilla or district in the Presidency of Bombay.

The question, therefore, narrows itself to this:—Does this provision constitute the Civil Courts in Zanzibar Civil Courts of the Presidency of Bombay within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent of the High Court, or does it merely for jurisdictional purposes assimilate the Zanzibar area to the area of a Bombay district in order that the application of the Procedure Acts to it may be exactly defined. In the former view the effect of the provision would, I apprehend, be to confer upon the High Court the power contained in s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as it is by the combined effect of the Letters Patent, cl. 15, and the Civil Procedure Code that this power is conferred upon the High Court over the Civil Courts in the Bombay Presidency. The latter view is, however, in my opinion, the correct one. The language employed appears to be apt to express it, while it is combrous and inapt language to employ to effect the former purpose. If it were intended to place the Zanzibar Courts in the same relation to the Bombay High Court as are the Courts in the Bombay Presidency, I think that it would have been done directly and not by such circuitous language as is contained in the 21st article. I am, therefore, of opinion that the High Court is not by implication made a Court of Revision over the Courts of Zanzibar.

[488] I am fortified in this conclusion by finding that there are elaborate provisions contained in the Order for preparing and sending an appeal record to the High Court (arts. 27 to 30) and none for sending up papers under s. 622. The intention is that original papers are not to be transmitted to Bombay except in exceptional cases. I am further fortified in it by a comparison of the language of art. 9 relating to criminal jurisdiction with that of art. 21, and I think that if it had been intended to make the High Court a Court of Revision over the Zanzibar Courts, it would have been done by direct language and not left to be gathered by doubtful implication. Lastly, the jurisdiction of the High Court over the class of suits referred to in art. 32 is necessarily restricted by express words, as otherwise it would have under art. 21 an appellate jurisdiction in respect of such suits, while it is not necessary to except the application of the provisions of s. 622 of the Code from the Order as they relate to powers of the High Court which are not exerciseable in Zanzibar unless extended to it.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Kashinath B. Marathe, First Class Subordinate Judge of Ratnagiri with [489] appellate powers, varying the decree of Rao Saheb V. K. Sovani, Joint Subordinate Judge of Chiplun.

The plaintiff sued to recover from the defendants the sum of Rs. 637-12, including interest and protesting charges, due on account of a hundi dated the 25th March, 1892, and drawn by defendant No. 1. The defendants were brothers and members of a joint Hindu family. Defendant No. 1 had a shop of which he was the sole manager.

Defendant No. 1 admitted the claim.

Defendant No. 2 pleaded that he lived separate from his brother, defendant No. 1, and that he was not liable to the claim.

The Subordinate Judge found that defendant No. 2 was not liable to the claim, because the hundi was not drawn with his consent and also because no notice of dishonour was served upon him under s. 93 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881). He, therefore, allowed the claim against defendant No. 1 alone.

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge found that s. 93 of the Negotiable Instruments Act was not applicable to defendant No. 2, whose liability to the plaintiff's claim arose under the Hindu law, the defendants being members of an undivided family of which defendant No. 1 was the manager. He, therefore, varied the decree by holding the share of defendant No. 2 liable to the claim along with the person and property of defendant No. 1.

Defendant No. 2 preferred a second appeal.

Ganesh K. Deshamukh, for the appellant (defendant No. 2).—The point of Hindu law and union was raised for the first time by the appellate Court without there being any allegation to that effect in the plaint or without there being an issue on the point in either of the lower Courts.

We submit that s. 93 of the Negotiable Instruments Act is applicable. No notice contemplated by that section was ever given. The finding of the first Court is quite distinct on that point.

Gangaram B. Rele (with Shamrav M. Rele, for the respondent (plaintiff).—Defendant No. 2 is not held liable under the Negotiable [490] Instruments Act. Defendant No. 1 was the manager of the family, and, therefore, defendant No. 2 was held liable. The person primarily liable is defendant No. 1 and he has admitted the claim without raising any plea of notice contemplated by s. 93 of the Act. Defendant No. 2 is, therefore, estopped from raising the plea.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The Negotiable Instruments Act, in the absence of local usage to the contrary, applies to hundis. See Moti Lal v. Moti Lal (1). No usage has been alleged, although the question as to notice was argued in both Courts. Notice being necessary in the case, the Lower Appeal Court was wrong in holding that the defendant No. 2 cannot avail himself of the provisions of s. 93 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. As a member of the Hindu family whom it is sought to make liable by this suit on the hundi drawn by the manager (the defendant No. 1) in the course of the family business, he would be entitled to urge that no notice of dishonour had been given to the defendant No. 1 so as to make the latter liable on the bill under s. 30. We must, therefore, send back the case for a finding on the following issue :—

VINAYAK VISHVANATH BHOPLE (Original Plaintiff), Applicant v. BALU BIN BHIKU AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants) *Opponents.

[2nd April, 1895.]

Mamlatdars' Act (Bom. Act III of 1876)—Delivery of possession in execution of a decree of a Civil Court—Subsequent lease to the judgment-debtor—Refusal of the Mamlatdar to restore possession after the expiration of the lease.

Vinayak obtained possession of land from Balu in execution of a decree of a Civil Court. After obtaining possession, Vinayak leased the land to Balu. On Balu's refusal to vacate the land on the expiration of the lease, Vinayak brought a possessory suit in the Mamlatdar's Court. The Mamlatdar rejected the plaint, holding that he ought not to order restoration of possession of the land again and again.

Held, that a fresh cause of action accrued to Vinayak on the refusal of Balu to give possession on the expiry of the lease, and that the Mamlatdar was wrong in declining to accept the plaint.

THIS was an application under the extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the order of Rao Saheb Ramchandra Vishnu Bakre, Mamlatdar of Mahad in the Thana District, rejecting a plaint in a possessory suit.

The applicant had obtained a decree in suit No. 824 of 1892 of the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court at Mahan for possession of the land in dispute against the opponents. On the 20th October, 1893, he, in execution of the decree, got possession of the land together with the standing crop thereon. Subsequently he let out the land to the opponents under a kabulayat dated the 27th October, 1893, which was to expire on the 6th May, 1894. The opponents having failed to restore possession to the applicant on the appointed day, he, on the 10th October, 1894, presented a plaint in the Mamlatdar's Court praying for delivery of possession. The Mamlatdar rejected the plaint on the 16th October on the ground that he did not think it proper to restore possession of the land to the applicant in a summary suit, as he (applicant) let out the land to the opponents, who were his judgment-debtors in the civil suit, at his own risk. The Mamlatdar referred the applicant to the civil suit.

[492] The applicant applied under the extraordinary jurisdiction urging (inter alia) that the Mamlatdar failed to exercise the jurisdiction vested in him by law. A rule nisi was issued calling on the opponents to show cause why the order of the Mamlatdar should not be set aside.

A fresh cause of action accrued to the applicant on the refusal of the opponent to give up possession on the expiry of that lease, and the Mamlatdar was wrong in declining to accept the plaint. KALAPPA BIN GIRIAPPA AND OTHERS, MINORS, BY THEIR GUARDIAN MOTHER TUNGAVA (Original Defendants), Appellants v. SHIVAYA BIN SHIVLINGAYA (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent.

[4th April, 1895.]

Mortgage—Mortgage with possession—Mortgagee to pay Government revenue—Sale for arrears of revenue—Purchase by mortgagee at sale—Subsequent suit by mortgagor for redemption—Government sale caused by default of mortgagee.

Where mortgaged property was sold at a Government sale for arrears of revenue,

Held, that if the sale took place owing to the mortgagee's default, it would not affect the mortgagor's right to redeem.

[493] The general rule, that a Government sale for arrears of revenue gives a title against all the world, is subject to the exception that if it is caused by the default of a mortgagee, it does not take away the mortgagor's right to redeem the mortgage and to recover the land.

SECOND appeal from the decision of J. L. Johnston, District Judge of Dharwar, reversing the decree of Rao Saheb M. R. Soman, Subordinate Judge of Gadag.

Suit by mortgagor for redemption. The plaintiff alleged that in April, 1877, he mortgaged the land in question with possession to the defendants, and that by the terms of the mortgage-deed the defendants (mortgagees) were to pay the Government assessment out of the income of the property and to apply the balance in payment of interest on the mortgage. He now sued to redeem, and claimed mesne profits.

The defendants answered that they did not hold possession under the mortgage. They alleged that the mortgaged land produced no income, and that they could not, therefore, pay the Government assessment out of it as provided in the mortgage-deed. They further stated that on the 5th September, 1878, the land had been sold by auction for arrears of revenue, and that their uncle had purchased it, and that they had ever since been in possession as owners.

The Subordinate Judge found that the defendants were in possession as owners and purchasers and not under the mortgage-deed, and he dismissed the suit. In his judgment he said :—

"It appears further from the mortgage-deed that the mortgagee had not agreed to pay the assessment absolutely, but he had agreed to pay the same out of the profits of the property. I have held above that the mortgagee was not put in possession of the property under the terms of the mortgage. A mortgagee, in the absence of special agreement, is not under obligation to pay the assessment and save the property from paramount title. His obligation depends either on special contract or on his being in possession."

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge reversed the decree, holding that the defendants were mortgagees in possession and that the plaintiff had a right to redeem.

The following is an extract from his judgment :—

"What appears to have really happened was that the defendant got possession just at the beginning of the famine, and as he got no crop, he let the land be sold for the arrears of assessment, and as he was a kulkarni, his brother Gurappa [494] bought it at the auction sale for default. In doing so the mortgagee in possession did not become owner. He was bound to preserve the property from forfeiture or sale—11 Moore's Indian Appeals, 241. He was in the present case the more bound, as it was part of his contract to pay the assessment out of the rent. The mortgagee in possession, cannot buy the property and obtain an irredeemable interest therein—I. L. R., Madras 7, 3 ; Jayanti v. Yerubandi ; Macpherson on Mortgage, pp. 278, 279. The mortgagee can only claim the amount paid by him, which, whether he intended it or not, has saved the estate for the mortgagor. This amount can be added on to the mortgage amount due before redemption in the accounts now to be taken at execution."

The defendants preferred a second appeal.

Narayan G. Chandavarkar, for the appellants (defendants).—The property yielded no income after it was mortgaged to us and, therefore, we could not pay Government dues. The mortgage-deed stipulated that we should pay the dues from the income of the property, and if the property yielded no income, and was sold, the sale cannot be attributed to our default in paying the assessment. The Judge has not taken this circumstance into consideration—Sambhu bin Anaji v. Babaji bin Ravlu (1); Nawab Sidhee Nuzur Ally Khan v. Rajah Ojoodhyaram Khan (2).

Balaji A. Bhagvat, for the respondent (plaintiff).—The view taken by the Judge is correct. A mortgagee in possession is bound to protect the interest of the mortgagor. There is no allegation in the case that the defendants tried to let out the land and failed.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—The District Judge says that the mortgagee was bound to preserve the property from forfeiture or sale for arrears of revenue. If this were so, the sale would have been the result of the mortgagee's default, and the plaintiff would not lose his right to redeem. This was decided in Sambhu bin Anaji v. Babaji bin Ravlu (1) and is in accordance with the judgment of the Privy Council in Nawab Sidhee Nuzur Ally Khan v. Rajah Ojoodhyaram Khan (2) where the right of the mortgagor to redeem is put on the ground that the mortgagee could not take advantage of his own wrong. It is an exception to the general rule that a Government sale for arrears of revenue gives a title against all the world.

[495] The District Judge, however, has apparently assumed that the mortgagee was in default, and has not considered the language of the mortgage-deed, which provides for the mortgagee paying the assessment out of the money derived from cultivating or letting the land, when taken in connection with the special circumstances as alleged by the defendants to have led to the sale by Government. We must, therefore, send down the following issue for a finding :—

Jurisdiction—Religious endowment—Property in British India of a temple outside British India—Rgiht to officiate in such temple—Right to share of such property—Partition.

The plaintiff was a member of a family which had the management and received the income of certain property situate in British India belonging to a temple situate at Ashta in the Nizam's territory. Part of the income was devoted to religious services and part to the support of the family. The plaintiff sued to recover by partition his share of the income and for an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff in celebrating religious worship at the temple when his turn came to officiate. The defendant (his brother) resided at Ashta.

Held, that the right to share in the income followed the devolution of the office and that the Court could not grant the relief prayed for, as the Courts in British India could not execute their decree by putting the plaintiff in possession of his office when his turn came to officiate at the temple which was outside British India.

According to Hindu text-writers as regards public endowments, religious offices are naturally indivisible, though modern custom has sanctioned a departure in respect of allowing the parties entitled to share to officiate by turns and of allowing alienation within certain restrictions.

APPEAL from the decree of Rao Bahadur G. A. Mankar, First Class Subordinate Judge at Ahmednagar.

[496] Suit for partition of a share in ancestral lands and villages in the Ahmednagar District and in a mokas allowance payable from the Karjat Taluka.

---

* Appeal No. 143 of 1893.

(1) P. J. (1889), p. 160.

(2) 10 M.I.A. 540 (559).

In 1769 one Raghunath Bawa, an ancestor of the parties, obtained from the Peishwas a grant of the village lands in question for the maintenance of the religious services of the samadhi (sacred tomb) of Hari Narayan at Ashta. These villages and lands subsequently became British territory and were included in the Ahmednagar District. Ashta was in the territory of the Nizam.

In 1788 A.D., disputes arose among the successors of Raghunath Bawa, and an arrangement was made by which the income of the property was divided into thirteen equal parts, out of which nine were set apart for the expenses of the samadhi (sacred tomb) and four for the use of Raghunath Bawa's family. This arrangement was confirmed by the Inam Commission in A.D. 1858.

Raghunath Bawa, the original acquirer, was succeeded in the management of this property by his son Pandharinath.

Pandharinath had two sons, viz., Hari and Shivram, and in 1838 the right to officiate at the religious services and the income of the property were equally divided between Hari's branch and Shivram's branch of the family. The plaintiff and defendant were the grandsons of Hari, and the plaintiff claimed to share equally with the defendant in the half share that had been allotted to Hari. He, therefore, sued for a fourth share of the property.

This suit was filed in 1892. The plaintiff prayed for a partition of his fourth share in the revenue of the inam villages, lands and allowances and for an order that he should be allowed to perform the worship at the tomb at Ashta. He claimed his share in the property which was situate in British India, reserving his right to sue in the Nizam's Courts for his share in such property as was situate in the Nizam's territory.

The defendant denied that the property was partible, and pleaded that he as representing the elder branch of the family was alone entitled to officiate at the religious services.

[497] The First Class Subordinate Judge at Ahmednagar held hat the property and the right to officiate were alike divisible, but observed as follows :—

"Though the management of the devasthan at Ashta and the allowance appertaining to it are divisible in enjoyment, yet in the present case no order can be passed in favour of the plaintiff's taking part in the management of the devasthan and the income of the property in dispute, which has been set apart for defraying its expenses, as the devasthan is situate at Ashta in the Nizam's Dominions. Though the property, a portion of whose income has been assigned to the devasthan, is situate in British India, yet the members of the family who receive that part of the income in rotation, that is, the defendant and Gangadhar Shridhar, do so in virtue of their managing the devasthan or on its behalf, and not for their personal enjoyment or use. Consequently the plaintiff's claim to manage the devasthan and to receive the income assigned to it along with the defendant and Gangadhar Shridhar in rotation cannot be allowed. But the same cannot be said of his claim to share in the man's share ($\frac{1}{13}$th). The contention of the defendant that this share is also impartible cannot be sustained."

The Judge, therefore, decreed that the plaintiff should receive a $\frac{1}{13}$th part of the income of the property from year to year.

Against this decision plaintiff appealed, in forma pauperis, to the High Court.

Daji Abaji Khare, for the respondent (defendant).—The division made in 1838 does not justify a further division in the absence of any proof of a custom of the family. The services of the devasthan cannot be divided: see The East Indian Railway Company v. The Bengal Coal Company (5).

Chaubal in reply.—As to the property in Nizam's territory, see The Advocate-General of Bombay v. Bai Punjabai (6).

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—In this case, the appellant brought his suit against his elder brother, the respondent, for a partition of his $\frac{1}{4}$th share in certain ancestral inam villages and lands in the Jamkhed and [498] Karjat talukas of the Ahmednagar District, and in a mokas allowance payable from the Karjat taluka.

The original ancestor of the parties who acquired the inams was one Raghunath Bava. His son Pandharinath obtained confirmation of the grants. Pandharinath had two sons, Hari and Shivram. Hari's son, Ramkrishna, was the father of both the appellant and respondent. Deducting the half share which belonged to Shivram's branch, plaintiff claimed to be entitled to share equally with defendant in Hari's half share.

The plaint claimed four reliefs: (1) a partition of his $\frac{1}{4}$th share; (2) authority to recover the proceeds of his share indipendently of the respondent; (3) entry of appellant's name in the official papers; and (4) finally, an injunction prohibiting the respondent from interfering with the appellant in the celebration of the worship and utsav of the samadhi of Hari Narayan at Ashta in the Nizam's territory, when the appellant's turn of officiating might arrive under the partition decree. The inam lands and villages were, in fact, acquired by the ancestors of the parties for the purposes of this worship and annual celebrations, and for feeding Brahmins at the place of the samadhi, which was at Ashta outside British India.

The respondent in his written statement contended that, under an arrangement sanctioned by the Peishwa's Government and confirmed by the Inam Commission, $\frac{9}{13}$th of the income of the lands and villages were set apart for the religious services of the samadhi, and only $\frac{4}{13}$th were left for the support of the family, and that these $\frac{9}{13}$th as well as $\frac{4}{13}$th were not partible property. It was further urged that even if partition were allowed, the appellant's share was $\frac{1}{39}$th, and not $\frac{1}{4}$th of the whole, and it was burdened with liability for common debts. Lastly, it was contended, in respect of the appellant's claim for worship, that the respondent, as representing the elder branch of the family, was alone entitled to officiate at the religious services. It is not necessary to notice the other defences here.

The lower Court held that the appellant was only entitled to a $\frac{1}{13}$th share of the income of the property, as $\frac{9}{13}$th share was set [499] apart for devasthan services, and out of $\frac{4}{13}$th set apart for family support, $\frac{2}{13}$th belonged to the other eight annas' branch, and $\frac{2}{13}$th were equally divisible between the parties to this suit. Appellant's claim to share in the $\frac{9}{13}$th of the devasthan income, together with the claim for the injunction sought by him, were disallowed, and appellant was directed to recover his $\frac{1}{13}$th share of the income; subject to a liability to pay a similar proportion of the ancestral debts which might be proved in execution proceedings. The claim for partition by metes and bounds was disallowed, as also the prayer for the entry of appellant's name in the village papers.

The lower Court held that although the devasthan income in this case and the right of officiating at the samadhi at Ashta were divisible, no order could be made in regard to the same, as Ashta was outside British India, and the income was received by the respondent, not for his personal enjoyment, but on account of the services rendered at the samadhi.

In the appeal before us, Mr. Chaubal took exception to the rejection of the claim in respect of the devasthan services and the property assigned for itsuse, and the principal point for inquiry is, whether the $\frac{9}{13}$th share of the income set apart for devasthan services, together with the right to officiate by turns at the samadhi, could properly be included in the property in which the appellant had a right to share equally with the respondent in this case.

The appellant rests his case mainly on the finding of the lower Court that the devasthan property and the right of officiating at the samadhi by rotation, were divisible, and that, as a matter of fact, both these had been divided between the representatives of the two eight-annas' sharers. It was urged that the fact of the devasthan at Ashta being in foreign territory made no difference, because the property sought to be divided was admittedly within the jurisdiction, and the following authorities were cited in support of this contention:—Nanabhai v. Shriman Gosawmi Girdharji (1); Shriman Goswami v. Goswami Shri Girdharlalji (2); The Advocate-General of Bombay v. Bai Punjabai (3). None of [500] these cases appear to us, however, to be in point. It is plain that the Courts in British India cannot execute their decree in respect of placing the appellant in possession of his year of office at Ashta when the turn came for him to officiate at the samadhi. The respondent himself lives out of British India at Ashta, and the personal remedy also would not prove effective. If the relief in respect of the permanent injunction asked for could not be granted for the reasons stated above, it is clear that the right to recover the income of the devasthan share for his year of office, which was only ancillary to the principal right, could not be also enforced. The case of Shriman Goswami v. Goswami Shri Girdharlalji (2) can be distinguished by the fact that the house, in respect of which relief was sought there, was within the jurisdiction, and the Court was thus only called upon to confirm the old Goswami Maharaj in possession, and it held that it was not bound to recognize the act of deposition ordered by a foreign state. The decision in Nanabhai v. Shriman Goswami Girdharlalji (1) is also not in point, as it simply decided that the act of a foreign ruler could not deprive a party in possession of property in British India of his rights, unless they were adjudicated upon by competent authority here. The effect of these decisions is thus to negative rather than help the claim set up for appellant that the Courts in British India can make valid orders about the right to officiate in a temple outside British India. The cases of Ram Coomar Paul v. Jogender Nath Paul (1) and Mancharam v. Pranshankar (2) are more akin to the present case, but they can be distinguished in that the temples and idols, the rights in regard to which were in dispute, were within the jurisdiction of the Courts which decided those cases. The same remark holds good in respect of the decision in Sonatun Bysack v. Juggut Soondree Dossee (3).

The larger question of the partibility or otherwise of such property, when expressly set apart for religious worship, need not, therefore, be considered in this case. We may, however, note that in Rupa Jagshet v. Krishnaji Govind (4), Sargent, C. J., held [501] that the Hindu law was in this respect different from English law, which distinguished private from public endowments, and that the sale in execution of such property was void, and might be set aside by the judgment-debtor himself. This position was also upheld in Narayan v. Chintaman (5). Melvill, J., in deciding Mancharam v. Pranshankar (2) held that these offices were in general inalienable, and that according to the Hindu text-writers, religious offices are naturally indivisible, though modern custom has sanctioned a departure in respect of allowing the parties entitled to share to officiate by turns, and of allowing alienation within certain restrictions. The rulings in Ram Coomar Paul v. Jogendar Nath Paul (1) and Radha Mohun Mundul v. Jadoomonee Dassee (6) and the remarks made by Mayne in paras. 307, 308 must be understood in regard to this growth of customary law regulating private endowments. In the present case, however, the endowment is a public endowment, being a gift made by the former rulers of the country, and confirmed by the British Government. Both the Peishwa's grant and the confirmation expressly set forth the charitable and religious purposes for which the endowment was made in 1769 and 1788, and confirmed in 1858.

All doubts about the public character of the endowment, which might arise from the ambiguous language of the first grant of 1769, were removed by the subsequent decision of 1788, when a clear line was drawn between the devasthan share and the share set apart for the family. The person, who raised the dispute in 1788, was not recognized to have any rights to manage the devasthan, and in fact down to 1838, when the representative of the eight annas' share obtained a division of the office, as well as of the income, there was no division of the office. The circumstances attending that division are set forth in Exs. Nos. 23 and 24, but they furnish no grounds for recognizing that the family arrangement made in 1838 changed the nature of the grant. See also Appasami v. Nagappa (7). It is clear that if the present claim of the appellant were recognized, each of the [502] sons of the parties—and they have many—might claim a share, not only in the family share, but in the devasthan share and office also, and this process might go on with each generation, frittering away the income, and making the service wholly ineffective. The lower Court appears to have assumed, without any such evidence as is suggested in Mohunt Rumun Dass v. Mohunt Ashbul Dass (8), that the office is partible with the income. The practice of many generations of the parties must be considered in settling the questions of impartibility, and that practice is in this case against partition with the one single exception of what took place in 1838. It is, however, not necessary to discuss this question further in this place. The relief by way of injunction was plainly one which the lower Court was not in a position to grant effectively, and the right to share in the devasthan income naturally follows the devolution of the office.

We accordingly confirm the decree of the lower Court, and reject the appeal, with costs on appellant.

The appellant should pay the Court-fees which he would have had to pay if he had not been permitted to appeal as a pauper.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

Before Mr. Justice Candy and Mr. Justice Ranade.

IN RE P. A. RODRIGUES.* [8th April, 1895.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 555—Disqualification of a Judge—Pecuniary interest.

The accused was a compounder in the employ of Treacher & Co. He was tried and convicted by the Presidency Magistrate of criminal breach of trust as a servant in respect of certain goods belonging to the company. It appeared that the Magistrate was a shareholder in the company which prosecuted the accused.

Held, that the Magistrate was disqualified from trying the case. As a shareholder of the company he had a pecuniary interest, however small, in the result of the accusation, and was, therefore, "personally interested" in the case within the meaning of s. 555 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

[503] The words "personally interested" in the section are not intended to exclude pecuniary as distinguished from a personal interest.

THIS was an application under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The accused was a compounder in the service of Messrs. Treacher & Co.

He was charged with having sold certain goods belonging to the company of the value of Rs. 20, and dishonestly appropriated the money to his own use.

The accused was convicted by Mr. Hamilton, Presidency Magistrate, of criminal breach of trust as a servant, and sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment under s. 408 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860).

The accused thereupon moved the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction to set aside the conviction and sentence, chiefly on the ground that the Magistrate, being a large shareholder in Treacher & Co., had a substantial interest in the prosecution, and was, therefore, disqualified from trying the case.

The High Court sent for the record and proceedings of the case.

The accused appeared in person.

Inverarity, for the complainant.

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—P. A. Rodrigues, a compounder in the employ of Messrs. Treacher & Co. at Bombay, was on 2nd March, 1895, convicted by Mr. Hamilton, Presidency Magistrate, of theft, or criminal breach of trust as a servant in respect of Rs. 19-12 and sentenced to suffer one month's rigorous imprisonment. Rodrigues applied to this Court in its revisional jurisdiction, alleging among several grounds that the Magistrate, being a large share-holder in Treacher & Co., was disqualified from sitting in judgment in the case. The record and proceedings were called for, and the accused was released on his personal recognizance in the sum of Rs. 100 and one surety in a like amount. We understand that the learned Judges, who called for the records and proceedings, did so simply on the ground above stated, no notice being then taken of the other allegations made in the petition. We [504] have, therefore, confined ourselves for the present to the point above noted. Mr. Inverarity has argued the question on behalf of the complainant in the case, i.e., H. R. Hoyles, an assistant of Messrs. Treacher & Co. No one has appeared for the accused person.

The Magistrate has informed the Court that he was a share-holder in Treacher & Co. when he passed sentence on Rodrigues. Section 555 of the Criminal Procedure Code provides that "no Magistrate shall * * * try any case to or in which he is a party or personally interested." This is simply an enactment of the rule of common law, that no one can be a judge in a case in which he has a pecuniary or personal interest. The words in the section "personally interested" are not intended to exclude a pecuniary as distinguished from a personal interest. For it is evident that a pecuniary must be a personal interest, though there may be a personal interest which is not pecuniary. And the distinction in common law between these interests is well settled. To quote the language of Mr. Justice Stephen in the Queen v. Farrant (1): "It is a leading principle of English Law that no one is allowed to be a judge in his own case; that means that the least pecuniary interest in the subject-matter of the litigation will disqualify any person from acting as a judge * * * . But the law does not stop there, for there may be an interest which has substantially the same effect as a pecuniary interest, though it is not of the same nature." This distinction was dwelt upon by the Court of Appeal in the recent case of Allinson v. General Council of Medical Education and Registration (2), which explained and followed the decision of the same Court in Leeson v. General Council of Medical Education and Registration (3). In Allinson's case the Master of the Rolls (Lord Esher) said, p. 758: "Where a person who has taken part in the judicial proceedings or, you might say, has sat in judgment on the case has any pecuniary interest in the result, however small, the Court will not inquire whether he was really biased or likely to be biased. The Court will say at once, it is [505] against public policy that a person who has any monetary interest, however small, in the result of judicial proceedings should take part in them as a judge. The Court will inquire no further, but will say at once that he is disqualified. But Leeson's Case also decides that there are other relations to the matter of a person who is to be one of the judges which may incapacitate him from acting as a judge, and the crucial question is whether in substance and in fact one of the judges has also been an accuser. The question is not whether in fact he was or was not biased. The Court cannot inquire into that. But he must bear such a relation to the matter that he cannot reasonably be suspected of being biased." So, too, Lopes, L. J., p. 762: "A person who has a pecuniary interest in the result of an accusation cannot adjudicate on it. The inference at once arises that he is interested. But when no pecuniary interest exists, or is even suggested, it is a question of substance and fact whether one of the judges has in truth also been an accuser. * * * In such cases the proper question to be asked is this: Whether there is any reasonable—any real or substantial—ground for suspecting bias."

Now it is clear from these authorities that if in the present case the Presidency Magistrate, Mr. Hamilton, had a pecuniary interest, however small, in the result of the accusation, then he was at once disqualified from adjudicating on the case, and it would be unnecessary for us to inquire whether there was any real or substantial ground for suspecting bias. In our opinion Mr. Hamilton had a pecuniary interest. For he was and is a shareholder in Treacher & Co., Limited. The complainant before him was one of the assistants of that company. The accused before him was a compounder in the employment of that company. The accusation was that the compounder had stolen or committed criminal breach of trust in respect of about Rs. 20, the property of the said company. If the position had been reversed, if the complainant had been the accused, charged with having embezzled about twenty thousand rupees of the company's money, it could hardly have been contended that a shareholder in Treacher & Co. would not have been pecuniarily interested in the result of the accusation. But the Court cannot [506] measure the pecuniary interest. As was said by Mr. Justice A. L. Smith in the Queen v. Gaisford (1), "the fact that a man has even the slightest pecuniary interest operates to disqualify him from adjudicating upon a case." To the remark that in this case the accused was in a certain sense an employe of the Magistrate, and the money alleged to have been stolen may be said to have been partly the property of the Magistrate, Mr. Inverarity objected and mentioned a recent case in which it was held that individual members of a company are not the corporation. He was no doubt referring to the case of George Newman & Co., Limited (2), in which Lindley, L. J., in delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal remarked that "an incorporated company's assets are its property and not the property of the shareholders for the time being." But that remark must be taken in connection with its context: George Newman & Co. was a private company consisting of George Newman and a few relatives and subordinates. The directors were George Newman and his brothers and one Wright, and they gave to George Newman out of the Company's assets two sums of £3,000 and £3,500 with the consent of the other shareholders, who were of age. On the winding up of the company, the liquidator sought to recover these sums from George Newman. To the argument that the whole body of shareholders really assented to what the directors had done, the Lord Justice replied by showing that the corporate capacity of the company could not be ignored, and that, even if the shareholders in general meeting could have sanctioned the making of these presents, no general meeting to consider the subject was ever held, and so the liquidator, as representing the company in its corporate capacity, was entitled to insist upon and to have the benefit of the fact that, even if a general meeting could have sanctioned what was done, such sanction was never obtained. The Lord Justice could never have meant to say that the shareholders of an incorporated company are not directly interested in the assets of the company, but what he held was that when a company is registered, then the right to deal with the assets of the company is regulated by statute. "A registered company cannot do anything which all its members [507] think expedient, and which, apart from the law relating to Incorporated Companies, they might lawfully do. An Incorporated Company's assets are its property, and not the property of the shareholders for the time being"—that is, the assets can only be dealt with according to the rules regulating incorporated companies. "Individual assent given separately may preclude those who give them from complaining of what they have sanctioned, but for the purpose of binding a company in its corporate capacity individual assents given separately are not equivalent to the assent of a meeting." It is unnecessary to pursue this line of argument further. The leading case of Dimes v. Proprietors of Grand Junction Canal(1) shows that a Judge may be disqualified simply by having shares in the incorporated company which is a party in the case before him. Here it is possible that the pecuniary interest which Mr. Hamilton has in the subject of the inquiry is very small, though it may be pointed out that every shareholder in Treacher & Co. has a direct interest in stopping alleged petty defalcations or embezzlements among the members of the establishment. But, as said before, the Court will not measure the interest (see, in addition to the recent authorities quoted above, the dicta of Mr. Justice Blackburn in the Queen v. Rand (2) reiterated in the Reg. v. Meyer (3), and the remarks of Mr. Justice Lush in Sergeant v. Dale (4).

For these reasons we must set aside all the proceedings held in this case before Mr. Hamilton, including the conviction and sentence, and direct that the complaint be disposed of by a duly qualified Magistrate.

Proceedings set aside.

Before Sir Charles Sargent, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Parsons.

KESHAV RAMCHANDRA DESHPANDE (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. KRISHNARAO VENKATESH, INAMDAR (Original Defendant), *Respondent. [9th April, 1895.]

On the 2nd February, 1890, the plaintiffs applied for leave to sue in forma pauperis. After investigation the Court on the 15th July, 1890, refused leave, but on the plaintiff's application granted him time to pay the Court-fees. He paid the fees on the 12th August, 1890. At this date the suit was barred, and the defendant pleaded limitation. The plaintiff contended that the suit should be taken as instituted at the date of his application for leave to sue as a pauper. The lower Court held the suit barred, and dismissed it.

Held, confirming the decree, that the plaintiff's application to sue as a pauper having been disposed of under s. 409 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) there was no proceeding pending which could be continued and kept alive by the payment of Court-fees. SECOND appeal from the decision of C. G. W. Macpherson, District Judge of Belgaum, reversing the decree of Rao Saheb R. G. Bhadbhade, Subordinate Judge of Chikodi.

Suit to recover possession of lands.

On the 2nd January, 1890, being the day on which the Court re-opened after the Christmas vacation, the plaintiffs applied for leave to bring a suit in forma pauperis against the defendant to recover land of which the defendant had been in possession since the 27th December, 1877.

After inquiry the Court found that the plaintiffs were not paupers, and on the 15th July, 1890, refused their application. The plaintiffs there and then applied to have further time allowed [509] them to pay the Court-fees. The Court granted them further time, and they paid the Court-fees on the 12th August, 1890.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the suit was barred by limitation, not having been filed until the 12th August, 1890 (i.e., the day on which the fees were paid), which was after the expiration of twelve years from the date of the defendant's getting possession of the land sued for. He contended that the date of the application to sue as a pauper could not be taken as the date of suit under s. 4 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), as that application had been refused.

The Subordinate Judge overruled the defendant's contention, and held that the suit should be regarded as filed on the 2nd January, 1890. He heard the suit and allowed the claim.

On appeal by the defendant the Judge held the claim to be time-barred, and reversed the decree.

Keshavrao Ramchandra Deshpande, one of the plaintiffs, preferred a second appeal.

Mahadeo B. Chaubal, for the appellant (plaintiff):—The point is whether for the purpose of limitation the time is to be calculated up to the date on which the application to sue in forma pauperis was made in cases in which the application is refused.

We made the application for time immediately after the Subordinate Judge refused to give us permission to sue in forma pauperis. The Privy Council has ruled in Skinner v. Orde (1) that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to pauperism should not be very strictly enforced. The Code lays down that the application for permission to sue as a pauper should be numbered and registered as a suit after it is granted, but in the Privy Council case the application was not numbered and registered as a suit.

[SARGENT, C. J.—In that case the application was not dismissed.]

There is nothing in the present case to show that our application was rejected under s. 409 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The case of Skinner v. Orde (1), which is so much relied on by the appellant, is an authority only for the proposition that if during the hearing of an application to be allowed to sue as a pauper the full amount of Court-fees is paid, the application should be considered as a plaint, and the time of institution of the suit taken for purposes of limitation to be the time when the application was made. It has no bearing upon the present case, where it was after his application to be allowed to sue as a pauper had been rejected, and the Court had refused to allow him to sue as a pauper, that the applicant asked for time within which to pay the full amount of Court fees, and contended that he was entitled on such payment to count the date of his application for leave to sue as a pauper as the date of the institution of his suit. We think that he could not do this. His application to sue as a pauper had been disposed of under s. 409 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and there was no proceeding pending which could be continued and kept alive by the payment of Court-fees. On the rejection of the application, the only course open to the applicant is that declared in (s. 413, viz., to institute a suit, and the date of the institution of that suit for purposes of limitation would be the actual date thereof. The plaintiff could not then be regarded as a pauper, and the provisions of s. 4 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) relating to paupers would have no application. We agree in this with the decision of the Calcutta Court—Chunder Mohun Roy v. Bhubon Mohini Dabea (2). We confirm the decree with costs.

BY a deed of trust dated the 24th January, 1888, made between the plaintiff of the one part and himself and two other persons, viz., the defendant Rustomji Dessabhoy Setna and one Nusserwanji Dinsha Dubash, of the other part, it was recited that the plaintiff being desirous of providing for certain ceremonies set forth in the said deed had absolutely given and transferred to himself and the said two persons certain Government promissory notes of the nominal value of Rs. 10,000, and that it was his intent and wish to divest himself for ever of the said notes, that the property therein should be absolutely vested in himself and the said two persons, "and that the said notes shall no longer in any way belong to him or form part of his estate or ever revert thereto, any rule of law or equity to the contrary notwithstanding," and that he had immediately before the execution of the said deed transferred the said notes into the joint name of himself and the said two persons "to the intent that they and the survivors and the survivor of them and the executors or administrators of such survivor shall stand possessed thereof upon the [512] trusts and to the uses and with and subject to the powers and provisions hereinafter declared and expressed," and it was witnessed as follows :—

"Now this indenture witnesseth that, in consideration of the wish and desire of the said Cowasji Nowroji Pochkhanawalla to make certain provision which he believes to be for the benefit of the souls of his deceased near relations hereinafter referred to and also for the benefit of the Parsi community, and for divers other good causes and considerations, the said Cowasji Nowroji Pochkhanawalla doth hereby direct and declare that the said Cowasji Nowroji Pochkhanawalla, Rustomji Dossabhoy Setna and Nusserwanji Dinsha Dubash and the survivors and survivor of them, and the executors or administrators of such survivor or other the trustees or trustee for the time being of these presents (hereinafter called the said trustees or trustee) shall deposit the said Government loan notes for safe custody in the Bank of Bombay with a power to the said Bank to draw on their behalf the half-yearly interest upon such notes, and shall pay such interest to the said Cowasji Nowroji Pochkhanawalla during his natural life to the use and to the intent that the said Cowasji Nowroji Pochkhanawalla shall out of the said interest expend the sum of Rs. 10 on the anniversary day of each of his father Nowroji Pallonji, his mother Mithibai and his sisters Jerbai and Cursetbai and his two brothers Manokji and Rustomji and his wife Jerbai, who are all dead, and also of his present wife Jaiji after her death accompanied with a suit of clothing called 'Sheeao' according to the Zoroastrian religion, and to the further use that out of the remainder of the said interest the said Cowasji Nowroji Pochkhanawalla shall apply the sum of Rs. 180 in each and every year to the performance from day to day of 'Daroon' ceremonies, called 'Chalco Daroon,' and to the further use that the said Cowasji Nowroji Pochkhanawalla shall apply the remainder of the said interest to the performance every year of the 'Mookhtad' ceremonies, and on the death of the said Cowasji Nowroji Pochkanawalla the said trustees or trustee shall stand possessed of the said interest upon trust to pay the same to the said Jaiji if she should survive her husband to the same uses and for the same purposes as are hereinbefore declared concerning the interest to accrue during the life-time of the said Cowasji Nowroji Pochkhanawalla, with the addition that a sum of Rs. 10 out of the said interest shall be expended on the anniversary day of the said Cowasji Nowroji Pochkhanawalla, and after the deaths of the said Cowasji Nowroji Pochkhanawalla and of the said Jaiji the said trustees or trustee shall stand possessed of the said interest upon trust to pay the same to Hormasji Cowasji Pochkhanawalla, the son of the said Cowasji Nowroji Pochkhanawalla, to the same uses as are hereinbefore declared concerning the interest to accrue during the life-time of the said Cowasji Nowroji Pochkhanawalla and his wife the said Jaiji if the said trustee or trustees shall be satisfied that the said interest shall be applied by the said Hormasji Cowasji Pochkhanawalla as above directed; and in case the said trustees or trustee shall not in their absolute discretion be so satisfied upon trust to pay the said interest to any one of the surviving daughters of the said Manokji and Rustomji, the two predeceased brothers of the said Cowasji Nowroji Pochkhanawalla, to the same uses, intents and purposes as are hereinbefore declared and expressed concerning the interest to accrue during the lifetime of the said Cowasji Nowroji Pochkhanawalla and his wife the said Jaiji: Provided and it is hereby agreed and declared that the [513] said trustees or trustee shall be at absolute liberty to entrust the carrying out of the above ceremonies, intents and purposes to any one of the said surviving daughters of the said Manokji and Rustomji in preference to the said Hormasji Cowasji Pochkhanawalla, provided and it is hereby agreed and declared that if the abovenamed relations of the said Cowasji Nowroji Pochkhanawalla should decline to accept the performance and carrying out of the above trusts the said trustees or trustee shall stand possessed of the said interest upon trust to pay the same to a 'Mobed' or Parsi priest of their or his own selection to the uses and for the purposes as aforesaid so long as he shall act faithfully, or in case a proper priest shall not be found in that behalf and at any time during the continuance of these presents the said trustees or trustee shall transfer the said Government promissory notes to the names of and shall hand the same to the trustees for the time being of the Parsi Panchayat to the intent that out of the interest of the said notes the aforesaid uses and purposes shall be carried out under their direction."

The deed provided for the appointment of new trustees.

The said Nusserwanji Dinsha Dubash died on the 3rd December, 1888, and no other trustee was appointed in his place.

The plaintiff now sued to recover the said trust property, having been advised that the trusts for which he had given it were invalid. The defendants to the suit were the surviving co-trusteeand the plaintiff himself as surviving trustees of the above trust-deed. This suit was filed on the 3rd October, 1895.

The plaint stated that the said Government promissory notes were sold by the plaintiff in 1895 and the proceeds were invested by him in the purchase of two shares in the Bombay and Burmah Trading Corporation, Limited, which were at the date of the suit of the value of Rs. 11,000. The said shares although purchased by the plaintiff had always remained in the possession and custody of the defendant Rustomji Dossabhai Setna.

The concluding paragraph and the prayer of the plaint were as follows:—

"4. The plaintiff and the first defendant are advised that all the trusts by the said deed created are by law invalid, and that the plaintiff is entitled to the said shares in his own right.

"The plaintiff, therefore, prays:—

"(a) That it may be declared that the trusts created or purported to be created by the deed in the first paragraph hereof referred to are void and that the said deed is inoperative and of no effect.

"(b) That it may be declared that the plaintiff is entitled to receive the two shares in the Bombay and Burmah Trading Corporation, Limited, in the third [514] paragraph hereof referred to, and to hold the same in his own right freed from the said trusts.

"(c) That the first defendant may be authorised to deliver the said shares to the plaintiff.

"(d) That the plaintiff may have such further and other relief as the nature of the case may require."

The defendant filed a written statement stating that he had been advised that it was questionable whether the plaintiff's right to have the trust property handed back to him was not barred by limitation, and submitting to the judgment of the Court whether the trustees could and ought to retain the same and apply it in accordance with the trusts declared in the deed.

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—This is at first sight a simple case, but it involves the consideration of an important question.

By an indenture, dated 24th January, 1888, Cowasji Nowroji Pochkhanawalla gave and transferred to himself and to Rustomji Dosabhoy Setna and to another (since deceased) two Government promissory notes of the nominal value of Rs. 10,000 in order that the property in the said notes should be absolutely vested in the said transferees and should no longer in any way belong to the transferor or form part of his estate or ever revert thereto, any rule of law or equity to the contrary notwithstanding, but that the notes should be held in trust by the transferees, who should pay the interest thereof to the transferor during his natural life, to be spent by him in the following way, viz., Rs. 10, on anniversary days of his deceased relatives, and of his present wife when deceased "accompanied with a suit of clothing called Sheeao, according to the Zoroastrian religion," and Rs. 180 every year for the "Chaloo Daroon" ceremonies, and the remainder [515] for the annual "Mookhtad" ceremonies, and after the transferor's death the trustees were to pay the interest to his widow for the same uses and for the same purposes, and on her death to pay the interest to other persons named for the same uses and purposes, due arrangement being made for the continuation of the trust in perpetuity.

The transferor, Cowasji Nowroji Pochkhanawalla, brought this suit on 3rd October, 1895, against his surviving trustee R. D. Setna, reciting the indenture above described and stating that the Government notes had been sold by him (the plaintiff) and the proceeds invested in two shares of the Bombay and Burmah Trading Corporation, Limited, now of the nominal value of about Rs. 11,000, the shares being in the name of the plaintiff, but remaining in the custody of the defendant.

The plaintiff states in his plaint that he and his co-trustee (defendant) are advised that all the trusts created by the said deed are by law invalid.

and that the plaintiff is entitled to the said shares in his own right. He, therefore, prays that it may be declared that the trusts created by the deed are void, and that the deed is inoperative and of no effect, and that it may be declared that the plaintiff is entitled to receive the shares and to hold the same in his own right freed from the trusts; and the plaintiff prays for the possession of the said shares.

The defendant submits himself to the judgment of the Court, but his counsel suggested first that the trusts are valid, the property being cash and not landed property; secondly, that in any event plaintiff's present claim is barred by limitation.

The first question can be easily disposed of. There is no authority for holding that the property which cannot be tied up for a period exceeding the limit allowed by the rule against perpetuities, is real property, and that the rule cannot be applied to a fund which is not of the nature of a real property. Thus to take the oft quoted case of Hoare v. Osborne(1), the property in question was 3 per cent. consolidated annuities. Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., began his judgment thus:—"The cases which have been cited clearly determine that a gift of a sum of money is void, [516] not being a charity." So, too, the illustrations to s. 101 of the Succession Act all relate to "a fund"; s. 14 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) relates simply to "property," which may be moveable or immoveable. There is no rule of law more absolute than that all property, whatever be its nature, must be alienable within a life in being and 21 years after (see per Malins, V. C., in Cooper v. Laroche (2)). There can be no doubt that the objects of this settlement admittedly not being "charity" so as to avoid the rule against perpetuities, the settlement is void.

But it is suggested that the plaintiff's present suit to recover the corpus of the fund is barred by limitation, and the point having been brought to the notice of the Court, I cannot avoid considering it.

In discussing the question of limitation, the learned counsel took it for granted that, if limitation applied at all, then the article of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applicable to this case would be art. 120. The time from which the perod of limitation under that article begins to run is "when the right to sue accrues." It was contended that here the plaintiff's right to sue accrued when he demanded the money. But this is clearly not so. When the Legislature intends demand and refusal to be the starting point of limitation, this is clearly indicated in the last column of the second schedule of the Act. In the present case the plaintiff's right to the corpus of the fund accrued directly he had transferred it to the trustees. There was at once a resulting trust in his favour. If art. 120 of the Limitation Act applies, then the suit became barred six years after the date of the deed.

It may be remarked that no mention is made in the plaint as to any mistake, and the suit cannot be regarded as one for relief on the ground of mistake. The plaintiff simply says that he is advised that the trusts which he purported to create are wholly void. No doubt art. 96 of Act XV of 1877 applies to both mistakes in fact and in law; and as Lord Chelmsford said in Earl Beauchamp v. Winn(3), "there are many cases found in which equity, upon a mere mistake of the law, without the [517] admixture of other circumstances, has given relief to a party who has dealt with his property under the influence of such mistake." But that principle would hardly apply to the present case, in which the conveyance creating the illegal trusts was executed in January, 1888—apparently drawn by a solicitor of this Court—while in February, 1887, there had been a decision of this Court (Limji Nowroji Banaji v. Bapuji Ruttonji (1)) that the objects of such a trust were not valid charities. This is very different from the case above quoted in which Lord Chelmsford went on to say: "Therefore, although when a certain construction has been put by a Court of law upon a certain deed, it must be taken that the legal construction was clear. Yet the ignorance, before the decision, of what was the true construction, cannot, in my opinion, be pressed to the extent of depriving a person of relief on the ground that he was bound himself to have known beforehand how the grant must be construed." The case, therefore, must be considered on the assumption that art. 120 applies, and that the right to sue accrued when the plaintiff had the right to demand back from the defendant the corpus of the fund in 1888.

But it was contended that no limitation would apply as provided by s. 10 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), which says that "no suit against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose.....for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property, shall be barred by any length of time." Here no doubt the property has become vested in defendant in trust for the specific purpose of paying over the interest thereof for certain religious uses and purposes. But defendant has never committed any breach of that trust. Plaintiff seeks to follow the property for purposes directly contrary to the trusts under which it was vested in defendant. It is evident that such a case is not within the terms of s. 10. In Kherodemoney Dossee v. Doorgamoney (2), Garth, C. J., said (p. 465): "I could have wished, in an equitable point of view, that the scope of that section had been considerably extended. But we are of course tied down to the words of the section, and are bound to see what their true meaning is.

[518] "I think, after much consideration, that what they mean is this; that where a trust has been created expressly for some specific purpose or object, and property has become vested in a trustee upon such trust (.....), the person or persons who for the time being may be beneficially interested in that trust may bring a suit against such trustee to enforce that trust at any distance of time without being barred by the law of limitation.

"That being the construction which I put upon s. 10, I consider that this case does not come within its scope. The specific purpose for which the defendant became a trustee * * * * was to carry out and protect the disposition of the property in favour of the testator's sister's sons." (That disposition was held to be illegal under Hindu law, and, therefore, there was a resulting trust in favour of testator's widow, who was his sole heir). "But the plaintiff's object is the very opposite of this. She is suing for the purpose of invalidating the disposition, in furtherance of which the trust was created. Her object is to defeat that trust, not to enforce it."

Markby, J., came to the same conclusion. He said (p. 470): "The trust which it is now sought to enforce had not been specified by the testator, and I, therefore, think that s. 10 does not apply to this case, and that the ordinary rules of limitation must apply."

The remarks of the Privy Council at p. 96 of Balwant Rao v. Puran Mal (1) show that the expression used by the Legislature "for the purpose of following in his hands such property" means for the purpose of recovering the property for the trusts in question, i.e., for the purpose for which the property was specifically vested in the trustee. Whether in the case of a resulting trust, the trust is "express" or not, the purpose for which the property is sought to be recovered is certainly not "specific," within the meaning of s. 10, whether the purpose is directly contrary to the terms of the settlement which purported to create the trust. And this is the important distinction which distinguishes a case such as Lister v. Pickford (2) from the present case. In Lister v. Pickford (2) the trustees in 1850 entered into possession bona fide, [519] believing that they did so on behalf of Miss Lister. As a fact, according to the true construction of the will creating the trust, the real cestui que trust was M. H. Lister. The Master of the Rolls said: "A trustee who is in possession of land is so on behalf of his cestui que trust, and his making a mistake as to the persons who are really his cestui que trustent cannot affect the question."

Next it is said: in the present case the plaintiff, the settlor, is one of the trustees, and from the date of the settlement he has been receiving the interest of the fund; how can his co-trustee set up a plea of limitation? The answer to this question may be gathered from the case of Churcher v. Martin (3). In that case real estate was by deed expressed to be conveyed to trustees upon charitable trusts. The deed was not enrolled, and the grantor died within a year after the execution of the deed. It was held that the deed was not voidable only, but was absolutely void under 9 Geo. II, c. 36, s. 3. The trustees, however, on the death of the grantor in November, 1868, had entered into possession and applied the rents and profits according to the trusts of the deed. Emmanuel Churcher was one of the trustees, and he was also general devisee and legatee of the grantor. He died in 1887, and the executors under his will sued the trustees for a declaration that the charitable trusts were void, and they claimed a conveyance and assignment of the property. The trustees pleaded that the property had been continuously held by them, or some of them, for more than twelve years for the purposes of the trusts of the deed of 1868 (which was held void) and pleaded the statutes of limitation.

Counsel for plaintiffs urged (p. 315): "There is no authority for saying that a trustee who has employed land in charity for twelve years has established a charity. The trust here is express—Lewin on Trusts (8th Ed., p. 878"); (this apparently is a mistake for p. 877); "and they can have no title except as trustees. The trustees are the legal owners and have been in possession, and the Court does not inquire in that case under what title they come in and will hold them trustees. Or in another point of view, they have been mere licensees, and have employed the rents with the [520] asset of the owner, Emmanuel Churcher, one of them. That cannot give adverse title."

On this Kekewich, J., said (p. 318):—

"It has been proved that shortly after the execution of the deed of the 22nd of January, 1868, the trustees of that deed entered into possession of the property which it purported to convey, and that as regards so much thereof as is claimed by the plaintiffs in this action the trustees for the time being (not all the same persons throughout) had been in uninterrupted possession for upwards of twelve years before writ issued. It has further been proved that they have thus been in possession on behalf of the charity which the deed purports to constitute, and they say that such charity has been thus established. Into this I need not enquire, because the trustees and the Attorney-General combine in their defence to the action, and no question arises between them ; but the application of the money coming to the trustees' hands is nevertheless of importance as regards Emmanuel Churcher, who was himself one of them. Apart from that accident, why should not this uninterrupted possession confer a prescriptive title as against the plaintiffs, who, without tracing the devolution about which there was no contest, may be treated as being the devisees of him who would now be entitled to the property comprised in the deed of the 22nd of January, 1868, had that deed never been executed. The plaintiffs' answer is that the possession of the trustees is the possession of the cestui que trust, and Lister v. Pickford (1) was cited. The general proposition is true enough, and might be supported by other authorities, but what is the application in the present case (I will assume that those in possession were trustees in the proper and full sense of the term) ? How can the possession of the trustees enure to the benefit of him whose title was intended to be defeated by the deed which created the trust ? How can the grantor (for Emmanuel Churcher may be considered the grantor) be their cestui que trust ? Because, it is urged, there is an express trust in his favour, an express trust necessarily resulting from the failure of those declared. It would suffice to reply that such a resulting trust is implied by law, and that whatever else it may be, it is not an express trust ; but as Salter v. Cavanagh (2) was referred to, I may point out that the trust there spoken of as express was one inferred from the deed, and discoverable on the face of it, and not as here a trust against the deed and due only to the fact that the deed is void. This seems to have been appreciated by the learned author of the text-book which was mentioned."

This last remark evidently refers to a passage on p. 877 of the 8th Ed. of Lewin on Trusts, in the note (c) (see 9th Ed., p. 999, note D) to which Salter v. Cavanagh (2) is quoted. The passage runs :—"It is not necessary to use the word trust in order to create an express trust within the meaning of the statute (Commissioners of Charitable Donations v. Wybrants (3), but any language that would in equity raise or imply a trust will be deemed an express trust. If, therefore, land be devised to a person upon trust to receive the rents and thereout to pay certain annuities, the surplus [521] rents result to the heir-at-law upon the face of the instrument, and this being an express trust, the heir-at-law, in a case falling within the section, will not be barred by any length of possession by the trustee (2)."

That was exactly the case of Salter v. Cavanagh (2). It was a resulting trust upon the face of the instrument.

Then as to the argument that the trustees may have been mere licensees, Kekewich, J., said (p. 319) :—

"There is still one argument to be noticed, and one deserving more consideration : 'From the date of the deed until his death in 1887 Emmanuel Churcher was one of the trustees,—one of the persons jointly in possession—and it is said that he cannot be taken to have assisted others in acquiring a title against himself. The law, it is urged, adjudges the possession to be that of him who has the right; and the proper inference is that Emmanuel Churcher's co-trustees were in possession with his license and not adversely to him.' If Emmanuel Churcher had been the sole trustee the aspect of the case would have been very different, but here he was one of several; receiving rents and performing acts of ownership without the slightest reservation or indication of beneficial claim, and unless I am bound to regard the physical identity of the beneficial owner with one of the trustees as prevailing to the disregard of the facts and substance of the story, I must treat Emmanuel Churcher the beneficial owner as excluded from possession for twelve years and upwards, notwithstanding that Emmanuel Churcher the trustee took an active part in the management of the estate. Am I so bound? Trustees are not a corporate body; there is no aggregate existence independent of the individual members; but, on the other hand, they are joint owners of the trust property, and they cannot act otherwise than jointly, even though frequently and for many purposes one member of the body represents the others. It seems to me consistent with principle to hold that the joint possession excludes that of any one of the joint possessors on his own behalf, and no authority was cited or has occurred to me inconsistent with that view. My conclusion, therefore, is that the accident of Emmanuel Churcher's beneficial interest did not operate to defeat the title of the trustees which he intended to preserve."

If this reasoning is sound (the decision was quoted in the subsequent case of Pattrick v. Simpson (1) as good law), then it is impossible not to apply it to the present case. Plaintiff has, by the terms of the deed, been one of the trustees of the trust specified in the deed. Also he has been the conduit pipe for the disposal of the interest arising from the trust funds to the religious purposes which are the objects of the trust. How can that possession enure to the benefit of the plaintiff who now says that the trust was ab initio void, and that he has always been and is absolutely [522] entitled to the whole corpus of the fund? No doubt the result is startling, but the Court has to administer the law as it is, and not according to a result, which possibly may be due to the too narrow terms of a section of a statute. The learned counsel for the plaintiff submitted whether it would not be inconsistent to establish as a perpetual charity that which is really no charity at all. Here the deed is void, not on account of any absence of certain formalities under any statute such as the Mortmain Act, but it is in itself void as creating a perpetual trust which the law does not recognize. The answer to this question is that the deed is neither more nor less void than was the deed in the case of Churcher v. Martin, in which it was held that the deed was void altogether. Kekewich, J., refused to consider the question whether the effect of his decision would be to establish the charity. I must follow the same course.

Holding the claim to be barred by limitation, I must dismiss the suit. Under the particular circumstances of the case, the costs of both sides as between attorney and client may come out of the estate

Before the Honourable Chief Justice Farran and Mr. Justice B. Tyabji.

HAJI ESSA SULLEMAN (Plaintiff) v. DAYABHAI PARMANANDAS AND OTHERS (Defendants).* [6th December, 1895.]

Vendor and purchaser—Concealment of claim against property—Whether such concealment entitles purchaser to rescind—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 55—Meaning of words "material defects."

The expression " material defect " in s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) includes a defect in the title to an estate.

CASE stated for the opinion of the High Court under s. 69 of the Small Cause Court Act (XV of 1882) by R. M. Patel, Second Judge:—

[523] "The defendants are executors to the estate of one Dayabhai Tribhovandas and the plaintiff is a purchaser from them of a piece of land at Memon Mohla at an auction sale held on the 6th March, 1894. The plaintiff agreed to purchase the property at Rs. 2,900, and deposited Rs. 500 by way of earnest-money. He now seeks to rescind the contract of purchase and to recover back the deposit with interest and charges. He claims in all Rs. 584-8-0 and costs. One of the conditions of sale was that the vendors sold as trustees, and would give such title as they had, and the purchaser should not raise any objection to their title, or make any requisition thereon, but should accept such title as they had or could give. The property having been in litigation for years, the plaintiff added a clause to his signature with the consent of the vendors as follows:—'If there be any claims or disputes about the house, the vendors will clear the same.' The case was argued on both sides, treating this clause as one of the conditions of sale.

"2. The plaintiff sought to rescind the contract on three grounds, two of which I decided against him and in favour of the defendants. The third point I decided in favour of the plaintiff, viz., that one Jackaria Moosa had laid a claim to the property as equitable mortgagee to the extent of Rs. 500 and interest thereon, and defendants had taken no steps to clear or dispose of the same; and that the said claim was known to the defendants before the date of the auction-sale, but they had failed to inform the purchaser or to notify it to him, and that the contract of sale was thereby vitiated under s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act.

"3. The premises were originally mortgaged to the defendants' testator by one Hazrabai under a deed of mortgage dated 4th of January, 1871. Jackaria Moosa alleges that the testator had during his life-time raised a loan from him of Rs. 500 and delivered to him the said mortgage-deed by way of equitable mortgage, and Jackaria still continues in possession of the said deed. In January, 1894, the defendants attempted to sell the premises to one Hasandada, and Jackaria Moosa then gave notice of his claim as equitable mortgagee to the intending purchaser. Correspondence passed between the solicitors to the defendants and Jackaria [524] Moosa, and on the 2nd of February, 1894, the former wrote to Jackaria Moosa's solicitors that their client had made a false claim, and if the deed of mortgage was not returned and given up, "steps might be taken to compel its delivery." The bargain with Hasandada fell off and no step, or legal proceedings, as threatened, having been taken, Jackaria Moosa continued in possession of the deed. Jackaria must be, therefore, presumed to have a subsisting claim as an equitable mortgagee.

"4. It is admitted that at the auction-sale which subsequently took place on the 6th of March, 1894, no notice or information was given by the defendants or their auctioneer of the claim that had been set up by Jackaria Moosa. Nor was plaintiff aware of the claim till some time, in response to a battaki beaten as usual, Jackaria Moosa again sent a notice of his claim through his solicitors to the municipal assessor. That claim was brought to the notice of the defendants, but they took no steps whatever, and simply relied on the correspondence that had previously passed.

"5. Under s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act I was of opinion that the expression 'material defect in the property' included 'material defect in title,' and that under the last clause of the same section the omission to disclose any material defect in title was fraudulent. I held that any omission, i.e., concealment or suppression of a material fact affecting the title made from mere inadvertence or even from accident, should be treated as fraudulent under s. 55, as that section did not require any active concealment of a fact as provided for by s. 17 of the Contract Act. I was of opinion that all omissions to disclose a material defect, whether through carelessness or design, were to be considered fraudulent so as to avoid the contract at the option of the purchaser (see Pollock on Fraud, p. 98). The value of the premises being Rs. 2,900, and the alleged claim of Jackaria Moosa having been over Rs. 500, the disclosure of the claim made by him, if made at the time of the auction-sale, might have induced the purchaser to avoid the contract on account of the alleged incumbrance and apprehended litigation; or it might probably have persuaded him to offer a lower value. On the authority of Pearee Mohun v. [525] Abdool Sobhan (1) I held that the neglect on the part of the defendants to disclose the fact of the claim of Jackaria Moosa was a fraudulent concealment, and vitiated the contract. I may be permitted to say I also relied on Waddell v. Wolfe (2); Mostyn v. The West Mostyn Coal, &c., Company (3); Nottingham Patent Brick and Tile Company v. Butler (4); and on Gajapathi v. Alagia (5) and Morgan v. The Government of Haidarabad (6). I gave verdict for plaintiff for Rs. 584-8, &c.

"6. As the defendants' solicitor has proposed questions (iv) and (v), it is necessary to state that during his life-time the testator Dayabhai had filed a suit, No. 170 of 1875, on the said mortgage in the High Court, and under a decree obtained therein the premises in question were sold, and Dayabhai purchased the same with leave of the Court and obtained a certificate of sale dated the 2nd August, 1887. Amongst the documents of title now in the possession of the defendants, the said mortgage-deed of the 4th January, 1871, has been missing, and it is now in the possession of Jackaria Moosa. No evidence whatever was given by the defendants to show that Jackaria Moosa was aware of the existence of the High Court suit, or of the decree, or of the subsequent purchase of the property under the said certificate of sale by the testator Dayabhai. Nor was the point raised by question (v) argued and pressed as therein suggested.

"7. At the request of the defendants' solicitor, I beg respectfully to submit the following questions for the opinion of their Lordships :—

"(i) Whether under the circumstances of the case the alleged claim of Jackaria Moosa amounts to a 'material defect in the property' in terms of s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act ?

"(ii) Whether, having regard to the conditions of sale (Ex. D), the defendants were bound to remove the claim put forward by the said Jackaria Moosa ?

"(iii) Whether the defendants were bound to disclose to the plaintiff before the auction-sale the claim made by the said [526] Jackaria Moosa, and whether by the reason of the non-disclosure of the said claim, the plaintiff is entitled to rescind the contract and claim his deposit with interest and costs ?

"(iv) Whether the deed dated 4th January, 1871, which is in the possession of Jackaria Moosa is a document by the deposit of which an equitable mortgage of the property could be created, having regard to the fact that a decree in the High Court suit No. 170 of 1875 was passed upon the said mortgage and a certificate of sale issued to the said Dayabhai on his purchasing the said property under the said decree ?

"(v) Whether, having regard to the said decree and certificate, the said mortgage is extinguished so as to cease to be a document of title to the property by the deposit of which an encumbrance could be created ? "

The following were the conditions of sale under which the property in question was sold :—

"The highest bidder shall be declared to be the purchaser, and if any dispute shall arise between two or more bidders the property shall be immediately put up again at the last preceding bidding and re-sold.

"2. The purchaser shall pay immediately into the hands of the auctioneer a deposit of Rs. 25 per cent. in part payment of the purchase-money and sign an agreement for payment of the remainder to the vendors or their solicitor within one month from the day of the date of the sale. If from any cause whatever the purchase shall not be completed within the aforesaid time, the purchaser shall pay to the vendors interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum on the remainder of the purchase-money from the date of sale until the purchase shall be completed. This condition is to be without prejudice to the seventh condition.

"3. The purchaser shall prepare a conveyance of the property purchased by him at his own expense, the same to be approved of by the vendors, and on payment of the remainder of the purchase-money the same when tendered shall be executed by the vendors.

"4. The vendors shall as trustees of the estate of the late Dayabhai Tribhovandas and will give such title only as they have. The purchaser shall not raise any objection to their title or make any requisition thereon, but shall accept such title as they have or can give.

"5. The description of the property as contained in the particulars is believed to be correct, but if any error or mis-statement or omission in the particulars be discovered, the same shall not annul the sale, nor shall any compensation be allowed by the vendors to the purchaser in respect thereof.

"6. If the purchaser shall neglect or fail to comply with the above conditions or any one of them the deposit money shall be forfeited and the vendors shall be at liberty [527] to re-sell the said property by public auction without previously tendering any conveyance to the purchaser, and the deficiency in the amount of the purchase-money, if any, together with all charges attending the re-sale shall be made good by the purchaser at the re-sale and be recoverable by the vendors, and for liquidated damages.

"7. The vendors will give possession of the property to the purchaser on his paying the full purchase-money and tendering a proper conveyance to the vendors for execution.

"8. The vendors as aforesaid are the trustees of the estate of the late Dayabhai Tribhovandas, and they will not enter into any covenant other than usually necessary to be inserted in the conveyance.

"9. The purchaser shall besides the expenses of the preparation and execution of the conveyance bear the stamp fees and expenses of registration and all other costs of and incidental to the completion of the purchase and the transfer of the property to his name in the book of the Fazendar and Municipality of Bombay."

After the sale the plaintiff signed the following document :—

"I, Haji Essa Sulleman of Bombay, hereby acknowledge that on sale by auction this 6th day of March, 1894, of the property mentioned in the foregoing particulars, I was the highest bidder for and was declared the purchaser thereof, subject to the foregoing conditions of sale, at the price of Rs. 2,900 only, and that I have paid the sum of Rs. 500 only deposit and in part payment of the said purchase-money to Mr. Bomanji Dossabhoy, the auctioneer, and I hereby agree to pay the remainder of the said purchase-money and complete the said purchase according to the foregoing conditions.

Lowndes, for defendants.—The questions are (1) Is the plaintiff as purchaser entitled to rescind his contract of purchase, because of concealment of a material defect in the property ? (2) Can he rescind on the ground that the defendants have not declared the property of Jackaria's claim ? We contend he is not entitled to rescind. We say s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) does not apply to this case. The section does not include defects of title. Dixon v. Muckleston (1); Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 108 ; Specific Relief Act, I of 1877, s. 18, cls. (c) and (d) and s. 22.

JUDGMENT.

B. TYABJI, J.—This is a reference to the High Court under s 69 of the Small Cause Court Act (XV of 1882) by the learned Second Judge, Mr. Rustomji Merwanji Patel. The first question we have to answer is whether, under the circumstances stated in the case submitted to us, the alleged claim of Jackaria Moosa amounts to a "material defect in the property" within the meaning of s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). This question sub-divides itself into two questions :—

(a) Whether the expression "defect in the property" includes defects not in the estate itself, but in the title to such estate, and

(b) Whether if so, the alleged defect in this case, namely, the existence of the mortgage-deed dated 4th January, 1871, and its alleged deposit with the said Jackaria Moosa by way of an equitable mortgage for Rs. 500 is "material" within the meaning of the same section.

[529] The learned Second Judge has held that a defect in the property includes a defect in title under s. 55, and although this construction was not pressed upon us by Mr. Scott, who argued the case on behalf of the plaintiff before us, we still think it our duty to consider and decide the question as it has been specifically put to us by the learned Judge.

Although at first sight it seems somewhat straining the meaning of the words "defects in the property" to hold that they include defects in the title to the property, yet, after a careful consideration of the whole of s. 55 and other sections of the Act bearing on the question, we have come to the conclusion that the construction put upon the words by the learned Second Judge is correct.

Mr. Justice Shephard and Mr. Brown in their learned Commentary upon the Transfer of Property Act, p. 145, say: "There may be some doubt whether defects not in the estate itself, but in the title, are intended to come within the clause,— whether the duty, imposed on the vendor, relates to matters other than those of the class referred to in s. 108. It is apprehended, however, that the term is not to be so restricted, and that an omission to disclose flaws in the title or incumbrances, which the purchaser has no apparent means of discovering, might equally be fraudulent under the section. In England, positive fraud is not necessary to entitle a purchaser to relief; it is enough if he proves concealment, on the seller's part, of a material defect in the title. And it is not competent to a vendor failing to disclose such a defect to put forward conditions of sale which are to force bad title upon his purchaser."

We consider that the above statement of the law is borne out by the English authorities.

In Sugden's Law of Vendor and Purchaser, (14th Ed.), p. 5, the doctrine is broadly stated in these terms: "The same rule applies to incumbrances and defects in the title to an estate as to defects in the estate itself. The vendor is bound to deliver to the purchaser the instrument by which the incumbrances were created, or on which the defects arise, or to acquaint him with the facts if they do not appear on the title deeds. If a seller knows [530] and conceals a fact material to the title, relief cannot be refused to the purchaser."

Again in Dart, p. 105, we find it laid down: "As to incumbrances and defects in title—a vendor, so far as his prima facie liability in this respect is not negatived or restricted by the terms of the contract, must produce to the purchaser all such documents of title in his possession or power as are necessary, and must inform him of all material facts not apparent thereon."

In Mostyn v. West Mostyn Coal and Iron Company (1) Mr. Justice Brett says: "Now although there is a statement that plaintiff knew and defendants did not and could not know of the want of title to part of the demised premises, and that such a want of title was in respect of a part material to the enjoyment of the rest, still there is no allegation of anything amounting to fraud on the part of the plaintiff. The question is whether a Court of Equity would, if a bill had been filed containing a statement of these facts, set aside the lease. If so, then there is a good prima facie answer to the action. I think the passage from Sugdon's Vendor and Purchaser, (14th Ed.), p. 246, and the case of Edwards v. McLeay (2) are authorities to show that equity in such a case as this will set aside the transaction. * *" In Edwards v. McLeay the Master of the Rolls (Sir William Grant) says: "Whether it would be a fraud to offer as good a title which the vendor knows to be defective in point of law, it is not necessary to determine, but if he knows of and conceals a fact material to the validity of the title, I am not aware of any principle on which relief can be refused to the purchaser.

Again Archibald, J., at p. 153 said: "Where there has been concealment of a material fact, though it may not amount to affirmative fraud and though there has been no eviction, a Court of Equity will set aside the lease."

In Nottingham Patent Brick and Tile Company v. Butler (3), Lord Esher, M.R., said: "It seems to me an astounding proposition that a vendor can by means of such conditions of sale force upon a purchaser a defective title, even though he (the vendor) know the defect. Now, that Butler did know of the defect seems [531] to have been assumed by Wills, J.; if you treat him as dealing himself with the purchasers he knew of the defect and if the conversation between his solicitor and the plaintiffs' solicitor, at which he was present, amounted to nothing at all, then it comes to this that he, knowing the defect, by his agent put forth the condition of sale. If that is so, the case is absolutely within the authority of Haywood v. Mallalieu (4) as it seems to me. It is impossible for a vendor, knowing of a defect in his title, either by himself or his agent to put forward conditions of sale which are to force upon a purchaser a bad title of which he knew, but which he did not disclose. A Court of Equity would not be of much use if it could not meet such a case as that, and it seems to me clear that a Court of Equity would never have enforced a contract under such circumstances."

The case of Gajpathi v. Allagia (5) is an illustration of the same doctrine, as applied by the High Court of Madras in India. There a Hindu had executed a sale-deed of a house in the Mofussil. The deed contained no covenant for title. The purchaser having been evicted from a portion of the house under a decree, of which the vendor was aware at the time of the sale, sued the vendor for damages. The Munsiff decreed the claim on the ground that the vendor had fraudulently concealed the existence of the decree. On appeal the District Judge reversed this decree, holding that as the purchaser had not insisted on a covenant of title, he must be held to have accepted all risks. It was, however, held by Hutchins and Parker, JJ., that, if there had been fraudulent concealment as alleged, the purchaser was entitled to damages. At p. 91 the learned Judges say that "it appears to us that if the respondent did conceal from the appellant the existence of the decree for partition, he was guilty of fraudulent concealment and is bound to refund the purchase-money. In the absence of positive law, we are bound in this country to apply the principles of good conscience and equity * * . Even under English law the vendee is bound to make compensation for a fraudulent concealment of a defect in the title or of any incumbrance .....Although a purchaser cannot ordinarily obtain relief against a vendor for any incumbrance or defect in the title to [532] which his covenants do not extend, an exception is made to this rule in the case of a vendor, or his agent suppressing an incumbrance or a defect in the title...Even though the purchase-money has been paid and the conveyance executed by all the parties, yet if the defect do not appear on the face of the title deeds, and the vendor was aware of the defect, and concealed it from the purchaser, he is in every such case guilty of fraud and the purchaser may either bring an action on the case or file his bill in equity for relief."

1896 DEC. 6. — SMALL CAUSE COURT REFERENCE. — 20 B. 522 = Chitty's S. C. C. R. 460.

Again in Peeree Mohun Soor v. Abdool Sobhan (1) it was held by Trevor and Glover, JJ., that where a vendor knowing that he had no right or title to property or being cognizant of the existence of incumbrances or of latent defects materially lowering its value, sold it, and neglected to disclose such defects to the purchaser, there was a fraudulent concealment vitiating the contract.

Again under the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 17 and 18, a contract of selling or letting is declared not to be enforceable in favour of a vendor or lessor who knowing himself to have no title to the property has contracted to sell or let the same; and in cl. (d), s. 18, it is laid down that "where the vendor or lessor sues for specific performance of contract, and the suit is dismissed on the ground of his imperfect title, the defendant has a right to return of his deposit with interest and costs."

Further, it is to be observed that in s. 108 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) the duty of the lessor is confined to disclosing the defects "in the property with reference to its intended use," which latter words are obviously inserted to exclude defects in the title of the lessor being disclosed to the lessee.

Moreover, cl. 5 of s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act, which deals with the corresponding duty of the buyer, in express words casts upon him the duty of disclosing to the seller "any fact as to the nature or extent of the seller's interest in the property of which the buyer is aware, but of which he has reason to believe that the seller is not aware and which materially increases the value of such interest." It is difficult to believe that the Legislature would have cast upon the buyer the [533] duty of communicating facts relating to the seller's title without casting a similar duty upon the seller himself.

On the whole we believe that cl. 1 (a) of s. 55 casts upon the seller the duty of disclosing to the buyer all defects whether in the title or in the estate itself, while cl. 5 (a) casts upon the buyer only the duty of communicating facts relating to the nature and extent of the seller's interest, and not relating to the property itself.

For the reasons above given, therefore, we are of opinion that the words "defects in the property" include defects in the title.

The next question is whether the alleged claim of Jackaria Moosa is a "material defect," the non-disclosure of which vitiates the whole contract. We are of opinion that under the circumstances of the case the alleged claim does not constitute a material defect, as, even if well founded, it is a defect which the vendor could readily remove and the conditions of sale bind him to do so, and it bears only a small proportion to the purchase-money, out of which it can be cleared by the purchaser himself.

The second question is whether, having regard to the condition of sale, the defendants were bound to remove the claim put forward by the said Jackaria Moosa. We answer this question in the affirmative. The defendants were bound to remove the claim if requested so to do by the plaintiff, and if they refused, the plaintiff was entitled to rescind.

The third question is whether the defendants were bound to disclose to the plaintiff, before the auction-sale, the claim made by the said Jackaria Moosa, and whether by reason of the non-disclosure of such claim the plaintiff is entitled to rescind the contract and claim his deposit with interest and costs.

We have already answered this question so far as s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act is concerned. As regards the Indian Contract Act, the answer depends upon the inference to be drawn from the facts. If the non-disclosure amounts to fraud within the meaning of s. 17, Indian Contract Act, the plaintiff would be entitled to rescind the contract under s. 19 of that Act. Under the circumstances of this case, however, we do not [534] think that such fraud can be inferred as a conclusion of law, and we, therefore, answer this question in the negative.

The fourth question is whether the mortgage-deed, dated 4th January, 1871, which is in the possession of Jackaria Moosa, is a document by the deposit of which an equitable mortgage of the property could be created having regard to the fact that a decree in High Court Suit No. 170 of 1875 was passed upon the said mortgage and a certificate of sale issued to the said Dayabhai on his purchasing the said property under the said decree.

The answer to this question depends upon whether or not the alleged deposit was made before the decree. If it was, the deposit would effect, of course, an equitable mortgage; and, even if made after the decree, it would be effectual if the deposit were made without informing the intended equitable mortgagee of the decree.

The fifth question is whether, having regard to the said decree and certificate, the said mortgage is extinguished so as to cease to be a document of title by the deposit of which an incumbrance could be created. Our observations on the fourth question sufficiently answer this question also.

In execution of a decree against the estate of Vishnu Bhikaji his estate was sold and it ultimately came into the hands of the plaintiff as purchaser, who sued for partition. It was contended that two of the defendants, parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, being then minors were not properly represented by their [535] mother, Gangabai, also a party defendant to the suit, she not having obtained a certificate of administration under Act XX of 1864, and that the decree did not, therefore, bind them, and also that the decree was in respect of debts contracted by Vishnu Bhikaji for immoral and improper purposes.

Held, that s. 2 of Act XX of 1864 did not apply, as though Gangabai had not obtained a certificate she did not claim charge of the estate.

Held, also that an issue having been raised and determined in the suit in which the decree was passed that Gangabai did represent the minors as guardian for the suit, and as the decree expressly named them as sued by Gangabai, their guardian, the minors were expressly made parties and were properly represented by Gangabai.

SECOND appeal from the decision of J. FitzMaurice, Acting District Judge of Ratnagiri, in appeals Nos. 332 and 333 of 1889.

On 31st August, 1876, one Vishnu Babaji Joglekar obtained a money decree against the estate of one Vishnu Bhikaji Gokhale, deceased. In that suit the minor sons of the deceased (respondents Nos. 2 and 3) represented by their mother and guardian Gangabai (respondent No. 4) were defendants, but Gangabai had not at the date of the decree obtained a certificate of administration of the minors' estate.

In execution of that decree the estate of the deceased was sold at a Court-sale on 7th September 1877, and it ultimately came into the hands of the plaintiff as purchaser. He now sued for partition.

The defendants contended that they were not bound by the decree in suit No. 105 of 1875, inasmuch as their guardian Gangabai (respondent No. 4) had not then obtained a certificate of administration. They also contended that that decree was passed for debts contracted by their father, Vishnu Bhikaji, for immoral purposes and not for the benefit of the family.

[536] The Subordinate Judge of Rajapur awarded the plaintiff's claim.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The District Judge has held that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, who were minors at the time decree was passed in suit No. 105 of 1875, are not bound by that decree, because they were not properly represented by their mother Gangabai (now defendant No. 4) who was a defendant in that suit.

She had not obtained a certificate, but as she did not claim charge of the estate, s. 2 of Act XX of 1864 did not apply—Vijkor v. Jijibhai (1); Jadow v. Chhagan (2).

It appears also that although Gangabai in her written statement in suit No. 105 of 1875 disclaimed to represent or to be responsible for the minors, an issue was solemnly raised and determined at that trial that she did represent them as guardian for the suit. The decree expressly names them as sued by Gangabai, their guardian. It is thus clear that these minors being expressly made parties, the case is stronger against them than against the minors in cases where they have not been made parties expressly but have been substantially parties represented virtually by guardian. Such are Hari v. Narayan (3), Natesayyan v. Narasimmayyar (4) and Hari Saran v. Bhubaneswari (5). In the last of these cases their Lordships of the Privy Council take notice that the suit in which the decree was obtained " was substantially brought against the minor," and that the trying Court had treated the mother as his guardian. These authorities are sufficient, as argued by Mr. Setlur, to show that the District Judge is wrong in holding that the minors were not represented in suit No. 105 of 1875.

There is no finding that the debt incurred by the deceased father was for an immoral or illegal purpose. The onus of proving that [537] was not shifted on to the plaintiff by proof of immoral habits—Chintamanrav v. Kasinath (6).

For the above reasons the Court reverses the decree of the District Judge and restores that of the Subordinate Judge. In the District Court the respondents to bear their own costs, and the respondents with the exception of Dhakta bin Soma Shinda to bear those of the appellant. The respondents in this Court to bear the whole cost of this appeal.

SECOND appeal from the decision of T. Walker, Assistant Judge of Ratnagiri, reversing the decree of Rao Bahadur Naro Mahadeo Thosar, First Class Subordinate Judge of Ratnagiri.

This action was originally instituted by plaintiff No. 1 praying for an account. He alleged that a certain shop at Ratnagiri belonged to him and his undivided cousin Dnyanoba, father of defendant No. 8 (Bhiku), till Dnyanoba's death on the 4th March, 1886 ; that defendant No. 1 was the gumasta of the shop and had managed it till Dnyanoba's death ; that defendant No. 2 was joined because he had obtained a certificate of administration of the estate of defendant No. 8 (Bhiku), who was a minor, and that defendant No. 3 had colluded to injure the interest of defendant No. 8 and the plaintiff.

[538] At an early stage of the proceedings, on the application of plaintiff's pleader the names of defendants Nos. 4, 5 and 6 were struck off.

Subsequently defendant No. 8 (Dnyanoba's son) consented to be joined as co-plaintiff on condition that any sum which might be awarded by the Court should be paid to him and not to the plaintiff who he alleged had no right to the shop.

The other defendants denied that plaintiff No. 1 had any right to sue.

The Subordinate Judge found that defendant No. 8 had been rightly made a co-plaintiff and that he and plaintiff No. 1 were undivided, and on taking accounts he held the plaintiffs entitled to Rs. 4,410-4-4 with costs and interest at 9 per cent. per annum, and gave a decree against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 3 appealed and plaintiff No. 2 preferred cross objections under s. 561 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The Judge found (1) that the plaintiff No. 1 had not shown that he had a right to sue, (2) that the suit could not be brought in its present form, and (3) that it must be dismissed for multifariousness. He accordingly reversed the decree and dismissed the suit. His reasons are given in the following extracts from his judgment :—

"The present suit was instituted by plaintiff No. 1 alone on the 2nd March, 1889. Plaintiff No. 2 was sued as defendant No. 8, and when he expressly denied that plaintiff No. 1 was a member of the family or had any interest in the shop, it became evident that the suit could not in the first instance go on against the manager of the shop. Defendant No. 8 then agreed to be joined as co-plaintiff, and on the 22nd February, 1890, he was added as such, doubtless under s. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code. He still adhered to his plea against plaintiff No. 1 and only consented to join if any decree that might be passed were passed in his favour and no money paid to plaintiff No. 1. I think it unfortunate that this addition was made. If plaintiff had no right to sue in March, 1889, he could not acquire one by adding a co-plaintiff (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 370). If he had a right to sue, that right had to be proved against defendant No. 8, and even now, when a decree has been obtained, it is manifest that satisfaction cannot be had till plaintiffs have settled their differences. The Subordinate Judge has raised an issue between plaintiffs, not at their own request, but at the instance of defendant No. 1, who is interested in denying plaintiff's title to sue.

"There are other objections which I may notice before disposing of the appeal. The plaint shows no distinct cause of action against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, merely [539] alleging general collusion. It appears to have been treated at first as a suit for accounts in the Court below, but afterwards evidence was given to show that defendant No. 3 had committed what amounts to theft or misappropriation or criminal breach of trust with the other defendants in respect of about Rs. 4,000 worth of cloth. It is alleged that defendant No. 3 obtained this cloth from the shop to pay certain creditors with, and the rights and wrongs of this are to be discussed."

The plaintiffs preferred a second appeal.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—We deal at present only with the first point raised, namely, the right of the plaintiff No. 1 to bring this suit. There can, we think, be no doubt that the plaintiff's suit would be good only if at the time he brought it he had some proprietary interest in the shop, the accounts of which he wishes to have taken. If he had any such interest, then the joinder of Bhiku, first as defendant No 8 and then as co-plaintiff, would correct the initial non-joinder and make the case complete as to parties.

If, however, the plaintiff had no such interest, the joinder of a person who had an interest in the shop could have no effect upon the plaintiff and would confer on him no right of suit. See Subbaiyar v. Kristnaiyar (1); Chunder Coomar Roy v. Gocool Chunder (2).

The Court of first instance found that the shop belonged not only to the second plaintiff, but also to the first plaintiff as a joint member of an undivided Hindu family. The Assistant Judge raised the point directly in his 3rd issue, and indirectly in his 1st issue, and found on those issues; but he has nowhere discussed the question, and has given no reasons at all for his findings. He seems to think that the mere denial of the second plaintiff was sufficient to show that plaintiff No. 1 had no right to sue. We are unable to accept his findings, and we remand this issue to the lower appellate Court for it to find upon on the evidence on the record—

Had plaintiff, when he brought this suit, any interest in the shop in question?

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 421—Judgment rejecting an appeal need not be in writing—Practice—Procedure.

In rejecting an appeal under s. 421 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) the appellate Court is not bound to write a judgment.

THIS was an application by the accused for the exercise of the High Court's revisional jurisdiction under s. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The accused and three other women were convicted by A. H. Plunkett, Magistrate of the First Class in the district of Poona, of possessing opium in excess of the quantity allowed by law, an offence under s. 9 of Act I of 1878 (Opium Act) and the rules made under s. 5 of that Act, and were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment and fine.

All the accused appealed from this decision to the Sessions Judge of Poona, who after sending for the papers rejected the appeals under s. 421 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882). The following was the judgment recorded in the appeal :—

"After reading the judgment on proceedings of the lower Court and hearing Mr. K. P. Gadgil, Barrister-at-law, on behalf of the appellant No. 1, the Court sees no ground for interfering with the conviction and sentence of the lower Court. Appeals rejected under s. 421, Criminal Procedure Code."

The present accused now moved the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction for a reversal of the conviction and sentence, and contended (inter alia) that the Judge should have stated his reasons for upholding the conviction and have given his opinions on all questions of fact in the case.

Inverarity (with Ganpat Sadashiv Rao), for the accused.

JUDGMENT.

[541] JARDINE, J.—The Court following Ras Behari Das v. Balgopal holds that the Sessions Judge, in rejecting the appeal under s. 421 of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882) was not bound to write a judgment; and it dismisses the application made by Warubai, widow of Bhau Pandurang Gumre.

Application dismissed.

TUKARAM VALAD NAGURAM (Original Plaintiff), Decree-holder v. KHANDU VALAD BHAVANI (Original Defendant), *Judgment-debtor.

[13th June, 1895.]

Practice—Procedure—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 98, 248 and 647—Darkhast for execution of decree—Notice to the judgment-debtor to show cause why decree should not be executed—Failure of both parties to appear on the appointed day—Dismissal of darkhast.

A darkhast for the execution of a decree can be dismissed when on its presentation a notice is issued to the judgment-debtor under s. 248 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and neither party appears on the day on which it is made returnable.

THIS was a reference by Rao Saheb K. S. Risvadkar, Second Class Subordinate Judge of Parner in the Ahmednagar District, under s. 617 of the Civil Precedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

Plaintiff, Tukaram valad Naguram, having obtained a decree against Khandu valad Bhavani, presented a darkhast for its execution. The Subordinate Judge issued notice to the judgment-debtor, under s. 248 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), requiring him to show cause why the decree should not be executed. The notice was made returnable on the 12th March, 1895. On that day neither party having appeared, the Subordinate Judge disposed of the darkhast and made a reference in the following terms :—

" The practice hitherto followed was to dismiss it (darkhast) under ss. 98 and 647 of the Civil Procedure Code, no separate procedure having been laid down in the Code in the matter, on the understanding that the procedure applicable to [542] suits was also applicable to darkhasts, which were proceedings in suit as laid down by s. 4 of Act VI of 1892. But it has been held by the High Court that there is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) as amended by Act VI of 1892 which authorizes a Court to apply to execution proceedings any of the procedure enacted in chap. VII of the Code to which the said s. 98 belongs (see Hojrat Akramnissa Begam v. Valiulnissa Begam, I.L.R., 18 Bom., 429)."

The Subordinate Judge, therefore, being at a loss to know how to deal with the darkhast, and his order not being appealable, referred the following questions :—

" (1) Whether, relying as heretofore on ss. 98 and 647 of the Civil Procedure Code, I can dismiss the accompanying darkhast ?

" (2) If not, how the darkhast should be disposed of, or what procedure should be followed therein ? "

The opinion of the Subordinate Judge was on the first question in the affirmative, and he gave no opinion on the second question, having expressed his inability to do so.

Dhondu P. Kirloskar (amicus curiæ) appeared for the judgment-creditor.

Criminal Procedure—Salt Act XII of 1882—Limitation prescribed for charging with offence—Fraud in concealing date of offence—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), *s.*18, not applicable to criminal proceedings—Revisional jurisdiction of High Court—Power to interfere with interlocutory orders of Subordinate Courts.

The High Court can interfere with an interlocutory order passed by a Magistrate.

Abdool Kadir Khan v. The Magistrate of Purneah (1) and Chandi Pershad v. Abdur Rahman (2), followed.

The provisions of s. 18 of the Limitation Act of 1877 do not apply to criminal cases, and the peremptory terms of s. 11 (3) of the Indian Salt Act (XII of 1882) are not affected by that section.

ON the 13th December, 1894, the accused was charged by the Customs authorities before the Second Class Magistrate of Khanapur in the Belgaum District with having on the 29th December, 1893, and the 2nd January, 1894, clandestinely removed salt without paying the customs duty.

The accused pleaded that the complaint having been made more than six months after the date of the offence by s. 11 of the General Salt Act XII of 1882 ought not to be admitted.

The Magistrate overruled this plea and held that the complaint was in time observing:—

"I hold that the case is not barred by the provisions of s. 11, if it be proved that there has been a fraud by which the prosecution were kept in ignorance of the occurrence of the alleged offence."

Summonses were directed to be issued and a day appointed for the hearing. The accused applied to the High Court in its revisional jurisdiction to reverse this order of the Magistrate.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

20 B. 543.

[544] Ganpatrao Shivram Mulgaokar, for the accused.—The order against which this application is made was, no doubt, an interlocutory order, but the High Court may nevertheless interfere in its revisional jurisdiction—Chandi Pershad v. Abdur Rahman (1).

The charge was made too late—s. 11 of Act XII of 1882. The Magistrate has applied the rules laid down in s. 18 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), but those rules are not applicable to a criminal charge: see s. 6 of the Limitation Act and see also Queen-Empress v. Ajudhia Singh (2).

Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.—This case is still pending in the Magistrate's Court, and this Court cannot interfere at this stage of the proceedings. Section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) is not applicable to interlocutory orders.

The next question is whether the present prosecution is under Act XII of 1882, which, no doubt, provides in s. 11 the period within which a prosecution under the Act should be commenced. The complaint in this case does not allege that the prosecution is under that Act. If this be a case under the Bombay Salt Act II of 1890, the objection on the score of limitation fails. Even if Act XII of 1882 were held applicable to the present case, there being a finding that fraud was used in keeping the prosecution in ignorance of the offence committed, limitation would run only from the time of the discovery of the offence. The rules in the Limitation Act on this point apply to criminal cases: see Guracharya v. The President of the Belgaum Town Municipalities (3). The English law also recognizes this principle. See Brutton v. Vestry of St. George's Hanover Square (4).

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—This being one of the rare instances of interference in revision with an interlocutory order, we confine our decision to the naked point of law argued. We are of opinion that a complaint of a criminal offence is not a suit or application within the meaning of s. 18 of the Limitation Act of 1877; and that the peremptory terms of s. 11 of Act XII of 1882 [545] are not affected by that section. We return the case to the trying Magistrate for disposal according to law.

RANADE, J.—This is an application for revision of an order passed in an interlocutory stage of an enquiry into a complaint made in respect of an offence under the Salt Act. The complaint was made more than six months after the alleged offence was committed, and the accused raised the defence that the prosecution was barred under s. 11 of the General Salt Act XII of 1882, which laid down a period of six months within which all prosecutions under that Act should be instituted. The Magistrate overruled this plea, and held that the complaint was in time, as limitation only commenced to run from the time when the fraud was discovered and became known to the complainant, which was within six months previous to the complaint. The applicant before us contends that the Magistrate was in error in importing the general law of limitation into the consideration of a special law. As the point was one of some importance, we directed that notice should be issued to the District Magistrate with a view that he might instruct the Government Pleader to appear and support the order of the Magistrate. A preliminary objection was raised by the Government Pleader that as the proceedings before the Magistrate were still pending, this Court could not interfere with an order passed by the Magistrate in an interlocutory stage. The words used in s. 435, Criminal Procedure Code, are, however, very general, and empower the High Court to send for the record of a case not only when it wishes to satisfy itself about the correctness of any finding, sentence or order, but also as to the regularity of any proceedings in Subordinate Courts. In Abdool Kadir Khan v. The Magistrate of Purneah (1) the High Court of Calcutta expressly ruled that it had jurisdiction to revise interlocutory orders. This power was again exercised by the same Court in respect of an illegal municipal prosecution—Chandi Pershad v. Abdur Rahman (2). We follow these decisions and overrule this preliminary objection urged by the Government Pleader. As regards the principal question, how far the general provisions of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) [546] can be imported so as to extend the scope of the provision of a special law like the Salt Act, we feel satisfied that the view taken by the trying Magistrate is not correct. The only authority in our reports relied upon appears to be the decision of this Court in Guracharya v. The President of the Belgaum Town Municipality (3); but it is not in point, as it related to a civil suit, and not to a criminal prosecution. Section 6 of Act XV of 1877 expressly relates to periods of limitation laid down for suits, appeals, or applications, and this last word has been interpreted in this place, as also in art. 178, as referring only to civil applications—Vithal Janardhan v. Vithojirao Putlajirao (4); Kylasa Goundan v. Ramasami Ayyar (5); In the matter of the petition of Ishan Chunder Roy (6). The same interpretation must be placed on the word "application" in s. 18 of Act XV of 1877. The decisions which, therefore, relate to civil proceedings can have no application in the present case. In regard to these decisions themselves, it may be noted that they are not altogether in accord, but certain general principles may be gathered from them which have no bearing on criminal prosecutions. It appears, for instance, that under the older Acts XIV of 1859 and IX of 1871, the provisions of these general laws were held not to affect special or local laws—Puran Chunder Ghose v. Mutty Lall (7); Syed Mohidin v. Hussen Saheb (8). Since Act XV of 1877 was passed, this restriction is confined only to the particular period fixed by local or special laws; and the general provisions are held to apply to suits, &c., under local laws—Guracharya v. The President of the Belgaum Town Municipality (3); Kullayappa v. Lakshmipathi (9); Nijabutoolla and others v. Wazir Ali (10); Erajabi v. Mayan (11); Khetter Mohun v. Dinabashy (12); Behari Loll Mookerji v. Mungolnath Mookerji (13); Golap Chand v. Krishto Chunder (14). Moreover, when a statute is complete by itself (such as the Registration Act or Bengal Rent Law) the general law of [547] limitation may not be read along with it, or be incorporated with it—Veeramma v. Abbiah (15); Nagendro Nath v. Mathura Mohun (16). None of these principles have any relation to criminal proceedings. The principles on which rules of limitation are framed have no natural application to prosecutions which are, in theory at least, instituted by the Crown. The general law of limitation and its schedules are chiefly intended for civil matters. Of course for the greater protection of subjects certain periods are laid down in special laws for prosecutions to be instituted under them; but these special periods are not those which are contemplated by parts 2 and 3 of the general law. The Allahabad High Court has expressly ruled that rules of limitation are foreign to the administration of criminal justice, and that it is only by express statutory provisions that such rules can be made applicable to criminal proceedings —Queen-Empress v. Ajudhia Singh (1). This ruling was passed in respect of the six months' limitation laid down in s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code for sanctions to prosecute. The same reason applies to the provision of the Salt Act with which we are more immediately concerned.

Holding these views, we feel satisfied that the Magistrate was in error in deciding that the prosecution in this case, being admittedly instituted more than six months after the alleged offence, was not barred by s. 11 of Act XII of 1882.

We expressly limit our decision to the particular question of law raised before us. If the complainant can proceed under any other local or general law, this order will not interfere with his liberty of action.

Case returned to the trying Magistrate for disposal according to law.

H applied under Reg. VIII of 1827 to a District Judge for a certificate of heirship to a deceased D. under a registered deed of adoption by his widow executed nearly fifty years after D.'s death. The opponent claimed to be the heir, and denied the legality of the adoption. The District Judge referred the applicant to a regular suit to establish the validity of his adoption.

Held, in appeal, that the District Judge was bound to investigate the case, following the procedure laid down in s. 4 of Reg. VIII of 1827, and had no authority to dismiss the application and refer the applicant to a regular suit to establish the validity of the adoption.

APPEAL against the decision of A. H. Unwin, District Judge of Nasik, in the matter of an application for heirship under Reg. VIII of 1827.

On the 2nd September, 1865, Bhausing (the respondent) obtained a certificate of heirship to his uncle Devisingrao), who had died twenty-three years previously, viz., on 26th November, 1842.

On the 5th July, 1889, Krishnabai, the widow of Devisingrao, adopted Harising (appellant), and in the year 1894 Harising applied for a certificate of heirship to Devisingrao, alleging that he was his legal heir. He further prayed that the certificate of heirship granted to Bhausing in the year 1865 might be cancelled.

The opponent Bhausing denied that the applicant had been legally adopted, and alleged that he himself was Devisingrao's heir.

" Nearly half a century having elapsed upon Davising's death before his widow Krishnabai thought proper to adopt, applicant is referred to a regular suit to establish the validity of the adoption. The question is not one to be settled in a miscellaneous proceeding on a mere 8-anna stamped petition. "

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan, for the appellant (applicant) :—Our application should not have been dismissed without any inquiry. A widow is not bound to adopt till she chooses to do so. Under ss. 3 and 4 of Reg. VIII of 1827 the Judge could not dismiss our application without inquiry.

There was no appearance for the opponent.

* Second Appeal No. 380 of 1893.

APPEL-LATE CIVIL.
20 B. 549.

Suit for redemption. The plaintiff's father (Baji Babaji Moholkar) mortgaged certain property to the first defendant on the 21st October, 1828.

On the 21st January, 1856, the first defendant (the mortgagee) sub-mortgaged the property to defendant No. 2 for Rs. 1,600. The mortgage was in the following terms :—

"In all Rs. 1,600 of the Belapur currency are due to you by me. In security for the whole amount due to you the very shop mentioned above in respect of Moholkars, situate at peth Mangalvar, kasba Sholapur, which has been in mortgage with me and which we had formerly mortgaged to you * * is mortgaged to you and now given into your vahivat in the very same manner in which it has been in your vahivat from former times. The terms in respect thereof are as follows :—Out of the Rs. 1,600 due to you as mentioned above, Rs. 1,300 are to bear no interest and the shop is to pay no rent. As to the remaining Rs. 300 I will continue to pay you interest thereon at the rate of one (1) per cent. per month. The time for the repayment of this (amount) is this :—Within five years from this day I will pay you the said (amount of) Rs. 1,600 and redeem the shop. If the amount remains (unpaid) after that time, then Rs. 800 out of the above-mentioned Rs. 1,600, that is, a moiety of that amount, is to bear no interest and the shop to pay no rent from that time. The interest on Rs. 800 is settled to be equal to the rent of the shop. As to the remaining amount made up of Rs. 800 and the interest on the Rs. 300 accrued due for the above-mentioned five years, I am to pay interest on the whole amount thus formed at the rate of 1 per cent. per month. A further term of five years is the time fixed for the payment thereof. In this manner I will pay off the said amount as agreed within ten years from this day and redeem the shop * * * After the lapse of the said fixed period I will pay you your amount in full when you may demand the same after making an account as agreed. If at the time of making the account it is found that the amount exceeds damdupat, even then I will not bring any objection in respect thereof, but will pay off as agreed above the amount including the interest accrued due and the expenses of repairs, &c., without raising any objection, and redeem the shop. Should I fail to pay the amount after the fixed period, I wil pay you the amount by selling the above-mentioned shop. If the proceeds of the sale do not suffice to pay off your amount, you should take the proceeds of the sale of the shop, and as to the balance remaining due I will pay off the same. I will not plead gahan lahan until your amount is paid off. Neither I nor anybody else has any right to the shop. You should carry on the vahivat thereof in any manner you like with absolute authority by virtue of your right as mortgagee.

* * * * *

"In the same shop Krishnarao Moholkar has a third share and Baji Babaji Moholkar has two shares. Of these Krishnarao Moholkar is represented here by nobody. Baji Babaji Moholkar is here. As to this when the said persons pay the whole of [551] the said amount according to their respective shares on making an account thereof according to the agreement, you should receive the same and give to each his respective share with absolute authority without pleading the excuse of my absence. As to the rest of the agreement written above the same is confirmed."

In 1882 the plaintiff brought this suit to redeem the mortgage of 1828. In his plaint he stated that defendant No. 2 was in possession of the property as sub-mortgagee of defendant No. 1.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

20 B. 549.

While this suit was pending defendant No. 1 died.

On the 20th June, 1891, the Subordinate Judge passed a decree for the plaintiff for redemption on payment of Rs. 1,448-10-8 to the second defendant within six months.

The seccnd defendant appealed, and in appeal contended that the first defendant having died, and his legal representatives not having been entered on the record in time, the suit had abated.

The Judge overruled the defendant's contention and confirmed the decree. With reference to the question of abatement he said :—

"There is nothing to show when Lakshman Madhav, defendant No. 1, died, and the point was not taken in the Court below. Defendant No. 1 was merely joined as a formal party and did not appear to defend the suit. His mortgage might have been assigned to defendant No. 2, and the suit was allowed to proceed against him alone as the party in possession and solely interested. It is too late now to contend that the suit should be ordered to abate by reason of plaintiff's failure to revive it against the representatives of the deceased Lakshman."

The second defendant preferred a second appeal.

Inverarity (with Narayan G. Chandavarkar), for the appellant (defendant No. 2).—The original mortgagee having died, the plaintiff has no cause of action against us. There is no privity between us and the plaintiff. He ought to have made the heirs of the original mortgagee parties to the suit. Not having done so, the suit must abate under s. 368 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882).

Machpherson (Acting Advocate-General, with Gangaram B. Rele), for the respondent (plaintiff) :—The heirs of the original mortgagees would have been necessary parties if the transaction of the 20th May, 1856, had been a sub-mortgage. We contend that it is not a sub-mortgage. The last clause in the document clearly shows that we are entitled to redeem the property direct from the [552] second defendant. The transaction is, therefore, an assignment of mortgage and not a sub-mortgage. The heirs of the original mortgagee are, therefore, not necessary parties to the suit. See Coote on Mortgage, (5th Ed.), pp. 1086, 1161 and 1206.

PARSONS, J.—The respondent (original plaintiff) brought this suit to redeem a mortgage passed by him to the defendant No. 1. He joined the appellant (original defendant No. 2) because he was a sub-mortgagee of the defendant No. 1 and in possession. After suit defendant No. 1 died, and as the respondent took no steps, to join his legal representatives within the time allowed by law, the suit abated as against him; it was, however, allowed to be continued against the appellant notwithstanding his objection that the right to sue did not survive against him. The District Judge says on this point: "Defendant No. 1 was merely joined as a formal party; he did not appear to defend the suit. His mortgage might have been assigned to defendant No. 2, and the suit was allowed to proceed against him alone as the party in possession and solely interested. It is too late now to contend that the suit should be ordered to abate by reason of plaintiff's failure to revive it against the representative of the deceased Lakshman."

The same objection has been taken in this Court, and we are of opinion that it must prevail if the appellant (defendant No. 2) was the sub-mortgagee of the defendant No. 1, for in that case there would be no privity between him and the respondent, and the respondent would have no cause of action against him. On the death of the defendant No. 1 the right to sue the appellant (defendant No. 2) would not survive.

CIVIL.

The learned counsel for the respondent has admitted that this is so, and has sought to support the decree on the ground hinted at by the District Judge, viz., that the appellant was the assignee of the defendant No. 1. We should be glad if we could adopt this view. In the face, however, of the deed itself (Ex. 40) the contention is untenable. It is stated in several places in that deed that it is a mortgage, and that the shop is mortgaged. The amount for which it was passed is Rs. 1,600, the mortgage to the defendant No. 1 having been Rs. 301 only. It provides for payment of interest by the appellant to the defendant No. 1. It gives defendant No. 1 the [553] right of redemption and puts the appellant into possession "by virtue of his right as mortgagee." In every essential it is a deed of mortgage and not of assignment, and it is quite clear that by it defendant No. 1 did not make over his whole interest to the appellant.

We must, therefore, hold that the appellant was not the assignee, but the sub-mortgagee of defendant No 1, and this being so on the death of defendant No. 1 no cause of action survived to the respondent as against the appellant, and the suit abated under s. 368 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). We reverse the decree of the lower appellate Court, and order that the respondent's suit do abate and that he pay the appellant's costs throughout.

Decree reversed. Suit ordered to abate.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

VANI AND OTHERS (Original Defendants Nos. 1—3), Appellants v.
BANI AND ANOTHER (Original Plaintiffs), *Respondents.
[20th June, 1895.]

Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 17, cls. (b) and (h)—Instrument creating a charge in the nature of a mortgage—Admissibility of documents compulsorily registrable—Evidence.

A kararnama (agreement), dated 11th day of June, 1885, was passed by A. to B. to the following effect :—

"As my father Shivram valad Keshav is dead, it has been arranged that I should succeed to his estate.....Part of this estate at Vagoda, consisting of a house, fields, cattle and a cart, has been given into your possession for use and enjoyment. The reason thereof is that you have undertaken to pay Rs. 450 found due on an adjustment of khata from my father to Ganpatdas Khushaldas. I am unable to pay off this debt; and so you have been put into possession of this property. I shall pass to you a sale-deed in respect of this property, and shall transfer the fields to your name from the year 1888-89."

Held, that the kararnma required registration. It did not fall within the exception provided for by cl. (h) of s. 17 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). It was not a document which merely created a right to demand another document. It created as between the parties to it a charge in the nature of a mortgage. The document of itself declared a right, and the mention of an intention to execute a deed of sale made no difference.

[554] An unregistered mortgage-bond for one hundred rupees and upwards may be admissible in evidence to prove the simple debt or a personal obligation, but it is inadmissible in evidence to prove any right to the property affected by it.

* Second Appeal No. 774 of 1893.

JUNE 20.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

20 B. 553.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur N. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., at Dhulia, in Appeal No. 99 of 1892.

The plaintiffs sued to recover by partition their two-thirds share of certain property belonging to their father Shivram valad Keshav Vagodekar. Defendant No. 3 was the son of defendant No. 2 and the husband of defendant No. 1. They pleaded (inter alia) that after Shivram's death the plaintiff No. 1 had assigned by a kararnama the property in dispute to defendant No. 2 on his undertaking to pay Shivram's debts; that he had accordingly paid those debts, and taken possession of the property as absolute owner.

The kararnama was dated 11th day of June, 1885, and was to the following effect:—

"As my father Shivram valad Keshav is dead, it has been arranged that I should succeed to his estate..... A part of this estate at Vagode, consisting of a house, fields, cattle and a cart, has been given into your possession for use and enjoyment. The reason thereof is that you have undertaken to pay Rs. 450 found due on an adjustment of khata from my father to Ganpatdas Khushaldas. I am unable to pay off this debt; and so you have been put in possession of this property. I shall pass to you a sale-deed in respect of this property and shall transfer the fields to your name from the year 1888-89."

The Subordinate Judge held that the kararnama not having been registered was inadmissible in evidence, and he passed a decree awarding the plaintiffs' claim.

This decree was varied, in appeal, by inserting a direction that plaintiffs should pay to defendant No. 2 Rs. 228, which he had paid on plaintiffs' behalf on account of their father's debt.

From this decision the defendants preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

The sole question argued at the hearing of this appeal was whether the kararnama of the 11th June, 1885, required registration.

Daji Abaji Khare, for appellants:—The first part of the kararnama was a mere recital of a fact which had occurred in the [555] past. The last portion contemplates a deed of sale to be executed in the future. It does not of itself purport to create or transfer any interest in immoveable property of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards. It only gives a right to obtain another document which when executed will create or transfer such interest. It does not, therefore, require registration—Burjorji v. Muncherji (1); Chunilal v. Bomanji (2); Sakharam v. Madan (3).

Manekshah Jehangirshah, for respondent:—The document does not fall within s. 17, cl. (h) of the Registration Act. The document of itself declares a right. It is sought to be used for establishing a right to the immoveable property affected by it. It, therefore, requires registration—Basawa v. Kalkapa (4); The Bengal Banking Corporation v. Mackertich (5).

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.– The only point that was urged in this appeal relates to the admissibility or otherwise of the kararnama which was produced in support of the defence, and which both the lower Courts held to be inadmissible for want of registration. The kararnama purports to have been executed in June, 1885, by respondent (plaintiff No. 1) to the appellant No. 2. In consideration of his (appellant No. 2's) undertaking to pay off the debts due by respondent's father, respondent made over to appellant No. 2 her father's house and lands for use and enjoyment, and she agreed to pass a deed of sale for the same, and transfer the khata in 1888-89. It was contended for the appellant that in so far as this last agreement of sale and transfer of the khata was concerned, the instrument was one which fell within the exemption provided for by cl. (h) of s. 17 of Act III of 1877. That clause excepts from the operation of cls. (b) and (c) all documents which do not themselves create, declare, assign, &c., any right, title or interest of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards in immoveable property, but merely create a right to obtain another document which will, when executed, create such a right. The appellant urges that the first portion of the document only recited a fact, and created or declared no [556] right, and that the last portion about the sale and transfer merely created a right to obtain another document.

After careful consideration of the authorities cited on both sides, we see no reason to differ from the lower Courts in the view they have taken of the scope and legal effect of the document. It is certainly not a document which merely created a right to demand another document. The first portion of the agreement is not a mere recital of a fact. It creates as between the parties to it a charge in the nature of a mortgage. In consideration of appellant No. 2's undertaking to advance a large sum which respondant No. 1 was unable to pay herself, she made over certain property to appellant No. 2 for use and occupation. There is no further consideration to proceed from the appellant to the respondent. She apparently stipulated for three years' time to enable her to raise the money, after which she was to effect the formal and regular transfer of khata. This circumstance of the absence of any fresh consideration distinguishes the facts of this case from those of the documents recited in Burjorji v. Muncherji (1) and Chunilal v. Bomanji (2). In both those cases, the documents were only bargain papers, which recited the sale agreement for the full consideration, part of which was received as earnest-money, and the remaining sums were to be paid within a certain time, and sale-deeds executed. It was held in those cases that the bargain paper only created a right to obtain the sale-deed, and that, therefore, it fell within cl. (h). In Sakharam v. Madan (3) the document recited the fact of a passi partition, and declared no right in immoveable property. Here the transfer of house and lands was contemporaneous with the execution of the document. Defendant No. 2 himself in his written statement rested his claim of ownership on this same document, Ex. A. The facts of the present case closely resemble those reported in Ramasami v. Ramasami (4). Like the letter in that case, the kararnama here of itself declares a right. The mention in both cases of an intention to execute a deed of sale can make no difference, because the documents did not merely create a right to demand another document.

[557] Of course documents which require registration, and are unregistered, may be admissible in evidence for some purposes, and not admissible in evidence for other purposes. An unregistered mortgage-bond for more than one hundred rupees may be admissible in evidence to prove the simple debt or a personal obligation, but it is inadmissible in evidence to prove any right to the property affected by the instrument—Ulfatünnissa v. Hosainkhan(1); Tukaram v. Khandoji(2); Sangappa v. Bassappa(3); The Bengal Banking Corporation v. Mackertich(4) and Faki v. Khotu (5). These cases do not help the appellant inasmuch as he seeks to use the kararnama for the purpose of claiming the whole property for himself. He seeks no personal remedy. Under these circumstances the appellant's chief contention before us must be disallowed. As the contract was reduced to writing, no secondary evidence about its terms was admissible.

(1) 5 B. 143. (2) 7 B. 310. (3) 5 B. 232. (4) 5 M. 115.

We accordingly confirm the decree of the lower Court with costs.

Decree confirmed.

GANESH MAHADEO BHANDARKAR AND ANOTHER (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. RAMCHANDRA SAMBHAJI MHASKAR AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), *Respondents. [26th June, 1895.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 137 – Mortgage—Mortgage of joint property —Share of co-owner sold in execution of decree—Subsequent sale of the mortgaged property by all co owners—Redemption of mortgage—Suit for partition and redemption by purchaser at Court sale—Adverse possession.

Three undivided brothers (Babaji, Ramchandra and Atmaram) mortgaged part of their joint property (plot 1) in 1870 and the rest (plot 2) in 1874. In 1875 Babaji's share in both plots was sold in execution of a decree against him and was purchased by the plaintiff. In 1877 Babaji and his two brothers sold plot 1 to the defendants Nos. 3—6, who at once paid off the mortgage of 1870 and took possession. On the [558] 11th February, 1877, the three brothers paid off the mortgage of 1874 of plot 2 and in the same month mortgaged that plot to the defendants with possession. On 26th August, 1890, the plaintiff sued for possession of Babaji's share by partition and redemption if necessary.

Held, that the suit was barred by art. 137 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). Babaji became entitled to possession of his share of plot 1 in 1877 when the mortgage of 1870 was paid off by the defendants, and their possession had been since then adverse to the plaintiff. As to plot 2, Babaji had become entitled to possession of his share therein on the 11th February, 1877, when the mortgage of 1874 was redeemed.

Suit for partition and for possession of one-third share of two parcels of land purchased by the plaintiff at an execution sale under a decree against one Babaji, a joint owner.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were brothers of Babaji. Defendant No. 3 (it was alleged) was a purchaser of one of the plots and a mortgagee of the other. Defendants Nos. 4, 5 and 6 were brothers of defendant No. 3.

JUNE 26

APPELLATE CIVIL.

20 B. 557.

The two plots of land had belonged to Babaji and his brothers Ramchandra and Atmaram (defendants Nos. 1 and 2.)

On 30th July, 1870, they mortgaged one plot to Anant Babuji Vaze and on the 23rd January, 1877, they sold their equity of redemption therein to defendants Nos. 3 to 6. On the 4th May, 1877, these defendants paid off Anant's mortgage of 1870 and continued in possession up to the date of suit.

The other parcel of land had been mortgaged by the three brothers on the 6th May, 1874.

On the 9th March, 1875, Babaji's right, title and interest in both parcels of land were sold to the plaintiff in execution of a decree against him.

On the 11th February, 1877, the three brothers (Babaji and defendants Nos 1 and 2) paid off the mortgage of 6th May, 1874, [559] and on the 28th February, 1877, they again mortgaged it to defendants Nos. 3 to 6.

The plaintiff now sued for possession of Babaji's share by partition and redemption if necessary. The suit was originally filed on the 2nd January, 1889, and amended by adding the plaintiff's brother as co-plaintiff and by joining the defendants Nos. 4, 5 and 6.

The defendants (inter alia) pleaded that the claim was barred by limitation.

The Subordinate Judge held that the suit was barred under art. 137 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) not having been filed within twelve years of the dates (11th February, 1877, and 4th May, 1877), on which the judgment-debtor Babaji was first entitled to possession.

The Assistant Judge confirmed the decree.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Inverarity (with Vasudeo G. Bhandarkar), for the appellants (plaintiffs) :—We purchased Babaji's rights in 1875 and thereupon we took his place and became owners of his undivided share. It was then liable to the mortgage of July, 1870, and in our hand as purchasers it remained liable. Babaji joined in the sale to defendants Nos. 3 to 6 on the 23rd January, 1877, but as his share was then vested in us it did not pass to them by that sale. On the 4th May, 1877, defendants Nos. 3 to 6 paid off the mortgage of July, 1870. The only effect of that was that the plaintiff when claiming possession of Babaji's share would have to pay one-third of the mortgage-debt to the defendants instead of to the original mortgagees. They became the mortgagees of the share. Their possession as mortgagees was not adverse to Babaji, and could not, therefore, be adverse to the plaintiff who had purchased his rights.

As to the second parcel of land which was mortgaged in 1874, the three brothers redeemed it on the 11th February, 1877, and mortgaged it again to the defendants Nos. 3 to 6 on the 28th February, 1877. But Babaji's share was at that time vested in the plaintiff—nothing passed to the defendant. Babaji by [560] redeeming only obtained a right to claim the amount which he paid and he could only give the defendants the same right. Neither Babaji nor the defendants have ever had adverse possession of the share. Article 144 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) and not art. 137 is applicable. He cited Naro Shivaji v. Ragho Govind(1); Faki Abas v. Faki Nurudin (2) ; Ramchandra v. Sadashiv (3).

(1) P. J. (1892), 412. (2) 16 B. 191. (3) 11 B. 422.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan, for the respondents (defendants Nos. 3 to 6) :—The suit was not properly constituted until amended on 26th August 1890. As to the plot which we bought from the three brothers on the 23rd January, 1877, we became owners of it by the purchase, and as owners on the 4th May, 1877, we paid off the mortgage of July, 1870. Our possession has been adverse ever since.

As to the second parcel mortgaged to us on the 28th February, 1877, Babaji was then in adverse possession, having paid off the previous mortgage, and our possession as his mortgagees has also been adverse. He cited Ramchandra v. Sadashiv (1) ; Datto Narasing v. Babaji (2).

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The two parcels of land in dispute were originally owned by one Babaji and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in equal shares. On the 9th March, 1875, the plaintiff bought at an execution sale the right, title and interest of Babaji therein, and his present suit, brought on the 26th August, 1890, is for possession of that share by partition and redemption if necessary. The following facts are material.

One of the parcels had been mortgaged by Babaji and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to one Vaze with possession on the 30th July, 1870. Babaji and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 sold the equity of redemption of it on the 23rd January, 1877, to the defendants Nos. 3 to 6, and they on the 4th May, 1877, paid off Anant Bapuji Vaze, and have since been in possession. They thus claim title to Babaji's share by more than twelve years' adverse possession.

[561] It is, however, argued that the redemption of the mortgage by the defendants Nos. 3 to 6 was really a redemption by two out of three co-sharers, since Babaji's title had vested in the plaintiff, and the defendants Nos. 3 to 6 had acquired the title of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 only, and that the plaintiff can now come in and claim Babaji's share of the land on payment of his share of the mortgage-money. The decisions in Ramchandra v. Sadashiv (1), Bhaudin v. Shekh Ismail (3), Faki Abas v. Faki Nurudin (4) and Naro v. Ragho (5) are cited in support of the contention. We do not think, however, that the plaintiff, who is a purchaser at a Court sale in execution, can call in aid such decisions as these, which proceed on the assumption that the co-sharers are in amicable and harmonious relations with each other and would do nothing adverse to the interests of each other. Here the plaintiff as auction-purchaser was at arm's length with Babaji and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 from the date of the purchase. Their adverse holding is shown by their ignoring the purchase and by continuing to deal with the land as if it were still their own, and the possession of defendants Nos. 3 to 6 was clearly adverse both to Babaji and to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. As the judgment-debtor was out of possession at the time of the plaintiffs' purchase, he had, under art. 137, twelve years within which to bring his suit for possession, reckoned from the time his judgment-debtor first became entitled to possession. Other conditions remaining the same, this would be when the mortgage to Vaze was redeemed. See Vajeram v. Bhaishankar (6). As plaintiff's suit for this land is not brought within twelve years of this time, it is, we think, time-barred.

The second parcel of land had been mortgaged by Babaji and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 with possession on the 6th May, 1874. They redeemed this mortgage on the 11th February, 1877, and on the 28th February, 1877, they mortgaged the land to the defendants Nos. 3 to 6. It is clear that Babaji became entitled to possession of his share of this land on the 11th February, 1877, and [562] the plaintiff cannot claim a period of limitation and a right to redeem as if he were a party to the mortgage of the 28th February, 1877, or as if the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were then mortgaging his share as his agents. The possession of Babaji and of the defendants Nos. 3 to 6 as mortgagees would clearly be adverse to the plaintiff as the purchaser of the one-third share of Babaji. See Datto v. Babaji(1). The suit for this parcel is time-barred also.

We confirm the decree of the lower appellate Court with costs.

Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 17, cl. (b)—Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 32, cl. (6)—Will—Statement—Words not purporting or operating to extinguish an interest in the present or in future.

Section 17, cl. (b) of the Registration Act (III of 1877) does not render a passage in a will inadmissible in evidence if the words of it do not purport or operate to extinguish an interest in the present or in future, but state only past facts. Such a statement would, if proved, be admissible also under s. 32, cl. (6) of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872).

[R., 13 Ind. Cas. 500.]

SECOND appeal from the decision of S. Hammick, District Judge of Ahmednagar, confirming the decree of Rao Bahadur G. A. Mankar, First Class Subordinate Judge.

The plaintiff sued to obtain a declaration that a certain house which she had obtained from her husband as dowry was not liable to attachment by the defendant in execution of a decree against her sons and grandsons.

The defendant contended that the house belonged to his judgment-debtors and not to the plaintiff.

[563] The Subordinate Judge rejected the claim. The following is an extract from his judgment :--

"There is no question about the property in dispute having belonged to the plaintiff's husband. But the plaintiff has not succeeded in proving her allegation that it was granted to her by her husband in lieu of dower. For the purpose of proving her allegation on this point, the plaintiff has caused a document, Ex. A, to be produced, containing a clause relating to the grant of the property in dispute to her in lieu of dower. The document, Ex. A, of which Ex. B is a Marathi translation, is said to be in Gujarati, but is transliterated in Arabic according to witness No. 43, and purports to be a will of the plaintiff's husband. But the clause in the document relating to the grant of the property in dispute to the plaintiff by her husband in lieu of dower does not appear to be a testamentary disposition of the said property by him. For 'will' means the legal declaration of the intentions of the testator with respect to his property, which he desires to be carried into effect after his death according to s. 3, Act X of 1865, and Act V of 1881. But in the portion of the document, Ex. A, relating to the property in dispute, it is stated that the property in dispute was already given to the plaintiff in lieu of dower, and that the maker of the document had no longer any right to it, and that his heirs and successors should also have none. This cannot be considered to be a testamentary disposition of the property, as it was effected in the lifetime of the plaintiff's husband. Supposing Ex. A to be a will, the portion thereof relating to the property in dispute cannot be said to be a testamentary disposition of the said property. If it is not a part of the will, it requires to be stamped and registered according to the provisions of the Stamp and the Registration Acts, as it is a conveyance of immoveable property of the value of upwards of Rs. 100. But as it is neither stamped nor registered, it is not admissible in evidence. Consequently the plaintiff was not allowed to examine witnesses to prove the document. The plaintiff has not produced any other evidence relating to the alleged grant of the property in dispute to her by her husband in lieu of dower."

The following is the translation of the material portion of Ex. A, referred to in the above extract:—

"(As to) my wife Chamanbu, daughter of Najambhai, I have given her both the immoveable properties (namely) the two stories of the dwelling-house which have fallen to my share and the kothu (that is, house built of burnt bricks and stones) as hiba (a gift or a bequest with a return or consideration), as gift, and as property purchased (by her) in consideration of her dowry. Chamanbu, the daughter of Najambhai, is the owner and mukhtyar of both these properties. I have no right, claim or interest whatever in both these properties."

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge confirmed the decree. In his judgment he said:—

"The document A is in the first instance a will, and in that capacity it need not be registered. But the appellant wishes to make use of it for her own purposes as a declaration that certain property therein specified and worth more than Rs. 100 has been assigned to her in lieu of her dower. Regarded from this point of view, the [564] document ceases to be a will and becomes an instrument which purports to declare a right or interest of the value of Rs. 100 in immoveable property. It is included under (6) of s. 17 of the Registration Act, and not having been registered, it cannot be admitted in evidence."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

P. M. Mehta (with Gangaram B. Rele), for the appellant (plaintiff).—The Judge held Ex. A to be a will. Being a will it does not require registration. Further, it does not create any interest in or right to immoveable property so as to come within the pale of s. 17 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). It merely contains a statement of fact and does not purport to deal with any property, because the property had already been dealt with before the document came into existence—Sakharam Krishnaji v. Madan Krishnaji (1); Shivlingapa v. Haribai (2). statement in the document is admissible under cl. (6), s. 32 of the Evidence Act.

Macpherson (Advocate-General, with Ghanasham N. Nadkarni), for the respondent (defendant).—The document is relied on as a document of title. It is not produced merely to prove a fact. As a document of title, it is not admissible, being unstamped and unregistered.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The lower Courts held the following passage in the will inadmissible under the Registration Act of 1877:—"I have given her both the immoveable properties, (namely) the two stories of the dwelling-house, which have fallen to my share, and the kothu (1) as hiba (2), as gift, and as (property) purchased (by her) in consideration of her dowry. Chamanbu, the daughter of Najambhai, is the owner and mukhtyar of both these (properties). I have no right, claim or interest whatever in both these two properties."

We do not think that s. 17, cl. (b) of that Act renders this part of the document inadmissible, as the words do not purport or operate to extinguish an interest in the present or in future, but state only past facts. The statement contained in the passage would, if proved, be admissible also under s. 32, cl. (6), of the Indian Evidence Act. We think, then, [565] that the lower Courts were wrong in precluding the plaintiff from giving proof of the statement.

It is admitted by the learned counsel for the parties that the whole case turns on the first issue framed by the Subordinate Judge. We, therefore, refer this issue for trial and finding on the two parts thereof by the District Court after taking evidence. The finding to be certified to this Court within three months.

Talukdar—Gujarat Talukdars' Act (Bom. Act VI of 1888), s. 31—Mortgage of talukdari estate—Validity of mortgage before the Act—Decree upon the mortgage for sale of talukdari estate.

A talukdar of the Ahmedabad district mortgaged his talukdari property in 1886.

In 1892 the mortgagee sued to enforce his lien by sale of the mortgaged property.

The Court passed a decree against the talukdar personally, holding that it had no power under ss. 31 and 32 of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act (VI of 1868) (3) to direct a sale of the talukdari estate.

Nagar Pragji v. Jivabhai (1) doubted.

APPEAL from the decision of G. McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad, in suit No. 26 of 1892.

The property in dispute was a talukdari estate belonging to Malek Dajiraj Ajambhai.

The property was mortgaged to one Tribhovan Raichand by a mortgage-bond for Rs. 879 on 21st December, 1886.

Tribhovan Raichand assigned the mortgage to the plaintiff, and in 1892 the plaintiff filed this suit to recover Rs. 2,438, being the amount of principal and interest due on the mortgage by sale of the mortgaged property.

The defendants, who were the heirs of the mortgagor, being minors were represented by the Collector of Ahmedabad as their guardian. They pleaded (inter alia) that the property in suit being a talukdari estate, the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for sale of the mortgaged property, and that he could not recover interest exceeding the amount of the principal.

The District Judge held that under the Gujarat Talukdars' Act (Bombay Act VI of 1888) the plaintiff could not obtain a decree against the talukdari estate.

The following extract from his judgment gives his reasons :—

"It is quite true that the mortgage lien was created before the passing of the Talukdari Act. But it appears to me that under ss. 31 and 32 (of the Act) Civil Courts are barred from imposing incumbrances on a talukdari estate, even though the basis of such incumbrances may be found embodied in contracts entered into by talukdars before the passing of the Act. No doubt a decree passed before the passing of the Talukdari Act would be binding on the estate. In this spirit I [567] read the ruling at p. 94 of the Printed Judgments for 1892." (Kallian Moti v. Pathubhai (2)).

(2) No alienation of a talukdar's estate or of any portion thereof, or of any share or interest therein, made after this Act comes into force, shall be valid, unless such alienation is made with the previous sanction of the Governor in Council, which sanction shall not be given except upon the condition that the entire responsibility for the portion of the jama and of the village expenses and police charges due in respect of the alienated area, shall thenceforward vest in the alienee and not in the talukdar.

32. (1) No consent or sanction given under the last preceding section shall be deemed to affect any right of Government under s. 3 of Bombay Act VII of 1863 (an Act for the Summary Settlement of claims to exemption from the payment of Government land-revenue, and for regulating the terms upon which such exemption shall be recognized in future, in those parts of the Bombay Presidency which are not subject to the operation of Act XI of 1852 of the Council of India).

(2) And nothing in the last preceding section shall apply to the property of any thakur to which s. 28 of the Broach and Kaira Encumbered Estates Act, 1881, is applicable, or be deemed to affect the power of the manager of any thakur's immoveable property under s. 24 of the said Act.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

20 B. 565.

On these grounds the District Judge passed a decree for Rs. 2,438 and costs against the personal estate of the deceased talukdar so far as the same might have come into the possession of his heirs, the defendants on the record. He directed the plaintiff to pay the costs incurred by the defendant Collector.

Against this decision the plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

F. R. Viccaji (with him Ganpat Sadashiv Rao) for appellant:—The mortgagee is entitled to a decree against the mortgaged property. Our mortgage was executed before Bombay Act VI of 1888 was passed. Sections 31 and 32 of the Act are not retrospective. They apply in the case of any charge or incumbrance made after the Act came into force. Our mortgage is, therefore, perfectly valid, and we are entitled to a decree for sale of the mortgaged property—Nagar Pragji v. Jivabhai (1). We are also entitled to interest, at the stipulated rate, till date of payment.

Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the respondent :—The object of the Talukdari Act is to preserve talukdari estates and prevent their passing into the hands of strangers. With this object ss. 31and 32 of the Talukdari Act appear to have been framed. No alienation of a talukdar's estate is valid except when made with the previous sanction of the local Government. The object of the Act would be defeated if the Civil Courts were to pass decrees for sale of talukdari property. A sale by the Court, followed by confirmation of sale and grant of sale certificate, is an "alienation" within the meaning of s. 31, cl. 2, of the Act—Kallian Moti v. Pathubhai (2). The ruling in Nagar Pragji v. Jivabhai(1) is not correct.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The mortgage sued on being prior in date to the coming into force of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act, 1888, is not invalidated by cl. 1 of s. 31 of that Act, and is one which the deceased talukdar had power to execute. We think, therefore, that the Court was bound to give the plaintiff, the rights which he acquired under that mortgage and pass a decree for sale in default of payment of the mortgage-debt.

[568] The point taken before us, that the property cannot be sold having regard to the provisions of cl. 2 of the section above mentioned, will only arise if the plaintiff applies for an order absolute for sale (under s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act) and is then unable to show the sanction of the Governor in Council to the proposed sale. It would, therefore, be premature for us to discuss that point.

As, however, the case of Nagar Pragji v. Jivabhai (1) has been cited to us, we think it right to record our doubt as to the correctness of that decision, which should, we think, if the case again comes before this Court, be tested by a reference to a Full Bench.

We consider that the decree sufficiently declares the personal liability of the defendants. They will under its execution have to account for the assets of the deceased which have come into their hands, and will, of course, be liable personally in case of failure to account.

The Judge has refused to award interest from date of suit. In this he is wrong. In a suit on a mortgage the plaintiff is entitled to interest down to the date of the decree. We must award the plaintiff Rs. 870 with interest at two per cent. per month from December 21st, 1886, to

(1) 19 B. 80.

(2) 17 B. 289.

September 19th, 1893, and we allow further interest on the 870 rupees at six per cent. from September 20th, 1893, to payment.

The Judge has given the Collector costs as against the plaintiff, but the Collector appeared in the suit only as guardian for the suit of the minor defendants, and the plaintiff is not liable for the costs incurred by him in so appearing which the Collector can charge to the estate of the minors.

We amend the decree by altering the decretal amount as above stated, and by striking out the order directing plaintiff to pay the costs incurred by the defendant Collector and by adding an order to the effect that, in default of the payment of the decretal amount with costs in the lower Court and this Court within six months of this date, the plaintiff may apply for an order absolute for sale of the mortgaged property.

Decree amended.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur N. G. Phadke, Joint First Class Subordinate Judge with appellate powers, at Sholapur.

Suit for possession of land. The plaintiffs claimed exclusive possession at the hearing, and gave evidence that the land had been allowed to them on partition. They alleged that it had actually been in their possession previously to 1879, but that on leaving their village in that year they had entrusted the land to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who were their relations.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 admitted the claim.

Defendant No. 3 alleged that the land was his and pleaded limitation.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the suit was barred.

On appeal the District Judge reversed the decree and awarded the plaintiff's claim. He found, however, that the alleged partition had not been proved, and that the land was joint; that it belonged to three brothers, viz., Miraji (plaintiff No. 1), Babaji (the father of plaintiff No. 2), and Rayaji (father of defendants Nos. 1 and 2), and that defendant No. 3 (appellant) had purchased it from Rayaji.

Defendant No. 3 appealed to the High Court.

APPELLATE CIVIL.
20 B. 569.

[570] Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan, for the appellant (defendant No. 3).—The Judge has given the plaintiffs a decree for exclusive possession although he holds the property to be joint. That decree is wrong—Eshan Chunder Singh v. Shama Churn Bhutto (1); Mohummud Zahoor Ali Khan v. Mussumat Thakooranee Rutta Koer (2); Lakshmibai v. Hari bin Ravji (3).

Mahadeo V. Bhat, for the respondents (plaintiffs).—The Judge found that the property was not divided. We are, therefore, entitled to it along with the defendants.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—The decree in this suit cannot, we think, be supported in its present form. The plaintiffs asked for exclusive possession of the property in suit, alleging in their evidence that it had been allotted to them on a partition. The Judge of the lower appellate Court found that the partition was not proved and that the property was joint. Nevertheless he passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs, awarding them the exclusive possession claimed. This was illegal. He could only give exclusive possession if he found exclusive title proved.

In point of fact the Judge has not specifically found upon the case set up by the plaintiffs. He has come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the sons of Rayaji, [from whom the appellant (original defendant No. 3) has purchased] were owners in co-parcenary of the property. This, however, the plaintiffs did not allege, and it was a state of things on which the parties did not go to trial in the Court of first instance. When the Judge found that the evidence tended to show joint ownership, it was open to him, we think, having regard to the cases of Wahid Alam v. Safat Alam (4), Babaji v. Vasudev (5) and Kallapa v. Venkatesh (6) to have allowed the plaintiffs to set up that case; but if he did so, he should have raised a specific issue on the point, and given the defendant Parashram an opportunity of meeting it.

We, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower appellate Court, and remand the case for re-trial on the merits. Should the Judge [571] consider it necessary in the interest of justice to raise the point of joint ownership, he should do so by a distinct issue and allow the parties an opportunity of adducing evidence. The lower appellate Court can deal with all the costs including the costs of this appeal.

Decree reversed and case remanded.

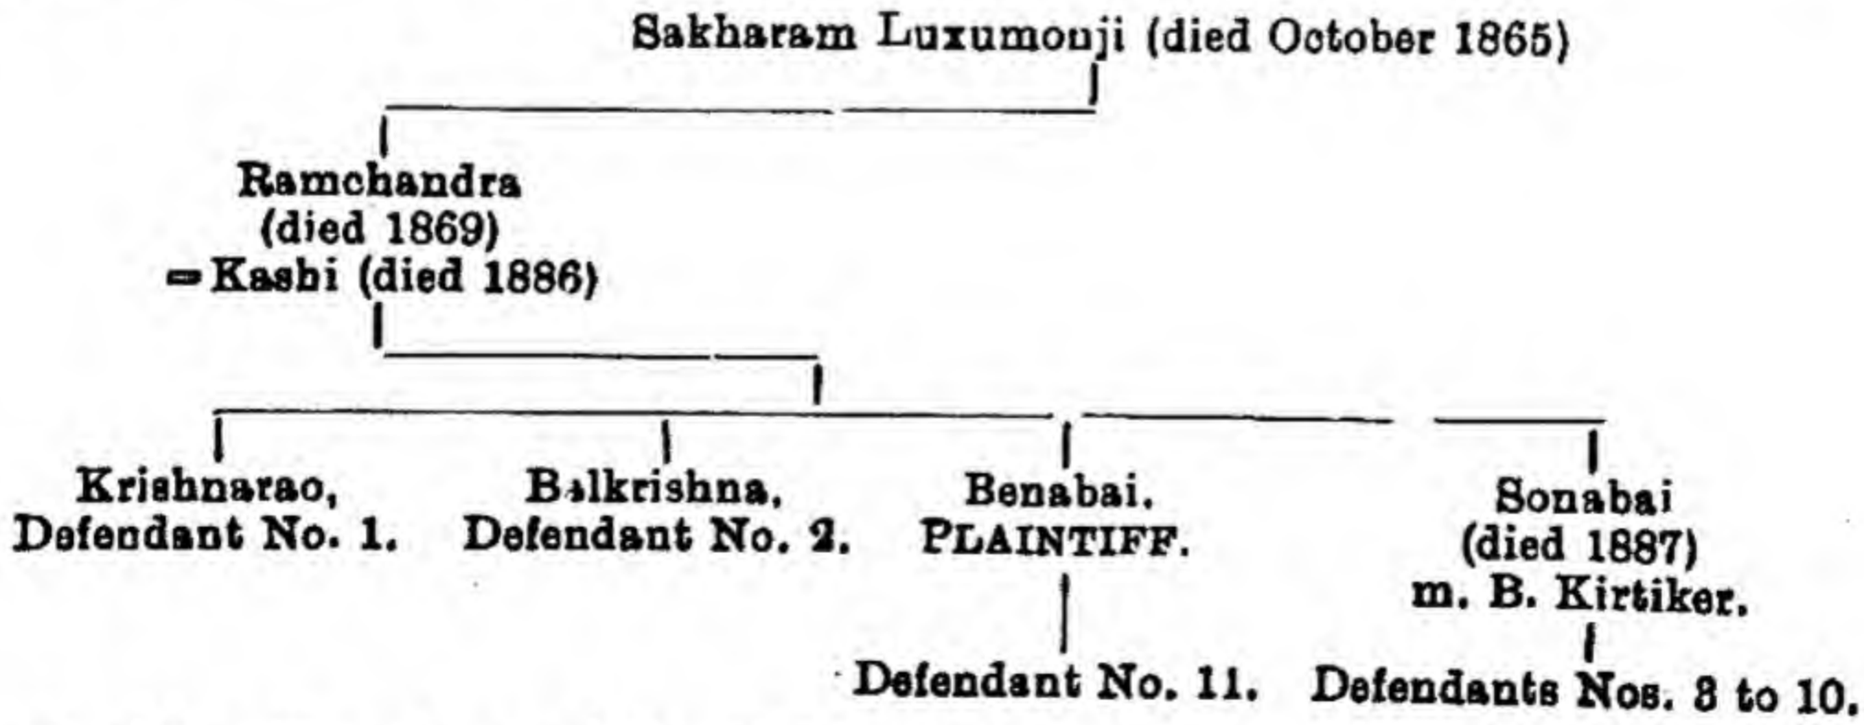
Considerations which only show that a testator has made a disposition in his will which the Court is surprised to find there, though they might have determined the sense in which the testator had used an ambiguous expression, cannot of themselves lead the Court to refuse to give effect to the plain language he has employed, e.g., to read a bequest to "children" as a bequest to "sons" only.

A bequest to "the children of R, living at his decease" where some such children are in existence at the date of the will, need not be construed as a gift to a class of which some members might come into existence after the testator's death, when such a construction would manifestly defeat the primary object of the testator.



The right of executors, who have used their own monies for the purposes of the estate to be allowed them in their accounts, cannot be affected by limitation before such accounts are taken.

A direction in a will to trustees to pay to a Hindu lady so much of certain dividends as she might from time to time require for her own use and support, &c., and to accumulate the surplus not required by her upon certain trusts specified, entitles the legatee to receive, if she requires it, the whole interest as it falls due, but not to claim afterwards amounts which she did not require as they fell due and which have been accumulated, and this is so whether the trust for which accumulation is directed is valid or invalid.

"And I hereby declare that from and after the determination of the trusts aforesaid the said trustees or trustee for the time being of this my will shall stand possessed of and interested in the said residuary real and personal estate and the stocks, funds, shares and securities in or upon which the same or any part thereof may be invested, and the rents, dividends and income thereof. In trust for all or any the children or child of my said son who shall be living at the time of his decease or who shall leave lawful issue living at the time of his decease in equal shares and proportions if more than one and if there shall be no such child who shall be living or whose issue shall be living at the time of the decease of the survivors of them my said son and his present wife, then the said trustees or trustee for the time being of this my will shall stand possessed of and interested in the said residuary estate and the stocks, funds, shares and securities in or upon which the same or any part thereof may be invested in trust for the persons or person who would become entitled thereto in case the same had belonged absolutely to my said son, and he had died intestate."

At the date of this suit the first two defendants were the trustees in the place of those originally appointed by the will, and they were in possession of the estate.

The plaintiff complained that the sum of Rs. 7,000 to which she was entitled under the will had never been invested and set apart for her, nor had she been paid the income thereof. She alleged that the first and second defendants, in breach of their duty as trustees, were about to divide between themselves the whole estate of Sakharam Luxumonji. She claimed that her rights under the will should be [576] declared, that fit persons should be appointed trustees instead of the first two defendants, and for a declaration that she was entitled to have the Rs. 7,000 set apart and invested, and also to the interest and income thereof since the death of the testator, and to be paid the income for her life.

Ramchandra died in 1869 and his widow Kashi in 1886.

The first and second defendants contended (1) that the plaintiff was only entitled to so much of the income of the sum of Rs. 7,000 as she might from time to time require for her support; (2) that she was not entitled to any of the arrears of the said income; (3) that, with respect to the said sum of Rs. 7,000, the trusts subsequent to the death of the plaintiff were void; and (4) that the plaintiff was in no event entitled to any share in the residuary estate, that the trusts with reference to it were void, and that, as to it, Sakharam died intestate, and that the same now belonged to them.

The defendants further alleged that a sum of Rs. 16,700, which had come to the hands of the executors of Sakharam, was ancestral property; that the money had been mixed up by the executors with the other property and had been used in defraying necessary expenses, and they submitted that they were entitled to this sum absolutely, and that it should be made good to them out of the estate.

CANDY, J.—In this case the main questions depend upon the construction of the will and codicils of Sakharam Luxumonji, who died in October, 1865, leaving issue as shown by the family tree. The will dated 12th August, 1865, and codicils dated 2nd and 11th October, 1865, provided that the trustees should invest Rs. 8,000, and pay so much and such part of the dividends, interest and income as she might from time to time require for her own use and support, to Sonabai during her life, for her sole and separate use, independently of her husband; and should accumulate the surplus of such dividends, &c., which should not be required by Sonabai, in the way of compound interest, by investing the same and the resulting income thereof for the benefit of the persons who under the trusts contained in the will should become entitled to the principal fund from which the same should have proceeded, and from and after the death of Sonabai should stand possessed of the Rs. 8,000 and interest and income and accumulations thereof, if any, in trust for all or any the children of Sonabai living at her death, or who should have lawful issue living at her death, and if there should be no child or issue of Sonabai then the Rs. 8,000 and the income thereof should form part of the residuary estate.

A like sum of Rs. 7,000 was to be laid out in the same way upon like or similar trusts for Benabai and her children or other issue, with like power and like remainder over. As to the residuary estate of the testator, the trustees were during the lifetime of the testator's son Ramchandra to apply the income for the maintenance of the said son, and after the death of the said son to pay the income to Ramchandra's wife Kashi, till her death, and after her death the trustees were to stand possessed of the residuary estate in trust for all or any the children or child of Ramchandra who should be living at the time of his decease, or who should leave lawful issue living at [578] the time of his decease, and if there should be no such child who should be living or whose issue should be living at the time of the decease of the survivor of Ramchandra and Kashi, then the residue was to go to the person or persons who would become entitled thereto in case the same had belonged absolutely to Ramchandra and he had died intestate.

It is admitted that the testator intended the bequest of Rs. 8,000 to Sonabai and Rs. 7,000 to Benabai (present plaintiff) to be on exactly the same terms. It was argued that the testator intended these bequests to be the only benefits which his granddaughters, Sonabai and Benabai, should take under his will, and that they have no interest in the residuary estate. It certainly seems more probable that the testator intended that the grandsons should take the residuary estate, the granddaughters and their children having the bequests of R. 8,000 and Rs. 7,000 rather than that the grand-daughters should take an equal share in the residuary estate with the grandsons, and should also in addition have the benefit of the bequests of the Rs. 8,000 and Rs. 7,000. But the arguments in favour of this view drawn from the language of the will fail to support it. Thus, in support of this contention, the learned Advocate-General pointed to the fact that by his will the testator appointed the two trustees named in the will to be guardians of his " infant grand-children, Krishnarao and Balkrishna," the sons of Ramchandra. It was suggested that these were the children of Ramchandra who, he intended, should take the residuary estate. But the answer to this contention is that there was no need to appoint guardians to his grand-children, Sonabai and Benabai, who were both married at the time of the execution of the will.

Then the Advocate-General pointed to the provision that the residuary estate was after Kashi's death to go to the children of Ramchandra who should be living at the time of his decease, " or who shall leave lawful issue living at the time of his decease," and he argued that the latter his referred to the death of Ramchandra's son. But this clearly is not so. It refers to the death of Ramchandra, or, as is explained by the provision a few lines further on, the decease of the survivor Ramchandra or Kashi. There can be no doubt that according to the strict language of the will the testator provided [579] that the children (sons and daughters) of Ramchandra should take the residuary estate. In another part of his will he spoke of a certain allowance to his daughter-in-law Rakhmabai, to be made " out of the residue hereinafter devised," and bequeathed in trust for or for the benefit of my said son and his issue. Possibly Sakharam thought that "issue" meant sons only. But whatever may have really been his intention, and whatever may have been the opinions of members of the family at various times on this point (as to which something will presently be said), the words of the will are too clear to admit of any doubt. The two sons and the two daughters of Ramchandra were alive at the time of the death of the testator, and they were alive at the time of the death of Kashi in 1886, when the trust came to an end. Each of them, therefore, on the death of Sakharam became possessed of a vested interest in a one-fourth share in the residuary estate. Each became in 1886 absolutely entitled to possession of that one-fourth share. Sonabai died, subsequently in 1887. Her one-fourth share has now become vested in her children, defendants Nos. 3 to 10. Benabai is still alive. Her child, defendant No. 11, has, therefore, no interest at present in her mother's one-fourth share.

A contention was raised on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 (the sons of Ramchandra) on the authority of Soudaminey Dossee v. Jogesh Chunder Dutt (1) and Khcrodemoney Dossee v. Doorgamoney Dossee (2) that the bequest of the residue, after the death of Ramchandra and Kashi, to a class, viz., the children of Ramchandra, was bad, because there might in 1886 have been children of Ramchandra who had not been born at the time of the death of the testator.

But the view taken in the cases just quoted was not followed by another Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Ram Lal Sett v. Kanai Lal Set (3) and the later view taken by the Calcutta High Court has been adopted by the Madras High Court in Manjamma v. Padmanbhaya (4) and twice by the Bombay High Court, viz., Mangaldas v. Tribhuvandas (1) and Tribhuvandas v. Gangadas (2). In the absence, therefore, of any serious argument why I should not follow [580] the view now generally adopted, I am content to accept the later authorities, and hold that the bequest of the residue was good.

I now come back to the bequests of Rs. 8,000 and Rs. 7,000. Sonabai, as before stated, was married to a well-known solicitor, Mr. Balkrishna Kirtiker. Benabai was married to a gentleman with whom she has not for several years been on good terms. She admits that since her grandfather's death she lived mostly with her mother. All her five children who have been born to her, and of whom one only now survives, were (with the exception of the first) born in her mother's house. Her father Ramchandra was admittedly a man of weak intellect; but her mother Kashi was evidently a capable person and managed the family affairs. It may be taken that for many years Benabai lived with her mother and brothers and was supported by them. In 1886 Kashi died. Benabai continued for a short time to live with her brothers. Then they separated, Benabai assisting in the partition of the family cooking pots. She remained on with the younger brother for a time and then went to nurse her sister Sonabai, who was ill. Sonabai died in 1887, and Benabai has continued since then to live with her brother-in-law Mr. Kirtiker, acting as mother to his numerous children. On 30th July, 1892, she made a formal demand through the solicitors, Messrs. Wadia and Gandhi, addressed to her brothers, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who had by that time become trustees under Sakharam's will, calling on them to pay to her arrears of interest due on the bequests of Rs. 7,000, and also to set apart and invest in Government loan notes the said amount of Rs. 7,000 without any further delay. The letter also recited a claim on behalf of Benabai to be interested in the residuary estate of Sakharam.

No answer was given by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to that letter. They now admit their liability to set apart the Rs. 7,000 in trust for Benabai, and to pay her the interest as she may require, including of course the interest from the date of the demand in July, 1892. The question as to Benabai being interested in the residuary estate of Sakharam has already been dealt with above. But it has been further pleaded for Benabai that she had made many previous demands on defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for the interest due to her on the Rs. 7,000. This plea is not established. The evidence of Benabai and witness Shewantibai, is, on the face of it, quite insufficient to establish the [581] plea. On the contrary, if any previous demands had been made, it is clear that the facts would have been alluded to in the letter of July, 1892. Mr. Balkrishna Kirtiker was not called, and it is clear, from facts to be alluded to presently, that the members of the family were on perfectly amicable terms, Benabai and Mr. Kirtiker (who may be said to have represented Sonabai) being well aware of what the brothers were doing and not doing as regards their grandfather's estate.

Bhagwantrao and Eshwantrao were the persons named in Sakharam's will as executors, administrators and trustees of his estate. They took out probate of his will in October, 1866. Bhagwantrao died in November, 1868. Eshwantrao then by deed appointed Wasudeo Pandurang to be his co-trustee.

On 3rd October, 1872, Kashi and her sons Krishnarao and Balkrishna filed suit No. 561 of 1872 against Eshwantrao and Wasudeo, joining Sonabai and Benabai as party-defendants, setting forth the will and codicils of Sakharam, and complaining that the trustees had not set apart or invested many of the legacies or ascertained the residuary estate, and no accounts had been filed till August, 1872, as to the particulars of which and as to the act and omissions of the trustees the plaintiffs complained. They, therefore, prayed that the trustees might be removed and that the estate should be properly administered. It may be remarked that, in the 4th paragraph of this plaint, Krishnarao and Balkrishna and Sonabai and Benabai were recited as entitled to Sakharam's residuary estate after the death of Kashi, but the names of Sonabai and Benabai were subsequently struck out.

On the 17th December, 1872, a consent decree was passed in the said suit No. 561 of 1872. It was ordered that the suit should be withdrawn without liberty to bring a fresh suit for the same matter against Eshwantrao and Wasudeo; that one Sarvotam and Krishnarao, one of the plaintiffs (now first defendant), should be appointed trustees of the will of Sakharam in the place of Eshwantrao and Wasudeo, all charges of misconduct being withdrawn and all costs being paid out of the residuary estate of Sakharam.

It is admitted that in the same year 1872 Sonabai and Benabai received all arrears of interest on their bequests of Rs. 8,000 and Rs. 7,000, respectively.

[582] Allusion was made above to the fourth paragraph of the plaint in suit No. 561 of 1872. It may be remarked that in the same year in the matter Eshwantrao being called to furnish accounts of his administration of the estate of Sakharam, an affidavit was prepared and sworn by Krishnarao, dated 18th June, 1872, in which he spoke of himself and his brother and his sisters Sonabai and Benabai being residuary legatees under his grandfather's will. In another affidavit in the said suit No. 561 of 1872 filed by Krishnarao on the 4th October, 1872, he spoke of himself and his brother as being the residuary legatees.

In the year 1877, on the application of Krishnarao in the said suit No. 561 of 1872, Sarvotam was allowed to withdraw from his trusteeship, and Balkrishna (now defendant No. 2) was appointed in his place to be co-trustee with his brother Krishnarao. Since then the two brothers have managed Sakharam's estate.

As remarked above, the members of the family were apparently then on amicable terms and continued to be so for several years. In 1888 the brothers Krishnarao and Balkrishna by the aid of their brother-in-law Mr. Kirtiker, with whom Benabai was then residing, drew up an agreement of partition of immoveable property, which (inter alia) provided for the payment of the legacies of Rs. 8,000 and Rs. 7,000 described above, but evidently did not contemplate Sonabai's children or Benabai being interested otherwise in Sakharam's residuary estate. Subsequently to 1888 some family quarrel must have arisen. Benabai's demand through her solicitors was made in July, 1892, and in April, 1893, the present suit was filed by Benabai against defendants Nos. 1 and 2, her brothers Krishnarao and Balkrishna, the present trustees under Sakharam's will, defendants Nos. 3 to 10, the children of Sonabai, deceased, and defendant No. 11, the child of the plaintiff Benabai, being subsequently joined. It is admitted that of Sonabai's children defendant No. 3 is the only one who was born at the time of Sakharam's decease. Benabai's child, defendant No. 11, was admittedly not then born.

The above being the facts proved or admitted, I find that Benabai is entitled to have the Rs. 7,000 invested and to be paid arrears of interest from the date of her demand in July, 1892. [583] I find that she is not entitled to arrears of interest prior to July, 1892. Not that I agree with the argument used by the learned counsel for defendants Nos. 1 and 2, that Benabai by the terms of Sakharam's will was not entitled to the interest on the Rs. 7,000 as long as she lived with her mother and brothers. I do not think that the words "for her own uses and support" cut down the bequest or made it less than an absolute gift to be at Benabai's own disposal whenever she demanded it. But I think that it is equally clear that the money was only to be paid to her as she might from time to time require it: i. e., as the interest accrued, if Benabai asked for it, it was to be paid to her; if she did not ask for it, it was to be accumulated and eventually added to the principal fund. Benabai not having before July, 1892, demanded the interest, cannot now recover arrears of interest before that date. The fact that in 1872 Benabai and Sonabai recovered the arrears of past years' interest (presumably from 1866) will not prevent the present trustees from taking their stand on the express directions of the will.

Next, according to the will, if the Rs. 7,000 had been properly invested, the interest as it accrued and had not been required by Benabai would from time to time have been invested, and after the death of Benabai the principal fund of Rs. 7,000 and the fund of accumulations would go to the children of Benabai living at her death, or who should leave lawful issue living at her death. Benabai is not dead, but all the parties interested being before the Court, the Court is in a position to give direction as to the ultimate disposal of the Rs. 7,000. The direction must be that as Benabai's child (defendant No. 11) was not born at the death of Sakharam, the bequest of the Rs. 7,000 to Benabai's child or children is void. When, therefore, Benabai dies, the Rs. 7,000 will be distributed as part of the residue, and should Benabai subsequently to this suit not require the interest on the Rs. 7,000 from time to time as it accrues (obviously there is not much chance of this) then the interest not so required being as far as possible itself invested will also be distributed like Rs. 7,000.

The question, then, arises as to the interest which should, according to the provisions of the will, have been accumulated between [584] 1873 and 1892. It is admitted that the present defendant cannot be held liable for any accumulations of interests before January, 1873, when the first defendant as trustee came into charge of the estate. But plaintiff through her counsel seeks now to recover the arrears of interest (with compound interest) on the ground that the trustees failed in their duty to invest the Rs. 7,000. This, however, cannot be allowed. The trustees may have been negligent, but they are entitled to take their stand on the provisions of the will, and contend that plaintiff is only entitled now to interest as she did demand it, the interest not so demanded being otherwise disposed of. The fact that the Rs. 7,000 have not been invested according to the provisions of the will would not entitle plaintiff to claim the interest of the same in any way contrary to the will. And, as noticed above, the present trustees are not concluded by what took place in 1872. So far the point is clear enough. The plaintiff is not entitled to present possession of any accumulations of interest prior to 1892. And, according to Mr. Budrudin's reply for plaintiff, that was the limit of the plaintiff's case. The question as regards the accumulations, he said, can only arise on the death of the plaintiff; the surplus interest is only to be invested on the death of the lady; no point arises as to the directions in the will regarding accumulations, because there are none, and they would fall into the residue. The answer to this is clear. The provision of the will is explicit; the interest not required by Benabai was to be invested from time to time by way of compound interest, and on the death of Benabai the fund formed by these further investments was to go to the person who would take the Rs. 7,000. But, as has just been shown, the Rs. 7,000 fall into the residue. On Benabai's death her representative may claim the one-fourth share of the Rs. 7,000, which will then be distributed among the four residuary legatees or their representatives. It may be argued that the interest in that sum of Rs. 7,000 is vested in interest in Benabai though not in possession, and that with that share of the Rs. 7,000 there will also be the arrears of the interest which was not required, and which should itself, according to the will, have been formed into a fund to be added to the Rs. 7,000.

The learned Advocate-General, for defendants, argued that the direction in the will as to accumlations of interest was wholly [585] void, quoting Mayne's Hindu Law (5th Ed.), para. 387. But of the two cases quoted by Mr. Mayne, one (Kumara Asima v. Kumara Krishna(1)) was a case in which the direction was to accumulate for ninety-nine years, while no direction was given as to the appropriation of the fund at the end of the time. In the other (Krishnaramani v. Ananda (2) the trust for accumulation was wholly bad as being, in fact, part and parcel of the creation of a perpetuity. I can find no case in which a direction such as the present one was held bad, viz., a gift of Rs. 7,000 to Benabai for life with a gift over of Rs. 7,000, to which was to be added so much of the income of the Rs. 7,000 as had not been required by Benabai. The fact that s. 104 of the Succession Act was not made applicable to Hindus by Act XXI of 1870 seems to show that a direction in a will to accumulate the income arising from any property is not necessarily void.

Then it was argued that as the sum of Rs. 7,000 forms part of the residue, therefore by the will the interest not required by Benabai belonged to Ramchandra and then to Kashi, and thus could never be a vested interest to which Benabai or her representative could lay claims. But this is not so. Supposing that by the terms of the bequest, and not by operation of law, the accumulated interest not required by Benabai was on her death to go with the Rs. 7,000 to the residuary legatees, the trustees would not have been justified either in taking that money for themselves or in paying it over to Ramchandra and Kashi. If the direction to accumulate is good at all, it is good for its disposal with the Rs. 7,000 as part of the residuary estate.

Then it was argued that as the gift over of the Rs. 7,000 to Benabai's child is void, therefore the direction to accumulate for the benefit of Benabai's child is void also. But this is not the case of a bequest being void, and, therefore, any bequest contained in the same will and intended to take effect after or upon failure of such prior bequest being also void (cf. s. 163 of Succession Act). This is the case of the bequest of Rs. 7,000 plus interest being void, and, therefore, the said bequest falling to the four residuary legatees. Of these defendants Nos. 1 and 2 do not, of course, ask that any accumulated interest between 1873 and 1892 should be calculated [586] in taking the account of the residuary estate. Nor do the children of Sonabai; their counsel expressly disclaimed any such plea. It is only the remaining $\frac{1}{4}$th share on whose behalf such a plea can be said to require consideration. Apart from the fact that plaintiff did not explicitly raise it, but on the contrary asked for the present possession of the said money, I find that it would not be equitable to give such a direction to the Commissioner in taking an account of the residuary estate; for it was with the full knowledge of Benabai that the Rs. 7,000 were not invested, but used for other family purposes. Defendant No. 1, who holds a responsible position under Government, gave his evidence in a straightforward manner, and I accept his statements without hesitation.

I hold, therefore, that interest which should have been accumulated between 1873 and 1892 cannot be given, wholly or in part, to plaintiff now, nor can it be taken into consideration in taking an account of the residuary estate.

I now come to consider the question regarding the sum of Rs. 16,436-5 which Eshwantrao as the surviving executor of Sakharam Luxumon on 30th November, 1870, received from the Master in Equity, as representing a share payable to Sakharam according to a decree of the High Court dated 20th February, 1864. That decree was in a suit to which Sakharam with several other members of his family was a party, and related to certain ancestral estate which the Master was to sell and to give Sakharam $\frac{1}{6}$th share of the proceeds. It is clear, from the accounts which Eshwantrao furnished in August, 1872 (alluded to above) that Eshwantrao received and dealt with the sum of Rs. 16,436-5 as part of the estate of Sakharam covered by Sakharam's will. No one up to the present suit seems to have had any opinion as to this money, but that it formed part of "all the rest residue and remainder of my real and personal estate wheresoever and whatsoever" devised by Sakharam as shown above. But defendants Nos. 1 and 2 now plead that, if an account is directed to be taken of Sakharam's residuary estate, this sum of Rs. 16,000 odd with interest from the date of its receipt must be deducted from the monies which have come into their hands, as they are entitled to hold the cash received from the Master as ancestral estate in which Sonabai and Benabai would have no share. In my opinion, they are not so [587] entitled. The circumstances under which the Master called upon the executors of Sakharam's will to receive the money cannot now be made clear. But it would be very difficult to suppose that Sakharam had, when he made his will in 1865, entirely lost sight of the decree which had been passed in 1864 and under which he would be eventually entitled to receive a large sum of money representing his share of the ancestral estate. Seeing the details recited in the will, e. g., the debt due to testator from Jamnabai, it is strange that the testator did not mention the money coming to him under the decree of 1864. But, having regard to the very wide terms in which the testator described his residuary estate, including real as well as personal, it must, I think, be taken that he did profess to dispose of the money coming to him under the decree. When defendant No. 1 took upon himself the trusteeship he knew that the previous trustee and executor had received and dealt with the money as part of the residuary estate disposed of by the will. At that time, as shown above, the members of the family seem to have been uncertain whether defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were the sole residuary legatees. But, at any rate, both these defendants were perfectly competent to apply to the Court for a correction of the accounts so that the fund received from the Master could have been excluded from the account of the residuary estate covered by the will. They did not do so. It would be inequitable now to allow defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to re-open the accounts which they have accepted and acted on for so many years. I have now dealt with all the points arising on the pleadings, and can dispose of the issues seriatim.

1. I find that plaintiff is entitled to the interest of the Rs. 7,000 only as she may require it; that if she demands it as it accrues it must be paid over to her. Of course she would be entitled to a reasonable time for demand, and there would be no lapse simply because she did not ask for the interest on the very day it accrued. In the same way I see no objection to her giving a standing order that the money should be paid over to her or to a certain person on her account till further notice.

2. I find that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have not been always ready to set apart the Rs. 7,000. That is admitted by defendant No. 1. No doubt all the members of the family were aware of the way in which defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were dealing with the estate, and [588] expressed no disapproval, but that does not alter the fact that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 so acted as to be unable to set apart the Rs. 7,000 when called on to do so. They admit their liability now to set apart the money.

3. I find that plaintiff made no demand prior to 30th July, 1892

4. I find that plaintiff is entitled to demand the interest, whether she is supported by any member of the family or otherwise.

5. I find that plaintiff cannot demand arrears of interest prior to 30th July, 1892. The arrears from July, 1892, may fairly be taken to cover the first half-yearly interest for 1892.

6. I find that the gift over of the Rs. 7,000 after Benabai's death is void, and that the same falls into the residuary estate of Sakharam.

7. I find that the bequest of the residuary estate, after the death of Kashi, is not void.

8. I find that plaintiff has a $\frac{1}{4}$th share in that residuary estate.

9. I find that defendants are not entitled to deduct any sum on account of ancestral estate.

10. I find that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are not solely entitled to Sakharam's residuary estate.

11. I find that the agreement of 1888 made between defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was made with the knowledge of the plaintiff, but that fact does not estop the plaintiff from claiming her just rights under the will.

12. I find that, to ascertain the residuary estate for which defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are liable, a reference must be made to the Commissioner.

13. (General issue).

14. I find that defendant No. 3 is entitled to the Rs. 8,000 which on the death of Sonabai by the will of Sakharam became the property of Sonabai's child, defendant No. 3, who was alive at the death of the testator. In so finding I follow the view adopted in regard to the bequest of the residuary estate. I find also that defendants Nos. 3 to 10 are entitled to Sonabai's $\frac{1}{4}$th share in the residuary estate of Sakharam.

[589] 15. I find that under the will of Sakharam defendant No. 11 is not entitled to the Rs. 7,000 on the death of the plaintiff. Her mother (the plaintiff) is entitled absolutely to one-fourth share of the residuary estate of Sakharam;

It only remains to deal with the prayers of the plaint in accordance with the above findings.

(a) Plaintiff's right, having been ascertained as just shown, will be declared and there will be a direction to carry out the trusts of the will as regards the investment of the Rs. 7,000. There will be a similar direction to secure the Rs. 8,000 for the benefit of defendant No. 3.

(b) I cannot consent to the proposal to remove the present trustees, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, unless they themselves are anxious to be relieved from the trust. I cannot adopt the very strong language used by the learned counsel for the plaintiff in regard to the conduct of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. They have acted unwisely but not fraudulently.

(c) The necessary declaration will be made to have the Rs. 7,000 set apart and secured to plaintiff for her life, provided she demands the income thereof.

(d) And to entitle her to receive the interest from 30th July, 1892, the same should be calculated at compound interest with half-yearly rests.

(e) I do not think that any injunction is necessary, nor is the appointment of a receiver necessary.

(f) No arrears of interest can be allowed prior to 30th July, 1892, the same covering the first half-year's interest of 1892.

(g) As to the costs. Plaintiff must bear all costs occasioned by the plea that there had been a demand prior to 30th July, 1892. Her other costs up to date and the costs of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 up to date must be borne by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 personally. Their omission to give any answer to plaintiff's demand necessitated the suit. In any case, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are not entitled to have separate costs.

The costs of defendants Nos. 3 to 11 to come out of the residuary estate, for the ascertainment of which there must be a reference to the Commissioner.

[590] At the request of the Advocate-General the findings to be inserted in the decree.

The first and second defendants appealed. They contended (1) that Benabai was not entitled to a share in the residuary estate; (2) that the children of Sonabai were not entitled to a one-fourth share in the residuary estate; (3) that the defendants should be declared entitled to deduct from the estate, before the residue thereof was available for distribution, the sum of Rs. 16,436 and interest thereon received by the executors of Sakharam.

The plaintiff Benabai filed cross-objections to the decree.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of Candy, J., upon the construction of the will of Sakahram Luxumonji. The appellants complain of the learned Judge's decision in so far as it gives the plaintiff Benabai and the defendants Nos. 3 to 10 collectively, who represent Sonabai, shares, respectively, in the residuary estate of the testator.

The will is dated the 12th August, 1865. The family for a lengthened period were under the impression that the sons of Ramchandra Sakharam to the exclusion of his daughters were entitled to the residuary estate. The judgment appealed against has determined that the daughters equally with the sons are entitled to share in it.

The clause which gives rise to the question is this :—

"And I hereby declare that from and after the determination of the trusts aforesaid the said trustees or trustee for the time being of this my will shall stand possessed of and interested in the said residuary real and personal estate and the stocks, funds, shares and securities in or upon which the same or any part of that may [591] be invested, and the rents, dividends and the income thereof in trust for all or any the children or child of my said son who shall be living at the time of his decease or who shall leave lawful issue living at the time of his decease in equal shares and proportions if more than one, and if there be no such child who shall be living or whose issue shall be living at the time of the decease of the survivors of them my said son and his present wife, then the said trustees or trustee for the time being of this my will shall stand possessed of and interested in the said residuary estate and the stocks, funds, &c., in trust for the persons or person who would become entitled thereto in case the same had belonged absolutely to my said son and he had died intestate."

Upon this it is firstly contended that the context of the will shows that the testator used the expression "children" in the above clause as the equivalent of sons who alone, he desired, should take. The will was written in English, and it is suggested that the testator had not an accurate knowledge of that language, and that, therefore, it is by no means improbable that he misunderstood the term which he employed and used it in an unusual sense. As giving colour to this contention it is pointed out that legacies, which are strictly tied up, are given to the testator's granddaughters Benabai and Sonabai, and it is argued that it is highly improbable that in addition the testator should have given them absolute and uncontrolled shares in the residue which would place them in a better position than their brothers to whom nothing is given but their shares in the residue. It is also provided in the will that, in the event of the failure of issue of the granddaughters, the legacies to them shall fall into the residue. This is, it is contended, a clear indication that the testator did not intend that his granddaughters should share in the residue.

These considerations, though they are calculated to induce a very careful scrutiny of the whole will with a view to ascertain whether its context does not show that the testator used the term "children" in other than its usual grammatical sense, are in themselves insufficient to control or vary the meaning of the term. They only show that the testator has made a disposition by his will which the Court is surprised to find such a testator or indeed any testator making. If there was any ambiguity in the expression, such considerations might determine the sense in which the testator used it, but they cannot lead the Court to refuse to give effect to the plain language which he has employed. In support of the contentions that the context of the will indicates that the testator used the expression [592] "children" instead of "sons" the appellants rely upon the fact that the testator when referring to Sonabai and Benabai in the early portions of the will designates them his "granddaughters," while in the final clause of the will he appoints the executors of the will guardians for his infant "grand-children" Krishnarao and Balkrishna, not for his infant "grandsons." We should readily lend ourselves to this contention if we thought we should be justified in doing so. But it appears to us too slender a basis from which to draw the suggested conclusion. There is no antithesis between the two expressions. The testator merely uses one appropriate expression to designate Krishnarao and Balkrishna instead of another hardly more, or, we should rather say, equally appropriate. This is the only foundation for the argument; and in other clauses of the will the testator uses the expression children where it is not contended that he means to confine it to sons. If we were to accept the argument of the appellants, we should have to attribute two entirely different meanings to the same word in the same instrument without any context to justify us in doing so, contrary to one of the most fundamental canons of construction. We, therefore, come to the conclusion that the judgment of the Division Court upon this point is correct.

It is further contended that the gift to the children of Ramchandra who shall be living at his decease is a gift to a class of which some may have come into existence after the death of the testator, as to whom the gift would be void under the rule in the Tagore case, and that, therefore, the whole gift is void. At the time when the testator made his will, his son Ramchandra had two daughters, Sonabai and Benabai, and two sons, Krishnanath or Krishnarao and Balkrishna, who are all named in the will, though not in this particular clause. It would manifestly defeat the intention of the testator if the whole bequest were declared to be inoperative, merely because the testator indicated his wish that, if further children should be born to Ramchandra, the class should be enlarged so as to embrace them. A uniform series of decisions ending with that of Tribhuvandas v. Gangadas (1) show that we are not bound to adopt a construction which would in many, if [593] not in most, cases defeat the primary intention of the testator, because effect cannot be given to his secondary intention. We think that we ought to follow these decisions in preference to some earlier cases that are opposed to them. Upon this question also we agree with the view taken by the Division Court.

The next ground of appeal is with reference to a sum of Rupees 16,436-5-0 which the Division Court has treated as forming part of the testator's estate or liable to be treated as part of such estate. This was a sum admittedly arising from the sale of the testator's share in certain ancestral estate by the Master in Equity. which the executors of the testator received after his death and dealt with as though it belonged to his estate. It is admittedly money over which the testator had no power of disposition, but which upon the death of the testator passed to his son Ramchandra. The will does not refer to this money specifically and there is nothing in its terms to indicate that the testator intended to dispose of or deal with it. No question of election can, therefore, arise in reference to it. It was apparently allowed to be received and dealt with by the executors as part of the estate in consequence of the understanding in the family, that it in common with the rest of the residuary estate would devolve ultimately upon the sons of Ramchandra. That understanding having now been found to be erroneous, the sons of Ramchandra are of course entitled to have it from the estate and restored to them, unless the law of limitation bars their right. We do not think that it does.

When the sum was received by the executors, one of the sons of Ramchandra, the appellant Krishnarao, was acting as an executor and the other son, the appellant Balkrishna, soon afterwards assumed that office. Their case is that this money was used for the purposes of the estate, or, in other words, lent to it. The executors have thus used their own monies or money procured by one of them for estate purposes. In taking the accounts of the estate, executors are entitled to be allowed such money—Spackman v. Hilbrook (1); Seton on Decrees (4th Ed.), p. 894. Under certain circumstances they are allowed it with interest. We are unable [594] to see how the Statute of Limitation applies to such a case, as the account of the executors has still to be taken. Whether this sum has been advanced to, or used in, the estate will be decided when the account is gone into. For these reasons we are of opinion that the finding on the 9th issue must be set aside and the decree varied so as to give effect to our judgment in this respect.

The respondent Benabai has filed cross-objections to the decree in reference to her claim for interest on her legacy of Rs. 7,000. By the clause in the will upon which her contention is based, the testator gives a sum of Rs. 4,000 (by a codicil raised to Rs. 7,000) to his executors upon trust that they do invest the sum in the name of the trustees and "do pay so much and such part of the dividends, interest and income of the same monies or of the stocks, &c., upon which the same may be invested as she may from time to time require for her own use and support" to Benabai during her life for her sole, and separate use independently of her husband without power of anticipation and upon trust that they do and shall accumulate the surplus of such dividends, interest and income (if any) which shall not be required by Benabai, in the way of compound interest by investing the same and the resulting income thereof for the benefit of the persons or person who under the trusts of the will shall become entitled to the principal fund from which the same may have proceeded. These trusts were for all or any of the children or child of Benabai who shall be living at her death or who shall leave lawful issue living at her death, failing whom they were to fall into the residue. The bequest to the children of Benabai having been void under the rule in the Tagore case, the accumulations are held in trust to form part of the residue. Benabai's legacy has never, in fact, been set aside. The interest upon it was paid to her down to 1872. After that she lived on amicable terms with, and was supported by, her mother and her brothers, the executors and other members of the family, down to the time of the disputes between them; and the Division Court has held that she did not, after 1872, require or demand payment of the interest upon her legacy until 30th July, 1892. The latter finding has not been seriously contested before us, and we [595] think we ought to accept it. Upon the construction of the clause we agree in the view taken by the Division Court. The plaintiff was entitled, we think, as she required money for her support from time to time, to receive it from the executors up to the full amount of the interest, but if she did not require the interest, or any part of it, the trustees are directed to invest the amount not required, and are directed to hold such accumulations upon trust for the persons who will be ultimately entitled to the fund. After it is once accumulated, the accumulations appear to us to become impressed with that trust, and Benabai is no longer entitled to receive them. The failure of this ultimate trust cannot alter or enlarge the meaning of the bequest for life in favour of Benabai. That remains the same as if the ultimate trusts were good and could be given effect to. Benabai cannot, therefore, claim to have the interest prior to 30th July, 1892, which she did not require and demand as it accrued due, now paid to her.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

She demands, however, as a person interested in the residue to have the fund now made up to the amount at which it would have stood had the trustees set apart and invested this legacy as they should have done at least in 1873. The learned Judge in the Court below has refused to give directions to that effect on the ground that Benabai was well aware of the dealings of the executors with the estate since 1873 until the disputes, and acquiesced in them, and we think that he was justified in taking that view. The executors themselves and Sonabai's children are entitled to $\frac{3}{4}$ of the residue, and they do not seek to have this provision made. The legacy money appears to have been employed in estate purposes, and it is not shown that it has not benefited the estate to the same extent as if it had been invested and the surplus income accumulated. It has not, in fact, been shown that the residue has suffered any actual loss by reason of this direction not having been carried out. Under these circumstances we do not, on the whole, consider that equity requires us to take the extreme steps of giving this alternative direction which Benabai asks for against the wish of the other beneficiaries. We, therefore, disallow the cross-objections.

As to costs, we do not think that the Division Court has assigned adequate reasons for departing from the usual rule in such [596] cases and making the executors personally liable to pay them. Since we have varied the decree in a material point we consider that the whole question as to costs is open to us.

The parties respectively will have their costs out of the estate in the Court below and will pay their own costs, respectively, of the appeal as it has in part succeeded and in part failed. We do not, under the circumstances, make any order as to attorney and client costs.

Decree varied.

CASE stated for the opinion of the High Court, under s. 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts' Act (XV of 1882), by C. W. Chitty, Chief Judge :—

"This was a suit brought by the plaintiffs, who were father and son, against the three defendants to recover Rs. 1,228-8 as [597] damages for breach of contract to deliver cotton. The first defendant is brother of the second and son of the third defendant.

On the suit being called on before me for hearing on the 8th August, 1895, the plaintiffs' solicitor presented an application stating that the matter in question in the suit had been referred to the arbitration of one Purshotam Sivji, who had made his award, and asking that the submission paper and the award might be recorded as a settlement of the suit under s. 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or that, in the alternative, the award might be filed under s. 525.

After hearing the solicitor for the plaintiffs and counsel for the first defendant and the pleader of the first and second defendants I took time to consider the point. On the 12th August I delivered judgment to the effect that the submission paper and the award could not possibly be recorded as a compromise of the suit under s. 375 for many reasons, but more especially because (1) the first plaintiff and second and third defendants were no parties to the alleged arbitration and were not bound by it, and (2) it would preclude the defendants from raising any objections they might have to the validity of the award. I was of opinion that the plaintiffs were entitled to a notice under s. 525 calling on the first defendant to show cause why the award should not be filed.

"I should mention that the submission, although in the body of it purporting to be made by the three defendants, was only signed by the first defendant, the second plaintiff being the only signatory on the part of himself and his father. The award purports to be made against all the three defendants. In accordance with my decision a notice was issued against the first defendant, and on the 26th August it came on for hearing. The first defendant by his counsel raised the following objections:—(1) that the matters in dispute were not duly or legally referred to arbitration; (2) that the submission, if any, was imperfect and illegal; (3) that what was sought to be filed was not an award; (4) that the submission, if any, was revoked before the making of the alleged award; (5) that the arbitrator was guilty of misconduct, and (6) that the award was made without any investigation.

[598] "After hearing the arguments on part of the first defendant and the plaintiffs I delivered judgment and held, on the authority of the cases cited, I was justified in refusing to file the award and in referring the plaintiffs to a substantive suit on the award. The objections taken by the first defendant appeared to me serious and substantial and to go to the very root of the matter as to whether there had been any binding submission or award. They did not appear to me to be merely frivolous or colourable objections raised for the purpose of hampering the plaintiffs. The cases on which I relied were Samal Nathu v. Jaishankar Dalsukhram (1); Hirjibhai v. Jamsetji (2); Venkatesh v. Chanapgavda (3) and Bijadhur v. Monohur (4).

"I am aware that it was decided in the case of Dandekar v. Dandekars (5) that to show cause means not merely to allege but to prove it. But I was of opinion that that case did not preclude me from exercising the discretion which would appear to be left to the Judge by ss. 525 and 526. That section provides no procedure for an elaborate investigation into difficult questions of law and fact.

"As I was delivering judgment, and had in fact expressed my opinion, the plaintiffs' solicitor interrupted me and asked for a case to be stated. Though technically speaking he was too late in his application, I do not wish to deprive the plaintiffs of the satisfaction of obtaining the higher opinion. I, therefore, submit this question for the consideration of their Lordships:—

"(1) Whether, after issuing a notice under s. 525, the Court was bound to go into evidence on the objections raised?

"(2) Whether, under the circumstances above stated, I was justified in refusing to file the award and in referring the plaintiffs to a substantive suit?

"The plaintiffs have deposited in Court Rs. 68, the first defendant's costs of the day, and Rs. 50 to meet the costs of reference."

Raikes appeared for the plaintiffs.

[599] Lang (Advocate-General), for the defendants.

The following cases were cited and commented upon:—Samal Nathu v. Jaishankar Dalsukhram (1); Hirjibhai v. Jamsetji (2); Bijadhur v. Monohur (4); Venkatesh v. Chanapgavda (3); Dandekar v. Dandekars (5); Jagan Nath v. Mannu Lal (6); Amrit Ram v. Dasrat Ram (7); Surjan Raot v. Bhikari Raot (8).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—The questions submitted to us upon this reference arise under the following circumstances. The plaintiffs, who are partners, filed a suit in the Small Cause Court to recover damages from the defendants for breach of a contract to deliver cotton. The defendants were three partners carrying on business in the name of Mahomed Jamal, which was also the name of the first defendant. On the suit being called on, the plaintiffs made an application to the Court stating that the suit had been privately referred to arbitration, and that an award had been made and (inter alia) asking that the award might be filed under ss. 525 and 526 of the Civil Procedure Code. It then appeared that the alleged submission had been signed by the defendant Mahomed Jamal alone, although in its body it purported to be made by all the three defendants. The award purported to be made against all the three defendants. The learned Judge directed a notice to issue under s. 525 to the defendant Mahomed Jamal. That defendant appeared, and while admitting his signature to the submission paper raised several objections as to its legal validity and its binding effect upon him, and as to the award, of which it is sufficient to say that to the Judge they "did not appear to be merely frivolous or colourable objections raised for the purpose of hampering the plaintiffs." The learned Judge, considering that he had a discretion in the matter, and that ss. 525 and 526 provided no procedure for an elaborate investigation into difficult questions of law and fact, refused to file the award, and referred the plaintiffs to a regular suit. The fifth and sixth objections related to the conduct of the arbitrator. The rest were objections to the validity of the [600] submission and award independent of the character of the arbitrator's proceedings.

The questions submitted are :—

1. Whether, after issuing a notice under s. 525, the Court was bound to go into evidence on the objections raised ?

2. Whether, under the circumstances stated, the Judge was justified in refusing to file the award and in referring the plaintiffs to a substantive suit ?

The decisions of this Court on which the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court relied are Samal Nathu v. Jaishankar Dalsukhram (1), Hirjibhai v. Jamsetji (2) and Venkatesh v. Chanapgavda (3), while he distinguished Dandekar v. Dandekars (4). The former judgments have been referred to with approval by three of the five Judges of the Calcutta High Court who decided the Full Bench case of Surjan Raot v. Bhikari Raot (5). The Full Bench unanimously ruled in that case that when an application is made to a Court for filing a private award, and objections are raised, and the objections are such as fall within s. 521 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court is not bound to hold its hand and reject the application, but it is the duty of the Court to inquire into the validity of the objections raised and thereupon to determine whether the award should be filed or not. Three of the Judges, however, further expressed their opinion that where in such an application an objection is taken that the matters in dispute were never referred to arbitration and is, therefore, not on one of the grounds mentioned in s. 521, the Court has no jurisdiction to deal with it, but should reject the application and refer the parties to a regular suit. The objections taken to the award in Samal Nathu v. Jaishanker (supra) and in the case in the Printed Judgments of 1890 were objections which went to the root of the submission, while those taken in Dandekar v. Dandekars were objections to the conduct of the arbitrators, and, as such, clearly fell within the s. 520 or 521 of the Code.

[601] In the present case the main objections were of the former character, and the Judge rightly considered that the case was governed by Samal Nathu v. Jaishankar Dalsukhram (supra).

The Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Amrit Ram v. Dasrat (1) which gives a more extended application to the words of s. 526 than has hitherto been applied to them, has, however, been cited to us, and we are asked, upon the reasoning contained in that judgment, to dissent from the ruling of our own Court in Samal Nathu v. Jaishankar (supra) and Venkatesh v. Chanapgavda (supra), and the question before us is whether we ought to do so and refer the matter to a Full Bench. Before considering it I may say that I entirely agree with the ruling of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Surjan Raot v. Bhikari Raot (supra) to which I have referred. It appears to me that the Legislature intended that the Court, when dealing with an award made without the intervention of a Court, should institute the same inquiries, and that the order made upon such inquiry should be final or be subject to correction by a Court of appeal in the same way and to the same extent only as if the award had been made under an order of reference by the Court, and that they have expressed that intention with clearness in the 526th section of the Code. The only difference between the procedure in the two cases is that the inquiry in the latter case takes place after the award has been filed ex parte, while in the former it takes place before the filing.

I think, however, that notwithstanding the decision in Amrit Ram v. Dasrat (supra) we ought not to depart or dissent from the rulings of our Court which I have mentioned. The inquiry which the Legislature has directed the Court to embark on by ss. 525 and 526 of the Code is, I cannot doubt, an inquiry such as the Court dealing with objections made under s. 522 could be called upon to make. The latter inquiry from the very nature of the case cannot embrace an inquiry into the factum or validity of the submission or order of reference. It is in terms confined to events taking place subsequent to such order. The [602] existence of such an order is assumed as a fact. So, too, the existence of a submission appears to me to be assumed by the Legislature in ss. 525 and 526, and the Court is only directed to inquire into events subsequent to such submission. The enactment that, if "no ground such as is mentioned or referred to in ss. 520 or 521 be shown against the award, the Court shall order it to be filed" read in its ordinary sense means, I think, "if no ground of the nature of those mentioned or referred to in ss. 520 or 521 be shown," and it is only by a somewhat forced interpretation of the section that it can bear the meaning attributed to it by the Allahabad High Court. If it were necessary to read it in that forced sense, in order to give effect to a plain intention of the Legislature, I should not hesitate so to read it; but I see no reason for straining words in the present instance. The reasoning of the Court in Samal v. Jaishankar (supra) goes far to show that the intention of the Legislature is not that which such an interpretation would attribute to it. But, whether that be so or not, I think that the present is peculiarly a case to which the maxim stare decisis is applicable. It is not a case of declining jurisdiction, but of holding that a particular procedure is not applicable to circumstances apparently not contemplated by its framers. I would answer both questions accordingly, the first in the negative and the second in the affirmative. Costs of reference costs in cause.

STRACHEY, J.—I agree with the learned Chief Justice that we ought to follow the decisions of this Court in Samal Nathu v. Jaishankar Dalsukhram(1), Hirjibhai v. Jamsetji(2) and Venkatesh v. Chanapgavda (3). I think with West, J., in the first of these cases, and with Prinsep, J., in Surjan Raot v. Bhikari Raot (4), that ss. 525 and 526 of the Code are obscure on the question which we are considering. To such a state of things the rule of stare decisis is applicable. We ought to follow the decisions of our own Court, unless we are clearly satisfied that they are wrong; and I certainly do not pretend to be so satisfied in the present case.

20 B. 596 = Chitty's S. C. C. R. 472.

[603] If the question were res integra, I think that there would be strong reasons for adopting the conclusion arrived at by the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Amrit Ram v. Dasrat Ram(5). It is common ground that ss. 525 and 526 apply only when there has been a submission to arbitration without the intervention of a Court of Justice, and when an award has been made thereon. It appears to me that the effect of the sections read together is that, where there has been such a submission and award, any person interested in the award has an absolute right to have it filed, unless the other parties show against it some ground such as is mentioned in s. 520 or 521. The right to have the award filed, except where such ground is shown, depends exclusively upon the conditions specified in s. 525, a submission, an award, and an interest in the award, and cannot be denied to any one who shows that those conditions exist. It seems to follow that a person claiming the right is entitled to prove it if it is denied; and that to say that the right exists where there has been a submission and an award, but that upon a mere denial of either the Court is not to enforce it, is very like a contradiction in terms. The absence of challenge or denial is not specified as a condition of the right. The sections do not say that where there is an admitted submission and an admitted award, any person admittedly interested in the award has a right to have it filed, unless cause is shown to the contrary. They say that where a matter has been referred to arbitration out of Court, and an award has been made, the right of a person interested in the award, to have it filed, subject to certain objections, follows. Apart from the decisions I should have thought that a mere denial by the other parties could not, more than in any other case, destroy or defeat the right or prevent the party claiming it from proving the conditions upon which it depends. I should have thought that the effect of the denial would be to put the existence of the submission or the award in issue in the suit in which, under the second paragraph of s. 525, the applicant is plaintiff and the other parties defendants. Upon that issue it would be for the plaintiff to establish his right to have the alleged award filed, by proving that there had been a submission and an [604] award thereon, in which he was interested. If he succeeded, then, in the absence of cause shown by the defendants upon any of the grounds mentioned in s. 520 or s. 521, the Court would be bound to order the award to be filed. It has been said that no provision is made for such an inquiry, but only for an inquiry into the matters referred to in ss. 520 and 521. In Micharaya Guruvu v. Sadasiva Parama Guruvu(6), it was held by Turner, C. J., and Muttusami Ayyar, J., "that the power to file the award includes the power to inquire if there was a submission to arbitration." But even if the provisions giving the right to have the award filed, do not imply a duty in the Court to decide, in the event of dispute, whether the right exists, is not such an inquiry in effect provided for by treating the application as a suit between the applicant and the other parties? According to Petheram, C. J., in Surjan Raot v. Bhikari Raot, (p. 223), "everything which could be pleaded as an answer to an action to enforce the award could be pleaded as an answer to the petition to file the award." When once the submission and the award have been established by admission or proof, but not till then, the inquiry under s. 526 appears to me to be co-extensive with that under s. 522, in which, the reference having been made by the Court itself at an earlier stage of the proceedings, there can of course be no question as to its existence. It has been said that an objection that there was no submission or no award may give rise to a long inquiry into difficult questions of law and fact, and that the Legislature cannot have intended that a Subordinate Court should be competent to decide such questions upon an application to file an award, and without appeal. An exactly similar objection was the ground upon which it was at one time held that the Court could not under s. 526 even consider the validity of cause shown against an award within the provisions of ss. 520 and 521, but must refuse to file the award, if such cause were merely alleged and not proved. See the judgment of Melvill, J., in Dandekar v. Dandekars (1). That objection is not now accepted as conclusive. Again, it is not clear that, if a Court is competent under ss. 525 and 526 to decide whether there was, in fact, a submission or an award, its [605] decision upon the question is necessarily final. Upon the award being filed, judgment and decree according to the award follow, and under s. 522 "no appeal shall lie from such decree except in so far as the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award." But it has been held, in several cases, that s. 522 presupposes the existence of a valid award as the basis of the decree; that it does not apply to a case in which there has been no award in law or in fact, and that the decree may be appealed against on that ground—Suppu v. Govindacharyar (2); Debendra Nath Shaw v. Aubhoy Churn Bagchi (3)—explaining the judgment of the majority of the Full Bench in Sashti Charan Chatterjee v. Tarak Chandra Chatterjee (4): Lachman Das v. Brijpal (5); Bindessuri Pershad Singh v. Jankee Pershad Singh (6) and Joy Prokash Lal v. Sheo Golam Singh (7). In the last-mentioned case, it was held that an appeal would lie from a decree given in accordance with the award where the objection was that all the parties to the suit had not agreed to the reference.

I agree with the learned Chief Justice that objections, denying the existence of the submission and the award, are not, within the meaning of s. 526, grounds such as are mentioned or referred to in s. 520 or s. 521. If they were such grounds, it would under s. 526 be for the defendant to prove them; but I think that here, as in other cases, where the right claimed by the plaintiff is denied, it is for the plaintiff to establish it by proving the existence of the conditions upon which it depends. Upon the issue being raised, it is for him to prove that there has been a submission and an award, and it is not until this has been proved, or admitted, that the defendant under s. 526 has to show against the award any of the grounds mentioned in s. 520 or s. 521. If this is so, the question whether there has been a submission and an award must be determined before any inquiry into objections under s. 520 or s. 521 can commence, and, therefore, cannot fall within the scope of such objections. The Allahabad High [606] Court express the opinion that an objection that there was no agreement to refer any question to arbitration would not only be ejusdem generis with, but would be one of the precise grounds mentioned in cl. (a) of s. 520. But the meaning and scope of s. 520 cannot be altered or enlarged by its incorporation in s. 526 : if in cases not falling within s. 526 it does not include such an objection, it cannot do so in cases to which s. 526 applies. That s. 520, in cases not falling within s. 526, assumes a reference to arbitration as an established fact, and does not include an objection that there has been no reference, follows not only from the fact that the reference which it speaks of has been made by the Court's own order, but from the provision for a remission of the award to the reconsideration of the arbitrators, where any of the objections contemplated by the section are made good. That provision would be meaningless if one of those objections was that there had been no reference and no award to be remitted.

While these are the conclusions to which, in the absence of authority, I should probably have come, there is in this Court very strong authority for a more restricted reading of ss. 525 and 526. I do not, of course, deny that there is great force in the reasoning of West, J., in Samal Nathu v. Jaishankar Dalsukhram and in the considerations referred to by the learned Chief Justice. Upon the construction of the sections there is, no doubt, much to be said for the view that the Legislature intended to provide a summary procedure for the enforcements of awards as to the existence of which there was no substantial or bona fide dispute, and did not intend that in all cases, however contentious, a person seeking to enforce an award should be exempt from the necessity of bringing a regular suit and paying full Court-fee on his plaint. In these circumstances, following the previous decisions of this Court, I agree to the answers proposed by the learned Chief Justice to the questions referred.

Before the Honourable Mr. Justice Farran, Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Parsons.

BHAURAO DADAJIRAO (Original Petitioner), Appellant v. LAKSHMIBAI, WIDOW OF RANOJIRAO AND ANOTHER (Original Caveators), *Respondents. [17th July, 1895].

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), ss. 56 and 57—Testator subject of the Baroda State—Will executed at Baroda—Disposition of immoveable property in British India—Courts in British India—Jurisdiction Probate.

Under s. 56 of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), a District Judge has jurisdiction to grant probate of a will executed out of British India by a person who is not a British subject, if the testator had at the time of his death moveable or immoveable property within the jurisdiction of the Judge.

The discretion vested in a Judge by s. 57 of that Act does not extend to a case where there is no Court of concurrent jurisdiction in India to which application for probate can be made.

* Appeal No. 128 of 1894.

JULY 17.

APPEL-LATE CIVIL.

20 B. 607.

The validity of a will which purports to dispose of immoveable property in British India must be tested by the rules applicable to the execution of wills in British India.

APPEAL from the decree of C. G. W. Macpherson, District Judge of Belgaum.

Application for probate. Bhaurao Dadajirao applied to the District Judge of Belgaum for probate of the will of one Ranojirao Ghorpade, deceased.

The deceased was a subject of the Baroda State and the will was executed at Baroda, but the petition for probate stated that the testator had left immoveable property situate in the district of Belgaum.

The application for probate was made under s. 56 of the Probate Act (V of 1881).

The Judge rejected the application on the following ground:—

"The testator is the subject of the Baroda State, and it does not appear to me that I can determine whether the document, probate of which is sought, is a will, i.e., whether it is the legal declaration of the intentions of the testator (s. 3 of Act V of 1881), as the testamentary law of Baroda may be altogether different to that of British India.

[608] "It appears to me that the proper place to prove a will made in Baroda by a Baroda subject is Baroda itself, after which action can be taken under s. 5.

"It is said that the testator is not only a Baroda subject but also a British subject, but I cannot see that for the purposes now in question he can be the latter when he is admittedly the former.

"I must reject the application both for want of jurisdiction and on the analogy of s. 57 of Act V of 1881."

The applicant appealed.

Ganesh K. Deshmukh, for the appellant (applicant).—The will was made at Baroda. It disposed of immoveable property situate in the Belgaum District. The property is situate in British territory, and under s. 56 of the Probate and Administration Act, the Judge had jurisdiction to entertain our application.

Balaji A. Bhagvat, for the respondents (opponents).—The testator had his domicil at Baroda and the will must be proved to be a valid will, having regard to the law of the testator's domicil.

[FARRAN, C. J.—But there is immoveable property in the Belgaum District: therefore the law of British India is applicable to the will.]

In the case of In the goods of Elliott (1), the question of domicil was considered in determining the legality of a will.

[FARRAN, C. J.—The law of domicil applies to moveable and not to immoveable property.]

The Probate Act makes no distinction between moveable and immoveable property. Section 56 of the Act refers only to wills made in British India, inasmuch as the Act applies to British India. Section 3 of the Act, which defines a will, speaks of "property" only and not of moveable and immoveable property. We contend that the will being made at Baroda is not governed by the Probate Act.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—In this case one Bhaurao Dadajirao applied to the Judge of the District Court of Belgaum, under s. 56 of Act V of 1881, for probate of the will of Ranojirao Ghorpade, stating in his petition that the testator had left immoveable property within the district of Belgaum. The testator is stated to [609] have been a subject of the Baroda State. There is no finding as to where his domicil was. The will was executed at Baroda.

(1) 4 C. 106.

Section 56 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, gives jurisdiction to the District Judge to grant probate of a will, if it appears from the petition of the applicant that * * * * the testator had, at the time of his death, any property, moveable or immoveable, within the jurisdiction of the Judge. That provision is general and is quite irrespective of the place where the will was executed or of the nationality of the testator or of the place of his domicil.

It has always been the practice of the Courts of Probate in England to grant probate of foreign wills, whether executed abroad or not, if the testator has left personal property in England. The cases of In the goods of De Pradel(1), In the goods of Donna Maria De Vera Maraver(2), In the goods of De La Saussaye(3) are instances of the exercise of this jurisdiction. In Bloxam v. Favre (4) the plea was filed to a petition for probate of a will that the will, which was that of a woman domiciled in Germany, had not been made according to German law. The Court in such cases, if requisite, takes evidence as to the law relating to the execution of wills in force in the country where the testator was domiciled. The late Supreme Court and this High Court have always followed the same practice in the exercise of their testamentary jurisdiction. There is, therefore, no warrant for limiting the express words of s. 56 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, in the manner in which the learned Judge has limited them, or for his holding that he has no jurisdiction in the case.

The District Judge was also in error in applying the provisions of s. 57 of the Act by analogy to this application. When between Courts of different districts in British India there is a question as to which of such Courts can most justly or conveniently grant probate, the Judge has a discretion to refer the applicant to the more convenient Court; but when there is no Court of concurrent jurisdiction in British India to which the [610] applicant can apply for probate, the Judge is vested with no such discretion. An executor whose testator has left property in British India is entitled to probate of the will in the Court in British India which has jurisdiction in the case or where there is more than one such Court in the most convenient of them. Baroda is not a district within the meaning of the Act, and the Judge has no discretion to refer the applicant to the Baroda Court. Analogy has no place in the case of a positive enactment such as this. If a foreign will has already been proved and deposited in a competent Court abroad, s. 5 of the Act, following the English law, enables a Court in British India to grant letters of administration to the applicant with a properly authenticated copy of such will annexed, and thus to dispense with a necessity of proof of the original will; but where a foreign will has not been so proved, the Judge will have himself to take evidence as to the due execution of the will, according to the law of the country in which the testator was domiciled, in cases where the property in respect of which probate is sought is moveable or personal property, and must, if necessary, satisfy himself by evidence as to the law relating to the execution of wills in force in such country. In the present case no such inquiry is necessary, as the property left by the testator in British India is immoveable. The validity of a will which purports to dispose of immoveable property in British India must be tested by the rules applicable to the execution of wills in British India. This has been established by a series of decisions too numerous to refer to. They will be found collected in Jarman on Wills, Vol. I, p. 76.

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of Rao Bahadur N. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge with Appellate Powers at Dhulia.

The plaintiffs sued to recover Rs. 150 principal and Rs. 37-8-0 interest in advance, in all Rs. 187-8-0, due upon a mortgage-bond dated 31st July, 1880.

The bond provided that the amount should be paid by weekly instalments of Re. 1-8-0. The first seventy-five instalments were duly paid.

The present suit was brought to recover the amount of the remaining fifty instalments, viz., Rs. 75, together with Rs. 185 on account of interest calculated at the stipulated rate.

The defendant pleaded that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover Rs. 60 only on account of the unpaid instalments, and he contended that he could not recover more than the same amount as interest.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree awarding Rs. 75 as principal and Rs. 150 as interest.

This decree was amended, in appeal, by giving as interest a sum equal to the amount of principal, viz., Rs. 75.

Against this decision the plaintiffs perferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Daji Abaji Khare, for appellants.—According to the rule of damdupat the amount of interest recoverable at any one time cannot exceed the principal sum. What is meant by the principal sum? It means the original amount of the debt, and not the balance of principal that may be due. The original text of Manu is thus translated by Mandlik at p. 104 of his work on Hindu Law :— [612] "Interest on money received at once must never be more than double the debt (that is, more than the amount of the principal paid at one and the same time)." In Kulluka's comment on this text the word mul is used to denote principal, that is, the original sum lent and not the reduced amount of principal. Refers to Dhondu v. Narayan (1); Narayan v. Satvaji (2); Kakarlapudi Sitaramraj v. Uppalapudi Janakaya (3).

* Second Appeal No. 558 of 1893.

B. A. Bhagvat (for respondent) :—The word debt in Manu means the money due, or existing obligation, and not the original loan. In Dhondu v. Narayan (1) it is held to mean the outstanding debt. Any other interpretation would defeat the object of the damdupat rule, which was intended to relieve debtors from usurious contracts.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J —The rule stated in Manu, VIII, 151, is thus translated by Dr. Buhler :—"In money transactions interest paid at one time (not by instalments) shall never exceed the double of the principal." The learned writer adds the following in a note :—

"Gaut. XII, 31, 36, Vi, VI, 11—15. Yajnavalkya II, 39. The interest here intended is such which is not paid by instalments, but becomes due together with the principal. According to the commentators, the whole sum payable, i. e., the interest, together with the principal, shall not exceed the double of the sum lent."

The above passage of Manu is translated by Colebrooke in para. 61 in his Chapter on Interest. I Colebrooke, Bk. I, Chap. I, s. 3, along with many other sacred texts on the same matter.

It appears to me that no translator or commentator has noticed that the words principal and debt are ambiguous, and may refer either to an original amount or to the balance thereof presently due. The reported decisions of the High Courts have the same ambiguity. The sages of the Hindu law did not foresee every case that might arise; and probably left this question to be decided by Judges, who give weight to the general spirit of that law including the regard to custom and equity.

I have had the advantage of seeing the judgment written by my brother Ranade, and I concur in his impression that the Courts have been in the habit of interpreting the word "principal" as meaning [613] the balance of principal unpaid at the time of suit. The case of Nanchand v. Bapu Saheb (4) is, however, the only printed instance I can find; but the practice, as I understand it, has been enacted in the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, XVII of 1879, s. 13, cl. g.

For these reasons, I would confirm the decree with costs.

RANADE, J.—The sole question at issue in this appeal is whether, in the case of a suit on an instalment bond, where the instalments paid have satisfied in part the principal claim along with interest, the arrears of interest claimable at any one time must, under the damdupat rule, be limited to the principal balance due, or to the original principal of the bond.

The point is one of some importance at the present time, when it is in contemplation to extend the principle of the damdupat rule, hitherto confined to Hindus in this Presidency, to all classes and to all parts of India as a measure of equitable relief to which the Courts are bound to give effect. A clear statement of this rule is found in Dhondu v. Narayan (1), where after quoting Manu's text, Chap. VIII, 151, and the comments of Mayukha and Vachaspati Misra, the judgment goes on to state :—"The rule of Hindu law is simply this that no greater arrear of interest can be recovered at any one time than what will amount to the principal sum."

The question at issue in the present case is as to the precise meaning of the words "principal sum" in respect of a bond where the original principal claim has been partially satisfied by the payments made. The original text of Manu makes this clear. Rav Saheb Mandlik translates this text thus :—"Interest on money received at once must never be more than double the debt (that is, more than the amount of the principal paid at one and the same time)." Mandlik's Hindu Law, p. 104. Colebrooke translates this same text in the same words. Colebrooke, Vol. I, p. 79. Mr. Khare referred to Kulluka's comment, where the words used are मूलवृद्धिः द्विगुणवद्भवति and mean that the principal increase becomes only double. There is nothing in these words to justify the contention that it is the original principal, and not the principal due when the arrears of interest accrue. The explanatory words in the translation of Manu's [614] text are quite clear. The principal payable at one and the same time is the limit of the increase then payable.

Mr. Khare's contention is apparently based on the head-note in the case of Narayan v. Satvaji (1), which states that the rule of Hindu law is that interest exceeding the principal sum lent cannot be recovered at any one time. The use of the word lent in this headnote is clearly unwarranted by any expressions in the judgment, where the words used are "By Hindu law the amount of interest recoverable at any one time cannot exceed the principal." The case of Nanchand v. Bapu Saheb(2) is not exactly in point, because it only decided that the rule of damdupat did not apply to Mahomedans. It, however, shows how the rule has been interpreted in the Courts of this Presidency. Both the lower Courts had applied the damdupat rule, and in consequence only allowed 291 rupees interest, because the principal balance due on the bond sued upon was 291 rupees, though the bond itself was for 1,901 rupees, and the plaintiff in that case had claimed Rs. 374 as interest. This view also was given effect to in Shri Ganesh Dharnidhar v. Keshavrav (3). The exclusion of the damdupat rule in cases of mortgages, where the rents and profits have to be set off against interest and principal, and its limitation to cases where the account has to be taken only on one side, are also based on this same consideration—Nathubhai v. Mulchand (4); Rango v. Balaji (5); Sadhu v. Ganu (6); Shankarbawa v. Babaji (7); and Daji Gopal v. Daji Hari (8). The provision of s. 13 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, which was intended to give effect to the damdupat rule, has expressly recognized this same principle, and it allows interest balance only so far as it does not exceed the principal balance due.

The Madras High Court has placed a similar interpretation on this same rule of the law as administered in that Presidency—Kakarlapudi Sitaramraj v. Uppalapudi Janakayya (9). In this Madras case, part-payments had been made and credited in discharge of the principal, and the action was brought for the principal balance and for interest exceeding that balance, and though the lower Court had [615] decreed the excess interest, the High Court varied the decree by allowing interest equal to the principal balance only.

On a careful consideration of all these authorities, we feel satisfied that the lower Court of appeal has correctly applied the damdupat rule in limiting the amount of the interest arrears to the principal balance due (Rs. 75), and awarding 150 rupees. A contrary interpretation would make this rule of equity, intended for the relief of debtors, press hard upon them in a way not contemplated by Hindu law.

We accordingly confirm the decree, and reject the appeal with costs.

CHAGANDAS MAGANDAS AND ANOTHER (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. GANSING VALAD ISHRAM (Original Defendant No. 1), *Respondent. [22nd July, 1895.]

Contribution—Mortgage—Sale of property subject to mortgage in execution of money decrees against mortgagors—Subsequent suit by mortgagee to recover his mortgage-debt by sale of part of mortgaged property only—Payment of mortgage-debt by holder of part of mortgaged property—Right on such payment to sue for contribution from other holders of the mortgaged property.

The owner of a portion of property comprised in a mortgage who, in order to save his share from sale, has satisfied a decree obtained by the mortgagee on the mortgage against him, can exact contribution from the owner of another portion of the mortgaged property who was not a defendant in the mortgagee's suit.

Jagat Narain v. Qutub Husain (1), followed.

[F., 20 M. 217.]

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur N. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge with appellate powers at Dhulia.

Suit for contribution.

In 1884, six brothers mortgaged certain property (Surveys Nos. 19 and 28 and other lands) to one Bhau. Subsequently certain money decrees were passed against the mortgagors and in execution the [616] mortgaged property was sold. At the sales defendant No. 1 (Gansing) bought Survey No. 19, one Chunilal bought Survey No. 28 and the plaintiff bought the rest of the land.

In 1889 the mortgagee (Bhau) sued the six mortgagors and the plaintiff and Chunilal to recover Rs. 2,800 (the mortgage-debt) by the sale of all the property except Survey No. 19 which was in the hands of Gansing (defendant No. 1) and he got a decree. In execution a part of the property was sold, and realised Rs. 860. In order to save his lands from sale, the plaintiff paid the balance of the decree. The plaintiff now sued Gansing (defendant No. 1) for Rs. 477-12-0 as contribution, alleging that to be the share of the mortgage-debt due from Survey No. 19. He claimed to recover this amount by the sale of No. 19 and from Gansing and the mortgagors personally.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Gansing (defendant No. 1) contended that he had purchased Survey No. 19 at an auction sale; that the plaintiff had voluntarily paid the balance of the mortgage debt, because the property purchased by him was superior in value to that purchased by others, and that he was not entitled to claim contribution.

The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the sum claimed by sale of Survey No. 19 and from defendants Nos. 2 and 3 (the mortgagors). On appeal the Judge raised the issue "Is the plaintiff entitled to claim contribution?" He found this issue in the negative, reversed the decree, and rejected the plaintiff's claim.

The plaintiffs preferred a second appeal.

Mahadeo V. Bhat, for the appellants (plaintiffs).—We paid the balance of the sum due under the decree to avoid the sale of the lands. All the mortgaged properties were liable to contribute rateably to the whole debt secured by the mortgage. Each sharer of the equity of redemption has to contribute in proportion to his share. When the whole mortgage-debt is apportioned on all the properties, a burden of Rs. 477-12-0 falls on Survey No. 19, which is in the possession of defendant No. 1. We rely on Jagat Narain v. Qutub Husain (1).

Balaji A. Bhagvat, for the respondent (defendant No. 1).—When Bhau Nathu brought a suit on his mortgage he omitted to claim [617] against Survey No. 19. He gave up his claim against that part of the property. He did not make Gansing a party to the suit. The plaintiff was a party to that suit and he ought to have insisted that Gansing should be joined. If he had done so, then his due proportion of the mortgage-debt would have been required from Gansing. But the plaintiff is now estopped from making this claim.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—This case is on all fours with that of Jagat Narain v. Qutub Husain (1) and we follow the decision. The correct finding on the second issue raised in the lower appellate Court is, therefore, in the affirmative. As the lower appellate Court wrongly found on this issue, and disposed of the appeal on a preliminary point, we reverse its decree, and remand the appeal to be disposed of on the merits. Costs to abide the result.

Decree reversed and case remanded.

THE MUNICIPALITY OF BOMBAY v. SHAPURJI DINSHA.*
[22nd July, 1895.]

Bombay Municipal Act (III of 1888), s. 248—Fazendar—Fazendar not liable to provide privy accommodation—"Owner"—"Premises"—Meaning of the words—Construction—Construction of statutes.

A fazendar is not the person liable, as owner of the premises, to provide privy accommodation under s. 248 of the Bombay Municipal Act (III of 1888) (1), the beneficial owner of the house built on the fazendar's land being "the owner" within the meaning of the section.

Per RANADE, J.—The word "premises" in s. 248 (1) of the Municipal Act is used with reference to the building to which the privy belongs.

THIS was a reference by W. R. Hamilton, Second Presidency [618] Magistrate, under s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The reference was as follows:—

"Under s. 432, Criminal Procedure Code, I have the honour to refer for the opinion of the High Court a question of law, namely, the precise meaning which should be attached to the words 'owner' and 'premises' in s. 248 of the Bombay Municipal Act.

"2. Some time ago a native gentleman complained to the Municipal Commissioner of the filthy state of an oart or wadi in Mahim which was used for natural purposes by the residents in the wadi more than 100 in number. The Commissioner in consequence required several of the owners of the huts to construct suitable privies, and on their failing to comply prosecuted them. It then appeared that these persons were tenants of a fazendar, and that while they were owners of these huts, the land on which the huts stood, belonged to the fazendar to whom they paid ground-rent. None of these persons had any land appurtenant to the huts where they could build a privy, and under the circumstances it was impossible for them to carry out the orders of the Commissioner, unless they pulled down a part of the huts for the purpose of a privy.

"3. It will be noticed that s. 250 (e) of the Municipal Act prevents the Commissioner from destroying any portion of a permanent building for the improvement of an existing privy, and this would indicate very strongly that he could not destroy a building in order to erect a privy where none

(1) Section 248 of Act III of 1888 (Bombay):—

(1) If it appears to the Commissioner that any premises are without a water-closet or privy or urinal, or that the existing water-closet or privy or urinal available for the occupiers of any premises is insufficient, inefficient or, for sanitary reasons, objectionable, the Commissioner shall, by written notice, require the owner of such premises to provide a water-closet, or privy or urinal or an additional water-closet, privy or urinal, as the case may be, to his satisfaction.

(2) Provided that where a water-closet, privy or urinal has been or is used in common by the occupiers of two or more premises, or if in the opinion of the Commissioner a water-closet, privy or urinal may be so used and is sufficient for all the occupiers of the two or more premises using or intending to use the same, he need not require a separate water-closet or privy or urinal to be provided on or for each of the said premises.

ever existed before. The charge against the tenants was, therefore, withdrawn, and the owner of the wadi, the fazendar himself, was called upon to provide a privy for the use of the tenants in the wadi. He has not done so and disputes his liability.

"4. Mr. Roughton, his solicitor, has argued that the fazendar gets a ground-rent or quit-rent only for the sites occupied by the huts, and he has no rights over the huts themselves, which may be inherited or sold without interference on his part. He referred to Perry's Oriental Cases as explanatory of the limited rights of a fazendar, and contended that 'owner' is defined in the Municipal Act to mean the person who receives the rent of the premises, and that rent does not mean ground-rent; that he is not the owner of the premises, but merely of a ground-rent issuing out of the premises, and he concluded by stating that the fazendar would not object to allow tenants more lands for the purpose of a privy, provided they would pay a ground-rent for the land so assigned.

"5. Mr. Crawford for the Municipality urged that if the fazendar cannot be compelled to build privies, the Act would be a dead letter. Section 248 empowers the Commissioner to call upon owners of premises to provide privies, and 'premises' may mean either the whole wadi or the separate occupancies of each tenant. He cited an unreported case, Smith v. The Municipal Commissioner (Suit 41 of 1891), in which the meaning of the word 'premises' was discussed by the High Court in connection with s. 142 of the Municipal Act, when it was held that it may mean a single building, a piece of land, or several buildings or pieces of land constituting in the aggregate a distinct property. The object of the section was to protect the municipal [619] revenue, and a construction was not to be adopted which would make it nugatory if any other constructions which will effect the object of the Act can fairly be placed on the language of the clause. In the same sense Mr. Crawford contended that a construction should be put upon the word 'premises' in s. 248 which should compel the fazendar to carry out the Act and provide a privy where a privy is necessary. He also argued that as the fazendar received the ground-rent for the sites occupied by huts, he, in fact, received rent within the meaning of the word 'owner' in s. 3 (m), and he pointed out that if the fazendar cannot be compelled to build a privy, the nuisance must continue for ever, and he, therefore, urged that a construction should be put upon the section which would make it workable. He urged that, considering the importance of the case, the question might be referred to the High Court for decision.

"6. The question is certainly important, for there are many properties held on fazendari tenure in which tenants have no land upon which to build privies, and the effect of a decision against fazendars would be to compel them to provide privies and privy sites for a large number of huts with which they have no concern except as recipients of a ground-rent. It was pointed out that the buildings at Dhobi Talao stand on ground belonging to fazendars, and that they might be compelled to provide costly privies in large buildings occupied by hundreds of people where the only income they derive from these properties is a nominal ground-rent. In the interests of fazendars, it would be important to define rent as the full competitive rent depending upon contract and not as the nominal and customary rent paid merely in recognition of the alternate interest of the fazendars in the land.

"7. On the other hand it is impossible to compel tenants to build privies where they have no land on which to build. In this particular case the fazendar professes his willingness to assign land for privies, provided the tenants pay an additional rent, and the difficulty might be got over by mutual arrangement. But there may be cases in which the fazendar might refuse to assign land, and then as long as such places are without privies, there must be a nuisance. But this state of things would disappear gradually as old huts or houses require to be rebuilt, for under s. 247 the new building must be provided with a privy. In this very wadi the houses which have been rebuilt have privies attached to them, and in course of time the whole must have privies. The nuisance is, therefore, being quietly, although slowly, abated, and I am not prepared to say that a construction should be put upon the Act which would suppress the mischief and provide the remedy at the expense of fazendars who have a very limited and nominal interest in the sites occupied by tenants. The tenants create the nuisance, and primarily they should provide the remedy where this can be done, but where it cannot be done, it may be left to stand over until the tenant is obliged to rebuild.

"8. In s. 234 (b) the word 'building' is used as distinct from the 'premises appurtenant thereto.' In s. 247 the word 'building' alone is used. It seems, however, to be implied that the building and the premises should be, under the contract, of one and the same owner. In s. 248 the word 'premises' is used and appears to mean the building and premises appurtenant thereto held by one and the same owner. In the case of the wadi the buildings belong to tenants, but the land on which they stand belongs to the fazendar, and there are no premises appurtenant to the buildings. [620] The action of the Municipality is intended apparently to force the owner of adjoining premises to provide privies for the use of other people. These buildings may be assumed to have stood in this wadi for generations and they were built without privies long before the Municipal Act was passed. The common practice in suburban or rural places is to use the adjoining fields or jungles for the purposes of nature, and the Municipal Act is hardly applicable to such places. It is designed for the ordinary conditions of urban residences and workshops, and it would be a hardship to enforce the law in suburban places more strictly than the occasion warrants. The Act itself provides in s. 250 that improvements in existing privies should be made gradually and considerately, and when there are no privies, they may be required to be built, but every new building must have a privy. Under the circumstances it would seem to be prudent to wait until the buildings in the wadi are rebuilt, when the municipal requirements might be enforced."

Under the circumstances above stated the Magistrate referred the following questions for the opinion of the High Court :—

"1. Whether under the circumstances disclosed the fazendar (accused) is liable under s. 248, Bombay Act III of 1888, to provide a privy in this wadi for the use of the owners and occupiers of the huts which have no privies attached to them ?

"2. Does the word 'owner' in s. 248 include a fazendar who receives the ground-rent of sites occupied by huts and who has no interest in the huts or the rents of the huts ? The word 'owner' is defined in s. 3 (m) as the person who receives the rent of the premises."

The reference was heard by a Division Bench (Jardine and Ranade, JJ.).

Russell (with Messrs. Roughton and Byrne), for the fazendar.—The question is whether a fazendar in the island of Bombay is "owner of the premises" within the meaning of s. 248, so as to be liable to provide privy accommodation. A fazendar as owner of the soil is only entitled to a nominal quit-rent, which is not liable to enhancement—Doe dem Dorabji Daji Santuk v. The Bishop of Bombay (1). The huts built on the fazendari land belong to the tenants. They live there, and can realise rent if they let those huts. They are, therefore, the beneficial owners of the premises, and as such liable to provide the necessary accommodation. The word "owner" in s. 3, cl. (m), of the Municipal Act is used in a sense similar to that in which the same word is used in s. 3 of Stat. 18 and 19 Vict., c. 122. It applies to every person who is in possession or receipt of the whole or any part of the rents and profits of any land or tenement. It applies to the case of buildings which are either [621] actually let or are capable of being let. And the person is called "owner" who has the immediate right of letting them: see Caudwell v. Hanson (2); Evelyn v. Whichcord (3); Maurilyan v. Labalmondiere (4). The word "owner" is also held to include an occupier: see Lewis v. Arnold (5); Parker v. Inge (6); Cook v. Montague(7); Woodard v. Billericay Highway Board (8). I submit, therefore, that "the owner" contemplated by s. 248 is owner of the buildings to which a privy, urinal, &c., is attached. The Legislature could not have meant to attack the whole class of fazendars. If a fazendar were compelled to build a privy, he would have to alter the houses built on his land by his tenants, thereby rendering himself liable for trespass. The proper construction to put on this section would be to apply the expression "owners of such premises" the owners of buildings for which a privy accommodation has to be made.

Macpherson (Acting Advocate-General) (with Mr. L. Crawford), for the Municipality.—The expression "premises" s. 248 should be read as applicable to the whole oart and not merely to the huts built therein. The oart is walled round on all sides, contains twenty-two houses and is held on fazendari tenure. The tenant gets merely his house and nothing more and pays quit-rent. Of course I cannot argue that a fazendar is an owner. A fazendar gets a quit-rent. Unless "premises" means the whole oart, s. 248 of the Act will often remain a dead letter. The Public Health Act, 1875 (Stat. 38 and 39 Vict., c. 55), s. 4, gives a wide definition; Stat. 31 and 32 Vict., c. 130, Artizans Act, has a narrower one. The twenty-two tenants use the whole oart, the fazendar is the owner of the whole oart, and it will be no hardship to him if he is compelled to provide privy accommodation.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The Presidency Magistrate has referred two questions of law under s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (X of 1882) along with some statement of the case and of the particular facts found. We take these to be that there is no [622] privy accommodation for the families dwelling in the twenty-two houses built under the palm trees in an oart at Mahim, which oart belongs to the accused fazendar, and that these families use the land of the oart as a privy, as in Esubai v. Damodar (9). The Municipal Commissioner on complaint by a neighbour of the stench and nuisance so caused has called on the fazendar to provide privy accommodation. The Magistrate assumes in his second question that the fazendar is not the owner of the houses, though he is the owner of the land on which they stand, for which he receives ground rents from the owners of the houses. The latter do not own or rent any of the land there, except what their houses cover. Section 3 (m) of Bombay Act III of 1888 being evidently modelled on similar sections in Acts of Parliament dealing for sanitary purposes with owners and occupiers of property, Mr. Russell, as counsel for the fazendar, rightly rested his argument on English cases dealing with the word "owner," and the question which in a variety of ways has occupied the Judges of England in construing divers statutes as to which of the persons holding an interest in a property is primarily liable as owner to fulfil the requirements of the statute. It was admitted at the hearing in this Court that s. 248 is enabling; the object is clearly to give powers to the Municipal Commissioner to get these nuisances abated. The suggestion that in the slow course of years the nuisance may disappear as new houses replace the present ones, is not relevant to the questions of law, and we cannot interfere with the Commissioner or tell him how to use his discretion. The families must not be clothed with a privilege to commit a nuisance which it is the object of the impartial law to abate; and the Magistrate may have to put that law in force, even if its provisions will have a harsh operation. See In re Ganesh Narayan Sathe (1). Still it does not appear that the person liable will be put to any hardship more than usual, as everybody who improves his premises is put to some expense. As the law does not require each person to erect a privy on his own premises, it does not appear that there is any need to pull down the houses. If the house-owners are the persons liable, they can apparently combine to hire land for erecting proper privies.

[623] The real question is whether the fazendar as owner of the land or the tenant paying ground rent as owner of the house is the person primarily liable as owner of the premises. The word "owner" is elastic in meaning, as is said in the English cases, where arguments from convenience and common sense have always weighed with the Judges. Mr. Russell relied on Caudwell v. Hanson (2), Evelon v. Whichcord (3), Mouriyan v. Labalmondiere (4). We agree with him that the application of the word "owner" in s. 3 of 18 and 19 Victoria, chap. 122, has a resemblance to the construction of the same word in s. 3 of the Bombay Act. The effect of these cases is that the owner in fee entitled to a ground-rent or quit-rent is not to be taken to be the person primarily liable as owner, where there is a lessee or other person in beneficial occupation actually getting the rents or capable of getting it if he chooses to let the premises. The reasons given by Lush, J., in Caudwell v. Hanson (2), that the statute was not intended to require investigations into titles, and that the owner of the house was the beneficial owner, may be reasonably extended to the present case.

I will now refer to several other cases which may perhaps assist the Magistrates in the like perplexities. Cook v. Montague (5) is authority for inferring that, in regard to notice about defective construction of a structural work, a privy, the beneficial owner of a house should be treated as the person first to be served. He was held by Blackburn, J., to be the "owner of the premises." This case does not conflict with Parker v. Inge (6) which deals with the remedy the procedure affords to an owner served with a notice to improve a structural defect in a privy in his house, and who, after using due diligence to get his lessee to allow him to put it right, is baffled by the absence of power to enter the premises during the period of the lease. The case also affirms the principle that the beneficial owner of the house is the person who ought to incur the expense of altering the structure; that principle appears to fix the house-owner here who would get the whole benefit, and not the fazendar, who on [624] the statement sent up by the Magistrate has no interest in the house, whose interest is confined to a quit-rent for the soil. That the person who gets the benefit should bear the burden is affirmed in Lewis v. Arnold (1) where the phrase "owner of lands and buildings" is treated as meaning the occupier, and is applied in regard to expenses of a fire-brigade to the farmer whose haystack had been burnt, and not to his landlord. The same interpretation to avoid certain inconveniences mentioned by the Judges was applied in Woodard v. Billericay Highway Board (2), as to the lopping of trees overhanging a highway. There Jessel, M. R., remarked that every man in occupation of land has a kind of limited ownership, and he read the word "owner of the lands" along with an interpretation clause which stated that "owner shall be understood to include occupier," showing the word means occupier when the person in occupation is not the full owner. The Advocate-General, who appeared for the Municipality, argued that in s. 248 the word "premises" should be treated as meaning the whole oart so as to fix the fazendar as owner. This would be contrary to the spirit of the decisions I have reviewed.

The Magistrate should, therefore, be informed that the fazendar is not the person liable, as owner of the premises, to provide the privy accommodation, the beneficial owner of the house built on the fazendar's land being the owner within the meaning of the statutable provision. Under s. 433 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the Municipal Commissioner is directed to pay the costs of this reference.

RANADE, J.—I concur. As the reasons which lead me to this conclusion are, however, somewhat different from those stated by Mr. Justice Jardine, I deem it necessary to state them here with some fulness. In my opinion, the decision of the question referred to this Court depends not so much upon the proper construction of the word "owner" by itself, but of the words "owner of such premises" used in s. 248 of the Municipal Act. If the word "owner" stood by itself, it might, as defined in cl. (m) of s. 3, apply equally to the fazendar who owns the land as to the owners of the [625] huts built on that land, for he receives the rent of his land just as much as the owners of the huts might receive the rent of the huts if they let them to others and did not occupy them.

The proper construction of the section thus turns more upon the interpretation of the words "such premises," which limit the wider scope of the word "owner" used in it. Section 248 enacts that "if it appears to the Commissioner that any premises are without a water closet, privy, or urinal or the existing water closet, privy, or urinal available for the occupants of any premises is insufficient or inefficient, ... the Commissioner shall by written notice require the owner of such premises to provide a water closet, privy, or urinal. . . . A clear distinction is made here between the owner and occupier of the premises, and the obligation to construct the privy is placed on the owner of such premises. Taken in its context, the word "premises" here cannot properly be applied to the land, and obviously applies to buildings erected on the land. The preceding s. 247 makes it unlawful to erect any new building, or rebuild any building, without a sufficient water closet, privy, or urinal. New erections being thus provided for, the next two sections relate to old buildings, s. 248 to buildings for private residence, and s. 249 to buildings intended for public use, such as markets, railway stations, factories, docks, wharfs, &c. In the first case, the responsibility is placed on the owners of such premises, and in the second, on account of their importance, on the owners or occupiers of the said premises, i.e., factories, &c., to provide sufficient accommodation in the way of water closets, privies, &c. Section 250 lays down the conditions which regulate the efficiency of existing privies in both cases. The words used are: "The owner or occupier of any premises on which there is a privy shall leave between such privy and any building or place used or intended to be used for human residence (s. 248), or in which any persons may be employed in any manufacture, trade, or business (s. 249) an airspace of a certain width, &c." The next s. (251) refers to similar regulations about water closets. All these provisions seem to confine and narrow the more general meaning of the word "premises" used in s. 248 to buildings, i.e., the huts in the land in dispute. A careful perusal of other parts of the Act satisfies me that the word "premises" is not used throughout the Act in one and the same sense, and that its sense [626] has to be determined in connection with the context. It is used in a more general sense so as to include lands and buildings in the sections which relate to the taxation of property (ss. 159, 170, 209, and 226). In s. 172 it is used in the narrower sense, coming as it does after hotel, club. In ss. 174-175 it is used in the wider sense in juxtaposition with "land" and "building," as being a taxable unit defined in s. 158. In the sections which relate to drainage the word is used in the larger sense (ss. 227-228, 230-233, &c.). Section 234 is important in this connection; for, in respect of drains, it is the parallel section to s. 248, which relates to water closets, privies, and urinals. In this section the word "premises" is mentioned as something appurtenant to the building newly built or rebuilt. The context determines its sense and narrows it. It is used in this same narrow sense in s. 242, so as to limit it to land unbuilt in which drains are constructed. In the sections relating to buildings the word is intended to have reference thereto. In the sanitary regulation sections, such as 377, it obviously has reference to the land overgrown with vegetation, &c. It is hardly necessary to notice the other sections of the Act in which the word "premises" occurs.

The instances given above will show clearly that the word is not used throughout in the same sense, and may signify land or building, or land and building, or land appurtenant to a building, according as the context requires it. In the section now under consideration, it is obviously used with reference to the building to which the privy belongs. Quite apart from the provisions of the Act, the primary liability to have a privy, water closet, or urinal must attach to the owner of the building, and not to the owner of the land in which the building is situated, when the two owners happen, as in this case, to be different persons. The words "such premises" must, therefore, be construed in this case to refer to the huts for whose residents privy accommodation is necessary. The owners of the huts, therefore, are the persons directly contemplated in this section as the persons on whom the obligation rests to comply with the Commissioner's notice. They were, in fact, accordingly in the first instance served with notices, and it was chiefly on account of the difficulty created by s. 250 (a) of finding room in the small huts and of getting unbuilt land outside the huts on which to erect [627] the privies, that proceedings appear to have been taken against the owner of the land, though he had no interest or property in the huts, receives no rent therefrom, and could not pull them down. The argument based on inconvenience may be a matter for executive consideration. We do not think it is insuperable, for the Commissioner may erect public privies under s. 252. Any how we cannot take it into consideration in interpreting the precise words of s. 248. The same reasoning which would seek to make the fazendars liable under this section might be applied with equal effect to Government, where it has let State lands on long leases to private persons for building purposes. Such an application could never have been in contemplation in enacting these regulations for promoting the sanitary efficiency of private houses.

For the reasons stated above, I am of opinion that the questions referred to this Court must be answered in the negative.

NANA BIN BHIKAPPA RAHATE (Original Defendant No. 1), Appellant v. APPA BIN BABAJI RAHATE (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent.

[23rd July, 1895.]

Possession—Joint property—Suit by co-owner for exclusive possession—Practice—Procedure.

The plaintiff sued for possession of certain land. The lower Court held that the land was the joint property of the plaintiff and defendant, but finding that the plaintiff had been in exclusive possession allowed his claim and gave him a decree. On second appeal,

Held, that exclusive possession could not be awarded unless exclusive title was proved. On plaintiff's application, which was not opposed by the defendant, the decree of the lower Court was varied, and the plaintiff was awarded joint possession of the property in suit.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Chintaman Narayan Bhat, Joint First Class Subordinate Judge of Satara, with appellate powers. Suit for possession of land. The plaintiff alleged that he had purchased it in the year 1889 and had [628] leased it to one Bhagai, whom the defendants had wrongfully dispossessed on the 16th August, 1890. The plaintiff had previously brought a possessory suit against the defendants, but his claim had been rejected.

The first defendant alleged that the land was the joint property of himself and the plaintiff, and he contended that the plaintiff's only right was to partition, and that he could not sue for possession.

Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 did not contest the plaintiff's claim.

The Subordinate Judge found that the land was the joint property of the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 and he dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiff's proper remedy was a suit for partition.

* Second Appeal, No. 878 of 1893.

1895 JULY 23. APPELLATE CIVIL. 20 B. 627.

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge found that the property was joint, but that the plaintiff had enjoyed it separately since the time of its acquisition. He held that the first defendant had no right to take it out of the plaintiff's possession, and he, therefore, reversed the decree and allowed the plaintiff's claim.

Defendant No. 1 appealed to the High Court.

Balaji A. Bhagvat, for the appellant (defendant No. 1).—The plaintiff sought to recover possession on the ground that he was the sole owner of the land. The Judge found that the land was joint property, and the plaintiff, therefore, has no right to exclusive possession. The plaintiff must sue for partition—Parashram v. Miraji (1).

Mahadeo V. Bhat, for the respondent (plaintiff).—The plaintiff has been in possession since the land was purchased. He leased it to Bhagai, from whom defendant No. 1 took wrongful possession. The defendant is a trespasser and ought not to be allowed to retain possession which he has wrongfully taken. The question is whether a co-parcener who is not in possession can dispossess a tenant of a co-parcener who is in possession. We submit that he cannot. He may sue to set aside the alienation of a co-parcener, so far as his interest is concerned, or he may sue for a general partition. If the plaintiff cannot retain exclusive possession he should be given [629] joint possession with the defendant—Balaji Anant v. Ganesh Janardan (2) ; Krishnarav v. Govind Trimbak (3) ; Mahabalaya v. Timaya (4) ; Wahid Alam v. Safat Alam (5); and Kallapa v. Venkatesh (6).

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—Plaintiff having failed in a possessory suit brought this action to obtain possession of a certain piece of land of which he alleged he was the owner by purchase in October, 1889. The defendant No. 1's contention was that the land was the joint property of himself and the plaintiff, but he asserted his own sole right to retain possession, and said that plaintiff's remedy was to bring a suit for partition. The other defendants were tenants only of the land.

The first Court found that the land was joint, and dismissed the suit. The Subordinate Judge remarks :—"As the defendant No. 1 has a right to retain the possession of the property in dispute as a tenant-in-common, the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain this suit. His proper remedy, if so advised, is a suit for partition." The appellate Court, though it agreed that the land was joint, awarded the plaintiff exclusive possession. The Judge says: "Although the land was brought out of the joint funds, still the plaintiff has been enjoying it separately from the date of its acquisition, and defendant No. 1 cannot take it collusively or forcibly out of the hands of plaintiff's tenant. Defendant No. 1 can claim a share in the land and other undivided property, if any, in a properly constituted partition suit." He refused, however, to give either mesne profits or costs.

In our opinion, the decree of the lower appellate Court is wrong and cannot be maintained. Unless exclusive title is proved, exclusive possession cannot be awarded in a suit of this nature (see the ruling of this Court in Parashram v. Miraji (1). The plaintiff failed to prove his exclusive title, and, therefore, the decree of the first Court dismissing his suit is strictly right. Upon the state of facts, however, that after a full inquiry the lower Courts found to exist, it was open to either of them to have given the plaintiff a decree for joint possession, that being the only relief to which on those facts he was [630] entitled. Apparently no such request was made to those Courts, each of the parties being anxious only to establish his own right to exclusive possession and so to throw on the other the onus of bringing a partition suit.

In this Court the plaintiff has asked us to give him this relief, and his right to obtain it is not seriously disputed by the other side. Amending, therefore, the decree of the lower appellate Court, we award the plaintiff joint possession of the property in suit. Had the defendant No. 1 not contended for his own right to exclusive possession, we should have given him his costs, but as it is, we think that plaintiff should bear his own, and pay a moiety of the costs of the defendant No. 1 throughout.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Candy.

RAMRAO TATYAJI PATIL (Original Plaintiff), Applicant v. BABAJI DHONDJI BIBVE (Original Defendant), *Opponent.

[26th July, 1895.]

Mamlatdars Act (Bombay Act III of 1876)—Jurisdiction of Mamlatdar—Irregular decree of Mamlatdar made by consent of parties—Subsequent refusal by Mamlatdar to order execution of decree—Extraordinary jurisdiction of High Court—Questions of fact—Practice—Procedure.

The applicant brought two possessory suits against the opponent in the Mamlatdar's Court for the recovery of certain pieces of land. By consent, decrees were passed in these suits, that unless the opponent paid a certain sum of money to the applicant within two months, the latter should get possession. After the expiration of two months the applicant, alleging that the money had not been paid as agreed, applied for execution of the decrees. The Mamlatdar found that the money had been tendered to the applicant, but had been wrongfully refused by him. He ordered execution to issue as to costs, but declined to make any order as to possession. The applicant thereupon applied to the High Court in its extraordinary jurisdiction and alleged that the money had not been duly tendered.

Held, that the decrees were such as the Mamlatdar could not legally make under the provisions of the Mamlatdars' Act (Bombay Act III of 1876), and the consent of parties could not give him power to do so.

[631] Held, also, that the High Court would not go into the question as to the due tender of the money. It was not open to the High Court, in the exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction, to go into this question of fact, nor would it be proper to further the execution of an irregular decree, especially as the applicant had a clear remedy by suit.

APPLICATIONS under the extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the orders of Rao Saheb P. K. Shahane, Mamlatdar of Haveli, in the Poona District.

On the 5th September, 1891, the opponent sold two pieces of land to the applicant and subsequently leased them from him for a year under two rent-notes, dated 26th October, 1892. At the end of the year, however, he (the opponent) did not give up possession, and the applicant accordingly filed two possessory suits against him in the Mamlatdar's Court.

While the suits were pending, however, the parties made an agreement, that if the opponent (the defendant in the suits) should return to the applicant (the plaintiff) within two months the purchase-money which he had paid for the lands, and should also pay the amount of rent due under the rent-notes, he (the opponent) should keep the lands, but that, in default, the applicant should recover possession through the bhag karkun.

Accordingly on the 17th February, 1894, a consent decree was passed in each of the above suits that "should the defendant fail to satisfy the plaintiff in two months from this day in accordance with the mutual understanding come to between them, steps for delivering possession should be taken through the bhag karkun. All costs on defendant (opponent)." The opponent failed to pay the amount within two months, and thereupon the applicant presented a darkhast for the execution of the decrees as to costs and possession. The Mamlatdar ordered execution to issue as to costs only, and declined to make any order as to possession.

The applicant thereupon applied to the High Court in its extraordinary jurisdiction praying that the Mamlatdar should be directed to give him immediate possession of the lands. A rule nisi was granted requiring the opponent to show cause why the execution of the decrees should not be allowed, and the Mamlatdar was called upon to report on the applications. The Mamlatdar [632] reported that the money offered by the opponent had been wrongfully refused by the applicant.

Mahadeo B. Chavbal (with Narayan M. Samarth) appeared for the applicant in support of the rule.—The Mamlatdar having passed the decree with the consent of the parties, he could not refuse to execute it in its entirety. It was wrong to issue execution in part. The Mamlatdar does not say in his report which was called for by this Court, that the money was paid or even tendered to us within two months. It was incumbent on the opponent to pay the money within that time, and it is not alleged that he did so. If the money had been brought to us within the time agreed on, we could not have refused to accept it.

Shivram V. Bhandarkar appeared for the opponent to show cause. —The Mamlatdar's decrees are illegal and, therefore, they cannot be executed. The decrees being illegal and inoperative, it was not necessary for us to comply with them by paying the amount within the prescribed time.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The decree is one that the Mamlatdar could not legally make under the provisions of the Mamlatdars' Act—cf. Shidlingapa v. Karibasapa (1)—and consent of parties could not give him power to make it. The complaint of the applicant, however, is, not that the decree is bad, but that the Mamlatdar has wrongly found that the money was paid within the two months' time allowed for its payment, and has wrongly, therefore, refused to give him the possession which was decreed to him if the money was not paid. He asks us to find that the full amount of money ordered to be paid was not duly tendered by the opponent, and to direct the Mamlatdar to put him into possession. We are of opinion that it is not open to us in the exercise of our extraordinary jurisdiction to go into this question of fact, and that it would not be proper for us to further the execution of the irregular decree, especially as the applicant has a clear remedy by suit. We, therefore, discharge the rule in both cases, but, under the circumstances, without costs.

Rule discharged.

[633] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Sir Charles Sargent, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Farran.

MANCHUBHAI NAVALCHAND (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. JOHN H. TOD AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), *Respondents.

[14th December, 1894.]

Principal and agent—Consignment for sale—Unauthorized sale by agent below limit—Measure of damages.

The measure of damages, in a case where an agent has in breach of his duty sold goods of his principal below the limit placed upon them by the principal, is the loss which the principal has sustained, and if he has sustained no loss he can only ask for nominal damages.

[D, 12 M.L.J. 375 (378).]

THE plaintiff, a Bombay merchant, sued the defendants, a London firm carrying on business in Bombay by their constituted attorney, to recover a sum of Rs. 6,144-1-6 deposited by the plaintiff in the Bombay Bank in his own name and in that of the Agra Bank on behalf of the defendants.

This amount represented the difference between the plaintiff's and defendants' statement of accounts current between them, and the difference included the equivalent, in Rupees, of £280—about Rs. 4,000 at the exchange of the day—which the plaintiff claimed to be entitled to charge to the defendants as the difference between £270, the price at which their London firm had sold a parcel of pearls (No. 183) which he had consigned to them for sale, and £550, the limit he had placed on the parcel.

The suit was heard by Mr. Justice Parsons, who decided that the terms of the agreement between the parties as to the consignment justified the defendants' sale of the pearls, and disallowed the plaintiff's claim on that ground, and also found on the facts that the plaintiff had not proved that he had sustained any damages.

The plaintiff appealed from this decision.

The following are the grounds of appeal material to this report:—

(1) The learned Judge should have held that the plaintiff was entitled to be credited with the sum of £550, the limit placed by him upon the parcel of pearls No. 183.

[634] (2) The said learned Judge should in any case have held that the plaintiff was entitled to a larger sum than the said parcel of pearls had realized when sold by the defendants.

(3) The said learned Judge should have held that the defendants were not entitled to sell the said parcel of pearls at the time when they sold the same.

(4) That the defendants committed a breach of their contract with the plaintiff by selling the said parcel when they did, and that the plaintiff sustained damages by such sale, and the said Judge should have assessed such damages.

The appeal came on for hearing before Sir Charles Sargent, Chief Justice, and Farran, J.

B. Tyabji and Lowndes, for appellant.

Lang (Advocate General) and Scott, for respondents.

* Suit No. 692 of 1891. Appeal No. 811.

B. Tyabji.—We are entitled to the difference between the price at which the parcel was sold and our limit price. We put our own value upon the pearls, as we were entitled to do, and if defendant thought that value wrong, he should have returned them to us. There is no question of market value here, where the goods are fancy goods. This case resembles that of a picture. In such cases there is no market value. The test is what is its worth to the owner.

Scott, contra.—There is no evidence of damages here. They must be proved to be recovered—Mayne, pp. 537-8; Cassaboglou v. Gibb (1). If there has been any breach of duty here, it has been a mere technical one, and has caused no loss to the plaintiff. The only damages recoverable in such a case would be the difference between the price realized and the price the plaintiff would have to pay to repurchase similar goods.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, J. (after finding on the facts that the defendants were not justified under the circumstances in selling the parcel at a price lower than the limit placed on it by the plaintiff, and were, therefore, liable to the plaintiff for any damages which he could show resulted to him from the improper sale) continued:—The form of the action is not one actually sounding in damages, [635] but as the suit was brought for the express purpose of raising this question, counsel for the respondents took no objection on that ground and expressly invited us to determine the case upon the merits. The appeal, therefore, raises the interesting question what the measure of damages is when an agent sells goods, such as pearls, consigned to him for sale, below the limits placed upon them by his principal and without being able to justify the sale by the terms of his contract. Counsel for the appellant contended that the measure of damages in such a case was the difference between the price fixed by the limit and the price which the pearls actually realized. It must be taken, he said, that the agent as between him and the principal sold the pearls at the fixed limit and should be debited with their price ascertained in accordance with it. He argued it was the same in principle as the case of a purchaser in a shop taking away an article such as a picture and insisting on paying for it a lower price than that placed upon it by the shopkeeper. The latter, he said, would be entitled to recover the price he fixed upon his picture irrespective of its real value.

That case, however, sounding in contract rather than in tort or on the case, is not the one with which we have to deal. What we have to determine is what is the measure of damages where an agent in breach of his duty sells the goods of his principal. The answer appears to me to be that the measure of damages in such a case is the loss which the principal sustains by the sale, and if he has suffered no loss he can only ask for nominal damages. Mr. B. Tyabji cited no authority in support of his argument, but on the other hand the general principle, as I have stated it, is laid down in Mayne on Damages (2nd Ed.), p. 411, and Sedgwick on Damages, p. 693, and that principle is the one which, under different circumstances it is true, was adopted in Cassaboglou v. Gibb (1). Where a unique article like a picture is sold, theoretically the most correct measure of damages would be not the fancy price which the owner placed upon it, but the price which he would have to pay in order to repurchase it. In the case of articles of common merchandise, the state of the market subsequent to the sale would afford the criterion by which to fix the loss. If the market rose, the principal would sustain, and could [636] prove a loss: if it fell, he could not, as he could without loss put himself in his original position by purchasing merchandize of the same quality. In the case of an intermediate article like pearls, unless there were a rise in the market, he could purchase similar pearls at the same rate. The damages would be the expenses of the sale and of the repurchase. In all cases alike, however, the principal must prove his damages, and if he can show none they can be no more than nominal. On this point the Court below has, in my opinion, come to a correct conclusion. If Mr. Tyabji's argument were adopted, his measure of damages must, I think, logically be applied to all classes of goods alike; and applied to ordinary merchandize, it would amount almost to an absurdity. In my judgment it cannot be applied to any.

An agreement, by which an insolvent who has obtained his personal but not his final discharge, without notice to the Official Assignee or his other creditors, settles the claim of one creditor, and by which that creditor agrees not to oppose his final discharge, is void as in fraud of the creditors and as inconsistent with the policy of the Insolvent Debtors' Act.

In a suit on a bond containing such an agreement, evidence is admissible on behalf of the obligor to prove that a recital in it that all the other creditors had been settled with, was untrue.

"(i) Whether a debt which has been inserted in an insolvent's schedule, and in respect of which he has obtained his personal discharge, and which has, moreover, been included in the judgment entered up against him, in favour of the Official Assignee, can form a good consideration for a new promise to pay the same debt?

In witness whereof, &c."

The following extract from the Chief Judge's judgment states the facts of the case:—

"There is no great difficulty in arriving at the true state of the facts of the case. On 12th December, 1890, the defendant filed his petition and schedule in the Insolvent Debtors' Court. In the schedule five creditors are mentioned: (1) the plaintiff in respect of a decree in High Court Suit No. 387 of 1890 against defendant and his mother Jinabai for Rs. 4,734-4-10, and the balance of a Small Cause Court decree Rs. 188-11-0; (2) a Marvadi for Rs. 1,000; (3) Pestonji Rustomji Kanga, in respect of a mortgage, dated 28th September, 1888, on land at Bhiwandi for Rs. 7,000 and also a promissory note on personal security for Rs. 500; (4) Jinabai, defendant's mother, in respect of two promissory notes for Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 2,000 respectively (of which Rs. 1,000 were paid off); and (5) another Marvadi for Rs. 200. The insolvency of defendant was proceeded with and his discharge was opposed by the plaintiff. He, however, obtained his personal discharge on the 11th April, 1892, and on the same day judgment was entered up against him in the name of the Official Assignee for Rs. 15,623-6-10, the amount of the debts stated in the schedule.

"Before his insolvency the defendant had contracted to sell the Bhiwandi property to Pirbhai Khakibhai and others for Rs. 11,000 subject to the mortgage of Pestonji Rustomji Kanga. It was referred to Mr. Bhaishankar Nanabhai, the mortgagee's solicitor, to take the account of what was due on the mortgage, and he ascertained the amount to be Rs. 11,037-3-6. Pirbhai Khakibhai and his brothers had agreed to be bound by the finding, and it was accordingly on the 6th February, 1894, made an order of the Court that they should pay the amount to the mortgagee, and that he should reconvey the property to them.

[640] "In the meanwhile, in 1893, the plaintiff had taken from the defendant the bond in this case. That bond is dated 7th June, 1893, and provides for the payment of Rs. 800 in cash by defendant, which was paid. The bond contains a recital that all the creditors of the defendant have been settled with, except the plaintiff, and it contains the conditions to the effect that defendant shall forthwith apply to have satisfaction of the judgment in favour of the Official Assignee entered up, and that defendant should then execute to plaintiff a conveyance of the Bhiwandi property, subject to the mortgage in favour of Pestonji Rustomji Kanga, and the amount thereby secured, or in case Pirbhai Khakibhai and his brothers should insist on carrying out the sale, then that defendant should execute in favour of plaintiff an assignment of his (defendant's) right, title and interest in the balance of the purchase-money, and in the event of defendant's failing to apply to the Court or execute such conveyance or assignment, then that if defendant should pay the plaintiff Rs. 1,600 the bond should be void: otherwise it should continue in full force and effect. On this state of things, three questions arise for determination: (1) Was there any consideration for this bond? (2) Is the bond a fraud on creditors? (3) Have the conditions been fulfilled to enable plaintiff to recover?"

Inverarity, for the plaintiff.—Is the agreement void? There is no authority for holding it to be an undue preference. There can be no undue preference after the date of the insolvency.

We say a person who has obtained his discharge can make any arrangement he likes; his after-acquired property does not belong to the Official Assignee, and till the Official Assignee intervenes he can do what he likes with it—Cohen v. Mitchell(1). The Chief Judge is wrong in saying that it ought to go to the Official Assignee. The object of entering into the bond was to get rid of the insolvency by getting satisfaction entered up on the judgment. If an insolvent has many creditors, he must, to effect this, go to them, and settle with them, one by one. There is no undue preference in this, unless the Official Assignee is entitled to the after-acquired property directly it is acquired.

There is ample consideration in our giving up a great part of our debt. We could not, after this, claim any dividend from the Official Assignee. Also by this arrangement we agree not to oppose the debtor's final discharge.

As to the evidence given to contradict the recital in the bond, we say the defendant is bound by the recital and estopped from saying it is untrue.

[641] Scott, for defendant.—There is no consideration. The debt existed before the insolvency and is no consideration after insolvency. Therefore, in this country at all events, the agreement is void. In India the exception to the rule that agreements without consideration are void under s. 25 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) only saves agreements barred by limitation. In England the rule was different. See Heather v. Webb (1).

Giving up part of an old debt is not a new consideration. The remedy of the judgment-creditor, moreover, is not gone, but only transferred to the Official Assignee.

There is no consent of the plaintiff in the bond to have satisfaction entered up. If he had so consented, he could have withdrawn the consent—Foakes v. Beer (2).

Had the Official Assignee after the execution of this document proceeded under the decree to recover the full amount, we should have been bound to pay—Peakman v. Harrison (3).

Cohen v. Mitchell only applies as between the Official Assignee and third parties.

Evidence can be given to show that the recital in the bond is untrue.

Inverarity in reply.—Section 63, Contract Act, is contrary to Foakes v. Beer. See Manohar Koyal v. Thakur Das (4).

JUDGMENT.

STRACHEY, J.—This is a case stated for the opinion of the High Court by the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Bombay. The facts are fully stated in the reference. The suit was for the recovery of Rs. 1,600 under a bond executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff on the 7th June, 1893. At the date of the execution of the bond the defendant was an insolvent who had obtained his personal discharge under s. 47, but not his final discharge under s. 59 or s. 60 of the Indian Insolvent Act, 11 and 12 Vict., c. 21, and against whom judgment had been entered up in the name of the Official Assignee under s. 86. The plaintiff was one of the scheduled creditors, his debt being for more than Rs. 4,000, [642] and he had opposed the insolvent's discharge. The bond recites the insolvency proceedings, and states that subsequently to the entering up of judgment the insolvent had settled with all his creditors except the plaintiff. That statement is found by the Chief Judge to be untrue. The bond then sets forth that the plaintiff had agreed to a proposal made by the insolvent to settle the claim for Rs. 4,000 odd in the manner following, namely, that the insolvent should pay Rs. 800 in cash; that he should immediately apply to the Insolvent Court to have satisfaction entered up on the judgment; that upon this being done, he should execute in favour of the plaintiff a conveyance of certain property subject to a mortgage; that if, owing to certain persons who had previously contracted to purchase the property insisting on carrying out their contract, this could not be done, he should execute an assignment to the plaintiff of his right, title and interest in the balance of the purchase-money; and that, in the event of his failing to apply to the Court and to execute the conveyance or assignment, he should pay to the plaintiff a further sum of Rs. 1,600 in cash. The Chief Judge dismissed the suit, subject to the opinion of this Court upon three questions which he has stated.

The first question is "whether a debt which has been inserted in an insolvent's schedule, and in respect of which he has obtained his personal discharge, and which has, moreover, been included in the judgment entered up against him in favour of the Official Assignee, can form a good consideration for a new promise to pay the same debt." If it were necessary to decide that question, I should have great difficulty in answering it in the affirmative. In England it is settled that a promise to pay a debt barred by bankruptcy is a mere nudum pactum, as there is no consideration for it—Jones v. Phelps (1); Heather v. Webb (2)—though it is binding if there is new consideration—Jakeman v. Cook (3). In India the same principle would apply to a promise by an insolvent without new consideration to pay a debt from which he had obtained his final discharge, the Contract Act containing no exception in favour of such promises such as s. 25 (3), in [643] favour of promises to pay debts barred by limitation. How far the principle would apply to a promise without new consideration to pay a debt in respect of which the insolvent has obtained only his personal and not his final discharge, which is included in the judgment entered up against him in favour of the Official Assignee, and as to which the creditor's remedy, though not, strictly speaking, barred, is transferred to the Official Assignee, who alone can recover the debt in the manner and subject to the conditions provided by the statute, is a question which we need not consider, because it has not really been argued before us. What the learned counsel for the plaintiff contended was that there was ample new consideration for the bond in suit. He argued that, in the first place, the plaintiff gave up a considerable part of the debt and impliedly assented to satisfaction being entered up on the judgment so far as concerned him, and that, secondly, he impliedly gave up his right to oppose the insolvent's final discharge. Whether this argument is sound, depends chiefly upon the construction to be placed upon the bond. Having regard to the document as a whole, and in particular to the recital that the insolvent had proposed to "settle the claim" of the plaintiff in the manner following, I think that the bond must be regarded as a compromise by which the plaintiff, in satisfaction of his claim for Rs. 4,000, agreed to accept from the defendant a present cash payment of Rs. 800, and either the execution of a conveyance or assignment or the payment of a further Rs. 1,600 in cash. I think that he impliedly gave up, in consideration of the bond, his right to share in any future rateable distribution under s. 86 of the Act. If, after the execution of the bond, any sum were obtained by the Official Assignee for the purpose of such distribution, it would under s. 86 be distributed according to the mode directed in the case of a dividend, and under s. 40, the plaintiff would have to prove his claim to share in the distribution in the same manner and subject to the like deductions, conditions and provisions as in the English Bankruptcy Acts for the time being in force. Under the rules contained in the second schedule of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, he would have to verify it by an affidavit showing its particulars, [644] and under Form 72 of the forms in the Appendix of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, made under s. 127 of the Act, the affidavit must state that the debt still remains due and unsatisfied, and that neither the claimant nor any person by his order has received any manner of satisfaction or security except as specified. If Rs. 800 or any other sum had been received on account of the scheduled debt, that would have to be stated in the affidavit, and the Official Assignee in making a rateable distribution under s. 86 would take such payment into account. If, upon any such claim being made, it were brought to the knowledge of the Official Assignee that the claim had been fully satisfied by payment or the acceptance of a bond or otherwise, he would disallow it. I understand that this represents the practice of the Official Assignee of the Insolvent Court at Bombay. Whether the Official Assignee, in addition to disallowing the claim, would or could take steps to recover, for the benefit of the creditors generally, so much of the money paid to the claimant as exceeded the sum to which he would be entitled on a rateable distribution, is another question. At all events, the plaintiff could not, in disregard of a settlement of this kind, still claim for the whole debt under s. 86, and that being so, I think that he does give up a part of his claim. It was contended for the defendant that the plaintiff would not be bound by any undertaking to give up part of the claim, and in support of this contention the case of Foakes v. Beer (1) was cited. That case, however, which was decided by the House of Lords with great reluctance, Lord Blackburn almost dissenting, does not represent the law of British India: see Dr. Whitley Stokes' note to s. 63 of the Contract Act: Pollock on Contracts (6th Ed.), p. 177, note (d); and Manohar Koyal v. Thakurdas Naskar (2). If this view is correct, if the plaintiff by accepting the bond impliedly gives up his right as a scheduled creditor under s. 86, I think it follows, as contended by Mr. Inverarity, that he also impliedly gives up the right, which is accessory to it, of opposing the final discharge of the insolvent. Whether a consideration of that kind is lawful, whether an agreement by a scheduled creditor not to oppose the discharge, in consideration of a promise by the insolvent to pay part of the debt, is in [645] accordance with public policy, is a point which I shall discuss in connection with the third question referred to us by the Chief Judge. So far as the first question is concerned, I think, for the reasons which I have given, that there is consideration for the bond in suit.

The second question is "whether evidence was admissible to contradict the recital contained in the bond that all the creditors of the obligor (other than the plaintiff) had been settled with." Upon this question I agree with the learned Chief Judge. The fact that the other creditors had not been settled with, is material upon the question whether the object of the bond was to give the plaintiff an unfair advantage over the other creditors. and whether the bond was for that reason void as a fraud upon them and as opposed to public policy. Evidence of such a fact, in contradiction of the terms of the bond, was admissible under the first proviso to s. 92 of the Evidence Act, and in accordance with the authorities cited in the notes to Collins v. Blantern (3) and para. 93 of Taylor on Evidence (9th Ed.). In such a case there is no estoppel. Apart from the principle that a party is not estopped from proving that the instrument was executed for an unlawful purpose, there is nothing to bring the facts of the present case within s. 115 of the Evidence Act. I am, therefore, of opinion that the second question must be answered in the affirmative.

The third question is "whether if such evidence be admissible, and it is shown that all the creditors other than the plaintiff have not been settled with, the bond is not void as being passed in fraud of creditors." To decide this it is necessary to look at the provisions of the Insolvent Act and to consider their policy. By the vesting order under s. 7 the insolvent's after-acquired as well as his existing property vests in the Official Assignee who has full powers for its recovery, and who holds it as a trustee for all the creditors admitted on the schedule—In re Dewcurn Jewraj (1). By ss. 59 and 60 a final order of discharge can only be made after notice to the creditors, any of whom is at liberty to oppose it; and its effect is to discharge the insolvent personally and also his after-acquired property, in the case of a [646] trader, from all demands with certain specified exceptions, and in the case of a non-trader from the demands of all the creditors named in the order nisi. By s. 86, the Court may, before making an order of final discharge, direct judgment to be entered up against the insolvent in the High Court in the name of the Official Assignee for the amount of the debts stated in the schedule and established, the judgment may under certain conditions be executed against any after-acquired property of the insolvent, and the proceeds of the execution must be distributed rateably among the creditors as in the case of a dividend. When the debts have been satisfied, the Court may under s. 87 direct satisfaction to be entered up on the judgment, and then, if any property of the insolvent remains with the Official Assignee, the Court may order that it shall be vested in and delivered up to the insolvent. It is only by such an order or by dismissal of the petition or the revocation of the adjudication that the original vesting order ceases to have effect. From these and other provisions it is obvious that the policy of the Act is to make the relief of the insolvent conditional upon the whole of his property, after-acquired as well as existing, being given up to the Official Assignee and made available for rateable distribution among all creditors whose claims are established, without preference of any of them, and upon all being free to oppose the discharge. A bargain made by the insolvent before discharge, behind the backs of the Official Assignee and the creditors generally, which might have the effect of giving a particular creditor more than he would be entitled to receive on a rateable distribution, and by which the creditor in return agrees not to oppose the discharge, is, in my opinion, inconsistent with that policy. It appears to me that this is a substantially correct description of the bond in suit. It is an agreement by the insolvent in certain events to transfer certain property or to pay Rs. 1,600 to the plaintiff in settlement of his claim. If the other creditors had been paid, or if the agreement were to pay the plaintiff in the event of their being paid in full, or of satisfaction being entered up on the judgment, it might not be open to objection. But, in the first place, the recital that the other creditors have been settled with, is found to be untrue, and in the [647] second place, it is not in the event of satisfaction being entered up, but in the event of the insolvent failing to apply for its being entered up and to do certain other things, that the Rs. 1,600 is to be paid. It is not alleged that satisfaction has been entered up, the Chief Judge finds that the insolvent has not applied to have it entered up, and so long as any creditors remained unsatisfied, no application for that purpose could be entertained. The Rs. 800 which under the bond has already been paid to the plaintiff, and the Rs. 1,600 which the insolvent binds himself to pay, and to recover which the suit is brought, are not the property of the insolvent, but that of the Official Assignee in trust for all the creditors, and every creditor and not only the plaintiff is entitled to share in it. The bargain is carried out behind the backs of the Official Assignee and the other creditors, who are not shown to have had notice of it or to have assented to it. To hold that such an agreement should be given effect as between the insolvent and the plaintiff so long as the Official Assignee does not interfere, but that the Official Assignee if he thinks fit can step in and protect the other creditors by claiming the money, would be to put a premium on secret dealings between the insolvents and particular creditors whom they may be induced to favour. Such a result is inconsistent with the provisions of the statute securing to the creditors a rateable distribution of all the insolvent's property, and implying that the insolvent is to deal with them openly and impartially, and to assist in the appropriation of the property for their benefit. In cases where the Official Assignee became aware of a disposition of moveable property by the insolvent in favour of a particular creditor, he might be hindered or delayed in recovering it from the creditor or from any transferee from the creditor. If, as was contended, the doctrine of Cohen v. Mitchell (1) applied to such a case, the further consequence would follow that when once the money had been paid over, or other property had passed from the insolvent under the agreement, whether by voluntary act or in execution of decree, it would be too late for the Official Assignee to intervene, and, the creditor acquiring a complete title, the property [648] would be irrevocably lost to the other creditors. In that view the Rs. 800 already paid to the plaintiff could not be recovered. Again, if the insolvent could make a bargain of this kind with one of his creditors, he could do so with others. If he had ten creditors he might secretly agree with five to pay them the greater part of their claims, leaving the others wholly unpaid, and thus effect a distribution of assets altogether inconsistent with that contemplated by the statute. It is, of course, conceivable that a compromise by which a particular creditor gave up his right to future dividends in consideration of a present part payment, might ultimately turn out advantageous to the other creditors. Whether it would do so or not, it would be impossible, at the time of the compromise, to determine. It would depend upon whether, subsequently to the payment, the insolvent acquired property of such value as to realize for each of the other creditors a larger dividend than he would have been entitled to if no compromise had been made and if the creditor settled with had not been excluded from the subsequent distribution. If, subsequent to the payment, the insolvent acquired no property at all, each of the other creditors would necessarily lose the dividend to which he was entitled out of the money paid. Again, accepting the contention that part of the consideration for the bond is an implied agreement by the plaintiff not to oppose the final discharge of the insolvent, is such an agreement in accordance with public policy and with the spirit of the statute? I am of opinion that it is not.

(1) 12 B. 342.

Chitty's S. C. C. R. 486.

The right to oppose the final discharge is given to a creditor not only for his own benefit, but for the benefit of all the creditors and of the whole community, which is interested in the bringing to light of anything in the conduct of the insolvent which disentitles him to recommence business free from past liabilities. In considering whether the discharge should be granted, the Court has to consider the insolvent's entire conduct, and not merely his conduct with reference to the opposing creditor. That principle was laid down by Mr. Justice Gibbs in In re Pastanjee Shapurjee Kaka (1). If it is correct, then although a creditor is not bound to oppose the final discharge, it cannot be in accordance with public policy that, by a private agreement with the insolvent and [649] in consideration of a money payment, he should bind himself not to oppose it.

In England there are many cases in which such agreements have been held to be void as opposed to the policy of the Insolvency and Bankruptcy Acts and as in fraud of creditors. In Jackson v. Davison (2), a case of 1821 decided under 1 Geo. IV, c. 119, an insolvent, in order to induce a creditor to withdraw opposition to his discharge, agreed to execute a warrant of attorney for the debt, and, in pursuance of the agreement, the insolvent was discharged, the warrant of attorney executed, and judgment entered up thereon by the creditor. A rule nisi having been obtained to set aside the warrant of attorney and the judgment, the Court set both aside on the ground that the agreement on which they were founded was contrary to the policy of the Insolvent Act, inasmuch as it enabled the creditor to take to himself a large portion of the future effects which the Legislature intended to be distributed among all the creditors, and defeated the effect of the judgment entered up by order of the Insolvent Court. In Murray v. Reeves (3), the debt due to the opposing creditor was a judgment debt of £2,686. In consideration of the creditor withdrawing his opposition to the discharge, the attorney of the insolvent undertook that he should be the sole assignee of the estate and should receive £100 out of it within three weeks from his appointment. It was held that this agreement was contrary to the policy of the Insolvent Act and, therefore, void. That decision was followed in Hall v. Dyson (4), a case decided under the 1 and 2 Vict., c. 110. There the opposing creditor's claim was for £400. It was held that an agreement by the insolvent to pay him £50 in consideration of his withdrawing his opposition was void, being contrary to the policy of the Insolvent Debtors' Act and a fraud upon the creditors. In his judgment Lord Campbell, C. J., said: "There is no doubt that the plaintiff might have withdrawn his opposition if he chose but he had no right to do so in consideration of a money payment." In Hills v. Mitson (5), decided under the same statute, the Court consisting of Pollock, C. B., and [650] Parke, Alderson and Martin, BB., applied the principle Hall v. Dyson to an action upon a promissory note executed in favour of a particular creditor, not by the insolvent but by a third person, in consideration of the creditor ceasing to oppose, and undertaking not in future to oppose the insolvent's discharge. It was attempted, but without success, to distinguish Jackson v. Davison and similar cases on the ground that in them the agreement, being made with the insolvent himself, had the effect of giving to a particular creditor property which ought to be distributed among all the creditors. On the other hand, it was pointed out that "it is not the opposing creditor alone who is interested in the opposition, but that it enures to the benefit of the other creditors," and that if such an agreement were allowed, the insolvent might arrange with particular creditor, whose opposition he feared, by means of a third person, at the same time undertaking to pay the latter after his discharge. In Humphreys v. Welling (1) decided in 1862 under the 7 and 8 Vict., c. 96, an agreement was entered into between an opposing creditor and the insolvent that the latter should give the former a promissory note as a security for the debt, and that the creditor in consideration thereof should not oppose the making of a final order for protection. This arrangement was sanctioned by the Commissioner of the Court, who adjourned the final hearing to allow of its being effected. The promissory note was accordingly given, the opposition withdrawn, and the final order for protection made. It was held that "the Court had no authority to sanction such an arrangement; that it was illegal notwithstanding such sanction, and that no action could be maintained upon the note." That case is important not only because there the agreement had actually been sanctioned by the Commissioner of the Insolvent Court, but because it was argued that from the absence in the 7 and 8 Vict., c. 96, of any provision such as s. 61 of the 7 Geo. IV, c. 57, or s. 91 of the 1 and 2 Vict, c. 110, preventing a creditor from suing upon any new contract or security for payment of a debt from which the insolvent had obtained his discharge, it should be inferred that the Legislature [651] did not intend that such actions should be prohibited; and the Court nevertheless decided against the agreement upon general grounds of public policy. It follows that no inference in favour of such an agreement can be drawn from the absence of any provision in the Indian Insolvent Act, and that Hall v. Dyson and other cases decided under the 1 and 2 Vict., c. 110, cannot be distinguished on that ground, but are based, as indeed the reports show, upon the general policy of the statute. If that view of the decisions is correct, they have an obvious application to cases under the Indian Insolvent Act, which, as pointed out by Mr. Justice West in In the matter of Candas Narrondas (2), was largely copied from the English law then in force and the 1 and 2 Vict., c. 110, in particular.

The case of Peakman v. Harrison (3), cited by the learned Chief Judge in his reference and decided in 1872, was in some respects different from those which I have mentioned. There the insolvent had obtained his discharge and given a warrant of attorney as required by the insolvency statutes. He gave a scheduled creditor, whose claim was for £200, a bill of sale on his effects to cover the prior debt and further advances. The creditor having seized under the bill of sale and sold the effects, the debtor was adjudicated a bankrupt under the Bankruptcy Acts, and the creditor's assignee filed a bill praying that the revival of the debt of £200 might be declared illegal, that accounts might be taken of the proceeds of the sale and of the sum justly due to the defendant, and that the defendant might be ordered to pay to the plaintiff what on taking such accounts might be found due. The Court held that the old debt could not be revived. The judgment certainly appears to have been based, in part, on the view that the bill of sale, so far as it related to the old debt, was an evasion of s. 91 of the 1 and 2 Vict., c. 110 (which re-enacted the provisions of s. 61 of the 7 Geo. IV, c. 57); but it also proceeded upon the broader ground of public policy taken in the other cases to which I have referred. Thus, the Vice-Chancellor said: "If an insolvent were at liberty to pledge after-acquired property, the consequence would be that it would give undue preference to one creditor over another, and the law is clear that in such a [652] case the security is void. . . . . The distinction between bankruptcy and insolvency is clear. The insolvent only gets a discharge for his person; his after-acquired property remains liable, after satisfying the demands of subsequent creditors, to be seized under the insolvency, and applied for the equal benefit of all creditors under the insolvency. If, therefore, a creditor under the insolvency were to be allowed to take after-acquired property to secure a scheduled debt, he would defeat the object of the insolvency statutes by taking to himself alone what those statutes say shall be applied for the benefit of all. This is a fraud upon the Act of Parliament."

In McKewan v. Sanderson (1) Malins, V. C., cited Hall v. Dyson as applying the principle that "whenever there are proceedings in bankurptcy and insolvency, or any arrangement between a debtor and his creditors generally, and one of the creditors stipulates either for the payment of a greater dividend to him than is paid to the other creditors, or for any collateral advantage whatever, even such as giving the right to purchase a horse, or any advantage whatever not common to the creditors, any payment made will be ordered to be repaid, any security given will be ordered to be given up, and this Court will treat the whole thing as fraudulent against the other creditors; and anything done in favour of the creditor, who obtains this advantage will be set aside by this Court."

The case of Kearley v. Thomson (2) was decided by the Court of Appeal in 1890 when the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, was in force. Neither that Act nor the Act of 1869 contains any provision similar to s. 91 of the 1 and 2 Vict., c. 110, or to s. 167 of the Act of 1861 (re-enacting the substance of s. 202 of the Bankruptcy Law Consolidation Act, 1849, and repealed by the Bankruptcy Repeal Act, 1869) which made void all contract or securities made or given as a consideration or with intent to persuade a creditor to forbear opposing the allowance of a certificate. The Court of Appeal held, on the authority of Hall v. Dyson; that an agreement, the consideration for which was an undertaking by a creditor not to appear at the public examination of the bankrupt and not to oppose the order of [653] discharge, was illegal, as obviously tending to prevent further the course of justice. "Although," said Lord Justice Fry, "the defendants were under no obligation to appear, they certainly were under an obligation not to contract themselves out of the opportunity of appearing."

In In re Barham (3), a case of 1893, Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams held that a payment by a bankrupt to one of his creditors, made before the receiving order but after the petition and consequently after the time to which the trustee's title related back, with the view of giving that creditor a preference over the others, though not within the section relating to fraudulent preference, was a disposal of money which prima facie belonged to the trustee, and should be set aside as contrary to the policy of the bankruptcy laws.

It was, however, contended that the doctrine laid down by the Court of Appeal in Cohen v. Mitchell (4) was applicable to the case; that according to that doctrine the after-acquired property of an insolvent who has not obtained his final discharge does not vest in the Official Assignee until the latter intervenes; and that, consequently, an agreement, such as the bond in suit, is valid and should be enforced subject to his right to intervene and claim the money. When that decision is read with the later cases which explain and limit the general language which it uses, it will not be found to justify that conclusion. It was pointed out in In re Rogers, ex parte Woodthorpe (1), In re New Land Development Association and Grey (2), In re Clark, ex parte Beardmore (3) and In re Rogers, ex parte Collins (4) that the rule in Cohen v. Mitchell was only applied for the purpose of protecting persons who had been trading with an undischarged bankrupt, and dealing with him bona fide for value without interference by the trustee, who had given him credit and been paid with money acquired by carrying on such business, and who on that ground were held to have a good title as against the trustee. Again, in Kerakoose v. Brooks (5), [654] the Privy Council held that the only qualification of the Official Assignee's title to after-acquired property (apart from a qualification not material to the present case) was "that if the insolvent carries on trade at a subsequent period with the assent of the assignee of the estate under the Insolvent Act, in the first instance the property which is acquired in the subsequent trade will be subject, in equity, to the charge of the creditors in that trade, in priority to the claim of the assignee under the first insolvency." There is nothing in Cohen v. Mitchell which applies to an agreement by which a scheduled creditor accepts a present cash payment and a promise of a further payment in settlement of the debt from an undischarged insolvent not shown to have carried on any trade or business, and without the assent or knowledge of the Official Assignee. For these reasons I think that s. 23 of the Contract Act applies to the case, and that the third question must be answered in the affirmative. Costs will be costs in the case.

Mr. Justice Parsons authorizes me to say that he concurs in this judgment.

SORABJI JAMSETJI (Appellant) v. ISHWARDAS JAGJIWANDAS STORE AND ANOTHER (Respondents).*

Company—Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882), ss. 61, 126, 144, cl. Section 61, Indian Companies' Act (VI of 1882) (corresponding with s. 38 of the English Companies' Act of 1862) creates a new liability in the shareholders, and that liability includes contribution, not only in respect of calls made since the winding up, but also in respect of unpaid calls made before the date of the winding up, whether barred by limitation at that date or not.

[655] The official liquidator need not take out letters of administration to the estate of a deceased shareholder before settling the list of contributories.

There is nothing in ss. 126 and 148 requiring the official liquidator to place on the list all the persons who may as representatives be liable to contribute in discharge of the liability of a deceased shareholder as contemplated by s. 126. Nor can the liability, under that section, of a person who has been placed on the list as his representative be affected by the omission of the official liquidator to do so.

Directors have no power to cancel shares duly issued to a shareholder at his request and so reduce the capital of the company.

APPEAL from the order of T. Hamilton, District Judge of Surat.

The Nawab of Baila Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited, was registered under the Indian Companies' Act, 1866.

The appellant's father Jamsetji signed the memorandum of association of the company and subscribed for twenty-five shares, which were duly allotted to him. On allotment he paid Rs. 25 per share and his name was entered in the register of shareholders. Shortly afterwards he sold the shares to one Amirbhai and handed over to him the receipts which he had obtained for the sums paid on allotment. The directors, however, refused to transfer the shares to Amirbhai's name, as the transfer was not made in the manner required by the company's articles of association, and on Amirbhai's application the directors on the 14th June, 1882, passed a resolution cancelling the shares and directing the money which he had paid for the shares to be paid to him.

The first call payable on these shares was due on 31st January, 1882; the second call on 5th May, 1882; the third call on 8th August, 1882, and the last call on 15th November, 1882.

On the 30th October, 1886, the Court made an order to wind up the company.

On 28th April, 1888, Jamsetji died intestate, leaving him surviving two sons (one of whom was the appellant Sorabji) and four daughters.

[656] On 8th July, 1888, the official liquidators served a notice on the appellant, calling upon him to show cause why he should not be placed on the list of contributories as heir of his father Jamsetji, the original shareholder.

The appellant contended that his father Jamsetji had ceased to be a shareholder of the company long before the date of the winding up; and that in any case his liability to pay calls was barred by limitation.

The District Judge overruled these objections and passed an order placing him on the list of contributories for Rs. 5,625, the unpaid balance due on the twenty-five shares.

Against this order the present appeal was brought.

Macpherson (with him K. D. Shroff), for appellant.—The shares allotted to Jamsetji were cancelled by the directors. From the date of the cancellation Jamsetji ceased to be a shareholder and was no longer liable to pay calls. The cancellation of the shares operated, no doubt, as a reduction of the capital of the company, and so far the resolution of the directors is invalid. But the directors ought to have put the name of Amirbhai on the register. Their omission to do so cannot prejudice our rights. See s. 29 of Act VI of 1882.

MARCH 12.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

20 B. 654.

Next we say that the calls were barred by limitation at the date of the order to wind up—art. 178 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The winding up cannot revive the liability to pay them.

Lastly, we say that the appellant's father Jamestji having died intestate, the official liquidators cannot recover without letters of administration to the estate of the deceased. Section 190 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) applies. If it does not apply, then the liquidators must proceed against all the heirs of the deceased shareholder. They have no right to proceed against one of the heirs alone.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for respondents.—Section 148 of the Companies' Act (VI of 1882) does not require the official liquidators to take out letters of administration to the estate of a deceased shareholder at the time of settling the list of contributories. [657] Under s. 126 the heirs of a deceased contributory are liable both jointly and severally. Any one of them can be proceeded against, and he may sue the rest for contribution.

As to limitation, the winding-up order creates new rights and new liabilities. Under s. 61 of the Indian Companies' Act (VI of 1882) the liability of a shareholder to contribute to the assets of the company is a new liability—a liability to pay calls made both before and after the winding up—The Parell Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited v. Manek (1); In re Whitehouse & Co. (2). The claim is, therefore, not time-barred.

Lastly, as to cancellation of shares, the directors had no power to cancel shares which had once been allotted. Such cancellation amounts to a reduction of the capital, and is, therefore, illegal. The appellant's father Jamsetji signed the memorandum of association, and paid a deposit of Rs. 25 on each share. His name was entered in the register. He was, therefore, a member of the company and remained so till the date of the winding up. He is, therefore, liable as a contributory. His transfer of the shares to Amirbhai not being in accordance with the articles of association, the directors were not bound to recognize it. Section 29 of Act VI of 1882 does not, therefore, apply.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The appellant's father Jamsetji, who was an original allottee of twenty-five shares, never ceased to be the legal holder of them and liable for calls. The agreement to transfer the shares to Amirbhai in February, 1882, was not carried into effect in accordance with art. 28 of the company's articles of association or assented to by the company, and the cancellation of the shares by the company was beyond their powers. See the decision of this Court in Bhimbhai v. Ishwardas Jugjiwandas (3). Jamsetji was, therefore, the legal holder of the shares at the date of the winding-up order.

As to the calls being barred, it is to be remarked that s. 61 of the Companies' Act (VI of 1882) makes every member of the company liable to contribute to the assets of the company to an amount necessary for the payment of the debts and liabilities [658] of the company, the costs, charges and expenses of the winding up, and for the payment of such sums as may be required for the adjustment of the rights of the contributories amongst themselves; and by sub-clause (d) in the case of a company limited by shares no contribution shall be required from any member exceeding the amount (if any) unpaid on the shares in respect of which he is at present a member. This section corresponds with s. 38 of the English Companies' Act of 1862, the effect of which was fully considered by Sir George Jessel in In re Whitehouse & Co. (1). After pointing out that the section creates a new liability as regards the shareholders, the Master of the Rolls held that the contribution under the section includes unpaid calls made before the winding up as well as those made after the winding up. "It is true," he says, "that a call made before the winding up is a debt due to the company, but that does not affect the new liability to contribute." Nor can it in this view of the section affect the liability created by the section that the debt was barred.

As to the objection that letters of administration to the estate of the appellant's deceased father Jamsetji have not been taken out under Act X of 1865, it may or may not be necessary in the future for official liquidators to take them out as contemplated by s. 144, sub-clause (g), but there is no obligation to do so before settling the list of contributories. As to placing on the list all the persons who may as representatives be liable to contribute in discharge of the deceased's liability as contemplated by s. 126, there is nothing in that section or in s. 148 which requires it to be done, nor can the omission to do so affect the appellant's liability under s. 126.

For the above reasons we must confirm the order of the Court below with costs on appellant.

Order confirmed.

Lunacy—Act XXXV of 1858, ss. 15, 16, 17, 18 and 20—Hindu lunatic—Guardian—Manager—Joint member of the lunatic's family appointed manager of the lunatic's estate, not bound to render account—Manager charged with mismangement is entitled to have particulars of the charges made against him—Order or certificate of appointment.

The manager of a Hindu lunatic's estate appointed under Act XXXV of 1858, who is in possession with others of joint family property, is not, in his capacity of manager of the lunatic's estate, bound by the provisions of s. 15 of the Act to exhibit an inventory and account of the family property. The lunatic is possessed of no property for which the manager is liable to account. It does not make any difference if the manager is himself a joint owner or not. The Act provides no machinery, nor does it confer any power upon the Court, to deal with joint family property or interfere in the affairs of a joint family.

If a manager is charged with mismanagement he is entitled to some particulars of the charges made against him.

In all cases of lunacy in which a guardian or a manager of the lunatic's estate is appointed by the Court under the Act, it is desirable to issue a formal order or certificate of appointment.

(1) 9 Ch. D. 595 (600)

1895

JULY 26.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

20 B. 659.

APPEAL from the decision of R. S. Tipnis, Assistant Judge at Broach.

Three brothers —Navnidhalal, Chhotalal and Hiralal— were members of an undivided Hindu family governed by Mitakshara law. Navnidhalal was a lunatic. In the lifetime of the father Itchhalal a family arrangement was made by registered deed whereby provision was made for the maintenance of the lunatic.

After Itchhalal's death the appellant Trimbaklal, who was the son-in-law of the lunatic, applied to the District Court under Act XXXV of 1858 for a certificate of guardianship of the lunatic's person and property. The object of the application was that steps might be taken to set aside the deed of family arrangement and to effect partition of the family property.

The application was opposed by Hiralal Itchhalal, who contended (inter alia) that, if a certificate to any one was necessary, it should be given to him.

[660] On the 7th December, 1891, the Judge appointed Hiralal manager of the lunatic's property and Bai Godavari (the lunatic's wife) the guardian of his person. The order made was as follows :—

"Under s. 13 of the Act I order that Hiralal Itchhalal should provide for the maintenance of the lunatic and his family and for extraordinary expenditure on occasions of feasts, ceremonies, &c., as if he were a member of the joint family, out of the joint family property and as laid down in the deed of the family arrangement, and at the same time pay to the lunatic's wife Rs. 25 a month for miscellaneous expenditure. This is certianly not a large allowance, considering the income of the family is Rs. 10,000 a year as admitted by Hiralal ; Rs. 15 per month provided in the deed seems to me too small a sum."

The following is an extract from the Judge's judgment :—

"The real questions at issue are whether any appointment of a guardian of his (Navnidhalal's) person and a manager of his property should be made, and, if so, who shall be appointed ?

"I hold that the wife of the lunatic should be appointed guardian of his person, and the opponent Hiralal manager of his property. This case is very similar to that reported at p. 539, I.L.R., 6 Cal., with the difference that in this case the wife of the lunatic is alive and lives with him in a part of the ancestral house.

"There is no ill-treatment of the lunatic alleged or proved, although it appears from the lunatic's wife's evidence that there are occasional disputes between her and Hiralal about little matters. The reason why the present applicant seeks a certificate of management is clearly stated by him in his application to be to take legal measures for a partition of the estste, so that his share may descend to the wife and daughter instead of lapsing to the surviving brothers. Whether such a suit would be allowed or not, or whether it would be successful or not in the Bombay Presidency looking to the provisions of the Hindu law about disqualifications for inheritance, and how far all or any of the persons who have signed the deed of family arrangement put in this case are bound by it, are questions which it is not necessary for me to answer at present, although a good deal has been said on them in argument. But, I think, so long as no ill-treatment of the lunatic or his family is made out, it is to his best interests, and in accordance with the policy of the English law, not to allow interference with the course of his inheritance. At the same time whilst his wife is alive she seems to be the person best able to take care of him, and watch over his interests if they are at any time neglected by Hiralal."

1895 JULY 26.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

20 B. 659.

Against this order Trimbaklal appealed to the High Court (Jardine and Telang, JJ.), which without writing a judgment confirmed it on the 10th August, 1892.

In the year 1894 Trimbaklal applied under ss. 17 and 18 of Act XXXV of 1858 alleging that Hiralal was mismanaging the property and had not filed accounts as required by s. [661] 15 of the Act. He prayed that Hiralal should be required to furnish accounts, and that his appointment as manager should be cancelled.

The Judge rejected the application. The following are extracts from his judgment :—

"It would seem, from the judgment of this Court, that Hiralal was appointed manager of the lunatic's property, and the lunatic's wife was appointed guardian of his person. Such is the finding on the issue raised. But the order itself is silent as to whether Hiralal was appointed manager or not, though such appointment ought necessarily to be presumed from the fact that the order was made under s. 13 of the Act, and it would have directed Hiralal to provide for the maintenance of the lunatic and his family and for extraordinary expenditure on occasions of feasts, ceremonies, &c., as if he were a member of the joint family, out of the joint property as laid down in the deed of family arrangement, and at the same time pay to the lunatic's wife Rs. 25 a month for miscellaneous expenditure. Section 13 contemplates an order to the manager appointed by the Act. I, therefore, hold that Hiralal was appointed manager of the lunatic's estate under s. 10.

"But the Court held that the lunatic was only a member of the joint family, of which Hiralal was another member. There was no specific direction in the order or judgment as to how the management of the lunatic's share in the undivided property of the family should be conducted by Hiralal. The Calcutta High Court in the two decisions (one of which was referred to by Mr. Khareghat in his judgment, the other being reported in 13 C. L. R., 86) expressed no positive opinion as to whether a manager under this Act in regard to joint property can be appointed. However, in the present case the appointment being made, this point arises only in connection with the manager's liability to furnish accounts as required by s. 15.

"In my opinion, it is impossible for Hiralal to produce any accounts of the lunatic's undivided share of the property, for the property is joint and there can be no separate accounts of his share and none have been kept. It is impossible to predicate of the lunatic's share in the joint property or of the several items of the joint property until a division takes place.

"It seems that, unless Hiralal produces accounts of the whole estate and allows inspection thereof, there is no other course open for finding if the lunatic's share is properly managed or not. But there is no law for requiring a person to disclose accounts of the property other than that of the lunatic, and the course proposed would simply place the entire family accounts at the disposal of strangers and of the Court. Moreover, according to strict law, even the lunatic's share cannot be definitely predicated at this moment to admit of seeing what might be the income and expenditure regarding his share by inspection of the entire family accounts.

"This difficulty is further enhanced by the deed of family arrangement, which is alleged to have been executed. I cannot in this matter pronounce any opinion as to the validity or otherwise of this deed or any of its provisions. Mr. Khareghat, however, was fully aware of the difficulty in appointing a manager in this case, and [662] he ordered that the lunatic should be maintained as laid down in the deed of family arrangement. It seems to me, from this special order, that separate management of the lunatic's estate or share in the joint property was not entrusted to Hiralal, who cannot, therefore, be expected to give an inventory of the lunatic's property or account of the management of the lunatic's estate. His management was to be in accordance with the deed, and this he has been doing.

1895

APPELLATE CIVIL.
20 B. 659.

"In any view of the case, I cannot see my way in requiring accounts to be furnished.

"The petitioner alleges that Hiralal mismanages the property, and his appointment should be cancelled. His pleader is unable to state what specific acts of mismanagement Hiralal committed. But he says that he will be able to show if the accounts are furnished. I am unable to comply with this request. I do not think it necessary to record any evidence on this point of mismanagement, as I am of opinion that should Hiralal be removed from the management of the lunatic's estate, this removal would be tantamount to his removal from the management of the entire joint property,—a thing which I have no right to do; and, moreover, my own opinion is that no manager can legally be appointed to the estate of a lunatic who is only a member of the joint family and possesses no separate property. I should, in the event of cancelment of the managership, make an order under s. 20 of the Act, for the expressions used in that section are wide enough to include cases not only of properties of small value, but also of joint properties wherein separate management of a share is impossible."

The applicant appealed.

Nagindas T. Marphatia appeared for the appellant (applicant).—As Hiralal was appointed manager of the property of the lunatic under Act XXXV of 1858, it was incumbent upon him to file an inventory of the property within six months under s. 15 of the Act and also to furnish accounts. But he has admittedly not yet done so. The Judge dismissed our application on the ground that as the property is the undivided property of the lunatic and his two brothers, the lunatic cannot be considered to hold a specified portion of the property. But whether the property is divided or undivided, a manager is bound to render accounts—Damodardas v. Uttamram (1). The interest of the lunatic must be protected—Phillips on the Law of Lunatics, p. 341.

Hiralal's mismanagement of the property could have been proved if copies of the accounts had been furnished to us. An opportunity should be given to us to prove mismanagement.

Macpherson (Advocate General, with Chitnis and Motilal) appeared for the respondent (opponent).—The lunatic is not the sole owner of the property. The accounts relate to the whole [663] of the joint family property, and copies of such accounts cannot be furnished. The other members have a joint interest in the property, and they would certainly object to the applicant's demand. We rely on Bhoopendra v. Greesh (2); Sham Kuar v. Mohanunda Sahoy (3); Soorbansi Singh v. Juggeshur Koer (4); Virupakshappa v. Nilgangava (5).

(4) 13 C.L.R. 86. (5) 19 B. 309.

The applicant did not specifically mention particular acts of waste and mismanagement in his application. A mere vague statement as to mismanagement would not justify a Court in taking action. The Judge's order was, therefore, right.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—The position of the respondent Hiralal Itchhalal in this case is peculiar. In 1891 the present petitioner and appellant Trimbaklal Govandas applied, under Act XXXV of 1858, to the Assistant Judge, F. P, at Broach to be appointed guardian of the person, and manager of the estate, of his father-in-law Navnidhalal Itchhalal alleged, and subsequently found, to be a lunatic. It was admitted then, as it is now, that the lunatic with his brothers Hiralal and Chhotalal were members of an undivided family governed by the Mitakshara law, and it was not alleged that the lunatic was possessed of any separate estate. The application referred to a family arrangement contained in a registered document, whereby Itchhalal, the deceased father of the lunatic (inter alia) made provision for the maintenance of the lunatic, but it was submitted that the arrangement was not binding upon the lunatic. The avowed object of the application was to take steps to set aside the deed of arrangement and to obtain partition of the family estate. No neglect or ill-treatment of the lunatic was alleged or proved, nor is any now alleged. Hiralal opposed the application. He stated that the lunatic was living with him and the other members of the family and was being maintained with the other members out of the property mentioned in the deed and in accordance with its terms. He submitted that no certificate for the management of the property or guardianship of the person of the lunatic should be issued, but that, if it was considered that a certificate to some one was necessary, it should be granted to him.

[664] The Assistant Judge in his written judgment, after holding the lunacy of Navnidhalal to be established, pointed out that the real questions before him were "whether any appointment of a guardian of his person and of a manager of his property should be made," and held that the wife of the lunatic should be appointed guardian of his person, and the opponent Hiralal manager of his property. He ordered under s. 13 of the Act that Hiralal should provide for the maintenance of the lunatic and for extraordinary expenditure on occasions of feasts, ceremonies, &c., as if he were a member of the joint family out of the joint family property as laid down in the deed of family arrangement, and should pay to the lunatic's wife Rs. 25 a month for miscellaneous expenditure.

On an appeal preferred by Trimbaklal to the High Court against that decision the High Court "confirmed the order of the lower Court with costs."

No formal order or certificate of the appointment of Hiralal as manager of the estate of the lunatic was ever drawn up or issued. Hiralal since the date of the decision of the Assistant Judge has been maintaining the lunatic in accordance with the terms of the family arrangement and of the decision, and paying Rs. 25 per mensem to Godavari, the wife of the lunatic. He has not filed an inventory or any accounts under s. 15 of the Act (XXXV of 1858).

Trimbaklal made the present application, praying that Hiralal might be ordered to file an inventory and accounts. He alleged mismanagement of the lunatic's estate and sought to have Hiralal's appointment as manager cancelled. The Assistant Judge, F. P., at Broach has rejected the application in toto. Hence this appeal.

As the Act does not indicate any particular form in which the order appointing the manager of a lunatic's estate should be made, or enact that a certificate is necessary to complete his title, we think that the written judgment of the Assistant Judge (confirmed by the High Court) is sufficient evidence that the opponent Hiralal has been appointed manager of the lunatic's estate. At the same time we would point out to the Courts the desirability [665] of issuing a formal order or certificate of appointment in all cases of lunacy in which a guardian or a manager of a lunatic's estate is appointed under the Act.

The question, whether a manager of the property of a lunatic, who is possessed of no separate estate, but is a member of a joint Hindu family which owns property, can be appointed under the Act, does not seem to have been argued before or considered by the Courts when the original application was before them. The main question was whether Trimbaklal should be appointed, and the submission of Hiralal that he, if necessary, should be appointed manager was probably considered to render the consideration of that question unnecessary, nor is it before us. Hiralal has, as we have pointed out, been appointed manager, and his appointment has been confirmed by the High Court. We, therefore, express no opinion upon the general question.

A careful perusal of the judgment of the Assistant Judge leads us to the conclusion that his intention in appointing Hiralal to be manager of the lunatic's estate was to preserve the status quo of the family and the lunatic's position therein and that he did not intend to bring the whole family estate under the superintendence of the Court. That intention would, no doubt, have been more appropriately effected by refusing to appoint a manager and making an order under s. 20 of the Act or by declining to make any order as was done by the Calcutta High Court under almost identical circumstances in the case of Bhoopendra v. Greesh Narain (1) upon which the Assistant Judge relied; but the intention of the Judge is immaterial if the law imposes upon Hiralal the obligation of rendering an inventory and accounts of the joint family property of which he and his brother are in possession. We refer to such intention for the purpose of pointing out that the order of the Assistant Judge (confirmed by the High Court) did not in terms or impliedly impose that duty upon the manager. This leads us to consider the main question argued before us, whether the manager of a Hindu lunatic's estate appointed under the Act (XXXV of 1858), who is in possession with others of joint family property, is in his capacity of manager of the lunatic's estate bound by the provisions of s. 15 of the Act to exhibit an [666] inventory and accounts of the family property. There is a very close analogy between the position of a lunatic and of an infant in relation to such property, and much of the reasoning of the Full Bench in Virupakshappa v. Nilgangava (2) is applicable to the case before us. It is a mere coincidence that the manager in this case is identical with the joint owner. The law must be the same whether he is identical with the joint owner or distinct. The provisions of ss. 16, 17 and 18 point, we think, to the case of a lunatic possessed of separate property and are inappropriate to joint family property in which he has merely an interest with others. The Act provides no machinery,

(1) 6 C. 539.

(2) 19 B. 309.

nor does it confer any power upon the Court to deal with joint family property or interfere in the affairs of a joint family. Doubtless in cases of alienation or waste or mismanagement so gross as to imperil the lunatic's interest in family property the Court can and will protect that interest by allowing a suit to be brought for partition or other legal means to be taken to secure it, and, if necessary for that purpose, will remove one manager and appoint another; but we think, having regard to the consideration to which we have referred, that such property is not property which falls within the scope of s. 15, and that it is a sufficient answer to the applicant's prayer for an inventory and accounts to say that the lunatic is possessed of no property for which the manager is liable to account.

The decision of this Court in Damodardas v. Uttamram (1), in which the Chief Justice Sir Charles Sargent points out the circumstances under which a Hindu manager is bound to account, was much pressed upon us by the appellant's pleader in support of his argument as to the liability of Hiralal, but the Chief Justice was there speaking of an account upon partition for the purpose of ascertaining the extent of the property liable to be divided, and his remarks are not applicable to the present case.

The appellant contends, independently of the question of accounts, that he tendered evidence of mismanagement which the Judge refused to record, and that the case ought to be remanded in order that such evidence may be taken. The application, however, contains no particulars whatever of such mismanagement. [667] It is a general allegation, and if a manager is charged with mismanagement he is entitled to some particulars of the charges made against him. We might doubtless allow the application to be amended, or direct that the applicant give particulars of the nature of the mismanagement of which he complains; but when the pleader for the applicant was questioned by the Assistant Judge upon this subject, he stated that he was unable to furnish any particulars, but would be able to do so when the accounts were filed. The appellant's pleader before us was likewise unable to specify any. It would be useless, we think, to remand the case on this ground. Other than the non-filing of the inventory and accounts no cause for the removal of the manager has been urged before us.

We must, therefore, confirm the order under appeal with costs.

Order confirmed.

APPEAL from the decision of Venkatrao R. Inamdar, Acting Joint Judge of Ahmedabad.

One Jesang Bhukhan died leaving a widow Bai Harkha and four minor sons. On his death the District Judge of Ahmedabad appointed Shankar Bhaibabhai to act as guardian of the minor's property.

Some time afterwards Bai Harkha applied to the District Judge to remove the guardian, on the ground that he had mismanaged the minor's property, and misappropriated its income, and was otherwise unfit to act as guardian.

[668] The Joint Judge rejected this application, holding that the applicant had not made out a case sufficient for removing the guardian.

Thereupon Bai Harkha appealed to the High Court.

Gokaldas K. Parekh, for appellant.

A lessee from Government of the right to levy tolls admitted into partnership with him the plaintiff and two others. One of the conditions attached to the lease prohibited sub-letting.

The plaintiff having brought a suit for his share of the profits realized in the transaction, the Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the partnership was illegal, being of opinion that sub-letting and admitting a partner were identical.

Held, reversing the decree, that the partnership was not illegal.

Every person other than the persons appointed to collect the tolls under this Act, who shall levy or demand any toll on any public road or bridge, or for passing through any bazar situated thereon, and also every person who shall unlawfully and extortionately demand or take any other higher toll than the lawful toll, or under colour of this Act seize or sell any property, knowing such seizure or sale to be unlawful, or in any manner unlawfully extort money or any valuable thing from any person under colour of this Act, shall be liable, on conviction before a Magistrate. to imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months, or to fine not exceeding Rs. 200, any part of which fine may be awarded by the Magistrate to the person aggrieved, but this remedy shall not be deemed to bar or affect his right to have redress by suit in the Civil Court of the district.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Kashinath Balkrishna Marathe, First Class Subordinate Judge of Dharwar with appellate powers, varying the decree of Rao Saheb D. S. Sapre, Second Class Subordinate Judge of Hubli.

The plaintiff sued to recover from the defendants Rs. 1,145-14-9, alleging that the toll contract of Trimalkop, in the Hubli Taluka, was taken by him and the defendants jointly in the year 1889-90; that the profits realized at the end of the year amounted to Rs. 1,530-11-6, and that he was entitled to a moiety of the amount on account of his share. He further alleged that he had deposited with the defendants a sum of Rs. 761 as security and he claimed to recover that sum together with Rs. 5-7-0 as the costs of notice served by him on the defendants. Against the sums due by the defendants the plaintiff gave them credit for Rs. 385-14-0, and claimed the balance of Rs 1,145-14-9.

Defendant No. 1 alleged that he alone had taken the contract, and he denied that the plaintiff was his partner.

Defendant No. 2 did not appear.

Defendant No. 3 answered that he was a servant of defendant No. 1, who was the sole owner of the contract in question.

The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff and defendants were partners in the contract, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount claimed minus the costs of notice, namely, Rs. 1,140-7-9.

At the last stage of the suit the defendants raised the point that the partnership contract on which the plaintiff relied, was void as being contrary to law and public policy, and, therefore, could not be enforced. In support of their contention they put in a copy (Ex. 69) of the rules framed by the Collector of the district in connection with the toll contracts. The Subordinate Judge disallowed the contention, holding that these rules simply prohibited the sub-letting of such contracts.

On appeal by the defendants the Judge found that the profits realized amounted to Rs. 1,530-11-6, but he amended the decree [670] by awarding to the plaintiff the Rs. 761 which were deposited by him with the defendants, and rejected the rest of the claim. The following are extracts from his judgment :—

"Issue 6.—Are the private accounts kept in fraud on Government admissible in evidence?

"The plaintiff admits in his deposition that the private accounts (which the Judge in a previous part of the judgment found to be accurate and show the actual profits) were kept in order to deceive Government. These accounts cannot, therefore, be made use of so as to derive any benefit accruing from the keeping of such accounts. It is held by the Bombay High Court, I. L. R., 12 Bom., 422, that the partners in an illegal contract cannot claim an account of the partnership profits. The ruling in I. L. R., 10 All., 577 is in the same spirit The old Madras case (Madras High Court Reports, Vol. II, p. 249) was decided on the following principle :—A defendant may plead the joint fraud of himself and the plaintiff as a bar to an action upon a contract which the plaintiff seeks to enforce by suit. The keeping of private accounts and the making of profits from a toll contract, which according to the accounts kept according to the rules laid down by the Collector of the district was a losing concern, clearly implies the levying of excessive tolls or the passing of no receipts for the tolls levied. Both these circumstances are penal according to the Tolls Act (Bombay Act III of 1875, s. 7), and the keeping of private accounts inconsistent with the public accounts required by the Collector is perfectly illegal, and the private accounts set up by the plaintiff are, therefore, illegal and inadmissible in evidence.

"Issue 7.—Does the private partnership of the parties entered into in spite of the Government rules furnish a good and legal cause of action?

"The private partnership set up by the plaintiff was obviously entered into in contravention of the condition No. 10 of the lease of Tirmalkop toll granted to the defendant No. 1. The conditions laid down by the Collector of the district as a representative of Government have the force of law according to s. 10 introduced by Bombay Act No. V of 1881. If the defendant No. 1 entered into a partnership in violation of one of these conditions, the contract of partnership was of course illegal. The lower Court's opinion, that the conditions of the lease granted by the Collector do not prohibit a partnership taking up the lease expressly granted to one individual, is not, I believe, correct. Sub-letting and admitting a partner are identical, I think, and the alleged partnership cannot furnish a good or legal cause of action.

"Issue 8.—Is the claim bad as against public policy?

"It is, of course, against public policy to allow persons whom the Collector would not think eligible for the granting of a toll lease, to indirectly partake of the profits of a toll lease. The plaintiff distinctly admits in Ex. 36 that the Collector had forbidden him from taking any toll contract. The plaintiff made default in paying instalments and thus inflicted loss of the public gains, and he was declared unfit to have anything to do with toll contracts. The plaintiff nevertheless takes contracts in other men's names and defeats the public reason for discarding him. It is clearly against public policy to help such a man in securing his share of profits of a toll contract. The claim for a share of profits cannot be awarded.

[671] "Issue 9.—Is the plaintiff entitled to any relief?

"It would, however, be unfair to prevent the plaintiff from taking back the money really deposited by him for the benefit of defendant No. 1 and others, who being in pari delicto with plaintiff cannot retain the moneys actually received by them with the purpose of returning them. The private accounts are, of course, admissible to the extent of the deposit. These and the oral evidence by itself prove that Rs. 761 were deposited as security for good behaviour. This amount must be returned."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Vasudeo R. Jogleker, for the appellant (plaintiff).—The Judge erroneously held that sub-letting a contract and taking partners in it are identical. What is prohibited by the rules is sub-letting, but they do not prohibit a man from taking partners. If a man takes a partner, his liability to the Collector does not thereby cease. The Collector holds him liable and not the partner. Sub-letting is prohibited, because it leads to complications. Sub-letting being specifically prohibited would be void as being opposed to law or public policy.

The Judge has left out of consideration the true accounts. In order to determine among the partners what was the correct amount of the profits, they are relevant evidence and are admissible.

Section 7 of the Tolls Act makes the demand of illegal tolls punishable, but it does not say anything with respect to accounts.

Narayan G. Chandavarkar, for respondent No. 1 (defendant No. 1) :—There is no distinction between sub-letting and taking partners. By sub-letting a person is brought in who was not originally a party to the contract. The effect of taking a partner is the same. The prohibition of sub-letting impliedly prohibits the admission of a partner.

The plaintiff cannot now fall back upon the private accounts. The accounts kept according to the rules are to be considered the true accounts, and they show that the partnership concern has suffered a loss.

Shivram V. Bhandarkar, for respondents Nos. 2 and 3 (defendants Nos. 2 and 3) :—The Judge has found that the amount actually but not legally due to the plaintiff was stated in the plaint, and he came to that conclusion on what are alleged to be [672] the private accounts of the parties. But these accounts being illegal and, therefore, inadmissible in evidence, the Judge was wrong in referring to them. We submit that the Judge ought not to have awarded to the plaintiff the sum he deposited by way of security, because the deposit was made in furtherance of an object prohibited by law. Further, the alleged private accounts being illegal and inadmissible in evidence, the Judge was wrong in referring to them as proving the alleged deposit.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The first defendant leased from Government the levy of tolls at Tirmalkop for the year 1889-90 and admitted into partnership with him the plaintiff and the other two defendants. Plaintiff brought this suit for his share of the profits realized on the transaction.

The Judge of the lower appellate Court has found the partnership illegal, because Rule No. 10 of the conditions attached to the lease granted to the defendant No. 1 prohibited sub-letting, and he thinks that sub-letting and admitting a partner are one and the same thing. We cannot agree with him on this point. A sub-lease and a partnership are not identical, but denote different legal relationships. The prohibition of one would not necessarily mean the prohibition of the other, and we find that where Government intend to prohibit both, it does so in distinct terms (see the 15th* rule under the Abkari Act, p. 437, of the Legal Remembrancer's Compilation of General Rules in force in the Revenue Department, 1893). The Judge further records his opinion that "it would be contrary to public policy to allow persons whom the Collector would not think eligible for the granting of a toll lease to indirectly partake of the profits of a toll lease." All, however, apparently that the Collector has to do, is to see that the person to whom he leases the right of levying tolls is solvent and able to pay the contract price. It certainly is no part of the Collector's duty to ascertain what the contractor or lessee does with the profits he may make, and we fail to see how his dividing [673] them among five partners would be opposed to public policy, provided only that he was not forbidden to admit partners.

Lastly, the Judge has found that the private accounts filed by the plaintiff are illegal and inadmissible in evidence, because they were kept in order to deceive Government. This finding is the result of a strange confusion of ideas. The private accounts are, as the Judge says, entirely true and show the actual realizations. It appears, however, that other accounts were kept by the firm, which were concocted accounts intended to show that the contract was a losing concern. It would be these last accounts, if any, that were kept in order to deceive Government. We cannot, however, hold with the Judge that the keeping of two sets of accounts, one true and one false, however reprehensible the practice may be, is illegal and penal under s. 7 of the Tolls Act (Bombay Act III of 1875); still less can we hold that it would disentitle the plaintiff to show as between himself and his partners what the actual profit of the concern was. Both the Courts agree that the actual profit made on the transaction is proved to amount to Rs. 1,530-11-6. In this, therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to his share.

We reverse the decree of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance, and award plaintiff his costs in the lower appellate Court and this Court.

BAPUJI JAGANNATH AND ANOTHER (Original Applicants), *Appellants.

[6th August, 1895.]

Will—Execution—Attestation by two witnesses—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 50—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), s. 2, cls. (a) and (b) (1).

The Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) applies s. 50 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) to those wills only that are mentioned in s. 2, cls. (a) and (b), of the former Act.

APPEAL from the decision of G. McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad, in the matter of an application for probate.

Bapuji Jagannath and Govindlal Kasandas applied to the District Court at Ahmedabad for probate of a will executed on the 15th June, 1892, by one Harjivandas Parshotamdas, who died on the 3rd November, 1894.

Citations were duly issued to the persons interested in the property of the deceased, but no caveats were entered.

The Judge rejected the application on the ground that the will was not attested by two witnesses, as required by s. 50 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865).

---

* Appeal No. 92 of 1895.

(1) Section 2 of the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) is as follows:—

2. The following portions of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, namely, ss. 46, 48, 49, 50, 51, 55 and 57 to 77 (both inclusive) . . . . . , shall notwithstanding anything contained in s. 331 of the said Act apply—

(a) to all wills and codicils made by any Hindu, Jaina, Sikh, or Buddhist on or after the first day of September one thousand eight hundred and seventy, within the said territories or the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Courts of Judicature at Madras and Bombay; and

(b) to all such wills and codicils made outside those territories and limits so far as relates to immoveable property situated within those terrritories or limits.

In his judgment he said :—

"Three witnesses have been examined, and they depose that the will propounded is entirely in the handwriting of the deceased testator and is attested by one witness only

* * * * *

"Section 50 of the Indian Succession Act requires that the will shall be attested by two or more witnesses.

"Before the passing of the Hindu Wills Act no particular formalities were required, and it was not even necessary that a will should be signed and attested. In Bombay [675] a nuncupative will made in 1871 after the Hindu Wills Act came into force was held to be valid—Bhugavan Dulabh v. Kala Shankar, I. L. R. 1 Bom. 641.

"In the present instance, however, the testator has made an attempt, but an incomplete one, to carry out the provisions of the law and has failed. In Fernandez v. Alves, I. L. R., 3 Bom., 382, it was held that the actual signature of at least two witnesses must appear on the face of the will. This ruling was followed in Nitye Gopal Sircar v. Negendranath Mitter, I. L. R., 11 Cal., 429."

The applicants appealed.

Notice of the appeal was issued to the Judge, and the record and proceedings were sent for.

Bhaishankar Nanabhai appeared for the appellants (original applicants) :—The Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) makes the Succession Act applicable only to Hindu Wills (1) executed within certain local limits or (2) relating to immoveable property within those limits. This will does not fall within either class and, therefore, s. 50 of the Succession Act does not apply. The will is, therefore, valid although not attested by two witnesses.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) applies s. 50 of the Indian Succession Act to those wills only that are mentioned in s. 2, cls. (a) and (b) of the former Act. The will in question is not such a will. We reverse the order of the District Judge and remand the application to be disposed of according to law.

Order reversed.

and then holding that the claim for damages would lie only in the Small Cause Court, returned the plaint for presentation in that Court.

[676] Held, that the Subordinate Judge was not justified in returning the plaint at that stage of the proceedings. The shape in which the suit was originally instituted is the test of jurisdiction.

REFERENCE from T. Hamilton, District Judge of Surat, under s. 646-B of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the following reference :—

"I have the honour to refer for the orders of their Lordships at the instance of the plaintiff, Mr. Motabhai Motilal, a pleader of this Court, a plaint filed by him first in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge, who returned it (on the ground of want of jurisdiction) for presentation in the Court of Small Causes, and then in the latter Court, the Judge of which returned it on the same ground, viz., want of jurisdiction, for presentation in the former Court.

"2. The suit is for a declaration of the illegality of the Surat municipal house-tax recently sanctioned by Government and for damages on account of an alleged illegal entry into plaintiff's house by an officer of the Municipality for purposes connected with the imposition of the said tax.

"3. The Subordinate Judge, First Class, for certain reasons set forth in his judgment, struck out of the plaint the portions "regarding the reliefs other than the relief for damages," and holding that the claim for damages would lie only in the Small Cause Court, returned the plaint for presentation in that Court.

"4. I think it is obvious that he was wrong in so doing, for after exercising jurisdiction by amending the plaint, he could not aver want of jurisdiction with regard to the plaint, so amended.

"5. The plaint as originally filed by plaintiff is certainly not one which a Court of Small Causes can entertain, and, therefore, in my opinion, the suit should be remanded to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, for disposal on its merits."

Hormasji C. Coyaji (amicus curiæ), for the plaintiff.

Krishnalal M. Jhaveri (amicus curiæ), for the defendants.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The claim was not one within the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes, and the plaint was properly presented to the Subordinate Judge. The latter should have heard and determined the case. The fact that in the course of the hearing he found that the plaintiff was not entitled to the declaration, but only to damages, [677] would not justify him in returning the plaint at that stage of the proceedings. The shape in which the suit was originally instituted is the test of jurisdiction.

We return the record and direct the Subordinate Judge to proceed with and determine the case. Costs of all proceedings subsequent to the order of the 1st October, 1894, to be costs in the cause.

A defendant who has assigned all his rights in the subject-matter of the suit, and has no longer any interest in it, has no right to be made a co-plaintiff.

A plaintiff who has no right of action when he brings his suit cannot remedy the defect and acquire the right by joining with him persons who have the right of action.

The right of redemption and the right of foreclosure are always co extensive, and from the postponement of the former the Court will infer an intention to postpone the latter in the absence of express provision on the point; where there is such express provision, giving the mortgagee power to foreclose at any time, any stipulation postponing the mortgagor's right to redeem is unilateral and void of consideration.

A Court of Equity will not enforce any agreement in restraint of the right of redemption which is oppressive and unreasonable as giving the mortgagee an advantage not belonging to the contract of mortgage.

A mortgagor cannot, by any contract entered into with the mortgagee at the time of the mortgage, give up his right of redemption or fetter it in any manner by confining it to a particular time or a particular description of persons.

[678] APPEAL from the decision of L. G. Fernandez, First Class Subordinate Judge of Thana.

Redemption suit.

On the 1st October, 1877, defendant No. 1 mortgaged with possession certain inam villages and house property to defendant No 2, Govind Baba Gujar, in consideration of Rs. 9,999. The mortgage-deed stipulated (inter alia) that themortgagor should not pay the debt within ten years and the mortgagee should not receive it within that period, and that notwithstanding the period of ten years, if owing to the mortgagor's negligence or for some reason or other an impediment should occur to the mortgagee remaining in possession, he should be at liberty to call in his money at once.

On the 25th September, 1878, defendant No. 1 executed another mortgage to defendant No. 2 for Rs. 5,000, which recited and confirmed the above-mentioned mortgage and contained a stipulation that the mortgagor should redeem the property after the expiration of a term of forty years to be commenced after the expiration of ten years mentioned in the first mortgage. It contained a further clause that if the mortgagor himself, his son or daughter paid the amount of the mortgage after the expiration of fifteen years from the date of the first mortgage, the mortgagee should receive the same and allow redemption; but this right of redemption after the expiration of fifteen years was personal and confined to the mortgagor, his son or daughter and was not to be transferred to any one, nor was it to pass by inheritance.

On the 19th August, 1892, defendant No. 1 conveyed his equity of redemption to the plaintiff, and on the same day executed a power of attorney in his favour.

Afterwards some correspondence took place between the solicitors of the plaintiff and the defendant with respect to the conditions of the mortgage, account and tender; and the solicitors having failed to come to terms.

The plaintiff now filed the present redemption suit against defendants Nos. 1 and 2, mortgagor and mortgagee, on the 3rd October, 1892.

[679] Defendant No. 2 answered (inter alia) that according to the agreement in the second mortgage-bond the plaintiff was not entitled to redeem till the expiration of the period mentioned therein; that the negotiations for compromise fell through owing to plaintiff's default, hence what was said during the course of the negotiations was not binding on him; that there was no legal tender, and that there were no terms of a penal character in the mortgage-deed.

While the suit was pending, defendant No. 1 presented an application to the Court that he should be joined as a co-plaintiff. A similar application was also made by the plaintiff. The Judge rejected both the applications and dismissed the suit on the ground that it was premature, the term of forty years mentioned in the second mortgage being binding on the plaintiff and his vendor.

The plaintiff appealed.

Macpherson with Inverarity and Kalabhai Lallubhai, for the appellant (plaintiff):—The provision as to the tying up of the equity of redemption for fifty years is untenable and cannot be relied on by defendant No. 2. It is utterly oppressive and unconscionable, especially when the relation between the parties was pleader and client—Cowdry v. Day (1); Mahomed Muse v. Jijibhai Bhagvan (2); Trimbak v. Sakharam (3). Such a provision when it is for a short time is allowed on the supposition that it is advantageous to the mortgagor.

The Judge was wrong in rejecting defendant No. 1's application for joining him as co-plaintiff. If the application had been granted, the nature of the suit would not have changed. It would still have remained a redemption suit.

K. R. Daftary, for respondent No. 1 (defendant No. 1):—The application to join first defendant as co-plaintiff ought to have been granted under ss. 27, 31 and 32 of the Civil Procedure Code. Our rights in the subject-matter of the suit ought to have been decided by the Judge—Ayscough v. Bullar (4).

[680] Scott with Narayan G. Chandavarkar, for respondent No. 2 (defendant No. 2) :—The term of forty years mentioned in the second mortgage has not yet expired, and, therefore, the plaintiff has no cause of action.

With respect to the provision for redemption after the expiration of the stipulated term, we submit that cases in India cannot be decided by the strict principles of the Courts of Equity in England. It is a practice in India to have long terms for redemption. In Sakharam N. Sardesai v. Vithu (1) there was a term of twenty-five years. In Vadju v. Vadju (2) the term was ten years ; similarly in Raghubar Dayal v. Budhu Lal (3). In Chandra Kumar v. Iswar Chandra (4) the term was eight years. In Lila Morji v. Vasudeo Moreshvar (5) the term was fifteen years. In Waghela Raisangji Sivasangji v. Miya Gulam Rassul (6) the term was twenty-nine years. In a second appeal recently decided the term of thirty years was upheld. Even the Limitation Act lays down a period of sixty years for redemption. Therefore, according to Legislature even any period less than sixty years would be reasonable.

Next as to influence and pressure alleged to have been used by us against defendant No. 1. There was no fiduciary relation between defendants Nos. 1 and 2 at the time of the transaction. That relationship had ceased. They were not pleader and client at the time of the transaction. At that time defendant No. 1 was accompanied by two lawyers and, therefore, he cannot say that he was not properly advised in the matter. He admits in his deposition that he executed the mortgages of his own free will. A case like the present would be upheld in a Court of Chancery in England—Mainland v. UpJohn (7).

Inverarity in reply :—The mortgages in dispute are not like ordinary mortgages—Fisher on Mortgage, pp. 685-687 ; George Talbot v. Edward Braddil (8). In ordinary mortgages the remedies of the mortgagor and mortgagee are equal and co-extensive, while in the present case the mortgagor's remedy is postponed [681] and the mortgagee is at liberty to demand his money at any time.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The first point I will consider is the alleged wrongful refusal by the lower Court to grant the application of defendant No. 1 to be made a co-plaintiff and the application of the plaintiff to be allowed to amend his plaint and make defendant No. 1 a plaintiff. I fail to see on what ground defendant No. 1 could ask to be made a co-plaintiff. He had assigned all his rights to the plaintiff and had no longer any interest in the subject-matter of the suit. His application was rightly refused. I hold that the application of the plaintiff was also rightly refused. It has been ruled in several cases, and it is clearly good law, that a plaintiff who has no right of action when he brings his suit cannot remedy the defect and acquire the right by joining with him persons who have the right of action. In the present case, however, if the plaintiff has no right of action, defendant No. 1 has none either, for the latter has parted with all his rights, and the equity of redemption remains in the plaintiff, the grantee. The provisions of s. 27 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot possibly be applied to the case, for there has been no mistake in the matter. The fact is that no joinder can help the plaintiff. As assignee of defendant No. 1 he is the only person now entitled to sue for redemption, and the sole point to be determined is whether he has a present right to redeem the two mortgages in question.

The first of these mortgages (Ex. 47) bears date the 1st October, 1877, and is for Rs. 9,999. Its material provision for redemption is contained in the 10th clause, which is as follows :—

"I am not to pay and you are not to receive the amount before the ten years' period mentioned above for the redemption of the mortgage expires. After the expiration of the ten years I will pay you what amount there may be found due to you on making an account together with interest, and redeem the mortgage."

The second (Ex. 46) bears date the 25th September, 1878, and is for Rs. 5,000. It mortgages the same property and a [682] little more, and its material provision for redemption is contained in the 2nd clause, which is as follows :—

"The above-mentioned inam villages and the estate are given into your possession for a further period of forty years, the same to commence immediately after the ten years' period mentioned in the mortgage-bond dated the 1st of October, 1877,—that is to say, the same are given into your possession for a period of fifty years under the two bonds together. Before the expiration of the said period I will not redeem the above-mentioned villages and estate."

It is plain that under these documents the mortgagor was restricted from paying off the mortgage-debt and redeeming the properties for a period of fifty years. It is argued that this stipulation is invalid on account of the fiduciary relations that existed between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, and Cowdry v. Day (1) is relied on in support of the argument. In that case the Vice-Chancellor observes that it is not usual to restrict by stipulation the right of the mortgagor to pay off the money for so long a period as twenty years, and he goes on to say : "The clause in question is a contract between solicitor and client. If it has an effect in any material degree prejudicial to the ordinary rights of a mortgagor, and is unusual in its terms, the solicitor must show that his client had sufficient advice and assistance to relieve him from the pressure arising from the relation of solicitor and client." I should hesitate to apply the principle enunciated in this case to the relationship of vakil and client as it exists in the Mofussil. A vakil is generally engaged for a particular case only and has not that influence over a client that a solicitor in England might be supposed to have. In the present case defendant No. 2 was employed by defendant No. 1 as his vakil for a case at the time of the first mortgage only, defendant No. 1 had a number of other vakils besides defendant No. 2—(defendant No. 2 says that he had very little work from defendant No. 1)—and defendant No. 2 acted as vakil against as well as for defendant No. 1. There is, therefore, a great distinction between the two cases. Even, however, if the principle of the case cited be applied, defendant No. 2 says that defendant No. 1 had his own vakils to [683] assist him in the matter of these mortgages—vakils who witnessed his signature to the second deed, and that at their suggestion and advice alterations were made distinctly in favour of defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 1 himself admits that he could have got the money by mortgaging the property to any one else, that he mortgaged it to defendant No. 2 of his own free will, and that no pressure of any kind was put on him by defendant No. 2. The very matters, therefore, that according to Cowdry v. Day (1) have to be shown, seem to be shown in the present case.

The next point to be considered is the term. No doubt a term of fifty years is a long period. We have, however, the explanation of defendant No. 2 himself as to why that term was fixed. I do not think that it is altogether satisfactory, but there is the fact that it was not considered by defendant No. 1 or his legal advisers an unreasonably long term when coupled with the other provisions in the bond as to redemption. Periods restricting redemption are undoubtedly much longer in this country than in England. In this country ten years is a common term. There are cases reported in which terms of fifteen years (Lila Morji v. Vasudev Moreshwar (2)), twenty-five years (Govindrao v. Annaji (3)), twenty-nine years (Waghela Raisangji v. Miya Gulam Rasul (4)), thirty years (Vallabh Krishna v. Keval Bhagvan (5)), and thirty-five years (Ganesh v. Prabhakar (6)), have been upheld. In the case at Printed Judgments, 1875, p. 5, the Judges said: "The terms (that although the whole sum of Rs. 21,001 should be paid off before the expiration of the twenty-nine years, the mortgagee should be entitled to remain in receipt of the rents and profits until the end of those twenty-nine years) may or may not have been hard, they were agreed to by adults, and there is neither allegation in the plaint nor proof in the cause that any undue advantage was taken." These observations are very appropriate to the stipulation in question in the present case. The Limitation Act, 1877, gives sixty years as the period within which suits for redemption or foreclosure can be brought. I may add that no case has been [684] cited to us in which a Court in India has held any period fixed by the parties to be bad on the ground of its being unreasonably long. In the case of Mashook Ameen Suzzada v. Marem Reddy (7), the Court allowed a usufructuary mortgage for a term of fifty years to be redeemed, but it does not profess to proceed on that ground, but because it regarded the transaction as a mortgage and redeemable on the usual terms. Moreover, the decision was dissented from in Keshava v. Keshava (8).

It was then argued that the first mortgage can be redeemed at the expiration of its ten years even if the second cannot be redeemed for forty years more. The words, however, in the above quoted 2nd clause in the second mortgage are decisive on this point. The property is given into the possession of the mortgagee for a period of fifty years under the two deeds, and the mortgagor binds himself not to redeem before the expiration of that period.

Then it is contended that the stipulation is bad, because the second mortgage postpones the right of redemption only and not that of foreclosure. This contention can only be good if there is some provision in the deed enabling the mortgagee to call in his money before the expiration of the term allowed for redemption. It would not be sufficient if the deed were silent on the point. By the law as administered in these Courts the right of redemption and foreclosure is always considered to be co-extensive, and if the right of the mortgagor to redeem were postponed, the right of the mortgagee to foreclose would be held to have been equally postponed by necessary implication. As authority for this proposition it is sufficient to cite the cases of Sakharam v. Vithu (1); Vadju v. Vadju (2); Raghubar Dayal v. Budhu Lal (3); and the observations in the case of Tirugnana Sambandha Pandara Sannadhi v. Nallatambi (4). We have only to see whether there is in the deed any provision which expressly gives the mortgagee the power of calling in his money at any time, which would have the effect of making the stipulation for [685] postponement of redemption unilateral and void of consideration; for, as observed by Fisher in his work on Mortgage at p. 685, "Arrangements postponing redemption are supported on the ground that the contract is valuable to both parties, the mortgagee on the one hand being sure of a continuing security for his money, and the mortgagor being freed from the expense and trouble of seeking new lenders."

The 4th clause of the second deed allows the mortgagee to sell the property if any default is made in the payment of interest. This would not, I think, be such a provision. The 7th clause applies to the second mortgage cls. 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12, 13 and 14 of the first mortgage. Of these, cl. 11 is the most important. It is as follows:—

"The period mentioned above for paying the amount is up to ten years, but if owing to my negligence or for some reason or other an impediment occur to your continuing in the management of the villages, and should you demand payment. I will at once pay the amount without raising any objection as to there being yet some further time for payment to elapse: but it is at your option whether to receive or not to receive the amount."

It is obvious that under this clause the mortgagor might at any time be called on to pay up the money on the allegation of an impediment for which he was in no degree responsible. This throws on him a very severe burden, and it would, I think, be unjust and inequitable to uphold the fifty years' stipulation in favour of the mortgagee when such a provision as this exists to the detriment of the mortgagor. It would be quite as unreasonable a bargain as that which was held invalid in Talbot v. Braddill (5).

One further provision remains to be discussed. Under cl. 2 of the second mortgage defendant No. 1 was allowed to redeem after fifteen years. The clause runs as follows:—

"But after you shall have enjoyed the income of the villages for ten years mentioned in the previous bond and five years under this bond, in all for fifteen years, if I myself, my son, or daughter, that is, any one of us three, pay whatever amount [686] may be found to be due to you together with interest, you are to receive the same and to release the villages and the estate (from the mortgage). As to that you are not to plead the excuse of the period of forty years mentioned in this bond having (yet) to run out. But as I have received the present amount on agreeing to allow you to continue in uninterrupted possession of the above-mentioned villages for forty years after the expiry of the period mentioned in the previous bond, the right of redeeming the villages on payment of the amount after the expiry of the above-mentioned period of fifteen years does not vest in the heirs of myself, my son, or my daughter. Nor shall the said right pass to the acquirer of the rights of myself, my son, or my daughter by mortgage, sale or by any other manner. After the expiration of the fifteen years, the right of redemption is the personal right of us three, that is to say, it will be dependent upon (i.e., confined to, three individuals, (i.e.,) I myself, my son, and daughter. The same cannot be transferred to any one; nor shall it pass by inheritance."

This clause might be used to show that it was not the intention of the parties to make the fifty years' term an essential part of the contract (as to which point see Shri Raja Setrucherla Ramabhadra Raju Bahadur v. Shri Raju Vircherla Surianarayanaraju Bahadur (1), The chief point, however, argued on behalf of the plaintiff was that the restriction of the power of alienating the right of redemption after fifteen years thus conferred on the mortgagor is invalid, and that the plaintiff as the assignee of defendant No. 1 can now redeem, the fifteen years' term having expired. The cases of Howard v. Harris (2) and Trimbak v. Sakharam (3) were cited in support of the argument. On the other hand, it was contended that the stipulation is a purely personal concession in favour of the mortgagor alone, and that there is nothing invalid or unreasonable in the parties agreeing that that concession should not be alienated or be enjoyed by any one else. That the cases cited only show that a prohibition of the alienation of the equity of redemption is bad, and do not apply to the present condition. No doubt there is some force in this contention, but it appears to [687] me quite plain that the prohibition is not one that the Court can maintain. The fixing a fifteen years' term in itself shows that the fifty years' term was considered to be excessively long and so oppressive to the mortgagor. The concession was intended to mitigate that severity. It is clear that defendant No. 1 would have no money of his own with which to redeem his mortgage. When, therefore, the mortgagee inserts a condition that renders redemption by the mortgagor under the concession impossible, he does away at once with all the good the concession was intended to do to the mortgagor. The conclusion is obvious, either the original term of fifty years must be set aside as unusually long and oppressive, or full effect must be given to the concession, and to give that effect the prohibition against alienation must be set aside. Whichever way the case is looked at, the result is the same. I am only surprised that the right of the plaintiff to redeem has been resisted. Putting aside the assignment, the plaintiff, as the agent of defendant No. 1, could on his behalf and with the money of defendant No. 1 now in his hands at once redeem the mortgage. He could do so to-morrow if this suit were dismissed to-day. It is, I think, much to be regretted that defendant No. 2 should have withdrawn from his letter of the 17th September, 1892, in which he expresses his willingness to allow the plaintiff to redeem, and so have caused all this litigation. The lower Court has disposed of the suit upon this preliminary point. We reverse the decree on such point, and remand the case to the lower Court to be determined on the merits.

All costs incurred to be costs in the cause to be dealt with in the final decree to be passed.

CANDY, J.—On the 1st October, 1877, Gulam Jilani passed to Govind Baba, a pleader of the Thana District Court, the mortgage-deed (Ex. 47), by which, in consideration of Rs. 9,999, bearing compound interest at 12 per cent., the mortgagor mortgaged his share in two inam villages and also in certain house property in the town of Thana. was to remain in the mortgagor's possession, but the mortgagee was to have possession of the inam property under the following clauses of management :—

[688] 1. The 1st clause related to the existing conditions of management between the mortgagor and his co-sharer, which were to continue as between the mortgagee and the said co-sharer.

2. Rs. 100 was to be debited to the mortgagee every year on account of a karkun.

3. The mortgagee was to have possession for ten years, receiving profits and deducting expenses out of the balance, taking Rs. 1,200 every year on account of interest, and crediting what remained, if anything, towards payment of principal. Any deficiency in the sum of Rs. 1,200 was to be made good by the mortgagor, a balance was to be struck at the end of Divali, interest at 12 per cent. per annum being chargeable.

4. Every Kartik (the month after Divali) the mortgagor was at liberty to pay Rs. 700 in a lump sum, the same being credited to principal.

5. Expenses of suits against tenants for the recovery of rents were to be debited to the mortgagor.

6. The mortgagee was at liberty to grant remissions according to custom in connection with the Salt lands.

7. The mortgagor was to be debited with the expense of repairs to embankments.

8. The mortgagor was to be in possession of the house property at Thana.

9. The mortgagor was to make the necessary petitions to the Collector, in order that the mortgagee should have possession of the inam property.

10. The mortgagor was not to pay, and the mortgagee not to receive, the debt before the expiration of the ten years. On an account being made up after the ten years, should the mortgagor fail to pay what was due, the mortgagee was at liberty, after giving notice, to sell.

11. Notwithstanding the period of ten years, if owing to the mortgagor's negligence or " for some reason or other an impediment" should occur to the mortgagee remaining in possession, he was at liberty to call in his money at once.

[689] 12. The mortgagor was to give the mortgagee a power of attorney for the management for the ten years.

13. If the mortgagee owing to the mortgagor's objection should lose possession of the property, the latter was to give possession to the former for a further period in order to make up the ten years.

14. The mortgagee was to take the profits from the cucumber beds.

On the 25th September, 1878, Gulam Jilani executed a further mortgage-bond to Govind Baba, in which the mortgage of 1st October, 1877, was recited, and the mortgagor in consideration of a further sum of Rs. 5,000, to bear compound interest at 12 per cent. per annum, mortgaged with possession the following property :—the shares in the inam villages and in the house property at Thana above described and also in certain garden land (wadi) at the village of Kashimire. Then followed the following clauses :—

1. The bond of 1st October, 1877, was confirmed, the said transaction being kept " quite separate and independent."

2. " The above-mentioned inam villages and the estate are given into your possession for a further period of forty years, the same to commence immediately after the ten years' period mentioned in the mortgage-bond dated the 1st of October, 1877, that is to say, the same are given into your possession for a period of fifty years under the two bonds together. Before the expiration of the said period, I will not redeem the above-mentioned villages and estate. But after you shall have enjoyed the income of the villages for ten years mentioned in the previous bond and five years under this bond, in all for fifteen years, if I myself, my son or daughter, that is, any one of us three, pay whatever amount may be found to be due to you together with interest, you are to receive the same and to release the villages and the estate (from the mortgage). As to that you are not to plead the excuse of the period of forty years mentioned in this bond having (yet) to run out. But as I have received the present amount on agreeing to allow you to continue in uninterrupted possession of the above-mentioned villages for forty years after the expiry of [690] the period mentioned in the previous bond, the right of redeeming the villages on payment of the amount after the expiry of the above-mentioned period of fifteen years does not vest in the heirs of myself, my son, or my daughter. Nor shall the said right pass to the acquirer of the rights of myself, my son, or my daughter, by mortgage, sale or by any other manner. After the expiration of the fifteen years, the right of redemption is the personal right of us three, that is to say, it will be dependent upon (i.e., confined to) three individuals, (i. e.), I myself, my son, and daughter. The same cannot be transferred to any one; nor shall it pass by inheritance."

3. The third clause embodied cls. 1, 2 and 3 of the previous bond, but provided that Rs. 1,800 (i. e., Rs. 1,200 under the first bond and Rs. 600 under the second bond) should be deducted on account of interest from the profits of the villages, and the mortgagor was to make good any deficiency at the end of July every year, and in default was to pay interest at 12 per cent. on the balance due.

4. "Should I fail to pay in full from the income of the villages or by private settlement, at the end of July in the succeeding year, Rs. 1,800 on account of interest and the balance of Rs. 1,800 on account of the preceding year, together with interest thereon as mentioned above, you are at liberty to sell the whole of the villages and the estate either by a private or public sale, without taking into consideration the ground of the period (for payment) not having elapsed."

5. The mortgagor was not to claim redemption after the expiration of the period without paying in the succeeding year all principal and interest that might be due, and no objection on account of limitation or damdupat was to be pleaded.

6. The words "at the end of July" were to be substituted for "at the end of Divali" in the previous bond. With that exception cl. 4 of the previous bond was kept intact.

7. Also cls. 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12 and 14 of the previous bond were kept intact and made applicable. So, too, with cl. 13, "forty years" being read for "ten years."

[691] 8. The garden land at Kashimire and the house property at Thana were to be in the mortgagee's possession, who after deducting all expenses was to credit the mortgagor with the balance of the profits.

9. The mortgagee was to have full authority to make repairs to the house property at Thana or to rebuild, and the mortgagor was to pay 12 per cent. interest on the sums expended by the mortgagee, which were to be added to the mortgage-debt. The mortgagee was at liberty, if necessary, to sell the mortgagor's share in the house property or garden land.

10. Expenses of litigation in connection with the said property were with interest to be added to the mortgage-debt.

11. This clause repeated the conditions of management of the inam villages existing between the mortgagor and his co-sharer.

12. This clause related to petitions to the Collector, &c.

On the 19th August, 1892, Gulam Jilani executed a sale-deed to Abdul Hak, by which for the consideration of Rs. 33,791 (of which Rs. 2,101 were paid in cash and Rs. 31,690 were deposited in a Bank for the purpose of paying off Govind Baba's mortgage), Gulam Jilani's share in the inam villages and wadi above mentioned were sold. It was recited that the share in the house property at Thana had been sold by Govind Baba in 1890 for Rs. 4,334. The conveyance further recited that the period of fifteen years of the mortgage was to expire in September, 1892, and, therefore, Gulam Jilani executed a general power of attorney in the name of Abdul Hak, enabling the latter to file a suit for redemption, if necessary. This power of attorney is Ex. No. 4, and bears even date with the sale-deed (45). It gives power to Abdul Hak to redeem the property and to get from Govind Baba re-conveyance effected in Gulam Jilani's name according to law in respect thereof.

Accordingly on 3rd September, 1892 (see Ex. 48), Abdul Hak's solicitor wrote to Govind Baba reciting the above facts and asking for an account of the mortgage. Govind Baba's solicitor replied on 17th September, 1892: "It seems your client is not aware of the distinct clause in the Marathi mortgage-deed, dated the 25th September, 1878, executed by Mr. Gulam Jilani, [692] prohibiting and debarring the assignees of the former from redeeming the mortgaged properties for a period of fifty years from the 1st day of October, 1877, of which period fifteen years will elapse on the 30th instant, and giving power to the mortgagor, his son, or daughter only to redeem the mortgaged properties within the said period of fifteen years. Your client has, it seems, purchased the equity of redemption. Our client, however, is ready and willing, in order to avoid litigation and without prejudice to his right to rely upon the covenant or proviso above alluded to and any other objection he can legally raise in future, to allow your client to redeem the mortgaged properties, provided he pays within ten days from the receipt by you hereof the whole of the balance, viz., Rs. 30,009-4-10, due under the mortgages up to the end of this month as per account in Marathi herewith sent, and further interest up till payment, and also all costs of and incidental to the approval, execution of the reconveyance and correspondence relating thereto." Abdul Hak's solicitor replied on 20th September, admitting full knowledge of the contents of the mortgage-deeds, and protesting that the accounts submitted were not proper, and that an inspection of all vouchers and accounts should be allowed. Govind Baba's solicitor replied on 21st September, saying: "Your client is certainly not entitled to any inspection of our client's account books. In making request for the same he seems to forget that he is the intending purchaser and not the mortgagor of the property mortgaged to our client. Our client is ready and willing to show the accounts to the proper party entitled to see the same. Our client will, however, have no objection to produce his account books for inspection in our office, if your client has the proper authority from the mortgagor to take such inspection and if you will give a personal undertaking to pay our costs of and incidental to the giving of such inspection and all correspondence in reference thereto."

The solicitors, however, failed to come to terms ; and the present suit was filed on 3rd October, 1892, by Abdul Hak, who made Gulam Jilani defendant (he did not appear, and Govind Baba defendant No. 2. This last-named defendant, the mortgagee, pleaded that the right to redeem would not accrue to Abdul [693] Hak for thirty-five years ; and on the ground that no cause of action had accrued to the plaintiff, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit with costs.

Abdul Hak has appealed, and several points were taken by his learned counsel. I do not think it is necessary to discuss them all. But I think that the suit for redemption should be allowed to proceed on the broad and simple ground that a Court of Equity will not enforce any agreement in restraint of the right of redemption which is oppressive or unreasonable as giving the mortgagee an advantage not belonging to the contract of mortgage.

In the first place, it cannot, I think, be contended that this is a case where the continuance of the enjoyment of the mortgaged property for the prescribed period of fifty years formed a material part of the contract, and thus it would be inequitable to deprive the mortgagee of this right. The mortgagee was not, if a certain period of enjoyment was assured to him, to be content with the rents and profits in complete satisfaction of his whole claim. The mortgagee deposed that he suggested the term of fifty years, because he was to improve the property. But he was to charge all expenses to the mortgagor ; and thus it cannot be said that by reason of the very nature of the mortgage and the circumstances of the contract the mortgagee is entitled to resist redemption, on the ground that the period of fifty years must be taken to form a material part of the contract itself, and to have been named not only for the protection of the mortgagee-debtor, but also for that of the mortgage-creditor. By the 4th clause of the second mortgage, if the annual payment of Rs. 1,800 was not made good from the income of the villages and by the mortgagor personally, the mortgagee was at liberty to sell the whole of the villages and the estate, and to recover the balance, if any, from the mortgagor personally. So, too, by the 11th clause of the first bond, which was kept intact, if " for some reason or other " the mortgagee was obstructed in possession of the property, he could at once call in his money. And yet it is contended that the mortgagor's assignee cannot tender the mortgage-debt and seek redemption of the property. It seems to me that the obligations of the parties being not mutual or reciprocal, it would be inequitable to allow [694] this contention to prevail. It should be noted that the 10th clause of the first deed was not made applicable in the second deed, i. e., the clause by which the mortgagor was not to pay and the mortgagee not to receive the debt before the expiration of the stipulated period. That was a clause by which the obligations of the parties were made mutual and reciprocal. But, it is said, the mortgagor with his eyes open executed the second mortgage and he had the opportunity of independent advice ; why, then, should he be relieved from the condition inserted in the second mortgage-deed that the right of redemption after fifteen years was to be personal, attaching only to himself or son or daughter (admittedly he had no issue then born to him), and not attaching to his assignee, who could only redeem after the expiration of the period of fifty years ? The answer is that he could not contract himself out of the right of alienation which is an essential incident of the estate which he has in the property by virtue of his equity of redemption. See Trimback v. Sakharam (1). In Mainland v. UpJohn (2) Mr. Justice Kay referred to "rules of equity, which in the jurisdiction which has been sometimes called the 'paternal' jurisdiction of Courts of Equity, were forced upon a mortgagee whatever contract he chose to make with the mortgagor; the Court did interfere with his contract, and so to speak, altered the contract between the mortgagor and mortgagee by disallowing these advantages for which the mortgagee had stipulated." In Howard v. Harris (3) the contract was "I myself or the heirs males of my body may redeem." It was held that the assignee would also have a right to redeem.

In the present suit the circumstances are such that it would savour of undue technicality, as much as want of equity, if the claim for redemption is dismissed. For the mortgagor is himself a party to the suit; he is desirous that the account should be taken and redemption decreed. Abdul Hak, it is true, is not merely an "intending purchaser" with a power of attorney enabling him to ask for an account from the mortgagee, but is actually the transferee of Gulam Jilani's right, title and interest in the mortgaged property. If the dismissal of the present suit [695] must be affirmed, then apparently all that Abdul Hak must do is to reconvey the estate to Gulam Jilani, on condition that it should be conveyed back to him after redemption in accordance with the previous agreement to sell, and the claim for redemption would commence afresh. It is said that the contract that the mortgagor himself or his son or daughter (he having no issue at the time) might redeem after fifteen years was a concession and should not be extended by the application of any rules of equity. But it is easy to see that it was a concession in word only and not in fact. If the mortgagor was not by the concession to be permitted to raise money by mortgage or sale of the property in order to effect the redemption after fifteen years, then there was no concession at all. For it is not pretended that Gulam Jilani had any other means of raising funds for the purpose.

It may be, as Lord Bramwell said in Salt v. Marquess of Northampton(4), that the equitable rules as to the right of redemption were devised by the piety or love of fees of those who administered equity. But certainly if the conclusions which I have noted above are correct, then we cannot in the present case "think the equitable rule unreasonable," nor is there cause for regret that we "have to disregard the express agreement of a man perfectly competent and advised by competent advisers." The case just quoted is instructive. All the Judges—North, J., in the Court of first instance, Cotton, Lindley and Bowen, L.JJ., in the Court of Appeal, and Lords Selborne, Bramwell, Morris and Hannen in the House of Lords—held that if the transaction in question was a mortgage, then the rule must prevail that "equity will permit of no attempt to clog, fetter or impede the borrower's right to redeem and recover what may still remain in equity his own," and so though Earl Compton deliberately, and after taking independent advice, contracted that should he die in the lifetime of his father the policies (the subject of the mortgage) should belong absolutely to the mortgagee-lenders, the Court set aside that part of the contract and allowed Earl Compton's father as the representative of his son's estate to redeem the mortgage. It is true that in the present case the language of the contract is somewhat different. Here the mortgagor said: "After the [696] expiration of the fifteen years, the right of redemption is the personal right of us three, i. e., it will be confined to three individuals, myself, my son and daughter (the latter not being at present in existence), the same cannot be transferred to any one; nor shall it pass by inheritance." Suppose the mortgagor had died in 1879, the year following the mortgage; would the Court refuse to allow his heir to redeem on the expiration of the fifteen years? I think it would not, but the equitable rule would be applied. Why, then, should not the same rule be applied when the person interested in the equity of redemptiom is the transferee, the original mortgagor being alive and consenting to redemption? The rule is general; it is that a mortgagor cannot by any contract entered into with the mortgagee at the time of the mortgage give up his right of redemption or fetter it in any manner by confining it to a particular time or to a particular description of persons. (See the notes to Howard v. Harris in White and Tudor's Leading Cases in Equity, 6th Ed., Vol. II, p. 1183). It is true that the doctrine established by Courts of Equity in England, that the time stipulated in the mortgage-deed is not of the essence of the contract, has been held by the highest authority—Pattabhiramier v. Vencatarow (1)—to be "unknown to the ancient law of India; and if it could have been introduced by the decisions of the Courts of the East India Company, their Lordships can find no such course of decisions. In fact, the weight of authority seems to be the other way." But the other portion of the rule has been applied to India. As shown above, this Court has refused to give effect to a proviso in a mortgage-deed which deprived the mortgagor of right of alienation which he had in the land by virtue of his equity of redemption. Once admit that by the contract a right of redemption was given to the mortgagor after fifteen years (whether as a pretended concession or otherwise), and then the application of the rule must follow. As the money was to be repaid, let the words be ever so much fettered, they all signify nothing. (See Ord v. Smith (2)).

For these reasons, I think that the decision of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the suit on the preliminary point must be reversed, and the case must go back to the lower Court.

Decree reversed.

APPEAL from the decision of S. Hammick, District Judge of Ahmednagar.

On 10th February, 1890, the plaintiff brought this suit to recover from the defendant the price of certain timber supplied him by the plaintiff in 1877. The defendant had been appointed by the Executive Engineer at Nasik to supervise the building of a kacheri for the Mamlatdar of Rahuri. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant had promised to pay him for the timber from the Mamlatdar's treasury, but had failed to do so. The cause of action was stated to have arisen on 1st August, 1887.

The plaint was originally filed in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Rahuri, but, as the defendant pleaded that he had obtained the goods as a Government servant and that, therefore, the Court had no jurisdiction (s. 32 of Civil Courts' Act XIV of 1869), the plaint was returned for presentation to the proper Court. On appeal by the plaintiff the order for the return of the plaint was confirmed by the High Court on the 28th November, 1892 (No. 87 of 1892).

The plaintiff thereupon on the 3rd January, 1893, served the defendant with notice under s. 424 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and on the 4th January, 1893, presented the plaint in the District Court and applied that the case should stand over for two months in order to allow the defendant the [698] time required by s. 424 of Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The Court, however, refused this application on the 3rd February, 1893.

Against the order of refusal the plaintiff appealed to the High Court (Miscellaneous Appeal No. 14 of 1893), but the appeal was dismissed.

The District Court having accepted the plaint registered it as suit No. 1 of 1893. The case came on for hearing on the 27th October, 1893, when the District Judge dismissed it on the ground that notice had not been served on the defendant two months before it was filed, as required by s. 424 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The plaintiff appealed.

Branson (with Gangaram B. Rele) for the appellant (plaintiff).—The Judge was wrong in dismissing this suit for want of notice. No notice was necessary. This is a suit for breach of contract and to such suit s. 424 is not applicable—Shahebzadee Shahunshah Begum v. Fergusson (1); Ranchod Varajbhai v. The Municipality of Dakor (3); Bhau Balapa v. Nana (4); Sardarsing v. Ganpatsingji (5); Nagusha v. The Municipality of Sholapur (6); Manaklal Motilal v. The Municipal Commissioner for the City of Bombay (2); William Allen v. Ba Shri Dariba (7).

If, however, notice was necessary we say that the defendant had sufficient notice of the suit, which was originally filed in the Subordinate Judge's Court in 1890.

Rao Saheb Vasudeo J. Kirtikar (Government Pleader), for the respondent (defendant).—We rely on s. 424 of the Civil Procedure Code. The language of that section is imperative, and the notice mentioned therein would be necessary even if the present suit be considered to be one ex contractu. JUDGMENT.

[699] JARDINE, J.—This is a suit which we must treat as brought under s. 32 of Act XIV of 1869 against the defendant, an officer of Government, in his official capacity. The District Judge held that the defendant was entitled to two months' notice under s. 424 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and dismissed the suit, because it had been brought before the expiry of that period. The suit is one ex contractu; and no case has been cited to show that s. 424 applies to such a suit, whereas Sahebzadee Shahunshah Begum v. Fergusson (1) decides to the contrary, and the opinion of Farran, J., in Maneklal v. The Municipal Commissioner for the City of Bombay (2) is in accordance with that decision.

On these authorities we must reverse the decree of the District Judge, and remand the cause for trial; the respondent to pay the costs of this appeal.

Order reversed and case remanded.

Privy Council—Appeal to Privy Council—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 596—Substantial question of law—Practice—Procedure.

Per JARDINE, J.—Where the High Court in appeal has confirmed the decree of the lower Court and has taken substantially the same view of the facts and where, upon the facts as found by both Courts, no question of law arises, leave to appeal to the Privy Council should be refused.

Per RANADE, J.—There is a distinction between the confirmation of a decree and the affirmation of the decision and findings of the Court of first instance by the High Court. The substantial question of law referred to in s. 596 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) need not directly arise out of the concurrent findings of fact, but it is enough if it is involved in those findings, and can, if the appeal is allowed, be raised in the course of the argument.

[R., 23 A. 94 (98) = 21 A.W.N. 8.]

APPLICATION for leave to appeal to the Privy Council from a decree of the High Court.

[700] The plaintiff Shri Baba Maharaj sued for a declaration that he was the adopted son of Shri Tatia Maharaj, deceased, and as such entitled to inherit the whole of Shri Tatia Maharaj's estate.

The defendant Shri Nana Maharaj pleaded that the plaintiff was not taken in adoption by Shri Tatia Maharaj; that at the time of the alleged adoption Shri Tatia Maharaj was incapable from illness of performing the ceremony of adoption; that the alleged adoption, even if proved, was illegal and invalid by reason of the fact that the plaintiff was given in adoption by his mother without the knowledge and consent of his father; and that the suit was barred by limitation.

The First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona, who tried the case, raised (inter alia) the following issues:—

(1) Whether the suit was barred by the law of limitation?

(2) Whether the plaintiff had been validly adopted? and

(3) Whether the defendant was estopped from disputing the adoption?

The Subordinate Judge held that the suit was not barred by limitation; that the plaintiff had been taken in adoption by Tatia Maharaj; that Tatia was not incapable from illness at the time of the adoption: that the plaintiff's mother gave the plaintiff in adoption with the knowledge and consent of his father; that the adoption was, therefore, valid; and that the defendant was estopped from disputing the adoption. He, therefore, passed a decree, declaring that the plaintiff was the adopted son of Tatia Maharaj and as such was entitled to inherit his estate.

Against this decree the defendant appealed to the High Court.

The appeal was heard by Jardine and Ranade, JJ., who took substantially the same view of the facts as the Subordinate Judge. Jardine, J., however, did not express any opinion either on the question of limitation or on the question of estoppel; while Ranade, J., did not agree with the lower Court in regarding some of the documents put in evidence as suspicious.

On the whole the learned Judges confirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge with costs.

Thereupon the defendant applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council from the decree of the High Court, on the ground, [701] among others, that the plaintiff's adoption was invalid under the Hindu law, his mother not having been authorized by his father to give him in adoption.

A rule nisi was granted calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why the defendant should not be granted leave to appeal to the Privy Council.

Macpherson, Acting Advocate General (with him Ganpat Sadashiv Rao), for the defendant in support of the rule.—The present case falls under the last paragraph of s. 596 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). The appeal involves a substantial question of law, viz., whether the plaintiff's adoption, assuming it to be proved in fact, was valid in law. We say it is not valid, because it is not satisfactorily proved that the plaintiff's father authorized his mother to give him in adoption. The "substantial question of law" referred to in s. 596 does not mean only a question of law arising out of the facts held to be proved and admitting them to be proved. All that the section requires is that a substantial question of law arises in the case, and that there is such a question to be argued before the Privy Council—Moran v. Mittu (1) and Gopinath v. Goluck Chunder (2). This appeal does raise questions of law as well as questions of fact. We are, therefore, entitled to appeal to the Privy Council.

Branson (with him Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar and P. P. Khare) showed cause:—Both the Courts have found on the facts, and the Privy Council will not allow them now to be questioned. The facts being thus established, there is no question of law. It is only by disputing the facts, viz., the mother's authority, that any question of law can arise—Naragunty Lutchmeedavamah v. Vengama Naidoo (3); Kuar Nirbhai Das v. Rani Kuar (4); Nilmoni Singh Deo Bahadur v. Kirti Chunder Chowdhry (5); Thompson v. Calcutta Tramways Company (6); Shri Dharnidhar Chintaman

JUDGMENT.

[702] JARDINE, J.—The learned Advocate General who supports the rule admits that the judgments recorded by Mr. Justice Ranade and myself take substantially the same view of the facts as the Subordinate Judge did, and that both of us concur with him in finding that Sundra Bai, the natural mother of the plaintiff, was, to use Mr. Justice Ranade's words, fully authorized by his natural father to give him in adoption. In paragraph 28 of my judgment I adopted the very words of the Subordinate Judge in finding that the natural father "Aba Maharaj was a consenting party to the giving of the plaintiff in adoption by his wife."

It is not disputed that, on such facts as the two Courts have found, the adoption is valid at Hindu Law, nor that the facts as found are decisive of the real issue between the parties—Raja Bardakant v. Babu Chundra(3). Therefore, said the Advocate General, as the decision of the High Court concurred with the original decision, he had to show that the appeal involved a substantial question of law.

The Advocate General has urged us to adopt the interpretation of the last clause of s. 596 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which with much doubt was expressed by the learned Judges in Moran v. Mittu (4) and Ashghar v. Hyder (5). No case has been shown us in which any other High Court has considered that interpretation, nor any pronouncement of the Judicial Committee thereupon. I refrain from giving an opinion, as I think the present application should be refused, because the appeal does not "involve some substantial question of law."

We asked the Advocate General what there was in the appeal to which these words can apply, what was the substantial question of law to be debated before their Lordships of the Privy Council. The reply was that it was this—whether a Hindu wife can give her natural son in adoption without the express or implied consent of her living husband. This question is answered by the judgment of this Court in Rangubai v. Bhagirthibai (6) in the negative, following earlier cases. No authority to the contrary has been pointed out or suggested. The Advocate [703] General's client does not wish to question these decisions, and in fact relies upon the answer they give as unquestionable, substantially as a maxim. Even if there is a question of law, I think it is not a substantial one : and that we best give effect to the enactment which changed the earlier law—Feda Hossein's Case (7) by refusing leave to appeal.

RANADE, J.—In the absence of any rulings of this Court to the contrary, I think the decisions of the High Court of Calcutta on s. 596, Civil Procedure Code, should be allowed to govern a case like the present. That Court has decided that there is a distinction between the confirmation of a decree and the affirmation of the decision and findings of the Court of first instance by this Court—Ashghar v. Hyder (5), and further that the substantial question of law need not directly arise out of the concurrent findings of fact—Moran v. Mittu (4), Munnalal v. Gajraj (3), Durga v. Jewahir (9), but that is enough if it is involved in those findings, and can, if the appeal is allowed, be raised in the course of the argument. In the present case, though we confirmed the decree of the lower Court, one of the Judges did not decide the questions of limitation and estoppel on which findings were recorded by the Court of first instance, and the other Judge took a different view of some of the documents from that of the lower Court which had held them to be suspicious. In my opinion, the confirmation of a decree under such circumstances is not equivalent to an affirmation of the decision of the lower Court. Similarly, though the Advocate General did not lay much stress in his argument before us on any of the points of law, save the point which related to the competency of the natural mother of plaintiff to give her son in adoption in the absence of her husband, yet as the other points were raised in appeal before us, and might be argued before the Judicial Committee, I should hesitate before refusing to grant leave to the appellant to carry the case before a higher tribunal simply because, in my opinion, the evidence showed that the mother had authority from her husband to give her son in adoption, and that the [704] absence of the father at the time was, therefore, immaterial. Mr. Justice Jardine has, however, taken a different view, and I understand that this is not a matter which can properly be referred to a third Judge. The appellant, moreover, has the right to apply directly to the Judicial Committee, and obtain their special leave to appeal on good cause shown.

Under these circumstances, I feel that this is not an occasion where, in the exercise of a discretionary jurisdiction, I should press my views any further. I accordingly join with Mr. Justice Jardine in the final order of refusal.

The chance of acquiring a right to light and air is not immoveable property within the meaning of the Registration Act, nor can a pecuniary value be put upon it. A document, therefore, which limits or extinguishes the chance of acquiring such an easement does not require registration.

Dhunjibhoy v. Lisboa (1) and Ghanasham v. Moroba (2) followed and approved as to the circumstances in which the Court will grant an injunction where a right to light and air is infringed.

Hornby Row, Bombay, which, when completed, would obstruct the light and air to the windows of the third and fourth storeys on the south side of his said house.

He alleged that the windows in question were ancient windows, and that he and his predecessor in title had enjoyed the right [705] which he claimed as an easement and as of right for upwards of twenty years.

The defendant denied that any easement existed. He alleged that the southern windows in the upper floor of the plaintiff's house had been originally opened and had since been permitted to exist not as of right but under an agreement originally made in 1865 between his predecessor in title and the plaintiff's predecessor in title, which was subsequently recognized and confirmed between the plaintiff and himself.

This agreement (he alleged) had been entered into shortly after an addition had been made to the plaintiff's house, and it was to the effect that, in case thereafter the defendant's house should be raised higher than the plaintiff's and new windows in the plaintiff's south wall should be thereby obstructed, no objection should be taken.

The defendant alleged that it was under this special arrangement that the plaintiff's windows had been opened and had ever since existed, and he contended that the plaintiff could not now object to their being obstructed by the house which he (the defendant) proposed to build.

The plaintiff purchased his house in 1867. The defendant obtained his house under the will of his grandfather Byramji Jijibhoy, C.S.I.

At the hearing, Mr. Pestonji Cawasji, who was called by the defendant, deposed that in February, 1865, he was assistant to Byramji Jijibhoy, and that in that year he went to see the adjoining house (now the plaintiff's), and after inspection made the following memorandum which was signed by him and his assistant :—

"As to the house situated at Kalekot (i.e., in Hornby Row) in the neighbourhood of Seth Byramji Jijibhoy's chawl in the Fort, which was formerly called Mehta's Chawl, the third floor whereof is being taken down, we have this day gone and seen the same. And there is only one window on the said floor in the side (wall) towards the said chawl. Bombay, the 20th of February, 1865.

"(Sd.) PESTONJI CAWASJI.
"(,,) KHURSHETJI NUSSERVANJI."

On the 11th May, 1865, the following letter of that date was written by the then owner of the plaintiff's house (Rustomji [706] Jamsetji Jijibhoy) to the said Byramji Jijibhoy, the then owner of the defendant's house :—

"The reason of (this) being written is as follows : Upon the house of Bhai Pestonji Merwanji Tobak adjoining your (house) in Hornby Row purchased from the heirs of Rustomji Mancherji Bangali which I have purchased from Bhai Saheb Kharsetji Furdunji I have now raised a fourth storey and have placed windows on the south side thereof. As to these windows at the time when you shall build the neighbouring house higher (than mine) I shall not raise any objection in respect of the above-mentioned windows on the south side which may be shut up. And should I raise (any), the whole is to be considered as null and void. This is the sole request. The 11th of May in the year 1865."

The plaintiff, as above stated, purchased his house in 1867.

On the 4th September, 1867, Byramji Jijibhoy wrote the following letter to the plaintiff's agent:—

"To HAJI ISMAIL HAJI HABIB, Esq.,

"Agent for the Jamadar of Hyderabad, Bombay.

"DEAR SIR,—Learning that you have purchased for the Jamadar the house No. 7 in Hornby Row from the trustees of the estate of Mr. Rustomji Jamsetji Jijibhoy, I take this opportunity of drawing your attention to the correspondence that has passed between myself and Mr. R. J. Jijibhoy respecting the windows and projected kanframes opening on the north of my property, No. 6. Hornby Row, wherein the said Mr. R. J. Jijibhoy has agreed to throw no obstacles or hindrances of any kind whenever I required the said windows and their projections to be blocked up; that writing is insufficient. I asked him in my letter dated 17th May, 1865, to send me a more particularised paper to the above effect, but owing to different circumstances of that gentleman's affairs the matter rests still incomplete.

"But as you are now the agent for the present proprietor of the said house I shall thank you to pass me agreement or writing binding the proprietor, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns to block up the said windows and the projected kanframes any time I or my heirs, executors, administrators and assigns shall demand and require the same to be done without hindrance or delay on your part.

"In the absence of such an agreement or writing to the above effect forthcoming from you within a reasonable time, I shall be compelled to have these windows blocked up and the kanframes removed at once; although I have not the slightest intention of adopting this course, I should like to have the business done in a regular and straight-forward manner, preventing thereby any unpleasantness hereafter."

On the 23rd November, 1867, Byramji Jijibhoy's solicitors wrote the following letter to the plaintiff's agent, enclosing copies of the letters of the 11th May, 1865, and the 17th May, 1865:—

[707] Bombay, November 23rd, 1867.

To HAJI ISMAIL HAJI HABIB.

"SIR,—With reference to your letter to our client Mr. Byramji Jijibhoy of the 5th September last, asking for a copy of the correspondence that took place between Mr. Rustomji Jamsetji Jijibhoy and our client, to enable you to reply to our client's letter to you of the 4th September last, with reference to the house No. 7 and the windows and kanframes opening on the north of our client's adjoining property, No. 6, Hornby Row, we are now instructed by our said client to enclose you copies of the original Gujarati letters, and to inform you that we have had instructions to prepare an agreement for your signature to secure to our client the full enjoyment of his rights so as to avoid the necessity of his blocking up the windows and removing the kanframes, which he is unwilling to do if he is sufficiently protected by an agreement. This letter as also that of our client to you of the 4th September last are written without prejudice to our client's rights."

Byramji Jijibhoy's solicitors wrote again to the plaintiff's agent on the 26th February, 1868, as follows:—

"DEAR SIR,—Mr. Byramji Jijibhoy has instructed us to prepare the necessary agreement relating to the windows and kanframes overlooking his property at Rampart Row to carry out the arrangement come to. Kindly let us know who is the legal owner of the property and the windows and kanframes that we may insert his name in the agreement the draft of which will be sent to you for approval."

On the 28th February, 1868, the plaintiff's agent sent the following reply through his solicitor :—

"In reply to your letter of the 26th instant to the address of our client Haji Ismail Haji Habib, we beg to inform you that the legal owner of the house referred to in your letter is Jamadar Awad bin Umar, who is now in Arabia, and our client has no power to execute any such agreement as is referred to in your letter, but our client will, if you wish it, give your client a Gujarati note, in the form your client has obtained from Rustomji Jamsetji Jijibhoy, until the return of Jamadar Awad, when the arrangement your client wishes to be made will probably be carried out."

On the 17th March, 1868, the plaintiff's agent wrote to Byramji Jijibhoy as follows :—

"TO PARSI BYRAMJI JIJIBHOY.

"Written by Haji Ismail Haji Habib. To wit. As to your one house bearing No. 6, situated in Hornby Row, which has been purchased from Parsi Dadabhoy Rustomji Nowroji Bangali, on the east side thereof is Jamadar Awad bin Umar's house, which said house the said party has purchased from Seth Rustomji Jamsetji Jijibhoy. And the windows and the kanframe (weather board) of the said house open towards your side; you have a right to shut up the said windows and kanframe (weather board). And whenever you may build your house, I am not to raise any objection whatever to your shutting up the same."

Early in 1870 Byramji Jijibhoy again wrote to the plaintiff's agent to have the agreement respecting the windows of the [708] plaintiff's house, which opened on his property, prepared and to furnish him with a draft for approval. In reply, he was informed that the agent had not authority to sign any such agreement, but that the plaintiff was expected to come to Bombay in a short time, and might then be applied to.

On the 31st March, 1870, Byramji Jijibhoy wrote the following letter to the plaintiff's agent :—

"I request your earliest attention to my letter dated 23rd instant, which remains unreplied. Please urge Jamadar Awad bin Umar to complete this long-standing matter as soon as possible. If he is to remain away longer from Bombay kindly ask him to empower you to execute the requisite writing. It is because of our personal friendship that I have allowed this matter to stand over for such a long time, or I would have otherwise blocked up the windows and removed the kanframes ere this."

In reply to this, Byramji Jijibhoy was referred to Haji Adam Isak, who had then become the plaintiff's agent.

The correspondence was then continued with him, but nothing was done. On the 2nd November, 1871, Byramji Jijibhoy wrote to him as follows :—

"Bombay, dated 2nd November, 1871.

"SETH HAJI ADAM ISAK.

"Jamadar Awad bin Umar's Agent, Bombay.

"To wit. In the course of nearly a year and a half that has now elapsed, I have often written to you to the effect as follows :—There is the property of the said Jamadar in the vicinity of my house situate in Hornby Row, and the windows on the south (side) thereof have been made to open projecting over my property (which was not at all the case before). I asked for a writing from you making arrangements in the matter, but you have not as yet sent any satisfactory answer in respect thereof, and you often wrote and you often communicated to me verbally the same answer to the effect that the Jamadar was to come and that you would settle the same when he comes, but nothing has been done in the matter. I, therefore, by this give you final notice that should you fail to come to a satisfactory arrangement as regards me (in the matter of these windows) within fifteen days from this date, I will, without delay, by legal steps, at once close your windows and 'kanframes' (3 weather boards), and as to whatever expenses may be incurred by me in the matter thereof you are responsible for the whole of the same and you are bound to be answerable for the same. I, therefore, think that now you will not make the least delay in the matter. Relying upon your word, I waited for so many months, but it cannot be done hereafter. Do you please note the same. Please reply to this letter immediately. This is the sole representation."

On the 17th July, 1872, Byramji Jijibhoy again wrote as follows :—

[709] "Bombay, dated the 17*th of July* 1872.

"SETH HAJI ADAM ISAK,
"Jamadar Awad bin Umar's Agent.

"To wit : I am extremely sorry to write that although you are a respectable man and merchant the promise that you very often gave to the effect that you would write to the Jamadar in the matter of the house belonging to Jamadar Awad bin Umar situate in the vicinity of my house in the Fort, and the windows and kanframes (weather boards) whereof open over my property, and get (him) to come to an arrangement with me. But as to the same you have not up to this day fulfilled your promise, and I took you to be a respectable man and put up with the same for nearly two years. But now I have at length got tired and am obliged to write this strong letter. The whole blame in respect thereof is on you. Now I have written this last letter, and hope that without the slightest further delay you will at once pass in writing and deliver (to me) the instrument which is required (to be passed) in the matter of the windows of your house, and should you perhaps fail to do so within fifteen days, I will take such steps as may be proper according to law and recover from you all the loss and costs, &c., in respect of the same.

"Even now I again request that you will surely get the work done, and I hope do it in a way which will not give rise to any lengthy dispute between you and me. Please reply to this letter immediately. This is the sole representation.

"Written by (your) servant Byramji Jijibhoy, whose salutations you will be pleased to read."

The plaintiff filed this suit on the 12th October, 1894, praying for a declaration that he was entitled to free and uninterrupted access of light and air to the windows to the south and west side of his house, save in so far as the same was obstructed by the defendant's old house, and for an injunction, &c.

The suit was heard by Farran, J., who found that the arrangement evidenced by the letter of the 11th May, 1865, and the 17th March, 1868, was a temporary arrangement which was terminated by the defendant's letters of the 2nd November, 1871, and 17th July, 1872. He, therefore, held that the plaintiff had acquired a prescriptive right to light and air through the windows in the south wall of his house.

He, however, held that following the rule in Lisboa's case (1) he ought not to grant an injunction, but he awarded Rs. 4,500 as damages to the plaintiff.

The plaintiff appealed, contending that he was entitled to an injunction, or that, if not, the damages were inadequate and should be increased.

[710] The defendant filed cross-objections to the decree, contending that the plaintiff had not acquired any prescriptive right or easement to the light and air which he claimed; that the agreement of the 11th May, 1865, continued in full force, and was a good answer to the suit, and that the suit ought to have been dismissed with costs.

Lang (Advocate-General) (Scott with him) for appellant (plaintiff).—The Court below ought to have granted an injunction. It followed the ruling in Dhunjibhoy v. Lisboa (1). We contend that case is wrong and ought not to be followed. The law in India with reference to rights to light and air is the same as in England. We rely on Greenwood v. Hornsey (2); Shelfer v. City of London Electric Lighting Company (3); Martin v. Price (4); Ghanasham Nilkant v. Moroba (5); Dent v. Auction Mart Company (6); Aynsley v. Glover (7); Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 54, cl. (b). The damage done to the plaintiff's building is so great as to justify an injunction.

Inverarity (with him Macpherson and Lowndes), for the respondent (defendant):—We have filed cross-objections to the lower Court's decree, for we contend that the plaintiff never acquired any right to light and air, and ought neither to get an injunction nor damages. We contend that our right to build was always reserved to us, and that the agreement to this effect was never put an end to. The plaintiff had notice of the agreement and was bound by it—Bewley v. Atkinson (8). But in any event this is no case for an injunction. The rule in Dhunjibhoy v. Lisboa (1) applies.

Lang in reply.—There was no completed agreement that the defendant should have a right to build on his land so as to block up the plaintiff's windows. If there was, the documents evidencing it are inadmissible, as they were not registered. This objection was taken in the Court below.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—As indicated by us during the hearing of this appeal, we see no reason to differ from the ruling of this Court in [711] Lisboa's case (1) which was followed in the case of Ghanasham Nilkant v. Moroba Ramchandra (5). We consider that the principle enunciated in those cases, viz., that an injunction will only be granted where the invasion of the right or enjoyment is such that pecuniary compensation would not afford adequate relief, is a correct interpretation of s. 54 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), which lays down the law binding on the Courts in this country. To Courts subject to that Act the English decisions cited have no application. We have, therefore, only to see whether the present case is one in which adequate relief can be afforded by pecuniary compensation. On this point we agree with the learned Judge who tried the case that it is. No very serious damage has been done to the plaintiff's house. No room has been rendered uninhabitable. Two rooms have been made somewhat darker and hotter than they were. The result has been that the letting value, and, therefore, the market value of the property, has been somewhat reduced. The learned Judge has taken the loss of rent to be about Rs. 20 a month, and this seems quite correct. He has awarded damages on that footing, capitalizing the amount at twenty years' purchase. This, we think, is too little. We think the period of twenty-five years should be taken, or rather that such a sum ought to be awarded as would, if invested in Government paper, produce Rs. 240 a year. We think the damages should have been Rs. 7,000.

Turning now to the only other point at issue, we have to see whether the plaintiff has been rightly found to have gained by prescription the easement of light and air that he claims. His enjoyment is admitted. It is contended only that he enjoyed by agreement, with permission, and on sufferance.

The evidence on this point is purely documentary and must be set out at length. The first document is the Ex. 1 and is a letter written on the 11th May, 1865, by the plaintiff to the defendant (I say plaintiff and defendant for sake of brevity, the real parties to it being their predecessors in title). In it the plaintiff says that he has purchased a house next the house of the defendant, and has raised a fourth storey and placed windows on the south side of it, [712] and he promises to raise no objection to these windows being shut (blocked) up when the defendant builds his house higher. The learned Judge wrote no judgment, but we are informed that in his oral judgment he treated this as an agreement between the parties which would prevent the plaintiff acquiring any easement of light and air so long as it continued in force."

This view is not contested by the plaintiff's counsel, who, however, has argued that the document relates to the windows on the fourth storey only, and that under it there has been no bar to the acquisition of an easement in respect of the windows on the third storey. We cannot assent to this argument. There has been in the case a confusion throughout between what is a floor and what is a storey, arising from the use of these words as if they were synonymous. The house of the plaintiff consists of five floors, that is, of a ground floor and four storeys. The fourth storey mentioned in this document is really the fourth storey or the fifth floor. In future we shall use the word floor in speaking of the house.

In this document, then, the building of the fifth floor is mentioned. There was only one window on the fourth floor before the fifth floor was added. (See the memo. (1) Ex. 1 at p. 119 where floor is used for and instead of storey.) It is not shown that any easement had been acquired in respect of it. The other windows that are now on the fourth floor were added at this time, the fourth floor being practically rebuilt. As we construe the document, the words " in the south side thereof " relate to the south side of the house and not merely to the south side of the fifth floor. This is clearer in the vernacular original than in the translation. The true translation is " on it (i.e., the house) I have raised a fourth storey and on the south side of it I have placed windows." Thus the document covers all the windows on the south side of the house, whether on the fourth or the fifth floor. In any case, it must be so; for as the result of blocking up the windows on the fifth floor would of necessity be

(1) 20 B. 705.

FEB. 21.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

20 B. 704.

the blocking up the windows on the fourth floor below them, the power given by this document to block up the windows on the fifth floor must include the power to block up those on the fourth floor also.

[713] So far, therefore, as this document is concerned, its meaning is obvious and the case is clear. It constitutes a contract or agreement between the parties, in pursuance of which the plaintiff is allowed to enjoy the access of light and air through the windows on the south side of his house, in return for which he promises that he will not raise any objection to those windows being blocked up when the defendant should rebuild and raise his house. So long, therefore, as that promise remained in force the plaintiff could acquire no easement in respect of these windows as against the defendant whenever the latter chose to raise his house.

The question then arises, was the promise ever put an end to, and if so, when. It is not contended that the plaintiff ever withdrew his promise. It is only argued that the defendant himself put an end to the agreement by his own conduct, and this, we are informed, was the view adopted by the learned Judge who tried the case. It is difficult to see how the defendant alone could put an end to the agreement. He could, of course, tell the plaintiff that he no longer held him bound by his promise and proceed to break his own part of the agreement, but anything short of that could hardly absolve the plaintiff from the performance of his promise at the specified time, still less convert the plaintiff's enjoyment of the light and air that he had obtained by the agreement on the strength of his promise into an enjoyment of it as an easement.

In order, however, to see what actually took place, the facts must be set out. The plaintiff bought the house in 1867. On the 4th September, 1867, the defendant writes to the plaintiff's agent the letter Ex. 11 (20 B. 706). In it he says that the writing of the 11th May, 1865, is insufficient, and asks the agent to pass "an agreement binding the proprietor, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns to block up the said windows and the projected kanframes any time I or my heirs, executors, administrators and assigns shall demand and require the same to be done without hindrance or delay on your part." No doubt the writing of 11th May, 1865, was insufficient if the defendant was right in saying that R. J. Jijibhoy had agreed to throw no obstacle or hindrance of any kind whenever he required the windows to be [714] blocked up, because the promise of 11th May, 1865, related only to the event of the defendant's raising his house. That promise the defendant had got. By this letter he shows no intention of giving it up; on the contrary he keeps it and asks for something more. That is, we think, the effect of this letter.

In the Ex. 6, on the 5th September, plaintiff's agent asks for copies of the correspondence between the defendant and Jijibhoy. These are sent on the 23rd November, 1867 (Ex. 12). On the 26th February, 1868, defendant asks of plaintiff's agent the name of the owner of the property for insertion in the agreement he is having prepared to carry out the arrangement come to relating to the windows and kanframes overlooking his property (Ex. 13). On the 28th February plaintiff's agent informs the defendant of the name of the legal owner, says that he as agent has no power to execute such an agreement as defendant mentions, but expresses his willingness to give a Gujarati note, in the form the defendant has obtained from R. J. Jijibhoy, till the return of the plaintiff, when the arrangement defendant wishes to be made will probably be carried out (Ex. 14).

FEB. 21.
ORIGINAL CIVIL.
20 B. 704.

On the 17th March, 1868, plaintiff's agent signs the Gujarati note, which is as follows :—

It will be observed that this agreement goes much further than the Ex. 1 ; for, in addition to the promise of not objecting to having the windows blocked up whenever defendant raises his house, it contains an admission of defendant's right to shut up the windows and frame that open towards the side of the defendant's house whenever he likes. It thus contains the original promise of 1865 and the additional promise demanded by defendant in 1867. This agreement has never been repudiated by the plaintiff, and it has not been shown that his agent had not full power to pass it.

The only contention raised in this Court in respect of it is that it was wrongly admitted in evidence, not being registered. That contention is not, in our opinion, a sound one. An easement of [716] light and air, no doubt, is immoveable property within the meaning of the Indian Registration Act, 1866, but it must be an easement, an acquired right, not the chance of acquiring one that is meant. Here no easement existed, for none had been acquired at the time. The document, therefore, does not create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest in immoveable property. Its effect may be to prevent such a right being acquired, but it does not of itself limit or extinguish any such right. Neither can it be said that because the right, when acquired, was worth more than Rs. 100, the chance of acquiring that right was also worth more than Rs. 100. We are, therefore, of opinion that the document was rightly admitted in evidence.

The defendant, however, was still not satisfied, and he writes another letter to the plaintiff's agent on the 14th February, 1870. This letter is not on the record, but it is answered by the letter of the 24th February (Ex. 14) in which the plaintiff's agent says that his power is insufficient to enable him to sign the formal agreement asked for, but that he will let the defendant know when the plaintiff comes to Bombay, and that he can then arrange with him. On the 31st March the defendant writes to the plaintiff's agent again asking him to urge on the plaintiff to complete the matter. He ends his letter in these words : "It is because of our personal friendship that I have allowed this matter to stand over for such a long time, or I would have otherwise blocked up the windows and removed the kanframes ere this." (Ex. 15.) A change of agency then took place (Exs. 5, 16 and 17).

On the 16th of May, 1870, plaintiff's agent writes to the defendant as follows :—

"I have received two notes from (you), respected Sir, the first dated the 2nd of April and the second dated the 30th of April. On a perusal thereof I have noted the particulars. It was written that an agreement according to what you write should be made in respect of the Jamadar's house, bearing No. 7, which is situated in Hornby Row. But as I had no 'power' to make an agreement in accordance therewith, I wrote to Jamadar Awad at Hyderabad. He has sent a reply to me as follows :— I am to come to Bombay; when (I come), on personally seeing (the premises) 'I will make the same myself.' Jamadar Awad, the owner of the said house, has written a reply agreeably to this. And when he will come I shall let you know. Do you be pleased to make such arrangement as you may wish to make with him." (Ex. 7.)

(1) 20 B. 707.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

[716] Further correspondence ensues which need not be set out (Exs. 18, 19, 8, 20, 21, 9). On the 2nd November, 1871, the defendant writes to the plaintiff's agent as follows :—

" I, therefore, by this give you final notice that should you fail to come to a satisfactory arrangement as regards me (in the matter of these windows) within fifteen days from this date, I will, without delay, by legal steps at once close your windows and ' kanframes ' (three weather boards), and as to whatever expenses may be incurred by me in the matter thereof you are responsible for the whole of the same. I, therefore, think that now you will not make the least delay in the matter." (Ex. 22).

Nothing, however, was done on this letter. On the 17th July, 1872, the defendant writes again to plaintiff's agent in these words :—

" Now I have written this last letter and hope that without the slightest further delay you will at once pass in writing and deliver (to me) the instrument which is required (to be passed) in the matter of the windows of your house, and should you perhaps fail to do so within fifteen days I will take such steps as may be proper according to law, and recover from you all the loss and costs, &c., in respect of the same."

To this plaintiff's agent replies on the 19th July, 1872. He says, as before, that he has no authority to make the agreement himself, he explains that the plaintiff owing to business had not been able to come to Bombay as he had intended, and he suggests that the defendant should write direct to the plaintiff.

We have no more correspondence put in, so that apparently the defendant did not write to the plaintiff, but was content to leave matters where they were, and to remain satisfied with the agreement of the 11th May, 1865, and of the 17th March, 1868.

We are, however, asked to come to the conclusion that, by reason of these letters, and more especially of the threats used by the defendant in these letters, he had absolved the plaintiff from the performance of the promises that he had made, and that the agreements between the parties had come to an end; and that the plaintiff had gained the easement he claims by peaceable enjoyment of the light and air since 1872. We are of opinion that the facts do not justify such a conclusion. We consider that the promise of 1865 is as binding on the plaintiff now as it was on the day it was made. In our opinion, the defendant has never absolved the plaintiff from the performance of that promise or put an end to that agreement; on the contrary while treating it as in force he has always been demanding something more. " It [717] is true," he says to the plaintiff, "you have promised not to object to my blocking your windows when I raise my house, but that is not sufficient. I want you to agree to block those windows up whenever I ask you to do so." He succeeded in getting such an agreement from the plaintiff's agent, but not from the plaintiff himself. He nowhere, however, releases the plaintiff from the performance of his promise, and the plaintiff never denies his liability to perform it, or refuses to pass the agreement demanded by the defendant.

To put the plaintiff's case at its highest, if he had resisted the additional demand, he might now be entitled to keep his windows open against any other contingency than that of the defendant's raising his house, but against that contingency he would be bound by his agreement. As a matter of fact, however, the plaintiff has never resisted the demand of the defendant. Nowhere does it appear that he has ever denied his liability to perform his promise or asserted any right of his own in contravention of that promise. He was fully informed by his agent of all that was being done (Ex. 8). He repudiates none of his acts; on the contrary he consents, when he comes to Bombay, to make the agreement that the plaintiff asks for (Ex. 7). Of course, had there been anything for the plaintiff to do in the performance of his promise, and had he in consequence of the threats of the defendant or otherwise ceased to do that thing, the case might be different—Bewley v. Atkinson (1). But here he had nothing to do. It behoved him, therefore, if he wished to avoid the performance of his promise, to repudiate the agreement distinctly and openly. No mere lying by would under the circumstances have any such effect. His final silence to the final threat of the defendant does not show that he in any way repudiated the agreement. At the most, it shows that he would not do more than he had already promised to do, while the forbearance of the defendant to carry out his threats only shows that he was content to leave matters where they were, and that he had decided not to persist in his demand for a further and more sufficient agreement.

Upon the facts, therefore, we are of opinion that the suit of the plaintiff fails and ought to have been dismissed, and reversing the [718] decree of the lower Court we order that the plaintiff's suit be dismissed with costs throughout.

will, dated the 8th February, 1886, of which he appointed the plaintiff his executor. He left a daughter-in-law, named Ladkavahu, who was the widow of his predeceased son Liladhar Kessowji, and by his will he directed that she should adopt the appellant Karamsi Madhowji, who was his nephew's son, and he gave the residue of his estate "to this lad as his inheritance."

The will directed large sums to be expended in charities, and made provision for his grand-daughter Kesarbai. It will be found [719] set out at length in the report of the case (see I. L. R., 12 Bom., 185). The clause material to this report was the following:—

"28. There is my nephew, Madhowji Kachra's son, Karamsi Madhowji, now (living). He is about nine years of age. It is my wish to adopt him as my son. If I should not be able to do so in my life-time, then my son Liladhar's widow is to take the said Karamsi in adoption. His adoption ceremony (dattvidhan) is to be performed. My property, which may remain as a residue, after all the things mentioned in my will have been done, I give to this lad as (his) inheritance. And (I) appoint (him) as my heir. Choru Liladhar's widow Ladkavahu is to get him betrothed (the outlays being made) out of my property. For the same about Rs. 5,000 are to be spent."

The lower Court held that under the above clause Karamsi Madhowji was not entitled to any part of the testator's estate until his adoption by Liladhar's widow Ladkavahu.

At the date of the decree, Karamsi Madhowji was a minor and was represented in the suit by his father and guardian. No steps were taken by his guardian to appeal from the decree, and in 1890 Ladkavahu died, and the adoption became impossible.

On attaining majority, Karamsi Madhowji obtained leave to appeal (see I. L. R., 20 Bom., 104), and the appeal now came on for hearing.

Lang (Advocate General) Starling and Scott, for the appellant.—We contend that the appellant is entitled to the residue even though he was not adopted. The testator intended him to take in any case. He is a persona designata. They cited Nidhoomoni v. Saroda Pershad (1); Bireswar v. Ardha Chunder (2); Shamavahoo's case(3); Theobold on Wills, p. 450.

Macpherson, Inverarity and Lowndes, for the respondent, were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—We agree with the learned Judge in holding that, as he has not been adopted, Karamsi is not entitled to the residue of the property. Clause 28 of the will literally translated [720] is as follows:—"To this boy, all the things (kam, literally business, works, things to be done) mentioned in my will having been done, I give the residue of my estate as his inheritance and I appoint him as my heir." That clearly means that he is first to be adopted, adoption being one of the things mentioned in the will. The words "as his inheritance" show that the residue is left to him, because he is an heir. Clause 46 provides for the case of his dying after adoption. This was the only contingency to be provided for, since nothing was left to him if he was not adopted.

The case of Bireswar v. Ardha Chunder (2) is quite different. There was clear indication there of the testator's intention before making an adoption to give property to the boy. Here there was no such intention; on the contrary it is clear the intention was only to give it after the adoption had taken place. It was to the adopted boy, and not to the persona designata, Karamsi, that the bequest was made. Compare cl. 46 of the present will with cl. 11 of the will in that case, and the distinction pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council at p. 107 will at once appear.

This case is on all fours with Shamavahoo's case (1), and the decision of the Judge following that case is correct. We, therefore, confirm the decree with costs.

APPEAL from the decision of Rao Bahadur G.A. Mankar, First Class Subordinate Judge of Thana.

This was a suit, so far as is material for the purposes of this report, for redemption and account of a mortgage made in A.D. 1844 for Rs. 250. The plaintiff became the owner of the equity of redemption by purchase on 1st October, 1883. The other facts of the case material to this report are stated in the judgment of Candy, J. The case was reported on another point in I. L. R. 14 Bom., 72,

The Subordinate Judge found that Rs. 1,821-6-10 were due on account of the mortgage.

The plaintiff appealed and the defendant filed cross-objections.

Mahadeo C. Apte, for the respondent.—Under Hindu law proper, the rule of damdupat applies only to the case of a simple money loan. Even pledges of moveable property are outside the rule; much more, therefore, is a mortgage of immoveable property. In the text books there is a distinction made between ordinary loans and pledges. In the Mayukha two separate chapters are devoted to loans. The first deals with simple loans, and therein the rule of damdupat is expressly mentioned. The other chapter deals with pledges. The word used is adhi, that is, something placed in the hands of some person (Stokes' Hindu Law Books, pp. 110-113). The rule of damdupat is nowhere said to apply to adhi, and, therefore, as mortgages of immoveable property are adhi, it does not apply to them.

The current of decisions of this Court is in favour of our contention—Balkrishna Babaji v. Hari Govind (1); Rango v. Balaji (2); Sadhu v. Ganu (3); Shankara Bawa v. Babaji (4); Balambhat v. Sitaram (5); Rajaram v. Gopal (6); Bapuji v. Gangadhar (7); Narayan v. Gangaram (8); Nathubhai v. Mulchand (9); Narayan v. Satvaji (10); Ganpat v. Adarji (11); Ramchandra v. Bhimrav (12); Dhondu Jagannath v. Narayan (13). Shri Ganesh Dharnidhar v. Keshavrav Govind (14) is the only dissenting decision. In the other cases the question of damdupat was raised and was decided according to our contention.

In Bengal the interest was governed by the Usury Laws for a long time. They were repealed by Act XXVIII of 1855, which did not affect the Hindu law as to interest, and there are cases of loans in which the rule of damdupat was applied—[723] Ramconnoy Audicarry v. Johur Lall Dutt (15). But there are no cases of mortgage. If there be any rules as to interest in the mofussil of Bengal, they cannot be rules of Hindu law, but they must be super-imposed by Reg. XV of 1793.

In Madras there is a special Reg. (XXXIV of 1802) which governs the rate of interest. The rule of damdupat is not known there.

The ruling in Shri Ganesh Dharnidhar v. Keshavrav Govind (14) was made without consideration of the previous authorities and was based on the decisions in Nathubhai v. Mulchand (9) and Dhondu Jagannath v. Narayan (13). But the limitation imposed on interest by those rulings is not a necessary consequence of any principle involved in them. Even if the decision in Shri Ganesh Dharnidhar v. Keshavrav Govind (14) is correct, that was a suit brought by a mortgagee out of possession, while the present is a suit against a mortgagee in possession, and, therefore, bound to keep accounts.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan, in reply.—The word adhi includes even a loan. Under the Hindu law there is no hard and fast distinction between a loan simple and a pledge. There are, no doubt, contradictory decisions of this Court on the subject. But the principle of the decision, which is that a money-lender should not exact more than is equitable from a needy debtor, holds as good in the case of a mortgage as in the case of a loan. Whether the mortgagee is or is not in possession, does not affect the question. A mortgagee's only right is to recover his money; his position does not differ from that of a person who makes a loan.

FULL BENCH.

20 B. 721 (F.B.).

The point was argued before a Division Bench composed of Farran and Candy, JJ., which delivered the following judgment referring the point for decision to a Full Bench :—

1894, August 28. CANDY, J.—This is an appeal by the assignee of the equity of redemption against the account taken by the Subordinate Judge in accordance with the directions of this Court to be found at p. 77 of I. L R. 14 Bombay.

* * * *

[724] In 1766 (A D. 1844), 60½ bighas and one pand of the Karkhoda Khar were mortgaged for Rs. 250, on condition that the debt was to bear interest at 18 per cent. per annum, and that the rents and profits should be applied towards payment of the interest and principal. This deed necessitates an account of the rents and profits on the one side, and of the principal, interest and charges on the other.

* * * *

Plaintiff in his appeal has taken several objections to this account ; but a preliminary objection must be noticed, preliminary, though it was only raised at the close of the arguments, and that is, that by the ruling in Shri Ganesh Dharnidhar Maharajdev v. Keshavrav Govind Kulgavkar (1), applying the rule of damdupat the mortgagee is entitled to have interest added to the principal at the rate stipulated in the mortgage-deed, and to appropriate the rents and profits received by him in or towards satisfaction of such interest; but that after such appropriation, if the amount of interest now due and payable on foot of the mortgage exceeds the amount of the principal, the decree on that part of the claim must be limited to double such principal amount.

In the present case, by the mortgage-bond of 1766 (A.D. 1844), the mortgagee in possession was to make up an account of the interest at the end of every twelve months, and was to pay the Government assessment from the produce, and the mortgagor was to be charged interest on the money spent by the mortgagee on repairs and on a sepoy at Rs. 3 a month, which salary was to be debited to the account, the balance of profits, after paying assessment, repairs and peon's salary as above, being taken towards the principal and interest. The account taken on those terms was to be signed by the mortgagor every year.

Applying the ruling just quoted, if the mortgagee is entitled to have interest added to the principal (Rs. 250) at 18 per cent. (compound) and to appropriate the rents and profits received by him in or towards satisfaction of assessment and other expenses noted above, and the balance in or towards satisfaction of such interest and principal, the same interest being charged on all [725] unsatisfied arrears of assessment and interest, and if after such appropriation the amount of interest now due exceeds the amount of principal, and if the interest now awardable by the decree must be limited to double the original principal, then it is evident that the account found by the Subordinate Judge must be materially amended.

Mr. Apte objected to the application of the rule of damdupat, first, because, he contended, the rule, as shown by the texts (Stokes, pp. 110 to 113) applies only to loans in general, and not to pledges, and secondly, because the ruling in Shri Ganesh v. Keshavrav was given without consideration of a long course of decisions of this Court that the rule of damdupat does not apply to cases of running account between mortgagor and mortgagee.

(1) 15 B. 625 (640, 641).

We are not inclined to agree with the first contention, for the rule has been continually applied to mortgage-debts, and a reference to the texts show that it is included in the section " of pledges." Thus the author of the Vyavahara Mayukha closes this section by quoting two texts of Brahaspati and Yajnavalkya. Thus " Brahaspati :—When land or other [immoveable property] has been enjoyed, and more [than the principal debt] has accrued therefrom, then the principal and interest having been realized, the debtor shall obtain his pledge. Yajnavalkya :—Whenever a debt under mortgage has become doubled by interest, then the pledge shall certainly be returned, whenever double the sum lent has been received."

As to the other contention, it certainly does appear that the ruling of the Division Bench in Shri Ganesh v. Keshavrav conflicts with previous decisions of this Court. It is unnecessary to quote at length the many decisions in which it is shown that the rule of damdupat does apply to all cases in which the mortgagee has had no possession of the mortgaged property, or in which being in possession he takes the rents and profits in lieu of the whole or part of the interest. In such cases no account is taken on both sides, and, therefore, the rule of damdupat applies. But we are dealing with a case in which there is an account on both sides. In such a case it has been held the rule of damdupat is not applicable:—

[726] (1) By Westropp, C. J., and West, J., in Narayan v. Satvaji (1).

(2) By Westropp, C. J., and Melvill, J., in Rajaram v. Gopal (2).

(3) By Westropp, C. J., and Kemball, J., in Shankarabawa v. Babaji (3).

(4) By West and Nanabhai, JJ., in Balambhat v. Sitaram (4).

(5) By Sargent, C. J., and Birdwood, J., in Rango v. Balaji (5).

It is noteworthy that the decisions in the cases marked above (1), (2) and (5) purport to be founded on the decision of Couch, C. J., and Newton, J., in Nathubhai v. Mulchand (6), while the decision in the case marked (3) is based on the decision in the case marked (1) which itself, as just remarked, is based on the case of Nathubai v. Mulchand. On the other hand, it is to be remarked that in the judgment in Shri Ganesh v. Keshavrav the decision in Nathubhai v. Mulchand is equally relied on. But, it is said, the ground of equity upon which the rule, laid down in that case, is rested, does not justify a decree in favour of a mortgagee for more than double the amount actually advanced ; it only prevents the rents and profits being deducted from the amount so doubled. So here, assuming that the rents and profits have paid off all charges on account of assessment and other expenses, and all arrears of the same with interest, then the amount payable on foot of the account cannot exceed Rs. 500.

As against the five cases noted above, in which it was held that the rule of damdupat was inapplicable, because they were cases of accounts on both sides, reference may be made to the case of Bapuji v. Gangadhar (7), in which the District Judge on the authority of the ruling in Nathubhai v. Mulchand held that the rule of damdupat was inapplicable to a case of running account, but on appeal to the High Court, Melvill and West, JJ., said : "Under the terms of the mortgage there was nothing to prevent the defendants from causing the mortgaged property to be applied to the liquidation of the debt whenever the amount of interest due became equal to the amount of the principal. Under [727] these circumstances we consider that there is no injustice in following the previous rulings of the Court which make the rule of damdupat applicable to such cases."

Such being the various rulings on this important point, we do not think it advisable to express an opinion on the merits of the contention raised before us. We, therefore, adjourn the hearing of this appeal till November, when the Chief Justice, Sir C. Sargent, will be sitting in this Court, and when, if he so directs, the question can be considered by a Bench of three Judges.

The case was fixed for hearing before a Full Bench consisting of Sargent, C.J., and Candy and Fulton, JJ.

Manekshah, J. Taleyarkhan, for the appellant (plaintiff).

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by

SARGENT, C.J.—The leading case as to the application of the Hindu law of damdupat to mortgages is that of Nathubhai Panachand v. Mulchand Hirachand (1). Sir R. Couch, in delivering the judgment of the Court, referred to several cases in which the question had arisen, and came to the conclusion that the law was applicable to mortgages "where there is no account on both sides and no charge for rents and profits, but that it would be inequitable that the interest should cease when it amounts to the same sum as the principal, if the rents and profits continue to be charged." Alluding to the circumstances of the case before him where the mortgagee had been in possession of a shop for several years, Sir R. Couch says: "As the mortgagee is to be charged with rents and profits it would not be just to stop his interest, and, consequently, the rule of Hindu law cannot be applied." The exception so enunciated to the application of the law of damdupat has, we cannot doubt, been always understood as excluding the law whenever an account had to be taken between the parties of interest on the one side and rents and profits on the other. This is clear from a series of cases beginning with Narayan v. Satvaji (2), where Sir Michael Westropp, referring to the remarks of Sir R. Couch in the above case, treats that case as deciding that the law is applicable to mortgages "if there was only an account to be taken of principal and interest due on the [728] mortgage and no account of rents and profits on the other side." In Rajaram v. Gopal (3), Westropp, C.J., and Melvill, J., say, referring to the above decision of Sir R. Couch in Nathubhai Panachand v. Mulchand Hirachand (1), that the rule of damdupat would have been applicable if the mortgagee had not been accountable for rents, and the decree passed by the Court shows that the application of the rule was treated as quite independent of the result of the account. The cases—Narayan v. Satvaji (2), Balambhat v. Sitaram (4). Rango v. Balaji (5)—are further illustrations of the application of the exception so understood to the Hindu law of damdupat. It is true that in the case of Bapuji v. Gangadhar (6) the law of damdupat was applied in the case of a running account, but the Court (the members of which had all taken part in the decisions above cited) relied in that case on a particular term in the mortgage which the Court considered would prevent any injustice in applying the rule and did not dispute the correctness of the previous rulings. In Shri Ganesh Dharnidhur v. Keshavrav (1) the Court for the first time treated the application of the rule enunciated in the case of Nathubhai Panachand v. Mulchand Hirachand (2) as depending on the state of the account when taken—holding that the equity upon which it was grounded did not justify its application, if after the rents and profits received by the mortgagee were appropriated to the interest there was a balance of interest still due exceeding the principal, and that the decree on that part of the claim must be limited to double the principal amount. We think that this distinction cannot be reconciled with the judgment in the case of Nathubhai Panachand v. Mulchand Hirachand (2), as it has been uniformly understood and acted upon since 1868, and that the long course of decisions requires us to hold that the exclusion of the law of damdupat in the case of mortgages depends on there being an account current between the parties and not upon the state of the account.

(The Full Bench having decided the point of damdupat, the case was sent back to the Division Bench for decision on the merits.)

On appeal the District Judge confirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

Plaintiffs thereupon preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

[730] Ganesh Krishna Deskmukh for the appellant:—The present case is not governed by the ruling in Gopal v. Sakhojirav (1). In this case the record in which the entry relating to the rent is made is called bot-khat. It is not one of the "other records" referred to in s. 17 of the Khoti Act (Bombay Act I of 1880). It is a survey register mentioned in s. 16. It is the same as the settlement register referred to in s. 108 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879). Consequently it is open to revision under s. 21 of the Khoti Act and has not the finality contemplated by s. 17. No doubt the entries referred to in the case of Gopal v. Sakhojirav (1) were the same as the entry in the survey register in this case, and were treated as if they had been made under s. 17 of the Khoti Act. But the entry is not duly made under s. 17, whereas it ought to have been made in another record, so as to come under that section. Unless the entry is made as required by s. 33, it is not final and conclusive under s. 17.

Ramdat V. Desai, for G. M. Tripathi, for the respondent.—Section 108 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) contemplates the preparation, by the survey officer, (1) of a register called "the settlement register," and (2) of other records. The section lays down in clear language what the "settlement register" is to contain. It must set forth (a) the area and assessment of each survey number, and (b) the name of the registered occupant of such survey number. The nature and amount of rent are not among the items directed to be entered in the "settlement register." Turning to the Khoti Act (Bombay Act I of 1880) it will be found that s. 16 deals with the first portion of the work directed by s. 108 of the Land Revenue Code, viz., the preparation of the "settlement register," whilst s. 17 deals with the second portion. An entry in such "records" is conclusive and final. The entry in the present case is an entry of this kind, and is, therefore, conclusive—Gopal v. Sakhojirav (1).

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The record exhibit 7 in this case is what is called "statement" at p. 584 of the "General Rules of the Revenue Department," a form of 17 columns (Ed. of 1893.) Because it [731] is labelled "Bot-khat," Mr. Deshmukh contends that it must be treated as the "survey register" of s. 108 of the Land Revenue Code, Bombay Act V of 1879, or the "settlement register" as it is called in s. 16 of Bombay Act I of 1880. On examining the contents of exhibit 7, we find it contains more than the items of record specified in the above two sections; and that the additional items recorded are such as s. 17 of Bombay Act I of 1880 makes provision for. It appears, therefore, to come within the words "other records prepared under the said section;" and to be a record to which the decision of this Court in Gopal v. Sakhojirav(1) applies. The items are precisely similar to those in the Ex. 18 referred to in that report. The report does not show what the designation of that record was.

It is further argued, as a point not considered in that case, that the words "other records" must mean separate documents; and that the decision would not apply where the survey officer happened to record the additional items of information in the sheet called "survey" or " settlement register." It appears to us that it would be begging the question to hold that the statement of 17 columns is a part of the register. The information it gives is special under s. 17 ; the document thus appears to be one of the " other records." It cannot reasonably be said that the survey officer who puts on record the special matter has failed in his duty under s. 108 of Bombay Act V of 1879, or s. 17 of Bombay Act I of 1880, if the "other records " he compiles are compiled as additional columns of the register or as a separate statement or schedule appended thereto. We are, therefore, unable in any way to distinguish the present from the reported case. We, therefore, confirm the decree with costs.

(1) 18 B. 133.

Decree confirmed.

* Second Appeal No. 862 of 1893.

(1) Section 11 of Bombay Act VI of 1873 provides as follows :—

" Every Municipality shall hold four quarterly general meetings in every year, on or about January 1st, April 10th, July 1st, and October 1st, at which the commissioners shall meet for the transaction of general business. The President, and in Town Municipalities the Vice-President also, may, whenever he thinks fit, and shall, upon a written requisition signed by not less than one-fourth of the whole body of commissioners, call a special general meeting.

" Seven clear days' notice of a quarterly general meeting and three days' clear notice of a special general meeting, specifying the time and place of such intended meeting, and the business to be transacted thereat, shall be circulated to the Commissioners, and posted up at the Municipal Office, or local kutchery, or other public place."

(2) Section 57, cl. 1, provides :—" It shall be lawful, after notice given to the occupier or occupiers of any building or land, or to the occupiers generally within the Municipal District or any recognized division thereof, for the Municipality to perform by their agents the duties usually performed by sweepers with regard to such building, land, district, or division, and to make suitable provision accordingly.

" Clause 2.—When the Municipality shall have made such provision, the occupier, or the several occupiers of the building or land so served, or all the several occupiers of buildings or lands situated within the district or division regarding which such notice may have been given, shall become liable to pay any special cess which may be levied for such purposes under the Rules contemplated in s. 14 of this Act."

APPELLATE CIVIL.

20 B. 732.

The liability to pay the halalkhore tax does not arise until after notice has been given under s. 57 of the Act (Bombay Act II of 1884).

[R., 19 A. 493 (496) ; 7 O.C. 51 (55).]

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur N. G. Phadke, Joint First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., of Sholapur, in appeal No. 97 of 1892.

In 1891 the Municipality of Sholapur sued to recover from the Sholapur Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited, arrears [733] for the years 1888-89 and 1889-90 of halalkhore and water cesses imposed in the years 1878 and 1882 respectively. The defendant company pleaded (inter alia) that the cesses were illegal, as due notices and proclamations had not been published according to law.

The First Class Subordinate Judge at Sholapur dismissed the suit for the following reasons :—

"The defendants contend that at the meetings, where resolutions were passed to levy the bhangi and water cesses, notices were not circulated to all the commissioners as required by s. 11. To prove this material irregularity, they required the production of the circulars, and though time was granted again and again, they were not produced by the plaintiffs. The last time their secretary said that they were likely to be with the president (the Collector). Hence the defendants applied to him, but were told that they were not with him (Ex. 41). These papers have been unaccountably kept back, for no reason has been assigned for their non-production. There was not even an allegation of their loss. Under these circumstances, I am at liberty to presume that they have been intentionally kept back, and that the defendant's contention is sound. Thus the imposition of the two cesses becomes illegal, for the Bombay High Court has ruled under s. 11, that notices to all the commissioners are necessary (Joshi Kalidas v. The Dakor Town Municipality (1).

* * * * * *

"Next as regards the bhangi cess. It is also illegal. For it is not in dispute that the defendants have all along employed their own sweepers to remove the nightsoil from their buildings.

"If, therefore, the plaintiffs wished to levy any cess, they should under s. 57 of the Act have issued to the defendants a notice intimating that the duties performed by their (defendants') sweepers would be performed by their (plaintiffs') agents, and after the service of such notice should have claimed a bhangi cess. But nothing of the kind was done. No notice was at all given. * *"

This decree was confirmed, on appeal, by the Joint Subordinate Judge, A. P. His reasons were as follows :—

"A Municipality is an institution which generally entertains a large establishment, and is bound to observe official decency.

"It is simply absurd to urge, in the case of a City Municipality like that of Sholapur, that circulars issued to the commissioners to give them intimation of the intended meetings, consist of simple chits or small pieces of paper. It is no doubt natural that these and like notices and circulars should be on the record of the Municipality. The lower Court has, under the above circumstances, very properly presumed against the plaintiffs and allowed the contention of the defendants.

(1) 7 B. 399.

"The ruling of the High Court in Joshi Kalidas Sewakram v. The Dakor Town Municipality cited as an authority by the lower Court for finding on the point of legality or otherwise of the imposts in suit, is beyond all doubt in point and holds good in the present case."

From this decision the Municipality preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

[734] Lowndes (with Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar), for the appellants.—From the mere fact that the notices issued by the Municipality ten or fourteen years ago could not be produced at the trial it is a wrong presumption to make that no such notices were given of the meetings at which the two cesses were imposed. In such cases the Court will act on the principle omnia esse rite acta. The burden lies on the defendants to prove the informality or irregularity on which they rely. Defendants have not discharged this burden. Nobody comes forward and says that notices were not circulated. In the absence of such evidence the presumption ought to be in favour of a public body like the Municipality—Evidence Act, s. 114, illus. (e).

Even supposing that any informality did occur in convening such meetings, it would be cured by s. 27, cl. 17, of Bombay Act II of 1884. section 2 of that Act provides that it should be read with the principal Act, Bombay Act VI of 1873. The amending Act is, therefore, retrospective. As to the necessity of issuing notice under s. 57 of the amending Act, it is in evidence that the Municipality did give the defendants a notice as required by law (see Ex. A). There is no statutable or prescribed form for notice.

Macpherson (with him Narayan Ganesh Chandavarkar), for respondents.—The plaintiffs were to prove service of notice on defendants. Exhibit A is a general notice about levying the tax under s. 21. None has been given under s. 57, though the company have employed their own sweepers for a long time. Section 27, cl. 17, of Act II of 1884 is not retrospective. The onus was on the plaintiff Municipality to prove beyond all doubt that their proceedings were regular and according to law. No question of presumption arises in this case.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The most important issue determined by Rao Bahadur N. G. Phadke, Joint Subordinate Judge with appellate powers, was, whether the halalkhore tax imposed by the Municipality of Sholapur in 1878 and the water tax imposed in 1882 were illegal and invalid. He held that the decision of this Court in 1883 in Joshi Kalidas v. The Dakor Town Municipality (1) was beyond all doubt in point, and that all the commissioners [735] had not received notice of the meetings to consider whether these taxes should be imposed. It is unnecessary for our decision to determine whether s. 27, cl. 17, of Bombay Act II of 1884 is retrospective, as the contest between the present parties is not as to whether there was mere informality in the notices to the commissioners under s. 11 of Bombay Act VI of 1873. The question at issue is, whether the two taxes were imposed without any notice at all to some of the commissioners. In the Dakor case, it was admitted that this irregularity had occurred in the convening of the meeting. In the present case there is no such admission;

APPELLATE CIVIL.

nor is there any evidence of such irregularity. The two Courts below have presumed this irregularity to exist merely because the municipal officers were unable to find and produce at the trial the circular or other record of intimation given to the persons who so long ago as 1877 and 1882 were municipal commissioners. We are of opinion that in drawing this presumption, and acting upon it, the lower Courts have fallen into error of law. If the Sholapur Spinning Company had any irregularity to allege, it should have done so by definite statement, e g., that certain commissioners named had not received notice, and the burden of proving such a statement was on the company; as in the absence of evidence or indication to the contrary the presumptions were that the Municipality had used the regular procedure, and that the common course of business had been followed in the particular cases. We must hold, therefore, that the two taxes were legally imposed.

The other question argued was, whether in the absence of the notice to the occupiers under s. 57 of the Act of 1884, whereby the Municipality lets them know that it intends to perform by its agents the duties usually performed by sweepers, the company is liable to pay the halalkhore tax. The language of the section is clear that the liability does not arise until after the notice. On this point we agree with the Courts below.

We, therefore, declare that the Municipality is entitled to the sum levied as water tax and not entitled to that levied as halalkhore tax.

The decree to be in accordance. Each party to pay his own costs throughout.

Decree amended.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

20 B. 736.

APPEAL from the decision of Rao Bahadur N. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona.

The plaintiff sued for a declaration that a decree for Rs. 7,287-11-4 obtained against him by the defendant in a former suit in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona was null and void. For purposes of Court fees payable on a plaint for a declaratory decree under the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), sch. II, art. 17, cl. (iii), the plaintiff paid a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 10 on the plaint, which, if the ad-valorem scale of 7½ per cent. be applied to it, would give Rs. 130 as the computed value of the claim.

On the application of the defendant during the pendency of the suit, the Court fixed the 23rd February, 1894, for the hearing and for the examination of the plaintiff and one of his witnesses in Court. On the day appointed, the plaintiff's pleader sent an intimation to the Court that he was unwell. The hearing was thereupon adjourned till the 27th February. On that day the case was postponed by consent of pleaders of both parties till the 7th March, on the understanding that the adjournment was to be final. On the 7th March the plaintiff's pleader sent a fresh note stating his inability to attend the Court on account of his illness, and the plaintiff also did not appear in Court, he too being then ill, as he subsequently informed the Court.

The Judge (Rao Bahadur Chunilal) dismissed the suit for default of plaintiff's appearance. The order of dismissal was recorded in the following terms :—

"Neither the plaintiff nor his pleaders are present. The defendant and his pleaders are present. When the case was put before the Court on the 27th February, it was distinctly told to the plaintiff's pleader that no adjournment would be granted, and yet the pleaders and the plaintiff are absent. The plaintiff had himself to be present to-day to give evidence. The plaintiff had two pleaders. One of them * * intimates that he is ill. The other pleader is not present. Suit dismissed for non-appearance of the plaintiff or his pleader. Defendant's costs on plaintiff."

[738] On the 9th April, 1894, the plaintiff applied for the restoration of the suit to the file, but the then Judge on the 27th June, 1894, rejected the application. The following is an extract from his judgment:—

"Exhibit 15 is the copy of the order of dismissal passed. The order does not state under what section of the Civil Procedure Code it was passed. I must, therefore, apply the section which is applicable.

"This application purports to have been made under ss. 157 and 103 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) and the applicant wants the suit to be restored to file. I think these sections are not applicable here. The section applicable is 158 * * * . There can be no doubt that it (suit) was dismissed under s. 158. When an order is passed under s. 158, the matter cannot be revised by such an application as the present one * * . I think that the order of dismissal passed on the 7th March, 1894, by Rao Bahadur Chunilal must be held to be a decree (I.L.R., 16 Bom. 23)."

On 23rd August, 1894, the plaintiff applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule nisi calling on the defendant to show cause why the order passed by the Judge should not be set aside and the suit restored to the file. The rule was argued before Sargent, C.J., and Fulton, J., who discharged it on the 15th January, 1895, holding that the Judge's order of dismissal was passed under s. 103 and

AUG. 15.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

20 B. 736.

not under s. 158, and was, therefore, under s. 588 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), appealable.

The plaintiff then applied under s. 5 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) for admission of the appeal notwithstanding the delay. The delay having been excused by Fulton, J., subject to any objection that might be taken by the defendant at the hearing, the appeal came up for admission before Parsons, J., who dismissed it on the ground that an appeal ought to have been preferred against the decree passed under s. 158 of the Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiff presented an appeal from that order of dismissal under the Amended Letters Patent, 1865 (24 and 25 Vict., chap. 104), and the Court (Sargent, C. J., and Bayley, J.) reversing the order passed by Parsons, J., admitted the appeal and directed notice thereof to be issued to the defendant.

At the hearing the respondent raised a preliminary objection that the High Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal.

[739] Mahadeo B. Chaubal, for the respondent (defendant).—The amount of the decree which we obtained against the plaintiff in the former suit was more than Rs. 5,000. Hence the claim was cognizable by the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Poona and an appeal against his decree lay direct to the High Court. But in the present suit the plaintiff, though he seeks to have a declaration that the decree is null and void, has valued the relief which he claims at Rs. 130 only. When a claim is for an amount which is less than Rs. 5,000, an appeal does not lie direct to the High Court according to s. 26 of the Civil Courts' Act (XIV of 1869). In such cases the appeal lies to the District Court—Gulabsingji v. Lakshmansingji (1); Bai Varunda Lakshmi v. Bai Manegavri (2); Sangapa v. Shivbasava (3); Baji Balvant v. Raghunath Vitthal (4). The High Court has, therefore, no jurisdiction to entertain the present appeal. See also s. 8 of the Suits' Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 39 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877). The plaint asks practically for cancellation of the decree, and the cancellation itself is consequential relief, which the plaintiff has in the present case valued at Rs. 130. It has been held that when a plaintiff asks for a declaration with respect to a document, the suit relates to a substantial relief—Fukeerchand v. Thakoor Singh (5); Tacoordeen v. Nawab Syed Ali Hosein Khan (6); and Narain Putter v. Aya Putter (7).

Vicaji (with Gangaram B. Rele), for the appellant (plaintiff).—Rs. 130 is distinctly stated in the plaint to be a mere computed value of the claim at 7½ per cent. payable on the ad valorem scale on plaints generally; but Rs. 7,005 is the amount which strictly determines in this case the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court. All that we seek to obtain is a purely declaratory decree, or a decree without consequential relief of any kind, and hence we have paid a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 10 on the plaint. Article 17, cl. iii, sch. II, of the Court Fees Act has laid down that sum as a fixed Court fee for plaints or appeals in all such suits. [740] In reality, therefore, our claim is to have the decree declared void; and the amount of it being more than Rs. 5,000, the appeal lies direct to this Court.

[JARDINE, J., referred to s. 8 of the Suits' Valuation Act.]

We submit that that section is not applicable to the present case, but to cases in which the appeal lies to the District Court. It relates to cases in which the Court-fee is to be paid ad valorem according to the Court Fees Act, while for cases like the present the Court Fees Act has laid down the fixed fee of ten rupees.

The cases cited for the respondent are not in point, as some of them are in respect of suits for accounts or other consequential relief. The other cases relate simply to the plaintiff's status by adoption, and are clearly distinguishable from the present case.

Section 39 of the Specific Relief Act applies to instruments other than decrees. Counsel also cited s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act; Daniell's Chancery Practice, pages 817, 818; Nilmony Mookhopadhya v. Aimunissa Bibee (1); The Earl of Bandon v. Henry Becher (2); Dhuronidhur Sen v. The Agra Bank (3); Flower v. Lloyd (4).

[JARDINE, J., referred to Patch v. Ward (5).]

Mahadeo B. Chaubal, in reply.—Even if the prayer be merely to avoid the decree, the Court will still have to take some sort of action in the matter, and any such act would itself be a consequential relief. A mere declaration would give no relief by itself. The Court would have to cancel the decree—Seton on Judgments, p. 148. In the present case the property of the defendant was actually attached under the decree, and, therefore, a suit for a mere declaration without consequential relief cannot lie.

Cur. adv. vult.

1895, August 12. JARDINE, J.—The plaintiff valued the relief he sought at Rs. 130. Under Act XIV of 1869, s. 26, the present appeal would lie to the District Court, and not to the [741] High Court, unless the value or amount of the subject-matter exceeds Rs. 5,000. The plaintiff has computed the Court fees on the amount of Rs. 130.

It is conceded that if s. 8 of Act VII of 1887 applies, the appeal lies to the District Court. Section 8 applies to suits under s. 7, cl. 4 (c), of the Court Fees' Act, 1870, to obtain a declaratory decree or order where consequential relief is prayed. The contention of the appellant is that no consequential relief is prayed; and so the suit is one described in art. 17, cl. 3, of the sch. II. To such a suit s. 8 of Act VII of 1887 does not apply.

Although the plaint recites that the plaintiff has come to know of the existence of the decree in the course of proceedings against him in execution, the only prayer is that the decree may be declared null and void. The suit thus differs from the second suit supposed in Monohar v. Bawa Ramcharandas (6) and from Gulabsingji v. Lakshmansingji (7) and Ram Prasad v. Sukh Dai (8), suits about accounts where consequential relief was claimed in the plaint.

It was mooted that in the present case the relief asked for was the cancelling of a fraudulent decree, and that this was consequential relief. But in Karam Khan v. Daryai Singh (9) a Full Bench held the contrary, even though cancelling of a deed was prayed for. Sankara v. Vijaya (10) is also based on the view that consequential relief is not prayed for in a suit like the present. The last case is opposed to Narain v. Aya (11) which is in accordance with the interpretation of the Privy Council decision in Tacoordeen v. Nawab Syed Ali Hosein Khan (12) stated by Couch, C.J., in Joy Narain v. Grish Chunder (1) that "where a plaintiff asks to have a deed or will set aside, there is a prayer for substantial relief." This view is stated as to the particular suit in Ahmed v. Thomas (2), where, however, there was a general prayer. The Allahabad Full Bench in Karam Khan v. Daryai Singh notice that the [742] Privy Council judgment was passed before s. 39 of the Specific Relief Act was passed. In Ahmed v. Thomas the question was not about any deed or decree, but the suit was to have it declared that the property attached by a creditor belonged not to the judgment-debtor, but to the plaintiff. The Judges there differ from Dhondo v. Govind (3), which follows Parvati v. Kisan Singh (4), and not Ganpatgir v. Ganpatgir (5). Parvati v. Kisan Singh is based on Dayachand v. Hemchand (6), a Full Bench case. These cases, however, deal more with the effect of the proviso in s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, and with the mode of interpreting a fiscal enactment, than with the point before us.

Having reviewed the decisions we would observe that some of them are based upon ascertained facts, the learned Judges being in a position to say what the real claim was. In the present case the Court knows nothing except what the plaint says. The suit is analogous to one under s. 39 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) merely to have the decree adjudged void; leaving it to the Subordinate Judge to do what he likes with his decree if he so adjudges it void. The Court has not such knowledge of the facts as to enable it at this stage to say whether there is a case to which the proviso in s. 42 of the Act applies or whether the case is like Ganpatgir v. Ganpatgir or the cases about rescission of deeds. There have been cases like Patch v. Ward (7), where the bill was filed to set aside a deed of foreclosure and also to redeem the mortgage, or where other relief may have been prayed, for the relief may be very various. It may be that a mere declaration will effect all that the plaintiff wants; and that this will lead to the execution-proceedings against him being dropped. The Court cannot assume that he is out of possession.

We hold, therefore, that the case is not one coming within the words of s. 7, cl. 4 (c).

The appeal then came on for further hearing.

Mahadeo B. Chaubal.—We contend that the appeal is time-barred. The application for the restoration of the suit to the file was rejected on the 27th June, 1894. The usual time to file an [743] appeal under the High Court rules is ninety days. Therefore the time to file the appeal expired somewhere in September or October, 1894, after deducting the time spent in obtaining copies. But the appeal was presented on the 16th January, 1895. It is, therefore, time-barred. It may be contended that under the provisions of the Limitation Act the time spent in the matter of the application under the extraordinary jurisdiction should also be deducted in computing the period of limitation. But s. 5-A of the Limitation Act extends the time only when the appellant or applicant is misled by any order or practice or judgment of the High Court of the presidency, province or district. In the present case the order which misled the plaintiff was the order of the First Class Subordinate Judge and not of the High Court. Therefore, under s. 5-A the time cannot be extended. The section is mandatory.

Vicaji (with Gangaram B. Rele).—If the interpretation sought to be put on s. 5-A of the Limitation Act was correct, then it would become almost inoperative. That section must be read with s. 5 in order to give effect to the intention which the Act contemplates—Balwant v. Gumani (1).

We submit that we have been prejudiced by the order of the Judge refusing to consider our application on the merits. If the application had been entertained, we would have shown sufficient grounds for the restoration of the suit to the file.

JUDGMENT.

1895, August 15. JARDINE, J.—Section 5-A is mandatory like s. 14. But it does not exclude the discretionary power of the Court under s. 5. We adopt the reasoning of the learned Judges in Balwant v. Gumani (1). The facts of the present are also on all fours with those in that case. We think the delay was rightly excused.

We are in accord with the Bench—Sargent, C.J., and Bayley, J., —who decided the appeal No. 12 of 1895, under the Letters Patent, that the order of the 7th March, 1894, which purports to dismiss the suit for non-appearance, was an order made under s. 157. The case had been adjourned till the 7th March, 1894, at the motion of the plaintiff and with the consent of the defendant, [744] in order that the plaintiff should tender some evidence. If he had put in any appearance in person or by pleader, his default in producing the evidence might have been a reason for a decision under s. 158. But as he did not appear, we think the most appropriate section to which the order must be referred is s. 157, and its consequential s. 102. The Court below is, therefore, wrong in treating the order as made under s. 158 and in refusing to consider on its merits the application made by the plaintiff under s. 103.

We, therefore, set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge of the First Class, and direct him to hear the application. The respondent to pay the costs of this appeal.

Order set aside.

The plaintiffs sued to recover the amount due on a mortgage executed by the defendant on the 23rd July, 1883.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for the plaintiff for Rs. 10,223, but allowed interest only up to the date of filing the suit.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Govardhanram M. Tripathi, for the appellants (plaintiffs).—We are entitled to interest at the mortgage rate up to the date [745] of the decree—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 86 and 88; Surya Narayan Singh v. Jogendra Narain Roy (1); Bikramjit Tewari v. Durga Dyal Tewari (2).

There was no appearance for the respondent (defendant).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—The general rule is that a plaintiff is entitled to interest in accordance with the terms of the mortgage bond up to date of decree, and that a Civil Court has not a discretion vested in it to refuse to award such interest. That rule appears to be recognized in the Transfer of Property Act, ss. 86 and 88. We must, therefore, vary the decree of the lower Court by directing interest to be awarded up to date of decree. That will make the total sum payable Rs. 10,717-10-0, instead of Rs. 10,223-8-0, which was the sum awarded by the lower Court. The appellants must have their costs of appeal. The six months' time for payment will run from the date of this decree.

An order made by a Collector removing A.'s lands from his khata and transferring them to B.'s khata, on the ground that A. had allowed the assessment thereof to fall into arrears and that B. had paid the assessment, does not by itself amount to forfeiture of A.'s interest in the lands.

A suit by A. to recover such land from B. being simply a suit between private parties for the purpose of establishing a private right, s. 4 (c) of Act X of 1876 does not bar the jurisdiction of the Civil Court.

[R., 24 B. 34 (36, 37).]

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of T. Hamilton, District Judge of Sholapur, reversing the decree of Rao Babadur K. N. Kher, First Class Subordinate Judge.

The plaintiff sued in the year 1891 to recover from the defendant certain lands, alleging that they formed part of his patelki vatan, and that in 1882-83, while he was a minor, the defendant had wrongfully taken possession of them, as the plaintiff's mother was unable to cultivate them and pay the assessment, and that the defendant had ever since remained in wrongful possession.

The defendant alleged that the assessment of the lands having fallen into arrear, the Collector sold them by auction; that [748] his (the defendant's) father paid the arrears of assessment, and the Collector in 1876-77 had made over the lands to him as owner, and that he had ever since then been in possession. He contended that the claim was barred by limitation.

The Subordinate Judge found that the lands had not been purchased by the defendant at a revenue sale as alleged by him, that the assessment of the lands having fallen into arrears in 1881-82, the defendant agreed to pay it and the lands were transferred to his name; that as there was no declaration by the Collector as required by s. 153 of the Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879), there was no forfeiture of the lands to Government, and that the plaintiff consequently had not lost his rights unless time-barred. He held that the claim was within time, the suit being within twelve years of the defendant's adverse possession. He, therefore, allowed the claim.

On appeal by the defendant, the Judge reversed the decree, holding that the Collector must have taken action under s. 81 of the Land Revenue Code, and that the transfer of the land to the defendant's name was proof that the Collector had forfeited the lands.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Gangaram B. Rele, for the appellant (plaintiff).—Section 80 of the Land Revenue Code is applicable to the case. Section 81 is not applicable. It refers to injury to other co-occupants. There is neither allegation nor evidence of any such injury in the case. Further, s. 81 contemplates forfeiture, and there is no evidence of forfeiture. Mere transfer of the khata to the defendant's name cannot operate as forfeiture, because forfeiture must precede all other proceedings—Dasharatha v. Nyahalchand (1).

Mahadeo B. Chaubal, for the respondent (defendant).—Section 4 (c) of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876) is a bar to the present suit. Civil Courts are debarred from exercising jurisdiction in matters relating to the realization of land revenue.

[PARSONS, J.—But the present suit is not one for the realization of land revenue. It is a suit between private persons to [749] recover possession of lands. Therefore, s. 4 (c) of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act is not applicable.]

(1) 16 B. 134 (136).

APPEL-LATE CIVIL.
20 B. 747.

Next we contend that the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed, because his case was that we had wrongfully dispossessed him, but no wrongful dispossession is proved. The Judge found that we got possession, because the Collector gave it to us. The case of the plaintiff has, therefore, failed.

Section 80 of the Land Revenue Code is not applicable, because it does not empower the Collector to transfer the lands. The Collector must have acted under ss. 56 and 57 of the Land Revenue Code. We submit that s. 81 is applicable, because it provides for the substitution of the name of any other co-occupant. The defendant is a co-occupant with the plaintiff. The Judge has found that he is a bhauband of the plaintiff. The plaintiff ought to have sought redress under s. 214 (c) of the Land Revenue Code.

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—The plaintiff Bhau bin Bali stated in his plaint that during his minority in 1882-83 the deceased defendant Hari had wrongfully taken possession of his lands, portion of the patelki inam land, his mother being at that time unable to cultivate them and pay the judi.

Defendant, Hari's son, replied that as the judi was in arrear, the lands were sold by auction in 1876-77, and Hari purchased and took possession of the same. Both parties overstated their case. Defendant, called as a witness by plaintiff, admitted that the lands were never sold by the revenue authorities. Plaintiff, called as a witness by defendant, admitted that the lands had been taken over by Hari, who paid the judi which was in arrear.

Extracts from the revenue records, which were put in evidence in the Subordinate Court and in the District Court on appeal, show that this took place in 1882. No section of the Land Revenue Code was apparently quoted in the orders then given, but it was simply directed that as Bhau had not paid the judi, but the Bhauband Hari was willing to pay the same, there was no objection to transfer the khata to Hari's name.

The Subordinate Judge held that as there was no declaration by the Collector, as required by s. 153 of the Land Revenue [750] Code, of the forfeiture of the lands to Government, there was no forfeiture—Dasharatha v. Nyahalchand (1)—and thus plaintiff's suit being brought within twelve years from the commencement of Hari's possession the claim was not time-barred.

The District Judge held, in appeal, that the Collector must have taken action under s. 81 of the Land Revenue Code, and that in that case the rights of the defaulter were extinguished, and so Hari became owner of the lands in 1882.

Plaintiff has now made a second appeal to this Court, urging that there was no forfeiture or extinguishment of his rights in 1882.

Mr. Chaubal for respondent has raised the preliminary objection that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is barred under s. 4 (c) of Act X of 1876, which provides that no Civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction as to "claims connected with or arising out of any proceedings for the realization of land revenue or the rendering of assistance by Government or any officer duly authorized in that behalf, to superior holders or occupants for the recovery of their dues from inferior holders or tenants; claims to set aside on account of irregularity, mistake or any other ground except fraud, sales for arrears of land revenue."

(1) 16 B. 134 (136).

1895 AUG. 20. APPELLATE CIVIL. 20 B. 747.

We are of opinion that this objection is not good. This is simply a suit between private parties for the purpose of establishing a private right (s. 5 (b) of Act X of 1876). As will be presently shown, no proceedings were taken for the realization of the land revenue. Further, it is evident that no proceedings could have been taken by the Collector under s. 81 of the Land Revenue Code, for that section is part of chap. VI of the Land Revenue Code, which treats "of the occupation of unalienated lands and the rights of occupants" (viz., holders of unalienated land). The land in suit in 1882 was patelki inam paying judi to Government, that is, the rights of Government to payment of the rent or land-revenue were transferred partially to the ownership of the watandar. Section 81 relates to "registered occupants" and "occupancies" which do not include holders of alienated lands. It is thus clear that the Collector [751] could not have taken action under s. 81 of the Land Revenue Code; and it is unnecessary to determine the question whether action taken under that section entirely extinguishes the rights of the previous registered occupant

Section 56 relates to arrears of land revenue due on account of land by any land-holder, failure in payment of which shall make the occupancy or alienated holding liable to forfeiture, whereupon the Collector may levy all sums in arrear by sale of the occupancy or alienated holding free from all incumbrances or may otherwise dispose of such occupancy or alienated holding under rules or orders under s. 214, and by s. 57 in the event of such forfeiture the Collector can take immediate possession of the land and dispose of the same by placing it in the possession of the purchaser, or other person entitled to hold it. In the present case there is nothing to show that the Collector declared any forfeiture or took possession of the land. All that appears is that the plaintiff's mother and guardian failed to pay the judi or cultivate the land. Hari thereupon took possession and paid the arrears of judi. The Collector directed that there was no objection to take the judi from Hari and enter the land in Hari's khata. If it were necessary to determine the section or sections of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) under which the Collector must be taken to have acted, then a reference might be made to s. 137, which provides that land revenue may be recovered from the co-sharer of alienated land, and to s. 37 which empowers the Collector to dispose of lands subject to the rights of individuals legally subsisting. It is not clear under which (if any) of the rules under ss. 56 and 214 the action of the revenue authorities may be said to have been taken. These rules are Nos. 58—64, pp. 30 to 33, in the General Rules of the Revenue Department. Rule 59 relates to forfeited alienated holdings, and provides that the Collector shall cause the land comprised in any forfeited alienated holding to be entered in the records as unoccupied unalienated land, and may dispose of it in accordance with the rules and orders in force relating to land of that description. It is evident, from the facts in this case, that no action was taken under that rule. It is not pretended that the land was entered in the records as [752] unoccupied unalienated land. All that was apparently done was to take the arrear of land revenue from a co-sharer (bhauband) of the holder, and to enter the lands in the khata of the said co-sharer. We can find no authority for holding that in such a case the previous holder's rights are extinguished.

We, therefore, reverse the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the Subordinate Judge, but vary it to this extent that plaintiff is bound in equity before he can recover possession to repay defendant the Rs. 12 which Hari paid for judi on the land. Parties to bear their own costs in the Subordinate Court. All the rest of the costs to be borne by defendant.

PARSONS, J.—I concur. The evidence on the record does not show under what provision of law the revenue authorities professed to act when they transferred the land to the defendant's name in 1832, neither does it show that the land or the plaintiff's interest in it was ever forfeited. Had there been a suggestion that any evidence was forthcoming to prove a forfeiture, I should have been inclined to remand the case, seeing that no issues were framed by the District Judge. The defendant, however, was allowed to produce evidence in the lower appellate Court, and I presume that he produced all that was available. Whether the revenue authorities acted under s. 81 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, as the District Judge thinks they did, or whether, as is more probable, they did what they thought just and right in the circumstances of the case so that the land should not be entirely lost to the plaintiff, the result is the same; the plaintiff's interest in the land has never been forfeited, and, therefore, still subsists. The defendant, in my opinion, holds a somewhat analogous position to that of a sharer who has redeemed a mortgage and thus obtained possession. See Ramchandra v. Sadashiv(1); Faki Abas v. Faki Nurudin (2). On repaying the money the defendant has paid for him, the plaintiff can, I think, be allowed to recover the possession of what is still his own land.

Decree reversed.

Second appeal—Finding of fact—Finding of lower Court based on misconception of evidence—Practice—Procedure—Suit for possession—Issues to be raised.

The finding on an issue of a lower appellate Court which is based on a misconception of what the evidence is, cannot be accepted in second appeal as a legal finding on it.

In a suit to recover possession based on a deed of sale,

Held, that the Court should have raised issues as to ownership and possession, as even if the sale-deed were not proved, the plaintiff might have been able to substantiate a title independently of it.

[R., 13 Ind. Cas. 629; 4 N.L.R. 20 (25); D., 4 C.L.J. 198 (202).]

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of A. H. Unwin, District Judge of Nasik.

The plaintiff sued to recover possession of a piece of ground alleging that it was his ancestral property, having been purchased by his father from one Malhari Narayan Kulkarni under a deed of sale in the year 1856, and that the defendants took wrongful possession thereof in August, 1891.

The defendants denied that the land was the plaintiff's, and pleaded that in the year 1891 the plaintiff had sued the first defendant for possession in the Court of the Mamlatdar of Malegaon, and that the Mamlatdar had dismissed the suit and allowed the first defendant to remain in possession.

1895 AUG. 26. APPELLATE CIVIL. 20 B. 753.

One of the reasons assigned by the Mamlatdar for dismissing the plaintiff's claim was that the deed of sale to his father being unstamped was inadmissible in evidence.

At the hearing of the present suit the Subordinate Judge sent for the proceedings before the Mamlatdar and found that the deed of sale (Ex. 34) set up by the plaintiff did not need to be stamped ; that it was satisfactorily proved by witnesses; and that the plaintiff's exclusive title to the land was established. He, therefore, allowed the plaintiff's claim.

On appeal by the defendants the Judge reversed the decree. The following is an extract from his judgment :—

[754] " Has the document (Ex. 34) been rightly held proved ?

" I find in the negative.

" The plaint was filed on the 12th February, 1892, but is wholly silent about this or any other muniment of title. The document was not produced in Court till the 1st June following, and never before does it appear to have seen the light of day in any Court, or to have been inspected by any public functionary. After some personal experience of ancient records, I do not hesitate to say that this document is a clumsy, impudent forgery."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Shamrao Vithal, for the appellant (plaintiff).—The finding of the lower Court on the issue raised cannot be accepted. The Judge has fallen into an error in supposing that the sale-deed was first produced by us in June, 1892. It was produced by us in the possessory suit before the Mamlatdar, who refused to allow it in evidence, because it was not stamped. In his judgment the Judge has remarked that the deed had never seen the light. This is wrong. Witness No. 22 has attested the deed. The vendor's nephew was examined and he proved the vendor's signature. The Judge has misconceived the evidence in the case, and a finding based on a misconception of evidence cannot be accepted as a legal finding.

Daji A. Khare, for the respondents (defendants).—The Judge has found the deed to be a clumsy forgery. This is a finding of fact. It does not appear from the sale-deed that it was produced before the Mamlatdar. We are in possession, and before the plaintiff can eject us, he must prove his title, which according to the finding of the Judge he has failed to do.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—The Judge raised only one issue and decided the appeal upon it. His finding on the issue is objected to on the ground that he is wrong in saying that the deed of sale relied on by the plaintiff had never seen the light of day in any Court before the 1st of June, 1892, and that no living being speaks for it. The objection seems well-founded, because the Subordinate Judge says that the deed was produced before the Mamlatdar in 1891, and we find that a witness (Ex. 22) swears to execution of the deed by Malhar and to his having attested it. This misconception of the evidence prevents our accepting the Judge's finding as a legal finding on the issue raised.

[755] We think also that the Judge should have raised issues as to the ownership and possession both of the plaintiff's vendor and the plaintiff, since even if the deed were not proved, the plaintiff might be able to substantiate a title independently of it, and, on the other hand, if the deed were proved, it would not necessarily establish the title either of his vendor or of himself.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 2 (d), 25—Services rendered during the defendant's minority at his desire and continued at his request after his majority—Agreement to compensate for services—Consideration—Annuity.

Services rendered at the desire of the minor expressed during his minority and continued at the same request after his majority form a good consideration for a subsequent express promise by him in favour of the person who rendered the services. By s. 2 (d) of the Contract Act, services already rendered at the desire of the promisor are placed on the same footing with such services to be rendered, and constitute a good consideration for a definite agreement.

Cases where a person without the knowledge of the promisor or otherwise than at his request does the latter some service and the promisor undertakes to compensate him for it, are covered by s. 25 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872); in them the promise does not need a consideration to support it.

SECOND appeal from the decision of R. S. Tipnis, Assistant Judge, F. P., of Surat at Broach, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb Karpurram M., Subordinate Judge of Jambusar.

The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 625, being the amount of five years' (1882 to 1886) arrears due on a deed, dated the 5th June, 1875, by which the defendant agreed to pay him Rs. 125 per annum in consideration of the services rendered by him to the defendant in connection with a suit which the defendant had [756] filed against his father to establish his legitimacy, and in which he, the defendant, got a decree for maintenance. The litigation lasted in all for five years, and during its continuance the defendant attained his majority.

The following is the translation of a portion of the deed in suit:—

"Since the commencement of this dispute and up to its end, with great care and properly you (plaintiff) have rendered me much assistance by living with me (though) it is difficult for me to give (due) return for the assistance thus rendered by living beside me in times of such distress of mine; yet in order that you may have recompense for your trouble, and that you may remember me for ever (may have something to remember me for), do I pass you this deed (to wit) when (it will please) God to make me the owner of the gadi of Sarod, i.e., when God will instal me in the gadi of Sarod from that year will I continue paying Rs. 125, in words one hundred and twenty-five. a year as long as there are your and my issues (during the lifetime of my issues and yours)."

The defendant replied that the agreement was void on the ground of fraud, undue influence and misrepresentation; that it was without consideration and opposed to public policy; that the right to sue had not yet accrued, because his estate was in the hands of the talukdari settlement officer, and that the agreement was oppressive.

The Subordinate Judge had at first dismissed the suit on the ground that it was premature, because the defendant's estate was in the management of the talukdari settlement officer, but on remand on appeal he allowed the claim.

On appeal by the defendant the District Judge confirmed the decree.

The defendant preferred a second appeal.

Inverarity (with Kalabhai Lallubhai) appeared for the appellant (defendant).—We contend that the agreement is not binding on us. It has no consideration. The document purports to have been executed for past services which, we submit, do not form a valid consideration—Pollock on Contracts, pp. 168, 169.

Motilal M. Munshi appeared for the respondent (plaintiff).—Under the Contract Act past services form a good consideration—s. 2, cl. (d) of the Contract Act. Even supposing that past services do not form a good consideration, still our claim can be supported under s. 25 of the Contract Act.

JUDGMENT.

[757] FARRAN, C.J.—The history of this case is fully set out in the judgments of the lower Courts, which have concurred in awarding the claim. The point argued before us for the appellant is that there was no legal consideration for the agreement sued on. By it the defendant promises to give the plaintiff an allowance of Rs. 125 a year, because during the whole of the five years' litigation, which went on between his father and himself, and in which his legitimacy was questioned, plaintiff rendered him great assistance and remained with him in times of distress. It was thus distinctly an agreement to compensate for past services. These services were rendered to the defendant at first while he was a minor, and were subsequently continued after he had attained his majority. There is no finding by the lower Courts whether they were rendered at the desire of the defendant, but it is plain, from the judgment of the District Judge, that he was of opinion that it was not intended by the parties that the plaintiff's services should be rendered gratuitously. They were intended to be recompensed, though the nature and extent of the proposed recompense were not fixed until the agreement now sued on was executed by the defendant. Hence we have not to consider whether a past action upon request which the parties did not intend to create a contractual jural relation between them is a consideration within the meaning of the Contract Act. It may be open to question whether an act done at another's desire, which is not intended by either party to create a contractual relation between them, such as joining a friend in a walk or on an excursion at his request, can be considered a consideration for a binding promise. Mr. Anson thinks that it could not. "Unless" (he says) "the request is virtually an offer of a promise, the precise extent of which is hereafter to be ascertained, or is so clearly made in contemplation of a promise to be given by the maker of the request that a subsequent promise may be regarded as part of the same transaction, the rule in Lampleigh v. Braithwait has no application"—Anson, Principles of the English Law of Contract, p. 89. But the point does not arise in this case.

Mr. Inverarity, for the appellant, cited Pollock on Contracts, p. 169, (5th Ed.), as expressing the law founded upon decisions in the English Courts which ought to govern us in the present [758] case, but we are unable to accept that contention. The Contract Act, though in the main founded on English case-law, does not follow, as pointed out by Mr. Cunningham in his Work on the Act, the present English law on the subject of consideration. We must turn to the Act itself. If the services of the plaintiff were rendered at the desire of the defendant, expressed during the defendant's infancy and continued at the same request after his majority, we do not doubt that they form a good consideration for the defendant's subsequent express promise to pay the annuity secured by the agreement. Services at the desire of the promisor already rendered and such services to be rendered are placed in s. 2 (d) upon the same footing. Either will constitute a good consideration for a definite agreement. If the services were rendered without the desire of the defendant (and it is, we think, difficult to conceive in the present case that they were rendered otherwise than at his express or implied request or desire) the case falls within s. 25 of the Act. The services will have been voluntarily rendered for the defendant. The section appears to cover cases where a person without the knowledge of the promisor or otherwise than at his request does the latter some service and the promisor undertakes to recompense him for it. In such cases the promise does not need a consideration to support it. A rather extreme application of the section will be found in Dhiraj Kuar v. Bikramajit Singh (1).

The other grounds taken in the memo. of appeal have not been pressed upon us.

We confirm the decree with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Yearly tenant—Notice to quit—Disclaimer of landlord's title in the course of pleadings—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1382), ss. 111 (b) and 116—Not retrospective.

The sections of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) relating to notice do not apply to suits instituted before that Act came into operation. Before that Act came into operation a tenant other than a monthly tenant, holding over on the terms of his lease, was entitled to reasonable—that is to say, in the case of lands and in the absence of usage or stipulation to the contrary—to six months' notice to quit.

Disclaimer of a landlord's title after suit brought in the pleadings does not of itself determine the tenancy and render notice to quit unnecessary.

* Second Appeal, No. 65 of 1894.

(1) 3 A. 787.

1895
SEP. 2.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
20 B. 759.

SECOND appeal from the decision of W. H. Crowe, District Judge of Poona, in appeal No. 97 of 1893.

In 1892 the plaintiff sued to eject the defendant from a house, alleging that the house had belonged to her husband's brother Tribhovan Jotiram, and had been leased by him to defendant under two rent-notes dated 19th May, 1867, and 28th June, 1871, respectively; that after Tribhovan's death in 1882 defendant orally agreed with the plaintiff to hold over the premises on the same terms as before, and to vacate the house on demand; that the defendant refused to deliver up possession and pay rent from 19th May, 1889.

Defendant pleaded that the house belonged to him, and not to the plaintiff or Tribhovan; that he had not executed the rent-notes referred to in the plaint, and had not rented the premises from plaintiff or Tribhovan.

The Court of first instance held that the house had belonged to Tribhovan; that plaintiff was the heir of Tribhovan; that the defendant occupied the house first as Tribhovan's tenant and after Tribhovan's death as plaintiff's tenant; and that as he refused to pay rent or quit the premises, he was liable to be ejected. A decree was accordingly passed awarding possession of the house to [760] the plaintiff. On appeal, this decree was reversed by the District Judge for the following reasons:—

"By s. 111, cl. (b), coupled with s. 116 of Act IV of 1882 a notice to quit is necessary to determine the tenancy. Section 116 describes the effect of holding over. It is contended that the objection was not raised in the lower Court nor in the memorandum of appeal; but that point has been decided in Vithu v. Dhondi (1), where it was held that it was open to defendant to take the objection of want of proper notice even in second appeal. I find that in the absence of such notice no decree for ejectment can be passed."

Against this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for appellant.—Sections 111, cl. (b), and 116 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) have no application to the present case. The present suit was filed in 1892, i.e., before the Act came into force in this Presidency on the 1st January, 1893. Section 2 of the Act expressly declares that it does not affect any right or liability arising out of any legal relation constituted before the Act comes into force. The lower Court was, therefore, wrong in giving the Act a retrospective effect. Apart from the Act, the law is clear that a tenant who repudiates the title of his landlord is not entitled to a notice to quit. The disclaimer of the landlord's title works a forfeiture of the tenancy, and renders a notice to quit unnecessary—Baba v. Vishvanath (2): Lalu v. Bai Motan Bibi (3). In the present case there is an additional reason why a notice to quit is not necessary. It is found as a fact that defendant occupied the house as a tenant of Tribhovan. On Tribhovan's death the tenancy became a tenancy-at-will. The defendant was only a tenant on sufferance. He was, therefore, liable to be ejected at any time without any notice to quit —Krishnaji v. Antaji (4). The suit, therefore, is not bad for want of notice to quit.

Mahadev B. Chaubal, for respondent.—The provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, relating to notice to quit, regulate procedure, and are, therefore, retrospective. They govern pending suits. Section 111 (b) of the Act is, therefore, applicable to the present case. As to the alleged disclaimer of the landlord's title, [761] it is not shown to have occurred before the institution of the suit. The landlord's title was repudiated for the first time in our written statement in the present suit. Such a disclaimer does not dispense with proof of a notice to quit—Vithu v. Dhondi (1); Abu Bakar v. Venkatramana (2); Dodhu v. Madhavrao (3); Baba v. Vishvanath (4) is practically overruled.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The objection that notice to quit was necessary before suit, was taken on appeal in the District Court, and may be heard here—Dodhu v. Madhavrao (3) The right of a yearly tenant to a reasonable notice to quit is a substantial right (Cole on Ejectment, Chap. 3) just as the right to determine such a tenancy by notice is a necessary incident. The suit having begun before the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, came into force in this Presidency, it is unaffected thereby, as provided in s. 2, cl. 3. The disclaimer of the landlord's title made in the written statement would not operate by itself as a forfeiture so as to render notice to quit unnecessary—Vithu v. Dhondi (1); Dodhu v. Madhavrao (3). The Court confirms the decree with costs.

RANADE, J.—The first contention raised in this appeal has reference to the question whether the District Judge was in error in applying s. 111, cl. (b), and s. 116 of the Transfer of Property Act to the present case.

It was contended on appellant's behalf that as the original suit in the Baramati Court was instituted in 1892, long before the notification extending the Act to this Presidency was issued in January, 1893, the provisions of that Act were not applicable to the present case. Mr. Chaubal, for the respondents, however, urged that the Transfer of Property Act in this connection only regulated procedure, and came into immediate operation. We are of opinion that this contention is not valid, and that the District Judge was in error in giving a retrospective operation to the provisions of Act IV of 1882 regarding notice. Section 2 of the Act expressly provides that nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect any right or liability arising out of a legal relationship [762] constituted before the Act came into force, which, in this Presidency, means before 1st January, 1893. Section 6 of the General Clauses Act I of 1868 also contains the same reservation The power to eject is a vested right whenever it is allowed by law or valid usage, and cannot be said to be a mere matter of procedure, or a portion of adjective law (In the matter of the Petition of Ratansi Kalianji (5)). In Bengal, this point was expressly considered in reference to mortgage suits brought before Act IV of 1882 came into force in that Presidency, and it was held that such suits could not be treated as being instituted under the provisions of the Act—Baij Nath Pershad v. Moheswari Pershad (6) and Mohabir Pershad v. Gungadhar Pershad (7). The point was decided similarly by the Allahabad High Court in Sitla Bakhsh v. Lalta Prasad (8). The Madras High Court took a similar view of ss. 111 and 112 of the Act in a case where a question of forfeiture for non-payment of rent arose on a lease of 1849—Narayana v. Narayana (9). Following these authorities we hold that s. 111 (b) and s. 116 did not apply to the present suit.

This makes it necessary to inquire whether, under the law as it stood before 1st January, 1893, a notice to quit was necessary in the circumstances of his case. Plaintiff brought this suit, as heir of one Tribhovan, to eject defendant from a house which was leased to defendant by Tribhovan in 1867 and 1871 under two rent-notes. The periods provided for in these leases expired long ago, and plaintiff contended that defendant continued in possession under an oral contract by which he agreed to vacate the house on demand, and meanwhile pay the old rent of Rs. 15 per annum for 5 khans. Defendant denied the execution of the rent-notes, and also disowned the tenancy, and claimed that he, and not Tribhovan, was owner of the house. The Court of first instance held that the rent-notes were proved, and that defendant was a tenant of the plaintiff holding over on the old terms. The question for consideration is thus whether, in this state of the pleadings, defendant was entitled to a notice before plaintiff [763] could bring the ejectment-suit against him. As the rent, according to plaintiff, was Rs. 15 per annum, it is clear that the tenancy was not from month to month, in which latter case the Calcutta High Court has held that a month's notice was reasonable notice—Nocoordass Mullick v. Jewraj Baboo (1). The case clearly falls within the principle of the rule laid down in Chaturi Sing v. Makund Lall (2), where it was held that there was no difference between the position of a ryot holding without a patta and that of one holding over after the term covered by a patta with the consent of the owner, and that such a tenant could not be evicted without a reasonable notice to quit. What is a reasonable notice is always a question of fact dependent on custom and contract—Jagut Chunder Roy v. Rup Chand (3), but in the absence of an express stipulation or local usage to the contrary, it has been held that six months' notice is reasonable in the case of lands—Pandurang v. Yedneshwar (4).

It is, however, contended that as defendant in this case denied plaintiff's right, that disclaimer was sufficient by itself to terminate the tenancy, and no notice was necessary. This doctrine of disclaimer was at one time carried very far, but the first case on the subject represented by the ruling in Baba v. Vishvanath (5) was questioned in Purshotam v. Dattatraya (6) and expressly dissented from in Vithu v. Dhondi (7). This latter case was distinguished in a later ruling—Lalu v. Bai Motan Bibi (8), but the suit in this last case was brought by the purchaser of the tenant's rights against the landlord, and it is not, therefore, much to the point here. The distinction between a disclaimer prior to suit and a disclaimer in the course of pleadings, was first noticed in Vithu v. Dhondi(7) and was affirmed in Abu Bakar v. Venkatramana (9) and Dodhu v. Madhavrao(10). On behalf of the appellant, some stress was laid upon the words "permissive possession" used in Krishnaji v. Antaji (11), and an inference was [764] drawn therefrom that defendant was only a tenant on sufferance. The word 'permissive' used in that judgment appears to us only to be used to distinguish such possession from adverse possession, and it had reference chiefly to the question of limitation. The point about notice was not touched upon in that case. In the present case, plaintiff stated that the defendant had orally agreed to vacate on demand, but there was no evidence given on this point. There was no disclaimer of plaintiff's ownership prior to the institution of the suit, and the denial in the written statement had not the effect of dispensing with the obligation of Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876), ss. 3 and 11—Bar of jurisdiction—Forest officer not a revenue officer—Forest Act, VII of 1878, s. 81.

The bar of jurisdiction contained in s. 11 (1), of Act X of 1876 does not apply to cases in which a Collector moves under s. 81 of Act VII of 1878 to recover, at the request of a forest officer, the price of cut timber sold by the latter under s. 81 of Act VII of 1878.

APPEAL from the decision of T. Hamilton, District Judge of Surat, in suit No. 1 of 1893.

One Gulabkhan Ahmadkhan purchased certain wood cut in the Government forest of Nawapura in Khandesh, but as he [765] failed to pay the money for it, the timber was resold by auction. The Mamlatdar of Chikhli called upon the plaintiff, as surety of Gulabkhan, to pay the deficiency, Rs. 1,368-1-6, arising out of the re-sale, and intimated to him that in default of payment his property would be attached.

Plaintiff thereupon brought this suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council for a declaration that he was not liable to pay the amount of deficiency as demanded by the Mamlatdar and also for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from recovering the said amount.

Among other defences it was pleaded that under s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876) the suit could not lie, unless and until the plaintiff had exhausted his remedy by appealing to the revenue authorities from the Mamlatdar's order.

The District Judge dismissed the suit on the following grounds:—

"Admittedly plaintiff has not made any appeal to the revenue authorities against the Mamlatdar's order. His pleader, who has filed a written statement of his argument, contends that no appeal lies, as the money demanded was an item of forest revenue, not of land revenue, and was, therefore, to be levied under s. 81 of the Forest Act, and that the Act provides for no appeal against orders passed under that section.

---

* Appeal, No. 169 of 1894.

(1) Section 11, Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876):—

No Civil Court shall entertain any suit against Government on account of any act or omission of any revenue officer unless the plaintiff first proves that, previously to bringing his suit, he has presented all such appeals allowed by the law for the time being in force as, within the period of limitation allowed for bringing such suit, it was possible to present.

"But the act of the Mamlatdar of Chikhli was the act of a revenue officer, whether it was legal or illegal and whether the arrear was one of forest revenue or of land revenue, and consequently the suit is barred by s. 11 of Act X of 1876 until plaintiff has exhausted the appeals provided by the Land Revenue Code against the acts of revenue officers."

Against this order of dismissal plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Chimanlal Harilal Setalvad, for the appellant:—The plaintiff's claim in this suit is not against the Collector, who is merely a ministerial officer in this respect, but against the forest officer who moved him to take steps against the plaintiff. The Mamlatdar, who was the forest officer concerned, is not a "revenue officer" as defined in s. 3 of Act X of 1876 or in the Land Revenue Code. The sum sought to be recovered as the price of timber is not "land revenue" within the meaning of the said Acts. [766] The provisions as to appeal under the Bombay Land Revenue Code are inapplicable to the present case—Narayan v. Sakharam (1) and Narayan v. Sakharam (2).

Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the respondent:—This suit is, on plaintiff's own showing, in respect of an order issued by the Mamlatdar calling on him to pay the deficiency arising out of a re-sale of certain timber which had been purchased by him at a public auction. Plaintiff's liability was determined by forest officers under the Forest Act; and forest officers being revenue officers, s. 11 of Act X of 1876 would bar the claim. Forest administration is a branch of land-revenue administration; it is so treated by Government; see Bombay Government Gazette of 8th September, 1892, p. 909, containing rules under the Forest Act VII of 1878, which under s. 77 of that Act have the force of law. Forest officers are Assistant Collectors and subject to the control of the Revenue Commissioner. They are, therefore, revenue officers under the Bombay Land Revenue Code also, and their proceedings are subject to appeal under s. 203 of that Code. This section stands in the place of s. 9 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876) which is repealed by it. The present suit being in respect of moneys claimable for timber belonging to Government forest, and the forest officers being employed to recover the moneys so claimable, plaintiff ought to have first appealed from the decision of the forest officer. Section 11 of the Act is, therefore, a bar to the present suit.

Again, the immediate cause of action is the Mamlatdar's order; and the Mamlatdar is undoubtedly a revenue officer acting under the Land Revenue Code. In this view of the case, also, s. 11 would bar the present suit.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—What the forest officer sold was cut timber, which is not "land" as that term is defined in s. 3 of Act X of 1876. Nor is the price thereof "land revenue," nor the officer who sold the timber a "revenue officer" within the definitions. The forest officer wishing to collect the price from the plaintiff moved the Collector to recover it, as s. 81 of Act [767] VII of 1878 allows this as if the debt "were an arrear of land revenue." In the opinion of the District Judge, the effect of s. 81 designating the revenue officers as those who may collect debts due for timber, is to bring in the bar of jurisdiction contained in s. 11 of Act X of 1876. We are of opinion, in the absence of authority and looking at the object of Act X of 1876 to hold the contrary, as the officer who uses the machinery by which Government revenue is collected is for the purposes of the Forest Act only like a persona designata: if the machinery designated had been regulated by the Code of Civil or Criminal Procedure, the Judge or Magistrate or Police officer would not have come under the bar of s. 11; and there is no reason for placing a Collector or his subordinate the Mamlatdar in a different position. This view is supported by Birdwood, J.'s remarks in Narayan v. Sakharam (1) and by West, J.'s comparison of the Collector to a bailiff or agent in the case of the same name, Narayan v. Sakharam (2). The fact that the officer passing an order is a Mamlatdar does not necessarily bar the jurisdiction of a Civil Court—Ganesh v. Mehta Vyankatram (3). The Court, therefore, reverses the decree of the District Judge and remands the suit to his Court for trial. Costs of this appeal on respondent.

[768] Where a defendant is added who does not reside within the jurisdiction of the High Court and against whom the cause of action has not arisen wholly within that jurisdiction, leave must be obtained under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, even if leave was obtained when the suit was originally filed.

Under Hindu law where an ancestral trade descends upon a minor as the sole member of the family, and the ancestral trade is carried on under the superintendence of the minor's natural guardian, for the benefit of herself (she having a claim for maintenance) and the said minor, the minor will be bound by all acts of the guardian necessarily incidental to or flowing out of the carrying on of the trade.

SUIT to recover Rs. 53,883-4-9 alleged to be due to the plaintiff in Bombay by the defendants' firm of Balaram Punamchand at Sihore in the territory of Bhopal.

The plaintiffs' firm in Bombay had acted as the commission agents of the firm of Balaram Punamchand of Sihore. That firm was a family firm of long standing at Sihore and had formerly been carried on under the name of Chhotamal Balaram. The last male owner was one Punamchand, who died in 1943 (1886-87), leaving an infant daughter named Goolibai (the second defendant). Subsequently to his death the firm was carried on by a munim under the directions (as the plaintiffs alleged) of his (Punamchand's) mother Foolibai (defendant No. 1). The plaintiffs now sued for money due in respect of transactions since Punamchand's death.

The suit in the first instance was brought against Foolibai alone, the plaint alleging that she was the owner of the firm. In her written statement she denied that she was the owner or was responsible for any of the firm's transactions. She stated that the firm had belonged to her son Punamchand, who was then dead, and who had left an infant daughter Goolibai, who was alive.

In consequence of these allegations the plaintiff added Goolibai as a party defendant to the suit (see I.L R., 17 Bom., 466). Leave under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, had been duly obtained when the plaint was originally filed, but no fresh leave was got when Goolibai was added as a party.

The case now came on for hearing against both the defendants Foolibai and Goolibai.

[769] The issues raised for the first defendant (Foolibai) were whether she carried on business at Sihore, and whether she was liable to the plaintiff's claim.

For the second defendant (Goolibai), the following issues (inter alia) were raised :—

(3) Whether this Court has jurisdiction to try this suit as against the second defendant?

(4) Whether the plaintiffs' claim is not barred by limitation?

(5) Whether the second defendant was capable of being a debtor to plaintiffs in respect of the transaction in the plaint mentioned?

Scott (with Lang, Advocate General) for Foolibai (defendant No. 1):—Foolibai is clearly not liable to the plaintiffs' claim. She is not and never was the owner of the firm. As the widow of a former owner she is, by Hindu law, only entitled to maintenance out of his property. So far no doubt she is interested in the firm, but that does not make her liable. He cited Lindley on Partnership (5th Ed.), pp. 110-112; Lukmidas v. Purshotam (1).

Davar (with Inverarity), for Goolibai (defendant No. 2):—As against this defendant, this Court has no jurisdiction to try this suit. The whole cause of action did not arise in Bombay, and leave to sue under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, was, therefore, necessary. That leave was, no doubt, obtained for the suit when first filed. But it was then a suit against the first defendant Foolibai only. The Judge's order making the second defendant party was not obtained until the 13th August, 1892. It was a new suit against her. (See s. 22 of Limitation Act, (XV of 1877). Fresh leave should have been obtained—Rampurtab Samruthrai v. Premsukh Chandamal (2).

Next we say as against us the suit is barred by limitation. The last item of the account was in 1889, and the suit as against us was not instituted until the 13th August, 1892.

Further, the second defendant Goolibai is a minor and cannot be liable. The firm is her property. The munim was not her agent, for a minor cannot appoint an agent—s. 183 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872). The plaintiffs dealt with the firm [770] at their own risk. This is not a case of partnership; therefore, s. 247 of the Contract Act does not apply. A minor cannot be liable—Lindley on Partnership (5th Ed.), p. 74; Addison on Contract (9th Ed.), p. 379; Dilk v. Keighley (3); Thornton v. Illingworth (4); Lovell v. Beauchamp (5).

Kirkpatrick (with Macpherson), for plaintiff:—The English cases cited do not apply. The firm was a family firm. Nothing similar to a family firm under Hindu law exists in England. As to a minor's liability in such a case, Tagore Law Lectures, 1884, pp. 239-40; Joykisto v. Nittyanund (1); Samalbhai v. Someshvar (2); Demola v. Mohun (3); Ramlal v. Lakhmichand (4). No fresh leave under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent was necessary when the second defendant Goolibai was made a party. The suit was the same. It was a suit against the firm. Even for purposes of limitation, it would not, in such a case, be regarded as a new suit, notwithstanding s. 22 of the Limitation Act—Kasturchand v. Sagarmal (5). There is no similar provision with regard to jurisdiction. As to limitation, the suit is not barred. This is a mutual account and one item is within time. But in any case s. 13 of the Limitation Act applies—Atul Kristo v. Lyon & Co. (6). We contend that the first defendant Foolibai is also liable. She has been acting as manager and trustee.

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—The facts of this case require to be stated with some precision. Suit No. 136 of 1889 in this Court (7) was filed on 15th March, 1889, by Rampartab Samrathrai and Harbilas Rampartab, carrying on business in Bombay under the name of Rampartab Harbilas, by their munim Beniram Motiram (I will call these parties in future "the plaintiffs"), against 1, Premsukh Chandanmal of Indore, a minor, by his mother Mathubai; 2, Ramlal of Sihore; 3, Foolibai of Sihore, widow of Balaram Bhagmal; 4, the above-named Mathubai of Indore, widow of Chandanmal. (All these defendants were stated to have carried on business until lately in partnership with Chhotamal at Indore [771] under the name of Chandanmal Chhotamal, and at Sihore under the name of Chhotamal Balaram.) 5, Goolibai, infant daughter of Balaram Bhagmal, by her mother (should be grandmother) Foolibai; she was added as a defendant in July, 1889.

The plaint recited that between the 22nd November, 1888, and 26th January 1889, the defendants from Sihore drew certain hundis upon plaintiffs in Bombay, which plaintiffs paid. Plaintiffs, therefore, sued to recover the amount of the said hundis.

The first of these defendants replied by his mother that the firm of Chandanmal Chhotamal at Indore had stopped business on 14th March, 1889, and that he was in no way interested in the firm of Chhotamal Balaram at Sihore.

The second defendant Ramlal replied that he had been merely a munim of the Sihore firm of Chhotamal Balaram.

The third defendant Foolibai replied that the Indore and Sihore firms were entirely distinct, the latter belonging to Balaram Bhagmal, who died in Samvat 1926, leaving this defendant his widow, who adopted Punamchand, who died in 1943, leaving Goolibai, a minor daughter, who was a necessary party to the suit; that on Punamchand's death, Chhotamal of the Indore firm supervised the Sihore firm for the benefit of the representatives of Punamchand; that a general account must be taken, in two separate suits, of the dealings between the plaintiffs and the said two firms; and that she was willing that the accounts of the transactions between the plaintiffs and the Sihore firm should be taken in a properly framed suit in a Court of competent jurisdiction; but in any event she (Foolibai) could not be liable for the transactions in respect of which the suit was brought.

The fourth defendant Mathubai made a similar defence.

The fifth defendant Goolibai replied by her grandmother Foolibai, that she was not liable in respect of any of the transactions in the plaint mentioned, and that her father Punamchand had no interest in the Indore firm.

Issues were raised, and the case came on for hearing before Telang, J., whose decision is reported (see I. L. R., 15 Bom. p. 96). He found that the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue in respect of [772] the hundis by themselves; that the hundis were a few items out of a long and a general account between the plaintiffs and the Indore and Sihore firms respectively; that an amendment of the plaint could not be permitted, allowing plaintiffs to sue for a general account, because the jurisdiction conferred by leave of the Court having been granted under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, was confined to the cause of action disclosed in the plaint as originally framed, and thus the Court could not allow an amendment which would substantially alter that cause of action. Mr. Justice Telang, therefore, dismissed the suit with costs. The plaintiff filed an appeal, which was not prosecuted to a hearing.

On 15th February, 1892, plaintiffs filed the present suit (No. 76 of 1892) against Foolibai, widow of Balaram, "carrying on business at Sihore, formerly under the name of Chhotamal Balaram, and now in that of Balaram Punamchand." The plaint states that "defendant has a firm at Sihore where she carries on business;" that the present suit was brought in respect of the plaintiffs' dealings with the said Sihore firm, and plaintiffs prayed that, if necessary, an account should be taken of the said transactions. Leave was given under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865.

Defendant Foolibai traversed these allegations of the plaint, and stated that the firm had belonged to Punamchand, who died in Samvat 1943, leaving Goolibai, a minor daughter, him surviving, and that she, Foolibai, had always denied her liability in respect of the transactions in the former suit. Plaintiffs then at once applied to the Court to allow them to amend the plaint by adding the name of Goolibai as defendant.

The Judge (Farran, J.) granted a summons, which he subsequently made absolute, as to making Goolibai a defendant, with liberty to the plaintiffs to make the necessary consequential amendments. Foolibai appealed, and the decision of Sargent, C. J., and Bayley, J., is reported (see p. 466 of I. L. R., 17 Bom.) The Appeal Court held that whatever weight there might be in the objection to Goolibai being made a party, such objection could only be taken by Goolibai and not by Foolibai. The appeal was, therefore, dismissed.

The plaint in the present suit was then amended on 19th April [773] 1893, and Goolibai's name was added as defendant. Various pleas have been raised on her behalf, which may be summarised as follows, viz., (a) The Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit against her, no leave having been given under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent as regards herself; (b) limitation; (c) she, a minor, cannot be liable for transactions entered into by the munim of the firm.

Before discussing these points, it is necessary to dispose of the case as regards Foolibai. It is manifest she is not the owner of, or partner in, the Sihore firm. Mr. Kirkpatrick asked for a decree against her as "manager and trustee." But that is not the capacity in which she is sued; and apart from that, admitting that she is the only adult member of the family in Sihore who was consulted by the munim who managed the affairs of the firm, that fact would not make her liable in respect of transactions entered into with the firm, and with regard to which the supposed owner of the firm is sued. Attention has been called to her power of attorney filed in Suit No. 601 of 1889, in which it is recited that the "firm of Chhotamal Balaram has been carried on under my superintendence for the benefit of myself and the said minor Goolibai." But a reference to the plaint in that very suit (No. 601 of 1889) shows that it was brought by Goolibai, "a minor carrying on business at Sihore under the name and style of Chhotamal Balaram, by her next friend Foolibai, &c." If Foolibai had claimed to be the owner, or part owner, of the firm of Chhotamal Balaram, the plaint would not have been framed in the above terms. The power of attorney recites that the holder of it may use Foolibai's name as the next friend of Goolibai. No doubt Foolibai was interested in the firm: she has a charge on it for her maintenance, but in a suit for an account of the dealings with the firm she cannot be sued as the firm.

Some evidence has been produced to show that, in Marwar, till a minor comes of age, the "mother-in-law" is owner of the estate. It is unnecessary to discuss this evidence. It is quite insufficient to disprove the ordinary succession according to Hindu law, by which Goolibai must be sole owner of the firm of Chhotamal Balaram.

[774] It remains, then, to consider the questions affecting Goolibai's liability in the present suit. Why her name was not entered in the plaint as a defendant when the plaint was filed on 15th February, 1892, it is impossible to say. As shown before, her existence was perfectly well known long before. In Suit No. 136 of 1889, she had been joined as a defendant on 13th July, 1889. Why leave was not asked under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent when the summons was obtained in the present suit to make her a defendant, it is difficult to say. However that may be, the fact remains that when the suit is dismissed against Foolibai, we have a suit against Goolibai alone, who both admittedly and according to the plaint when the suit was filed, and when the plaint was amended, resided and carried on business at Sihore beyond the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of this Court. To quote Mr. Justice Telang, "the only jurisdiction, therefore, which this Court can exercise over Goolibai is that given by cl. 12 of the Letters Patent." But no leave has ever been asked for or granted under that clause for the Court to exercise jurisdiction over Goolibai. Mr. Kirkpatrick, for plaintiffs, contended that Mr. Justice Farran's order making Goolibai a party must be taken as including leave under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865. But, as has been pointed out by Mr. Justice Telang, the order under that clause is not a mere formal order, or one merely regulating procedure. It is intended to be a judicial order, and cannot be presumed to have been made when there is no record thereof. According to the view which has been always accepted in this Court, the leave required by cl. 12 of the Letters Patent must be granted, if at all, at the time of the acceptance of the plaint, and cannot be granted afterwards. By s. 22 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) the suit as regards Goolibai must be deemed to have been instituted when she was made a party. Then was the time, if at all, to apply for leave under the clause. To use the language of the clause, the "suit" was then "received" against Goolibai. It cannot be inferred that leave was then allowed or granted. In

Jairam Narayan v. Atmaram (1), Mr. Justice West was asked to draw a similar inference, because leave had [775] been granted to the plaintiff to sue as a pauper: "but such leave" (he said) "does not by any means necessarily imply that this particular question was judicially considered."

Mr. Kirkpatrick, for plaintiffs, quoted the case of Kasturchand v. Sagarmal (2); but that was the case of misdescription, not non-joinder. Here plaintiffs sued Foolibai as "carrying on business at Sihore in the name of Balaram Punamchand." The plaint stated that "the defendant has a firm at Sibore." She was sued as the owner of the firm. She is not the owner of the firm, but Goolibai is. If that be so, as Sir Charles Sargent said, it is clear that Goolibai is the person liable, and Foolibai is not liable. Foolibai is in the same position as Ramlal, who was sued in suit No. 136 of 1889 as having carried on business with other persons at Sihore in the name of a certain firm. But Ramlal pleaded that he was merely the munim of a firm, and no further attempt has been made to render him liable for all or any of the transactions between the plaintiffs' firm and the Indore Sihore firms or either of them.

Mr. Justice Telang in deciding suit No. 136 of 1889 deemed it unnecessary to consider whether the cause of action intended to be introduced into the suit by amendment would itself be one over which that Court could exercise jurisdiction without leave granted under cl. 12. But it is evident that according to the reasoning followed by Mr. Justice Telang, with which I concur, this question must be answered in the negative. Mr. Justice Telang remarked that, according to the evidence of the plaintiff Harbilas, the contract between him and Chhotamal, in respect of the Sihore business, took place at Indore, and the transaction in respect of which that suit (No. 136 of 1889) was brought, were entered into in pursuance of the contract. The hundis, which formed the subject-matter of the suit No. 136 of 1889, are part of the dealings which make up the account, the subject of the present suit. Mr. Justice Telang's judgment shows that there is abundant authority for holding that in this Court the "cause of action" in cl. 12 of the Letters Patent includes not only the breach on which the suit is brought, but the contract and other circumstances, which together with the breach go to constitute the plaintiffs' right to [776] sue. Several matters may combine to make up a cause of action: the County Courts Act in England and the Letters Patent agree in this that they both expressly treat a cause of action as consisting of parts which may have different localities.

In the present suit the account consists mainly of consignments of opium made from Sihore to plaintiffs at Bombay, who either sold the opium in Bombay and credited the Sihore firm with the amount realized, or consigned the opium to China on account of the Sihore firm and hundis drawn by the Sihore firm on the plaintiffs in Bombay, who paid the same and debited the Sihore firm with the amounts. It was a mutual account, sometimes being in favour of the Sihore firm, sometimes in favour of the plaintiffs' firm. On these facts I cannot hold that the cause of action arose wholly in Bombay, and, therefore, I must hold that before the owner of the Sihore firm can be sued in this Court, the leave of the Court must first be obtained. It has not been so obtained, and thus the suit must be dismissed.

As counsel argued the other points, I will briefly refer to them.

As to limitation, it was contended that the date of the last item in the account corresponds with the 16th February, 1889, and as the suit was filed on the 15th February, 1892, the suit was within time. But the suit as against Goolibai was not instituted till she was actually brought on the record in April, 1893. Why she was not brought on the record in August, 1892, it is impossible to say. But it is clear that, according to s. 22 of the Limitation Act, the suit was instituted against Goolibai when she was made a party, not when the Judge ordered her to be made a party. It is unnecessary, therefore, to consider Mr. Kirkpatrick's argument that, according to s. 25 and art. 85 of the Limitation Act, limitation did not begin to run till the close of the year 1889. But it may be remarked that by art. 85 the year is to be computed as in the account. That, of course, must be the Samvat year, which ended on a date corresponding with some day in October, 1889. Section 25 refers to "instruments," not to suits on mutual open and current accounts.

[777] But a further argument was raised, viz., that by s. 13 of the Limitation Act, no bar of limitation could arise, for Goolibai has never resided in British India. Mr. Davar, for Goolibai, asked the Court to note that it was not admitted that Goolibai resides or has resided out of British India. But no evidence has been called by defendants in this suit. Up to the last moment it was apparently taken for granted that Goolibai has always lived with her grandmother at Sibore. That would be her natural place of residence; and, in the absence of any evidence on the point, I think I should be bound, if it were necessary to decide that point, to rule, on the strength of the decision in Atul Kristo v. Lyon and Co. (1), that the suit is not barred by limitation.

Lastly, with regard to Goolibai's liability. No doubt, according to English law, "there is nothing to prevent an infant trading or becoming partner with a trader, and until his contract of partnership be disaffirmed, he is a member of the trading firm. But it is equally clear that he cannot contract debts by such trading; although goods may be ordered for the firm he does not become a debtor in respect of them" (per Lord Herschell, V. C., in Lovell v. Beauchamp (2)).

But s. 247 of the Contract Act in stating the position which an infant partner occupies, does not seem to accord with the English cases. According to the section, the infant partner, while entitled to share the profits of the business is not liable for the losses, except to the extent of his own share in the partnership property. His liability is a limited one like that of a shareholder in a limited company. According to the English cases, a minor is no more bound by a contract of partnership than by any other contract. Under this section it would seem that the minor's share in the firm property is liable for its obligations, whether he has derived benefit from the business or not (see Cunningham and Shephard's Notes on the Contract Act, 5th Ed., p. 474.)

But it is said that here there is no case of partnership. Goolibai is the sole owner of the firm and s. 247 of the Contract Act is not applicable. That is so strictly speaking; but, following the analogy of the rule declared by this section, the [778] Calcutta High Court held in Joykisto v. Nittyanund (3), that "on principle there ought not to be any difference between the nature of the liability of an infant admitted by contract into partnership and that of one on whose behalf an ancestral trade is carried on by a manager."

In the case just quoted, one Anundo died leaving two infant sons and two widows. The sons and widows continued to live as members of a joint Hindu family. The ancestral trade was carried on under the management of the widows, who being pardanashin women employed one Haradhone for that purpose. The elder son after he came of age took part in the management with Haradhone. During the sole management of Haradhone, and also during the joint management of the elder son and Haradhone, dealings with the plaintiffs' firm continued, and in the course of these transactions the defendants (the two sons) became indebted to the plaintiffs in the sum of Rs. 4,605-11-3. This debt entirely arose out of transactions connected with the ancestral business carried on by the defendants' family after Anundo's death. The High Court decreed that the debt should be paid out of the partnership property of the two defendants. There is no trace of a suggestion that the liability of the share of the appellant defendant—the son who was still a minor when the suit was brought—in any way depended upon the fact that his elder brother when he came of age had joined in the management. The result would have been the same had the minor been the only son of Anundo. The High Court ruled, on the authority of the decided cases (one of which was Ramlal v. Lakhmichand)(1), that the guardian of a Hindu minor is competent to carry on ancestral trade on behalf of minor; consequently the contention raised that the infant appellant was not liable to any extent for the debt in question was not well founded.

So in the Bombay case just quoted, Sir M. Sausse, C.J., held that "an ancestral trade, like other Hindu property, will descend upon the members of a Hindu undivided family; and we think that such a family can by its manager (or its adult members acting as managers) enter into co-partnership with a stranger. In carrying on such a trade, infant members of the undivided [779] family will be bound by all acts of the manager (or the adult members acting as managers) which are necessarily incidental to or flowing out of the carrying on of that trade, whether it be singly or with a co-partner." The same principle will hold good when the sole member of the Hindu family is an infant as here, and the ancestral trade is carried on under the superintendence of the natural guardian of the minor for the benefit of herself (she having a claim to maintenance) and the said minor. For these reasons I would hold, if there were no bar to the suit, that plaintiffs are entitled to have an account taken of their dealings with the Sihore firm, of which Goolibai is the owner, it being open to Goolibai, on the account being taken, to show that any items are not fairly debitable to her firm. Findings on issues Nos. 1, 2 and 3 in the negative.

ISHWARDAS TRIBHOVANDAS (Plaintiff) v. KALIDAS BHAIDAS AND OTHERS (Defendants).* [3rd July, 1896.]

Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), s. 69—Duty of the Judge in stating a case for opinion of the High Court—Existence of a question of law, &c., a condition precedent.

Under s. 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882) the existence of such a question of law or usage or construction as therein mentioned is a condition precedent to a reference to the High Court, and if no such question arises, the Small Cause Court has no authority to refer and the High Court no jurisdiction to deal with the reference.

The duty of drawing up the case, where a reference is made, is imposed on the Court, and it is responsible for the form of the case.

CASE stated for the opinion of the High Court under s. 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882) by C. W. Chitty, Chief Judge :—

[780] "1. This was a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover from the fourth defendant possession of a diamond buckle said to be worth Rs. 1,500, and, in case the fourth defendant should be held entitled to retain the buckle as security for moneys advanced upon it, the plaintiff further claimed that the first, second and third defendants or some or one of them might be decreed to pay to the plaintiff, as damages for breach of duty, such sum as might be held to be due on the security of the said buckle.

"2. The facts of the case and the reasons for my decision are fully set out in my written judgment, a copy of which is hereto annexed, and to which I crave leave to refer. As therein stated, I dismissed the suit and certified Rs. 90 as the professional costs of the fourth defendant. The conduct of the second and third defendants was such as, in my opinion, to disentitle them to any award of costs. I had no doubt that the plaintiff had been unjustly deprived of the buckle, but for the reasons stated I was of opinion that he could not recover it back in this suit.

"3. At the request of the plaintiff I made my judgment contingent upon the opinion of the High Court. The questions suggested by the plaintiff's counsel are as follows :—

(i) Whether a broker to whom goods are entrusted 'jangad' with a fixed price can, at his option and without the consent of the owner, convert the said entrustment into a sale to himself by failing to return the said goods to the owner within a reasonable time?

(ii) Whether, under the circumstances disclosed in the case and the facts as found by the Court, the fourth defendant cannot be said to be holding goods (viz., the buckle) obtained from the owner by means of an offence or fraud as contemplated by s. 178 of the Indian Contract Act?

(iii) Whether under the circumstances found in the case the Court ought not to have passed a decree against the fourth defendant?

(iv) Whether, in any event, the Court ought not to have passed a decree against the first, second and third defendants or some or one of them?

[781] "4. With regard to the first question, I have no objection to it, except that it assumes the character of a 'jangad' transaction to be a mere entrustment to a broker. I would add to it the following questions as stated in my judgment, viz.:—

(i) (a) Whether the plaintiff having delivered the buckle as 'jangad' at a fixed price to the first and second defendants can in any case sue for the return of the buckle?

(i) (b) Whether the plaintiff's remedy would not be confined to the suit for the price?

"5. As to questions (ii) and (iii), I have nothing to say except I presume their Lordships will not regard any circumstances of the case except upon the facts found by me.

"6. As to the question (iv), I may say that I was unable to pass any decree against the defendants therein named, for the simple reason that the plaintiff did not ask for it. His counsel admitted that under the circumstances the relief which he sought against the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 could not be granted. The plaintiff did not (as he might have done) sue those defendants for the price of the buckle, and I understood his counsel to say that all that the plaintiff wanted was a decree for the return of the buckle.

"7. The buckle was attached before judgment and remains in the custody of this Court pending the return of this reference. The plaintiff has desposited in Court the amount of the costs awarded and Rs. 50 to meet the costs of reference."

The facts of the case as found by the Chief Judge were as follows:—

"I think the plaintiff must be regarded as having been at one time the owner of this buckle. The buckle was in April, 1893, pledged to him by Khushalchand Ootamchand, and as mortgagee the plaintiff sold it, buying it himself, through his nominee Kubla Kika, for Rs. 1,200. However shady may have been this transaction, it is not in dispute here, and the plaintiff asserts that Khushalchand has ratified the sale. The plaintiff, therefore, must be regarded as the owner of the buckle, when on Posh Sud 2nd (9th January, 1894) he gave it 'jangad' to the first and second [782] defendants. His transaction is admitted and is evidenced by the entry in the plaintiff's 'jangad' vahi. The price of the buckle is there given at Rs. 1,500, and a hoop ring was also given 'jangad' at Rs. 125, which was subsequently returned to the plaintiff. The first and second defendants took the buckle, alleging that they had a customer in view. The first defendant has not appeared before this Court, but it is clear that he had nothing to do with the transactions that followed. The second defendant alleges that on the 3rd Posh Sud, the day after he received the buckle, the plaintiff sold it to him out and out for Rs. 1,200, for which he passed a promissory note to the plaintiff and arranged that it should be taken into account when making up the accounts of the sale of a necklace in which he alleges he was the plaintiff's partner. His story I disbelieve and hold that no such sale as alleged by the second defendant is proved. The second defendant holding the buckle 'jangad' from the plaintiff in his turn handed it over to the third defendant. Here again there is a conflict of evidence. The second defendant says that he gave it to the third defendant 'jangad,' and produces an entry signed by the third defendant to that effect. The third defendant says that the buckle was pledged with him by the second defendant to secure Rs. 800, the value of a pair of earrings, and a further sum of Rs. 150 paid to Manchubhai Dayabhai on second defendant's account. The third defendant in the Police Court at first admitted his signature to the 'jangad' entry, but afterwards, when he found what the entry contained, denied it. Before me his denial of the signature was unsatisfactory, and he prevaricated much when questioned about it. The pledge to him is not proved by any extraneous evidence, and I incline to the belief that he too received the buckle 'jangad.' This was on the 27th January, 1894, eighteen days after the buckle had been received from the plaintiff. The third defendant in his turn handed over the buckle to the fourth defendant. There is no dispute that in this case it was handed over by way of pledge to receive moneys advanced by the fourth defendant to the third defendant. The date of this pledge was 4 Falgun Sud 1950. The debt now due to the fourth defendant on the security of the buckle amounts to over Rs. 1,800."

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—We have felt considerable difficulty in dealing with the questions submitted to us in this case owing to the form in which they are framed. After the statement of facts drawn by the Judge himself follows a series of questions suggested by the plaintiff's counsel, some of which (questions 2 and 3) virtually involve for their solution an inquiry as to whether the findings of facts by the Chief Judge are correct. Questions in such a form are inadmissible. The learned Chief Judge evidently himself felt that this was so, since he adds a para. (5) to the case to narrow their scope, but even when so narrowed it is difficult to ascertain what particular question of law they are intended to raise.

Section 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882) makes it a condition precedent to the drawing up of a statement of the facts of the case by the Small Cause Court, and referring it for the opinion of the High Court, that a question of law or usage having the force of law or as to the construction of a document which may affect the merits, arises in the case. If upon the findings of the Judge no such question arises, the Small Cause Court has no authority to refer the case for the opinion of the High Court, and the High Court has no jurisdiction to deal with it. The section, moreover, imposes on the Small Cause Court the duty of drawing up the case, and though in framing it that Court may well invite the assistance of the parties and give weight to their suggestion, yet it ought not to send up questions which involve the High Court in the dilemma of either entering upon matters of fact, or refusing to answer the questions, or drawn in such a form as to involve an assumption which the facts as found by the Judge do not warrant. We would point out that the Small Cause Court is itself responsible for the form of the case which it submits for the opinion of the High Court.

The first question, involving an assumption which the facts found in the judgment of the Small Cause Court do not warrant, we leave unanswered and deal with it in the form prepared by [784] the Judge himself. In that form it involves an almost self-evident proposition.

The term "jangad" has several meanings. When goods are delivered "jangad" it is a question of fact in each case as to the terms upon which they are delivered. When, as found here, they are delivered upon the condition that if not returned within the stipulated time, whether fixed definitely or ascertained by the course of dealing between the parties, they are to be considered as sold to the person to whom they are delivered at the price fixed upon, then the person delivering the goods cannot after the expiration of such fixed period recover the goods back, but his right is to sue for their price.

The second and third questions as narrowed by the Small Cause Court we answer in the negative, and also the fourth question, which can, however, hardly, under the circumstances stated, be said to be a question of law.

The decree of the Small Cause Court will, therefore, stand. Costs costs in the case.

Jurisdiction—Caste question—Mochi caste at Surat--Auditch Brahmans of Ahmedabad—Hereditary priests—Delegates of Auditch panch at Ahmedabad—Dismissal of delegates by the caste—Suit for injunction and damages—Decision of caste—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts.

The hereditary priests of the Mochi caste deputed certain persons to perform religious ceremonies for the caste. The caste, however, dismissed these delegates, and the defendants, who were members of the caste, employed other persons to perform certain religious ceremonies for them. The plaintiffs sued for an injunction and damages, alleging that they were entitled to perform these ceremonies and to receive the fees.

[783] Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction. The Civil Court could not enquire into the validity or otherwise of the decision of the caste in the matter. The parties were bound by it, and the plaintiffs could not legally complain of the action of the defendant, who had done no more than obey that decision.

SECOND appeal from the decision of J. B. Alcock, District Judge of Surat, reversing the decree of Rao Saheb Madhuvachram B. Hora, First Class Subordinate Judge.

The plaintiffs, who alleged themselves to be the kul gors (hereditary priests) of the Mochi (shoe-maker) caste at Surat, sued the defendants for an injunction and damages, alleging that the defendants employed an outsider to perform certain religious ceremonies which the plaintiffs were entitled to perform, and thus deprived them of their fees.

The defendants answered that they were not bound to have ceremonies performed by any particular priest; that whoever performed the ceremonies was entitled to the fees; that the whole caste had forbidden the plaintiffs to perform any of the ceremonies; that the suit did not fall under s. 54 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877); and that the injunction asked for could not be granted.

The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the right claimed; that they were forbidden by the Mochi caste at Surat to perform any of the ceremonies; that they were not hereditary priests, and were liable to be dismissed; that the defendants were not bound to employ them; and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to an injunction. He, therefore, dismissed the claim.

On appeal by the defendants, the Judge reversed the decree. The following is an extract from his judgment:—

"There is no dispute about the facts of this case. It appears that the Auditch Brahmans of Ahmedabad are the kul gors or hereditary priests of the Surat Mochis, and that certain persons are deputed by the panch of these Brahmans to perform religious ceremonies for the Mochis. As these unfortunate persons lose caste by performing ceremonies for low caste people, they have to pay a fine to the Brahman panch. They are then authorized to act on behalf of the panch as priests. Their position, in fact, is analogous to that of one member of an undivided family of priests officiating alone on some particular occasion. They are not in the position of a priest appointed by a man himself, but they are delegates of the Ahmedabad Brahmans. [786] That being so, they are not liable to dismissal at will. All the plaintiffs are authorized delegates.

"The reason why the Mochis dismissed the plaintiffs is that on one night, when a large number of marriage ceremonies had to be performed, they could not get through with them before day-break. This does not seem to be a fault of the kind which would warrant dismissal. Only crime or immorality or wilful neglect of duty would warrant that. There is nothing in s. 54 of the Specific Relief Act to prevent the injunction asked for from being granted."

Defendant No. 1 preferred a second appeal.

Perozeshah M. Mehta (with Motilal M. Munshi), for the appellant.—The custom in the Mochi caste at Surat is that marriages must be performed before day-break. On a particular day a large nnmber of marriages had to be performed, and the plaintiffs, who were the delegates of the Auditch Brahmans at Ahmedabad, the hereditary priests of the Mochi caste at Surat, did not bring with them a sufficient number of persons to assist them to perform the ceremonies before day-break. The caste, therefore, resolved to exclude them from performing ceremonies. The plaintiffs are not hereditary priests in the sense of the office devolving from father to son. Any member of the community set apart at Ahmedabad for performing ceremonies in the Mochi caste at Surat can come down and perform the ceremonies on receipt of proper fees. The defendants are not bound to have the ceremonies performed by plaintiffs only. In a case of this kind, the caste has power to pass a resolution excluding the plaintiffs from officiating, and a claim either for damages or injunction is not sustainable in a Civil Court—Raja v. Krishnabhat (1).

Shivram V. Bhandarkar, for the respondents (plaintiffs).—The Judge has found that we are the delegates of the Auditch Brahmans, who are the hereditary priests of the Mochi caste at Surat. The finding is a finding of fact, and, therefore, binding in second appeal. The Auditch Brahmans do not oppose our claim, and, therefore, the defendants cannot do so. We contend that we are the hereditary priests through the Auditch Brahmans, and the Mochi caste has no power to discontinue our services. We are entitled to recover damages—Sitarambhat v. Sitaram Ganesh (2); [787] Vithal v. Anant (3); Waman Jagannath v. Balaji Kusaji (4); West and Bühler, p. 398.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—Plaintiffs have brought this suit for an injunction and damages on the ground that although they are the hereditary priests of the Mochi caste, the defendant employed another Brahman to perform certain ceremonies for him. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the claim, holding that the plaintiffs were not the hereditary priests of the Mochi caste, but only the delegates of the Auditch panch at Ahmedabad, and that the Mochi caste had passed a resolution to the effect that no work should be taken at the hands of the plaintiffs. The District Judge reversed that decree. He found that the Auditch Brahmans of Ahmedabad were the hereditary priests of the Surat Mochis, and that the plaintiffs were deputed by the panch of those Brahmans to perform religious ceremonies for the Mochis, and were thus authorized to act as priests on behalf of the panch. He also found that the Mochis dismissed the plaintiffs, but he says that it was not for a fault which would warrant dismissal; "only crime or immorality or wilful neglect of duty would warrant that," and, therefore, he awarded the claim.

The grant of an injunction is clearly wrong (see Raja v. Krishnabhat (1)). We are of opinion that the award of damages is also under the circumstances unsustainable. Assuming that the Auditch Brahmans are the hereditary priest of the Mochi caste at Surat, and that they have the power of deputing priests to officiate at Surat, there is nothing in the case which shows that the Mochi caste is bound to accept, as their priest, any one so sent. The Subordinate Judge says it would be extremely difficult to determine this point, and there is no determination of it in the case. Both the Courts admit the power of the Mochi caste to dispense with the services of the delegated priest. It seems to us that some such power as this must rest with the caste, and the evidence of the principal plaintiff himself shows that he does not dispute this power; for, after dismissal, he applied to the caste and was re-admitted as their priest. We can find no authority for the proposition laid down by the Judge [788] that only crime, immorality or wilful neglect of duty would warrant dismissal. The cause given in Colebrooke's Digest Vol. I, p. 377, is only a fault.

It is not, however, necessary for us to discuss this point, because we are of opinion that it is not open to a Civil Court, in the circumstances of the present case, to enquire into the validity or otherwise of the decision of the caste in this matter, and that the parties are bound by it, and that the plaintiffs cannot legally complain of the action of the defendant, who has done no more than obey that decision. We, therefore, reverse the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the Subordinate Judge, with costs on plaintiffs in this and the lower appellate Court.

Decree reversed.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur N. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge of Dhulia with appellate powers, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb G. B. Koparkar, Subordinate Judge of Nandurbar.

Suit for an injunction. The plaintiff prayed for an order directing the defendants to remove a building recently erected to the south of his house, alleging that the said building obstructed his light and air and the passage of water from his roof and from a drain (mori) situate in the south corner of the terrace (sajja) of his house.

[789] The Subordinate Judge found that there had been vacant ground measuring six feet and five inches north to south and sixteen feet and four inches east to west to the south of the plaintiff's house ; that the mori (drain) in the eastern part of plaintiff's sajja was more than twenty years old ; that the plaintiff was entitled to discharge the waste water from his mori and rain water from the roof of his sajja over the vacant ground to the south of his house ; that there were two windows in the plaintiff's house and he was entitled to receive light and air through them ; that the defendants' house had obstructed and was likely to continue to obstruct the passage of light and air through the windows of the plaintiff's sajja ; that the plaintiff was entitled to the removal of the defendants' house from the above-mentioned area, and that the perpetual injunction prayed for should be granted to the plaintiff.

On appeal by the defendants the Judge confirmed the decree.

The defendants preferred a second appeal.

Sitanath G. Ajinkya, for the appellants (defendants).—We admit that some portion of the light and air enjoyed by the plaintiff is obstructed by our new building. The present case is governed by s. 15 of the Easements Act (V of 1882). The lower Courts have not found the enjoyment of light and air by the plaintiff as of right. It was wrong to direct us to demolish the whole of that portion of our new house which obstructed the free passage of light and air to the plaintiff's house. We are entitled to build on our land in such a way as will not interfere with plaintiff's rights. The plaintiff did not give us notice while the work of our new building was in progress. He allowed the whole work to be finished and then brought the present suit. Under these circumstances it was wrong to grant to the plaintiff a mandatory injunction. At the most, damages should have been awarded—Benode Coomaree Dossee v. Soudaminey Dossee (1); Dhunjibhoy v. Lisboa (2); Ghanasham Nilkanth v. Moroba Ramchandra (3).

Daji Abaji Khare, for the respondent (plaintiff).—There is a concurrent finding of the two Courts that we have established [790] our right to a free passage of light and air and to discharge our drain water over the ground in dispute. It is a finding based on evidence and cannot be interfered with. The question of damages and notice was not raised below, and no issue on the point was raised. The question is started for the first time in second appeal.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The decree in the present case cannot be sustained. The lower appellate Court has ordered the defendants to remove the whole of their new building from the ground over a space of six feet five inches in breadth and sixteen feet four inches in length, in order to allow the water from plaintiff's mori and roof to fall on that ground, having held that plaintiff had acquired an easement to have that water carried off over defendants' land. But the plaintiff has no right to demand that the land shall be kept open and unbuilt on. Defendants can build on their land, provided only that they make the necessary arrangements to receive the water from the plaintiff's mori and roof and carry it away. They can, for instance, allow the water from the roof to fall on their own roof, and the water from the mori to run into their own drain. For the purposes of these easements the lower Courts should not have ordered any demolition whatever, but only enjoined defendants to receive and carry off the water from the mori and roof.

Again, the Court has ordered the lowering of the whole of the new portion of defendants' house, so that no part of it shall ever be higher than the sills of the two windows to which it has found that the plaintiff has acquired an easement of light and air. But this is far too large an order. The Court could legally have ordered the lowering of so much only as prevents the access of sufficient light to the plaintiff's rooms through the windows in question. This is usually considered to be light at an angle of 45°. The Court below should have found what alteration, if any, in defendants' new building was necessary to ensure plaintiff's getting sufficient light. As it has not done so, we must leave it to be determined in execution.

We vary the decree by reversing so much of it as orders the demolition of any part of the defendants' building and by [791] substituting for the other reliefs granted a declaration that the plaintiff has the right to discharge on to the defendants' premises the water from his mori and from the roof of his sajja, and an injunction that the defendants do not obstruct him in the use and enjoyment of that right, and a further declaration that the plaintiff has a right to an easement of free and uninterrupted light over the defendants' land to the two windows in the south wall of his sajja, and an injunction that the defendants be restrained from erecting or continuing any building on their land in such manner as to materially hinder or obstruct the access of light to these windows.

An instrument which is not duly stamped will not be admitted, on second appeal, on payment of stamp and penalty when there is no evidence that the stamp and penalty were tendered and refused on the hearing of the first appeal.

Ramkrishna v. Vithu (1) referred to.

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of W.H. Crowe, District Judge of Poona, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb R. G. Bakhle, Joint Subordinate Judge.

The plaintiff sued for Rs. 1,300 due on account of two hundis with interest at the rate of Re. 1-8-3 per cent. per month, alleging [792] that defendant had agreed to pay interest at that rate in case the hundis were dishonoured by the drawee. At the trial he produced, in support of his allegation, a document (Ex. 16) which bore an adhesive stamp of one anna and which he stated to be a receipt passed to him by the defendant and containing an agreement on his part to pay interest at the above-mentioned rate.

The following is the translation of the document :—

Receipt of payment. Shak year 1811, cyclical year called Virodhi, month Chaitra, Shudh 11th. On that day receipt of payment is passed in writing to Lakshmandas Raghunathdas Gujerathi, inhabitant of Peth Budhvar, by Ramchandra Mansaram Naik, inhabitant of Peth Shukravar, as follows:—Yesterday we gave you in writing two hundis (to be presented) at Bombay, containing a period for payment for rupees two thousand. After deducting (from the said amount) Rs. 287-15-6 on account of interest during the period, you gave us to-day the balance of Rs. 1,712-0-6 in cash. We have received the same. Therefore there is now no dispute whatever with respect to the consideration of the two hundis which were given yesterday. The whole amount is received by us. The said hundis are given on the address of Balvantrav Vaman Godbole. We shall get them cashed within the stipulated time, and in default we shall pay you interest at the rate of Re. 1-8-3, according to which it was deducted to-day, without any objection after making accounts. * Second Appeal, No. 227 of 1894.

(1) P.J., (1873), p. 108 ; 10 B.H.C.R. 441.

The Subordinate Judge held that the above document was a bond and required to be stamped as such. He, therefore, called on the plaintiff to pay the proper stamp duty and penalty, and on the plaintiff's failure to do so, refused to admit the document in evidence, and calculated interest at 6 per cent. per annum, and gave the plaintiff a decree accordingly.

The plaintiff appealed, stating that he was ready to pay the stamp duty on the document in case the Court held that it required a stamp. The Judge held that the Subordinate Judge was right in refusing to admit the document in evidence, the plaintiff having declined to pay the stamp duty and penalty. He, therefore, confirmed the decree.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

[793] Nagindas T. Marphatia, for the appellant (plaintiff).—The dispute relates to the rate of interest. Though the hundis do not mention interest, the defendant, in the receipt (Ex. 16) agreed to pay us interest at a particular rate. It stipulates that interest at the rate of Re. 1-8-3 per month shall be paid in case the hundi was dishonoured. The Judge held the receipt to be a bond and, therefore, inadmissible in evidence for want of proper stamp. We submit that the receipt is not a bond, as it did not by itself create an obligation. It, therefore, does not fall under the definition of bond given in the Stamp Act (I of 1879), s. 3, cl. 4. We contend that s. 23 of the Stamp Act applies to the document, and, therefore, the one-anna stamp, which it bears, is quite sufficient—Narain Coomary v. Ramkrishna Das (1). At the most, the document might be considered to be an agreement, and as such would require a stamp of eight annas only—Gisborne v. Subal Bowri (2); Motilal v. Munshook Kuramchand (3). If our contention be untenable, then we are ready and willing to pay the requisite stamp and the penalty. We have tendered the amount in Court along with the memorandum of the second appeal Even before the Judge we had expressed our willingness to pay the stamp duty. The amount which is lying in Court should be accepted, and the document admitted in evidence.

Narayan G. Chandavarkar, for the respondent (defendant). —The view taken by the lower Courts is correct. The document is a bond and must be stamped as such—Reference from the Board of Revenue under s. 46 of the Stamp Act, 1879 (4) ; Reference under Stamp Act, s. 49 (5). The Subordinate Judge called on the plaintiff to pay the stamp and penalty, but he declined to do so. He merely stated in his memorandum of appeal to the District Judge that he was ready to pay the stamp in case the document was considered to be a bond. But an appellate Court has no authority to take stamp duty—Champabaty v. Bibi Jibun (6). This Court has also declined to take stamp duty in [794] second appeal—Ramkrishna Gopal v. Vithu Shivaji (7); see also Second Appeal No. 753 of 1893 decided on the 22nd July, 1895.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—We are of opinion that the instrument in question is a bond. It is not, we think, the less a bond because it does not come into operation unless and until the hundi has been dishonoured.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. DADA HANMANT DANI.* [5th September, 1895.]

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 503, 506.—Criminal intimidation.

A threat of getting a police constable dismissed from the police service is not such a threat of injury as is punishable under s. 506 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860).

THIS was an application for the exercise of the High Court's criminal revisional jurisdiction under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The accused was charged, under ss. 504 and 506 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860), (1) with having insulted the complainant, a second class head constable of police, and (2) with having intimidated him by holding out a threat of getting him dismissed from service.

The accused was tried summarily on these charges before L. M. Deshpande, First Class Magistrate of Poona, who acquitted him on the first charge, but convicted him on the second, and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 10, or in default to undergo two days' [795] simple imprisonment. The reasons given by the trying Magistrate for the conviction were as follows:—

"There are two counts against the accused,—one that he abused and insulted the complainant, the other that he intimidated him. The abuses are said to be foul abuses and the intimidation was a threat by the accused to get the complainant dismissed. I think the first count has not been proved, but the second count has been. The intimidation has been clearly borne out by the evidence of Baloba and Bala Dangi. There may have been hot words between the complainant and the accused as regards the making of the panchnama. Still the accused has no business to intimidate the complainant in the manner alleged. The defence is not reliable, as the witnesses are almost all the tenants of the accused. Regarding abuses, I think the evidence is discrepant and it is fair to acquit the accused. Regarding intimidation, I convict the accused."

Against this conviction and sentence the accused applied to the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction.

Narayan Vishnu Gokhale, for the accused, referred to Reg v. Moroba Bhaskarji(2) and Reg v. Alya Dhurma (3).

There was no appearance for the Crown.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. TATYA BIN APPAJI.* [4th September, 1895.]

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 26—Confession—Police custody—Jailor in a Native State.

The custody of the keeper of a jail in a Native State, who is not a police officer, does not become that of a police officer, merely because his subordinates, the warders of the jail, are members of the police force of that State. In the absence of any suggestion of a close custody inside the jail, such as may possibly occur when an accused person is watched and guarded by a police officer investigating an offence, s. 26 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872) does not exclude such a jailor from giving evidence of what the accused told him while in jail.

[796] THIS was a case submitted to the High Court by C. G. W. Macpherson, Sessions Judge of Belgaum, for confirmation of the sentence of death passed upon the accused Tatya bin Appaji.

The accused was convicted of murdering one Babaji Guzar at Benadi, in the district of Belgaum, on the 28th July, 1894. After the murder he absconded and was not found for some time. On the 24th February, 1895, he was arrested and confined in Kurandvad, which is a small Native State near Belgaum. While in jail at that place awaiting extradition he made two confessions to the jailor. At his trial in the Sessions Court at Belgaum the prosecution proposed to put in these confessions as evidence against the accused. For this purpose the jailor was called as a witness, and he gave the following evidence:—

"He (accused) twice made a statement to me in regard to this offence. He was on each occasion in my custody. I am a jailor and also jail jamadar. I am not a policeman. The warders are police constables. They keep watch, accompany the prisoners when they go to stables, answer calls of nature, and supervise them when they are at work. They also lock them up at night, I superintending the work. There are generally from eighteen to twenty prisoners in the jail, and there are eight of these constables. They are under me and not under the chief constable when they are serving in the jail. I get my pay from the Mulki Department. The constables officiating under me do not perform ordinary police duties. I feed the prisoners and assign to them their task work. The police constables assigned to me as warders may remain with me a month or fifteen days or any longer or shorter period. There is no fixed time."

20 B. 795.

Upon this evidence the Sessions Judge ruled that the confessions were not admissible. His reasons were as follows :—

"I am of opinion that the confession made to this witness, and which it is proposed to put in, is inadmissible under s. 26 of the Evidence Act. The witness, who is the Kurundvad Jailor, is not a police officer, but his eight warders are police constables, though while serving under him they are, it is said, relieved of police duties. They are not, however, relegated to jail work for any specific time, and a man may apparently be a warder one day and a police constable the next and vice versa. I think, therefore, that these warders must for the purposes of s. 26 be regarded as police constables. It follows that the accused was in custody, $\frac{8}{9}$ths of which was police custody, and I think that for the purposes of s. 26 of the Evidence Act he must be regarded as having been in police custody. The Queen v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose (1) is in point. If the arrangement in question were in British territory, I should hold this view, and I think it must be held a fortiori in the case of a small Native State."

On the other evidence, however, in the case the jury found him guilty of murder, and the Sessions Judge sentenced him to death.

[797] On the case coming on to the High Court for confirmation of the sentence of death.

P. M. Mehta (with Wasudeo Gopal Bhandarkar) appeared for the prisoner.

Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

Branson, with him Dhondu Pandurang Kirloskar, for the complainant.—The prisoner was not in police custody when he made the statement to the police, and the statement is, therefore, admissible in evidence. The Sessions Judge held that the jailor is not a police officer and yet excludes the statement. The warders, who are police constables, were not present at the time the statement was made, the prisoner being in the custody of the jailor himself. It is like a statement made to the superintendent of a jail in British India. A police officer means a police officer of British India.

P. M. Mehta in reply :—The custody was that of the police superintended by the jailor. Section 26 of the Evidence Act applies: see The Queen v. Hurriboie Chunder Ghose (1).

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—Upon the evidence before us, viz., that of the keeper of the foreign jail, we must hold that he is not a police officer, and assuming that the prisoner, when in that jail at Kurandvad, was in his custody as he says, we are of opinion that the custody of the jailor did not become the custody of a police officer, merely because his subordinates, the warders of the jail, were members of the police force of the Kurandvad State. There is no suggestion of a close custody of the prisoner inside the jail, such as may possibly occur when a prisoner is watched and guarded there by the police officer investigating the offence. We are, therefore, of opinion that, on the materials before him, the Sessions Judge was wrong in holding that s. 26 of the Indian Evidence Act I of 1872 excluded the jailor from giving evidence of what the prisoner told him. Unless there be other material or other objection to admissibility, such evidence should be taken, and inquiry made into all the circumstances concerning the making of the statements, who were present, and what the [798] contents were, and of course the date. The Sessions Judge should take the evidence of the jailor, and any other person present, and the prisoner should be allowed to question the witnesses, and to call any witness whose evidence can be procured without unreasonable delay or expense, and who can testify as to what occurred at the time. The evidence should be certified to this Court as soon as possible, and within three weeks.

The plaintiff who was in possession of certain land sued for a declaration that the defendant had no title to it and that it belonged to him. The plaint also contained a prayer for general relief. At the trial both plaintiff and defendant failed to prove any title to the land, but the plaintiff proved that he had been for ten years in possession and had built a shed on it.

Held, that no declaration of this plaintiff's title could be made; but,

Held, on the authority of Ismail Ariff v. Mahomed Ghouse (1), that the plaintiff was lawfully entitled to the land and to the shed thereon.

APPEAL from the decision of A. Steward, District Judge of Khandesh, in suit No. 1 of 1893.

Suit for declaration of title. The plaintiff sued the Secretary of State for India in Council for a declaration of his title to a piece of ground with a cattle-shed on it situate in the village of Juwardi, taluka Pachora, in the Khandesh District, which plaintiff alleged to be his ancestral property and also to have been given to him by his uncle Fulji. The plaint stated that the patel and the kulkarni of the village had submitted a report to Government stating that the said piece of ground [799] belonged to Government; that the plaintiff thereupon received a notice from the Assistant Collector calling on him to vacate the ground, and that he had appealed to the Collector and then to the Revenue Commissioner, but obtained no redress. The plaint concluded with the following prayers:—

"(a) That the said piece of ground be declared to belong to the plaintiff.

"(b) That he be awarded any other relief to which he might be entitled."

The defendant replied that the ground was not plaintiff's property but belonged to Government, and that assuming that plaintiff had possession of it for some time, such possession could confer no ownership on him.

The District Judge found that plaintiff had built a cattle-shed on the plot of ground at least ten years before suit, but that it was not proved that the site ever belonged to plaintiff's uncle Fulji or that he had any power to dispose of it in gift as alleged by the plaintiff. He then proceeded to say :—

"It is now to be seen what use was made of the site prior to the plaintiff erecting a cattle-shed ten or fifteeen years ago. There were apparently old walls on the site in dispute, and plaintiff asserts that before he built the cattle-shed, he erected sheds on the site each year and that he kept his fodder, grain and earth on the site. He had no hedge, but he put up thorns in places where the wall had fallen down. He might have tied up his cattle there occasionally, but it is not probable that he would have kept his fodder and grain in a place which was practically open and which he could not see from the house in which he lived with his family. I do not believe the statement about the sheds being built on the site each year, and mere tying up of cattle does not constitute ownership.

* * * * *

"Holding, then, that the alleged gift is not proved, and that it is not proved that the site in dispute is the ancestral property of Fulji or of * * or plaintiff Gangaram, and that the documentary evidence is altogether unreliable, the conclusion is inevitable that Gangaram valad Chimna seized this land about 1883 and built a cattle-shed on it, making use, in doing so, of the old broken down walls which he found there. He has proved no ownership in the site; it was a mere unlawful usurpation of it, which Ganpat Patel reported to the proper authorities in 1886."

On these grounds the District Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit and ordered him to remove the materials of the shed built on the site within three months of the date of the decree.

Against this decision plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

[800] Ganesh Krishna Deshmukh, for the appellant.—Plaintiff has been in possession for more than twelve years. Defendant requires him to vacate land. The onus is obviously on the defendant to prove his title. This he has not done. Plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to be retained in pcssession. Possession gives him a title against all except the rightful owner—In re Antaji Keshav Tambe (1); Ismail Ariff v. Mahomed Ghouse (2).

Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the respondent.—Plaintiff sues for a declaratory decree. He comes into Court to establish his title. He is, therefore, bound to prove it. In such cases the onus is always on plaintiff—Luis Manoel Pedro Antonio v. Jalbhai Ardesir Shett (3); Kisandas v. Kashiram (4); Krishna Churn v. Protab Chunder Surma (5); Field on Evidence, s. 102; s. 202 of the Land Revenue Code, (Bom. JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The plaint prayed that the Court would declare that the defendant had no title, and that the plaintiff had title to the property in dispute. The learned Judge found, on the evidence, that the plaintiff had not proved his title; and this finding has not been contested here.

We are of opinion that the Judge was right in refusing the declaration of title—Royes v. Mudhoo (1); Rassonada v. Sitharama (2); Sheik Torab Ally v. Sheik Mahomed Tukkee (3); Ismail Ariff v. Mahomed Ghouse (4).

The plaint, however, contained a prayer that the plaintiff might be awarded any other relief to which he might be entitled. If he had made reference to s. 42, illustration (g), of the Specific Relief Act, or if the Court had noticed that illustration which refers to suits brought for confirmation of possession, it [801] is probable that an issue would have been raised as to whether the plaintiff was entitled as against the defendant to be retained in possession. There is no evidence, on the record, of the defendant's title; and it is found by the Judge that the plaintiff has held possession for at least ten years and has built a shed on the land. These facts appear to us to bring the case within the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ismail Ariff v. Mahomed Ghouse (4).

We, therefore, modify the decree of the District Judge and further declare that the plaintiff is lawfully entitled to possession of the land in suit and the shed thereon; the defendant to bear the costs in both Courts.

Decree amended.

Reversioner—Widow—Suit by reversioner for possession—Death of the widow—Accrual of right to sue—Unsuccessful application in execution proceedings against widow—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 141—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 283.

Under art. 141, sch. II, of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) a reversioner's right to sue accrues on the death of the widow. The fact that the reversioner has made an unsuccessful application for possession in execution proceedings against the widow, and has not sued under s. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), does not debar him from filing a regular suit.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Arthur H. Unwin, District Judge of Nasik, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb L. K. Nulkar, Subordinate Judge of Sinnar.

The plaintiffs, as the daughters and sole heirs of one Malji valad Anaji, sued in the year 1891 to recover possession of certain lands and mesne profits. They alleged that their father died about thirteen years before the institution of the suit; that [802] after his death his widow Rakhmi got into possession; that she died on the 6th September, 1888, and that after her death the defendants took wrongful possession.

The defendants pleaded that the lands were sold to them by Rakhmi in the year 1880 under a registered deed to satisfy her husband's debts.

and that they were, therefore, the owners of the property. They further stated that they had obtained a decree against Rakhmi, and recovered possession through the Court in 1883, and submitted that the claim was time-barred.

The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff's claim was time-barred under art. 91, sch. II, of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), because the plaintiffs had by an application to the Court resisted the delivery of the lands to the defendants, and the suit was not brought within three years from the date of their dispossession in 1883.

On appeal by the plaintiffs, the Judge confirmed the decree on the ground that the plaintiffs ought to have brought a suit under s. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) to set aside the defendants' sale-deed within one year (art. 11, sch. II of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877) from the time their application was rejected.

The plaintiffs preferred a second appeal.

Gangaram B. Rele, for the appellants (plaintiffs).—Both the lower Courts have taken a wrong view of our claim. While Rakhmi was alive it was not necessary for us to bring a suit for possession. Our cause of action arose on her death. There was no order passed by the Court on our application. Our object was to prevent delivery of possession to the defendants. It was not necessary for us even to present an application, because Rakhmi was then alive and we could do nothing with respect to the property during her life-time. Article 141, sch. II, of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) is applicable,

Daji A. Khare, for the respondents (defendants).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—Plaintiffs' right to sue accrued on the death of the widow under art. 141 of sch. II to the Limitation Act. During her life-time they had no right to make any application for possession, and such an application when made must [803] of necessity have failed, as it did. Their having then made it unsuccessfully, and not having sued under s. 283, Civil Procedure Code, does not now debar them from filing the present suit. The District Judge must find on the validity and binding nature on the plaintiffs of the widow's disposition of the property. We reverse the decree and remand the appeal for re-trial on the merits. Costs to abide the result.

Decree reversed and case sent back.

A forest officer is not a revenue officer within the definition in s. 3 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879), and does not become one merely by being placed under a revenue officer for purposes of control.

Section 11 of Act X of 1876 only applies to an act or omission of a revenue officer, and only in cases where the law allows an appeal.

Act X of 1876 must be construed strictly. No right of appeal can be given except by express words.

APPEAL from the decision of T. Walker, District Judge of Thana in suit No. 3 of 1893.

The plaintiff purchased at an auction sale the right of gathering myrabolams in the forests of all the talukas of the Kolaba District and paid to the divisional forest officer one-fourth of the purchase-money and an additional amount as deposit. He then applied to the divisional forest officer several times for [804] permission to gather the fruit. No permission was, however, granted to him except as to three talukas, until the season for collecting the fruit had expired. On this the plaintiff wrote to that officer informing him that the contract had become null and void and asking a refund of the amount paid by him to Government. No reply was sent to this letter. Plaintiff thereupon filed this suit to recover the one-fourth of the purchase-money, the amount of deposit, damages, and interest.

The District Judge recorded the following judgment :—

"Plaintiff's pleader urges (1) that the forest officer, whose act or negligence has caused this suit, is not a revenue officer, and (2) that no appeal against his order lay to anybody ; consequently plaintiff was entitled at once to seek his legal remedy.

"It is well known that Government treat forest administration as a branch of land revenue administration : see, e.g., the long notification published at p. 909 of the Government Gazette, dated 8th September, 1892. As pointed out in that resolution, forest administration is subject to the control of the Commissioner of the Division, and the forest officers are made assistants to the Collector for forest purposes in each district. Under Chap. XIII of the Land Revenue Code an appeal, therefore, lay to one or other of these officers or to the Conservator of Forests, or to all three possibly. As plaintiff fails to show that he has appealed to any of them,

* Appeal, No. 165 of 1894.

† Section 203 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) provides as follows :—"In the absence of any express provision of this Act, or of any law for the time being in force to the contrary, an appeal shall lie from any decision or order passed by a revenue officer under this Act, or any other law for the time being in force, to that officer's immediate superior, whether such decision or order may itself have been passed on appeal from a subordinate officer's decision or order or not."

I think he must be non-suited under s. 11 of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876)."

He accordingly rejected the claim with costs.

Plaintiff thereupon appealed to the High Court.

Narayan Ganesh Chandavarkar, for the appellant.—The District Judge was wrong in holding that s. 11 of the Act X of 1876 operated as a bar to the present suit. The application of that section to any given case turns on the right meaning of the term "revenue officer." A "forest officer" is not a "revenue officer." A great deal also depends on the question whether there is any right of appeal in this case. A forest officer has no right to hear an appeal. In the present case there is no right of appeal given to the party injured by a decision of the forest officer. The right of appeal must be expressly given and cannot be inferred—Attorney-General v. Sillem (1). Section 16 of Act VII of 1878 provides for appeals only in certain cases. The only other law on the subject is the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879). Section 203 of that Code applies to orders passed (1) by revenue officers, (2) under the Land Revenue Code or (3) other law. The revenue officer referred [805] to in that Code must be one appointed under the Code alone, and so an order passed by a forest officer does not fall under s. 203. The Forest Act, which is an Act of the Imperial Legislature, cannot be modified by an Act of the Bombay Legislature.

The lower Court has not been able to indicate the proper authority to which appeals can lie.

Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the respondent.—This suit is in respect of hardas in a Government forest. Fruit of trees are "land" within the meaning of cl. 1 of s. 3 of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act, X of 1876. Money payable to Government in respect of that fruit is "land revenue" within the meaning of cl. 2 of that section.

Forest administration is a branch of land-revenue administration; it is so treated by Government; see, for instance, Bombay Government Gazette of 8th September, 1892, p. 909, containing rules under the Forest Act, VII of 1878, which under s. 77 of that Act have the force of law. Forest officers are Assistant Collectors and subject to the control of the Revenue Commissioner. They are, therefore, revenue officers under the Land Revenue Code also, and their proceedings are subject to appeal under s. 203, Land Revenue Code. This section stands in the place of s. 9 of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act, which is replaced by it. The present suit being in respect of moneys claimable for the fruit of Government trees vested in the contractor by the terms of the sale, and forest officers being employed in or about the business of the moneys so claimable, plaintiff ought to have first appealed from the decision of the forest officer, which is the basis of the present suit, and s. 11 of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act is a bar.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The District Judge held this suit barred by s. 11 of Act X of 1876. His reasons were that a resolution of the Governor of Bombay in Council, published in the Government Gazette, p. 909, and dated the 8th September, 1892, treats the administration of the forests as a branch of land-revenue administration, and places the former administration and its officers under the control of the revenue officers. Therefore he

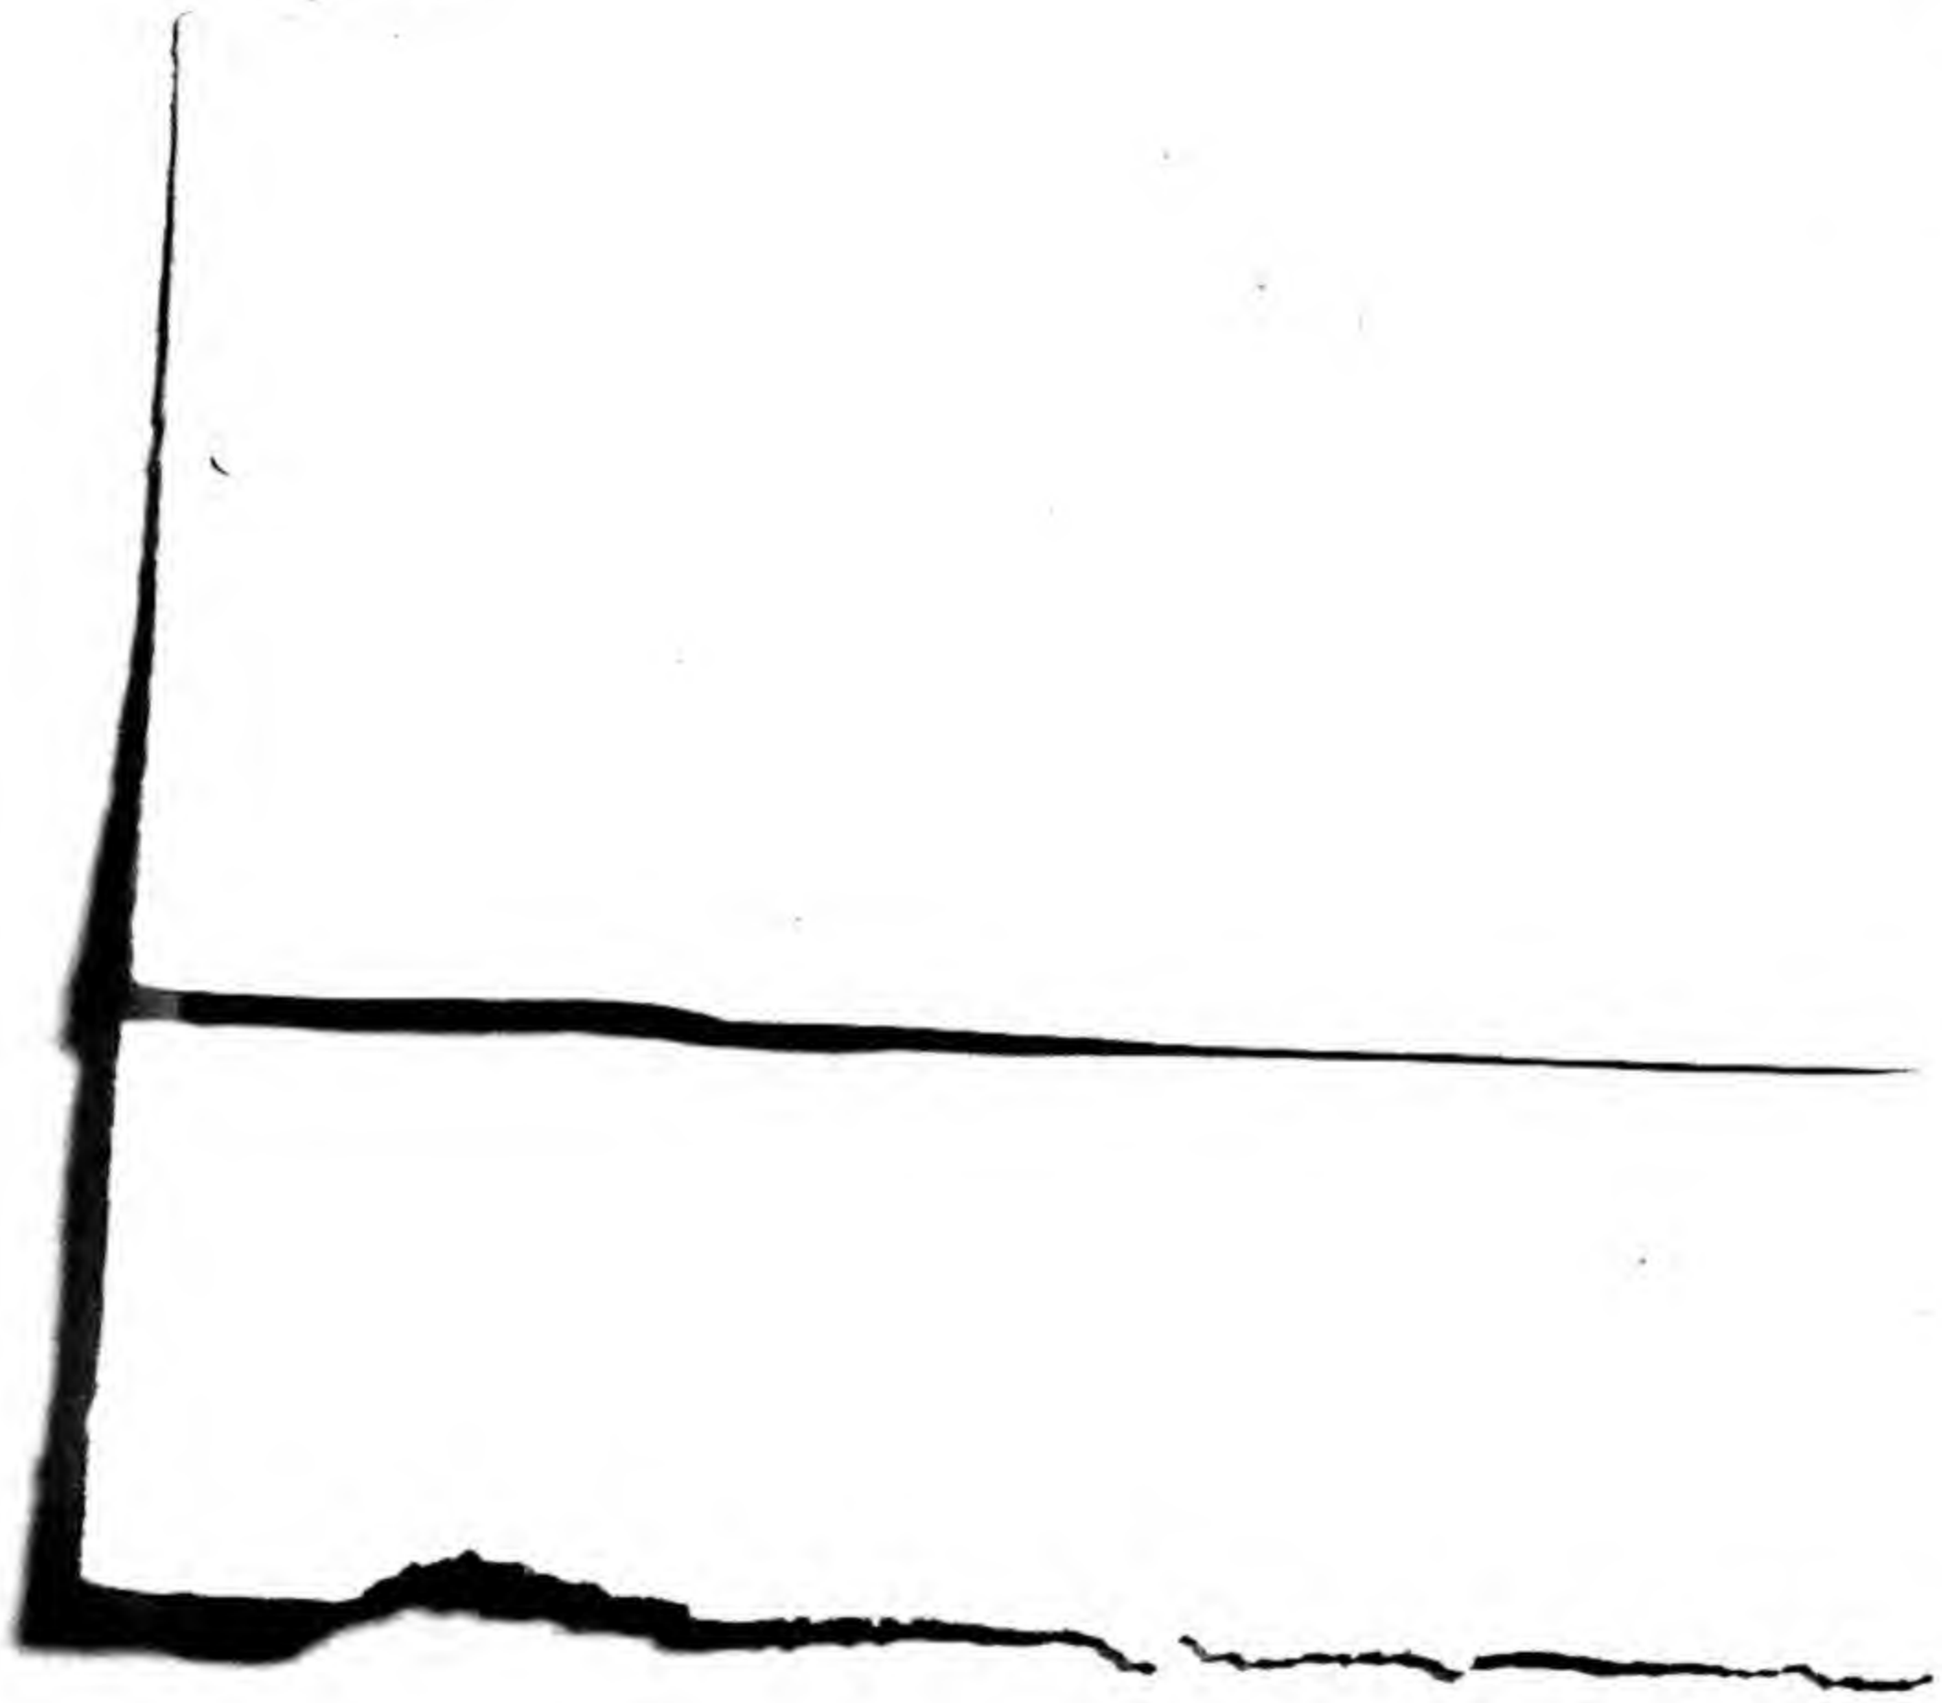
(1) 10 H.L. Cases, 704 (710).

[806] held as follows:—"Under Ch. 13 of the Land Revenue Code an appeal, therefore, lay to one or other of these officers (the Commissioner or the Collector) or to the Conservator of Forests, or to all three possibly." The language used by the District Judge shows that it was not made clear to him where the appeal lay, as he cannot say to which of the three officers it lies.

It is settled by a series of decisions that Act X of 1876 must be construed strictly. We must, therefore, see whether the suit is barred by that Act or any other Statute.

Section 11 only applies to an act or omission of a revenue officer, and to these only where the law allows appeal. "Revenue officer" is defined in s. 3 as connoting a connection with "land revenue," which connotes the word "land," and "land" includes trees and fruit. We do not think this mere inclusion can be stretched so as to make a servant of Government in some different department altogether an officer of land revenue merely because, e.g., he sells for Government the produce of trees in a compound belonging to Government. The Forest Act VII of 1878 treats forest officers as a class defined off from other officers. In s. 16 it makes a clear distinction between them and officers of the Revenue Department; and if the price of forest produce were in itself "land revenue" there would be no occasion in s. 81 to say that it may be recovered "as if it were an arrear of land revenue." See Narayan v. Sakharam(1). By parity of reasoning, we hold that a forest officer is not a revenue officer within the definition in s. 3 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879). The Government Pleader went on to argue that he was made such by being placed under a revenue officer for purposes of control. This involves the absurdity of holding that, if he had been put under the control of a judicial or military officer, he would become a judicial or military servant.

Turning to the second circumstance essential to create the bar under s. 11 of Act X of 1876, we have to see if there was any appeal which the plaintiff had of right. No right of appeal can be given except by express words—The Attorney General v. [807] Sillem (2). Such appeals as the superior Legislature intended to give are so given in the Forest Act of 1878: and it is admitted that those provisions do not give any appeal to the plaintiff in regard to the matter now in suit. Even if we had held that the forrest officer is a revenue officer under the Bombay Land Revenue Code, we would have serious doubts whether the general words used in s. 203 thereof by the inferior Legislature were intended in any way to affect the complete legislation about forest officers of the superior Legislature. The Land Revenue Code is evidently intended to deal only with what is usually known as land revenue, and things that by law or custom have been dealt with by officers of that department. It has not been suggested that the acts or omissions of the forest officer, about which this suit is brought, were done in any matter to which that code relates.



The District Judge, therefore, was in error in declining jurisdiction.

The Court sets aside his decree, and remands the suit to the District Court for disposal: the respondent to pay the costs of this appeal.

Case remanded.

After the expiration of the year the plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant to recover the balance due to him under the agreement, and obtained a decree.

Held, reversing the decree, that the agreement not being permitted by the rules framed under the Opium Act (I of 1878) was forbidden by s. 4 of the Act, and was void as having in view an object forbidden by law.

Held, further that the plaintiff could not recover the price of the opium supplied to the defendant, inasmuch as advances made for an illegal purpose subsequently carried out cannot be recovered. RAGHUNATH v. NATHU HIRJI, 19 B. 626 ... 418

Act VI of 1878 (The Indian Treasure Trove).

Right of a Talukdar in Gujarat to treasure trove—Rights of Government.—A bag containing Rs. 248-2 0 and a gold ring was found buried in a field under circumstances which created suspicion of the commission of an offence. The District Magistrate called for claimants to come forward under s. 523 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). Thereupon the plaintiff put in his claim, alleging that, as Talukdar and owner of the soil in which the property was found, he was entitled to the property. His claim was rejected, and an order was passed under s. 524 of the Code placing the property at the disposal of Government. The Talukdar then sued the Secretary of State for India in Council to recover the property in dispute. The Joint Judge awarded the claim.

Held, reversing the decree of the lower Court, that, in the absence of any evidence to prove the Talukdar's right to treasure trove either by a grant or prescription, the property belonged to Government, the Indian Treasure Trove Act (VI of 1878) being inapplicable, as no notice was given by the finder, nor were any proceedings taken under it. (2) S. 2—Suit by agriculturist—Agriculturist also owner of the inam villages and a pensioner—Income from villages owing to mortgage together with pension less than income from other sources—Definition of agriculturist—Agriculturist.—Where an owner of inam villages, the revenue from which, together with his income from other sources not agricultural, was greatly in excess of the income he derived from agriculture, mortgaged the inam villages, and thereby reduced the income actually received by him from non-agricultural sources to less than the income he derived from agriculture.

Held, that although his income from the inam villages and from other sources not agricultural might together be sufficient for his maintenance, nevertheless the construction of the definition of agriculturist given in the Act which is quite independent of any such question, could not be affected thereby, and that he must be deemed to "earn the means of livelihood" principally from agriculture, and to be an agriculturist within the meaning of Act XVII of 1879. (3) S. 4—Practice—Procedure—Jurisdiction—Jurisdiction of Second Class Subordinate Judge.—The plaintiff sued to establish his title to, and recover a moiety of a cash allowance payable to him from the Mamlatdar's treasury at Satara. The claim was valued at Rs. 455-4. The plaint was filed in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Satara, who transferred the case for trial to the Joint Subordinate Judge of the Second Class. The latter Judge dismissed the suit on the merits, holding that the plaintiff had no right to the moiety of the allowance which he sought to recover. This decision was reversed, on appeal, by the Assistant Judge, on the ground that the Joint Subordinate Judge of the Second Class had no jurisdiction to hear the suit under s. 4 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879).

Held, that the requirements of s. 4 of Act XVII of 1879 were sufficiently complied with by the suit having been filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the First Class. He was competent under s. 23 of Act XIV of 1869 to transfer the suit to the Joint Subordinate Judge of the Second Class who was deputed to assist him. MANAJI v. NARAYANRAO, 19 B. 46 ... 31

(4) S. 13, cls. (b), (d) and s. 15—Mortgage—Redemption suit—Account—Principal debt how ascertained—Arbitration.—In a redemption suit under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), the Court should, in taking an account, form its own opinion on the subject. As the law stands, a mere guess as to the sum of money actually advanced cannot be made in favour either of one side or the other. If there are no materials from which the Court can satisfy itself as to the amount which should be allowed on account of principal, whether under cl. (b) or cl. (d) of s. 13 of the Act, it is open to it to have recourse to arbitration under the provisions of s. 15. DHONDI v. LAKSHMAN, 19 B. 553 ... 369

second appeal, the mortgagor after the expiration of the time for redemption specified in the decree applied to the High Court for an order for the payment of the amount by instalments under s. 15 B of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879).

Held, that such an order could only be made in the course of the proceedings under the decree, that is, by the Court which carries out the decree. BHAGIRATHIBAI v. HARI RAVJI CHIPLUNKAR, 19 B. 318 ... 215

(6) S. 15-D—Suit for account—Such suit no bar to subsequent suit for redemption—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s 43.—Under s. 15 D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) as amended by Act XXII of 1882, an agriculturist mortgagor can sue for an account upon a mortgage, without at the same time asking for redemption. Such a suit will not bar a subsequent suit for redemption. The section was expressly intended to remove the bar created by s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). LALUCHAND v. (9) Ss. 49 (a) and 74—Conciliation agreement—Conciliation agreement forwarded to be filed in Court—Death of plaintiff—Substitution by the conciliator of the name of the deceased's heir on the return of the agreement by the Subordinate Judge—Practice.—A plaintiff applied to a conciliator appointed under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Bombay Act XVII of 1879) for an amicable settlement of a dispute between himself and the defendant, and came to an agreement disposing of the matter which was duly forwarded to the Subordinate Judge to be filed in Court. On receipt of the agreement, the Subordinate Judge issued notices to the parties to show cause why the agreement should not be filed, and was, on the day of hearing, informed that the agreement could not be filed owing to plaintiff's death. The agreement was then returned to the conciliator who entered therein the name of the deceased plaintiff's heir and forwarded it to the Subordinate Judge. A question having thereupon arisen as to whether the conciliator could enter on the record the name of the heir of the deceased plaintiff.

Held, that although there is no provision in the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Bombay Act XVII of 1879) empowering a conciliator to enter the name of the heir of a party, and Government have not apparently under s. 49 (a) of the Act made any rules regulating the procedure before conciliators in this respect, yet when a Subordinate Judge is seized of a conciliation agreement, there is a proceeding before him under the Act. He should, therefore, under s. 74 of the Act follow the provisions of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) in regard to placing on the record the heirs of the deceased parties. NARAYANDAS SAKHARAM v. KONDI, 19 B. 202 ... 136

(10) S. 53—Revisionary power of the Special Judge—Cases in which failure of justice appears to have taken place—Jurisdiction—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 622.—S. 622 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) gives to the High Court jurisdiction to interfere only where the lower Court acts without jurisdiction or has exercised its jurisdiction "illegally or with material irregularity."

Under s. 53 of the Dakkhan Agriculturists Relief Act (XVII of 1879) the Special Judge has a revisionary power in all cases where a failure of justice appears to have taken place. It is for him to decide whether the finding on a question of fact by a Subordinate Judge is of that nature, and in doing so he is entirely within his jurisdiction. GURUBASAYA v. (12) Ss. 73, 74—Review of first Court's order—Finding that a party to a suit is an agriculturist—District Judge—Assistant Judge.—An assistant Judge having found that the defendants in a suit pending before him were not agriculturists, the defendants presented a petition of review of that finding, and in review the Assistant Judge came to a contrary conclusion.

Held, that as s. 74 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) only makes the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) applicable to suits before the Subordinate Judge, the conduct of proceedings before a District or Assistant Judge when sitting in revision under s. 53 of Act XVII of 1879 is within his own discretion, and the granting of a review on the ground of mistake as to the nature of a defendant's income is a reasonable exercise of such discretion. BADARICHARYA v. RAMCHANDRA GOPAL SAVANT, 19 B. 113... 76

(13) S. 74—Special Judge—Review—Power of Special Judge to review his own decree—Application of Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882) to proceedings of Special Judge—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 622.—The Special Judge appointed under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) (the defendants not appearing) reversed, in revision under s. 53 of the Act, the decree of a Subordinate Judge and passed a decree for the plaintiff. One of the defendants, who, it appeared had not been served with notice of the previous application for review, subsequently applied to the Special Judge to review his decree, and that application was granted on the ground that the applicant had not had notice of the former review. On this subsequent review the special Judge discovered that he had made a mistake with reference to the date of certain documents, and that this mistake had led him to a wrong conclusion upon the merits of the case. He consequently reversed his former order and dismissed the suit, confirming the original decree of the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiff then applied to the High Court, under its extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civ. Pro. Code) Act XIV of 1882).

Held, that in granting a rehearing the Special Judge had exercised a reasonable discretion with which the High Court could not interfere in its extraordinary jurisdiction.

The Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) is not applicable to proceedings before the Special Judge, and the conduct of such proceedings rests within his discretion.

PARSONS, J.—The Special Judge cannot under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) review his decree and order a new trial on the ground of discovery of fresh evidence, but he has discretional power to review his decree in order to correct a mistake into which he has fallen. Under Bombay Act VIII of 1867, the police patel has to do much more than merely inform the district police. He has himself to investigate the matter of a crime and obtain all procurable evidence. Under s. 11 of the Act, if an unnatural or sudden death occur, or any corpse be found, he must forthwith hold an inquest and investigate with the panch the causes of death and all the circumstances of the case, and make a written report of the same. If it appears that the death was unlawfully caused, he must immediately give notice to the police station, and if the state of the corpse permits, he shall at once forward it to the Civil Surgeon or other appointed medical officer. These provisions of the law are likely to be defeated if the police patel refrains from the proper action until the district police officers arrive on the spot. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. (2) S. 13—Hereditary service vatan Kazi—Kazi's office—Rozina allowance—Its liability to attachment and sale in execution of a decree—Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4.—The office of kazi is not a hereditary service vatan under Bombay Act III of 1874.

Plaintiff obtained a money decree against Hafasji and in execution sought to attach and sell a decree obtained by Hafasji against Mohiyodin which entitled Hafasji to receive annually a certain portion of the rozina allowance paid by Government to Mohiyodin as kazi. Hafasji contended that the rozina allowance was paid to Mohiyodin and his family for service as kazi, and that, therefore, it was not liable to the process of a Civil Court under s. 13 of Bombay Act III of 1874. This contention was upheld by both the lower Courts.

Held, that as the kazi's office was not a hereditary service vatan, plaintiff's right to attach the decree obtained by Hafasji against Mohiyodin was not barred by s. 13 of Bombay Act III of 1874.

Held, also, that as Hafasji was not liable to serve as kazi, it was not open to him to urge that the allowance in question was appropriated as service remuneration, and was not, therefore, transferable.

Held, also, that as the decree sought to be attached was passed before the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871) came into force, plaintiff's darkhast was not barred for want of a certificate under s. 4 of the Act. DHARAMDAS SAMBHUDAS v. HAFASJI, 19 B. 250 ... 170

Act III of 1875 (Bombay Tolls on Roads and Bridges).

S. 7—Tolls—Lease to levy tolls—Lessee, right of, to admit partners—Accounts, two sets of—False accounts kept to deceive Government.—A lessee from Government of the right to levy tolls admitted into partnership with him the plaintiff and two others. One of the conditions attached to the lease prohibited sub-letting.

The plaintiff having brought a suit for his share of the profits realized in the transaction, the Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the partnership was illegal, being of opinion that sub-letting and admitting a partner were identical.

Held, reversing the decree, that the partnership was not illegal.

Where in such a partnership two sets of accounts were kept, one true and the other false,

Held that such practice, however reprehensible, was not illegal under s. 7 of the Tolls Act (Bombay Act III of 1875), and did not disentitle the plaintiff to show as between himself and his partners what was the actual profit of the concern. GANESH VITHAL v. SHRIPAD DATTOBA, 20 B. 668 ... 1014

(1) Delivery of possession in execution of a decree of a Civil Court—Subsequent lease to the judgment-debtor—Refusal of the Mamlatdar to restore possession after the expiration of the lease.—Vinayak obtained possession of land from Balu in execution of a decree of a Civil Court. After obtaining possession, Vinayak leased the land to Balu. On Balu's refusal to vacate the land on the expiration of the lease, Vinayak brought a possessory suit in the Mamlatdar's Court. The Mamlatdar rejected the plaint, holding that he ought not to order restoration of possession of the land again and again.

Held, that a fresh cause of action accrued to Vinayak on the refusal of Balu to give possession on the expiry of the lease, and that the Mamlatdar was wrong in declining to accept the plaint. VINAYAK v. BALU, 20 B. 491 ... 891

There was no evidence to show the term of Atmaram's tenancy. After his death the plaintiff Vishnu, who was his brother, became tenant of the land and paid rent to the khots. Some years subsequently Hirshet (the mortgagee) sued to enforce his mortgage and made the plaintiff Vishnu and his two sisters parties. He obtained a decree and sold the mortgaged land in execution. Sonshet bought it and now claimed possession. Vishnu contended that Atmaram's interest terminated at his death, and that Sonshet was, therefore, not entitled to possession.

Act I of 1880 (The Bombay Khoti Settlement)—(Concluded). PAGE

Held, that Sonsbet was entitled to possession. The fact that Atmaram had paid rent to the khots showed that he was their tenant. In the absence of all evidence on the subject, the presumption was that tenancy was an ordinary tenancy from year to year continuable until legally terminated. There was nothing to show that the khots had ever terminated it. Atmaram's heir could not surrender it to the prejudice of the mortgagee. Sonshet, therefore, had purchased a tenancy which had never been legally put an end to, and was entitled to possession.

Under the Khoti Settlement Act (Bom. Act I of 1880) occupancy tenancies are not transferable except under certain circumstances, but there is no prohibition to the transfer of an ordinary tenancy. SONSHET ANTUSHET TELI v. VISHNU BABAJI JOHARI, 20 B. 78. 611

Act VI of 1888) came into force. On the 22nd August 1889 (i.e., subsequent to the Act coming into force), a decree was passed for sale of the mortgaged property. The decree was transferred for execution to the Collector, who refused to put up the property to sale without the previous sanction of Government as required by s. 31 of the Talukdari Act.

Held, that s. 31 of the Act had no application to the present case. The san mortgage having been executed before the Act came into force, and left with its validity untouched by cl. 1 of s. 31, the ordinary remedy of the mortgagee to bring the property to sale was not taken away by that section. The sanction of the Governor in Council was, therefore, not necessary to the sale in execution of the decree on the mortgage. NAGAR PRAGJI v. JIVABHAI, 19 B. 80 ... 54

The substantial question of law referred to in s. 596 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) need not directly arise out of the concurrent findings of fact, but it is enough if it is involved in those findings, and can, if the appeal is allowed, be raised in the course of the argument. In re VISHWAMBHAR PANDIT, 20 B. 699 ... 1035

(1) *Agreement to refer future differences to arbitration—Naming of arbitrators—Civ. Pro. But the agreement must name the arbitrator or arbitrators, and an agreement which provides for the future appointment or election of arbitrators does not fall within the section.

The effect of the last clause of s. 523 is to give the parties to such an agreement power to nominate the arbitrator, even when they have agreed that he shall be appointed by the Court. (1) Caste—Contributions to the caste fund—Arrangement between members of the caste for the purpose of paying off the debts of the caste—Hindus—Mahomedans—Regulation II of 1827, s. 21.—The term "caste" in s. 21 of Regulation II of 1827 is not necessarily confined to Hindus, but comprises any well-defined native community governed for certain internal purposes by its own rules and regulations.

An agreement embodying an arrangement come to between members of the caste for the purpose of paying off the debts of the caste, out of certain contributions to the caste funds, involves a caste question. ABDUL KADIR v. DHARMA, 20 B. 190 ... 685

(2) Mochi caste at Surat—Auditch Brahmans of Ahmedabad—Hereditary priests—Delegates of Auditch panch at Ahmedabad—Dismissal of delegates by the caste—Suit for injunction and damages—Decision of caste—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts—Jurisdiction.—The hereditary priests of the Mochi caste deputed certain persons to perform religious ceremonies for the caste. The caste, however, dismissed these delegates, and the defendants, who were members of the caste, employed other persons to perform certain religious ceremonies for them. The plaintiffs sued for an injunction and damages, alleging that they were entitled to perform these ceremonies and to receive the fees.

Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction. The Civil Court could not enquire into the validity or otherwise of the decision of the caste in the matter. The parties were bound by it, and the plaintiffs could not legally complain of the action of the defendant, who had done no more than obey that decision. DAYARAM HARGOVAN v. The Island of Salsette was conquered from the Marathas by the British in 1774 and the law of succession for the Christian inhabitants of the island remained unaltered until the passing of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865). Until that Act was passed, the law of primogeniture was not in force among the Christian inhabitants of Salsette. In the absence of a widow and daughter, the sons took the property of their father in equal shares.

Quære whether they did so under the Hindu law or the Portuguese law or by force of usage existing among them.

A mortgage of certain property was made in 1875 by the eldest of three brothers (Pedro, Minguel and Enos), who were Christian inhabitants of the Island of Salsette. They had inherited the property from their father, who died in 1840. The family had originally been a Hindu family, but had been converted to Christianity. Enos died in 1876, and Minguel died in 1883, bequeathing his interest in the property to his nephew the plaintiff, who was Pedro's son. In that year (1883) the mortgagee sued Pedro alone upon the mortgage and obtained a decree which he afterwards assigned to the defendant who sold the mortgaged property in execution of the decree, and at the sale purchased the property himself. The plaintiff (son of Pedro the mortgagor) now sued to redeem the property, and the question arose (1) whether under the law applicable to the Christian inhabitants of Salsette the eldest brother Pedro had succeeded on the father's death to the whole of the family property, and (2) if not, then to what extent the mortgage in question bound the property of the family.

Held, (1) that the law of primogeniture prior to the passing of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) did not exist among the Christian inhabitants of Salsette and that Pedro, although eldest son, had not succeeded to the whole of the family property. He and his brothers took equal shares in the property of their father.

(2) That the mortgage by Pedro had been authorised by the family and was for family purposes and was binding upon the family property. Although Pedro and his brothers could not be regarded as co-parceners under Hindu law, yet having regard to the fact that they were descendants of converts from Hinduism, among whom Hindu usages largely prevailed, the question should be treated in much the same way as if the family was still a Hindu family, and the Court would not require the same direct proof of the manager's authority to mortgage as it would in the case of an English manager under similar circumstances.

(3) That the plaintiff was not entitled to redeem. What was intended to be sold at the sale held in execution of the decree upon the mortgage was the whole interest in the mortgaged property. The defendant purchased that interest subject to the right of the plaintiff to show that his share derived from Minguel was not bound by the mortgage, and he had failed to do so. Minguel's share as well as Pedro's had passed by the sale.

(4) A member of the Christian community of the Island of Salsette is entitled to deal with his share in ancestral property by will. JALBHAI ARDESHIR SHET v. LOUIS MANOEL, 19 B. 680 ... 455

The section, moreover, contemplates a remand back to the Court which first disposed of the suit, and to no other Court.

An amendment of a plaint, which materially transforms the nature of the claim, cannot be made under s. 53 of the Code, and certainly not in appeal. S. 53 permits amendment of the plaint before judgment, and not after. The larger powers conferred on appellate Courts by s. 582 do not authorize such a material transformation of a suit in appeal. (22) *Ss. 235, cl. The plaintiffs applied for execution of the decree and filed a darkhast praying that the defendants be ordered to act as directed by the decree, and that, if they failed to do so, steps be taken according to law.

Held, that the darkhast was not in accordance with s. 235, cl. (j), or s. 260 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), as it did not specify the mode in which the assistance of the Court was sought. SHA KARAMCHAND v. GHELABHAI CHAKALDAS, 19 B. 34 ... 23

(23) S. 244 (c)—Claim to attached property—Order in execution proceedings—Separate suit—Execution of decree—In execution of a decree passed against the plaintiff, certain property in his possession was attached. Thereupon he laid claim to the property, on the ground that it was his service vatan. This claim was rejected. The plaintiff then filed a regular suit for a declaration that the property was not liable to attachment and sale.

Held, that the suit was barred under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). The Court which originally rejected the plaintiff's claim in the execution proceedings had jurisdiction to investigate the claim under clause (c) of s. 244 of the Code. TRIMBAK RAMRAO v. Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882)—(Continued). PAGE

The plaintiffs' attachment was, therefore, effected under s. 272 of the Civ Pro. Code XIV of 1882 by a notice addressed by the Prothonotary of the High Court to the Registrar of the Small Causes Court. The claimant was mortgagee in possession and the defendants were his tenants. On the 28th February he had lodged a claim in the Small Causes Court to the said property as mortgagee in possession, and on the 25th March 1895, a consent order was passed by the Chief Judge of that Court directing that Rajbai's attachment should stand subject to the claimant's claim.

On the 22nd April, 1895, the claimant applied to the Chief Judge of the Small Causes Court to issue a notice to the plaintiffs in this suit, under s. 272 of the Civ. Pro. Code, to determine the question of priority of claim to the attached property between him and the plaintiffs. His application was refused, the Chief Judge being of opinion that he could not interfere in a High Court suit. The claimant then filed his claim in the High Court, and took out this summons to remove the plaintiffs' attachment.

Held, that under s. 272 of the Civ. Pro. Code the Small Causes Court was the only Court to decide the question of priority between the claimant and the plaintiffs. JEYNARAYAN MEGHRAJ v. ISMAIL KURIMALI, 19 B. 710 ... 475

Before the sale took place, however, one Kalyandas applied to the First Class Subordinate Judge for execution of a decree which he had obtained against Maneklal in that Judge's Court, and the same debt was then attached. The proceedings, however, under the Small Cause Court decree were continued, and the debt was sold in execution and was purchased by the applicant.

Held, following P. J. 1893, p. 194=18 B. 458 that the sale by the Small Cause Court was not rendered invalid by the subsequent proceedings in the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court.

The term "grade" in s. 285 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) has the same meaning as it had in s. 5 of the Code (Act VIII of 1859)—that is, it depends upon "the pecuniary or other limitations" of the jurisdiction of the particular Court, and, therefore, as s. 285 is applicable to Small Cause Courts, the Small Cause Court is inferior in grade to the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge. (37) Ss. 312 and 320—Transfer of execution of a decree to Collector—Court sale—Collector's order setting aside the sale—Suit by auction-purchaser to set aside the Collector's order and to have his purchase confirmed.—Certain property was sold in execution of a decree by the Collector, to whom the execution had been transferred under s. 320 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). The Collector set aside the sale before the date of confirmation, on the sole ground that the judgment-debtor had, subsequent to the sale, made full payment of the sum decreed. Thereupon the auction-purchaser filed a suit for a declaration that the sale had been improperly set aside, and for a confirmation of the sale.

Held, that the suit would lie. Reading s 312 with s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the suit was not barred under the last clause of s. 312, nor under s. 588, cl. 16.

Held, also, that the rules framed by Government under s. 320 of the Code only restricted the powers of the Court to interfere with the procedure of the execution of decrees transferred to the Collector. They did not come in the way of a party to bring a civil suit to establish his purchase.

Held, also, that the Collector had no power under s. 311 of the Code to set aside the sale and receive payment from the judgment-debtor. MATHURADAS v. PANHALAL, 19 B. 216 ... 147

Pro. Code (Act* XIV of 1882), s. 525—Practice—Procedure.—The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover certain property of which she alleged he had taken possession. Subsequently the "matters in difference in the said suit" were by a signed submission paper referred to arbitration. An award was made ordering the defendant to pay to the plaintiff Rs. 6,000, and cancelling a certain account.

Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882)—(Continued). PAGE

It also decided the claim of the plaintiff to two ornaments, which was a matter not included in the "submission paper," but had been verbally referred to the arbitrator in the course of the arbitration. The plaintiff now applied that the submission and award should be filed as an agreement adjusting the suit under s. 375 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), or, in the alternative, that the award should be filed under s. 525. The defendant disputed the agreement and denied the validity of the award.

Held, that under s. 375 of the Civ. Pro. Code, the Court had jurisdiction to determine whether, as a fact, the alleged agreement adjusting the suit has been made, and if it was satisfied that it has been made, to record it. Whether that fact should be tried on affidavit or by oral evidence, is entirely for the discretion of the Court.

The Court accordingly, holding that this suit had been adjusted by the submission and award, ordered the same to be filed and the adjustment recorded.

Held, further, that the Court could make no order as to that portion of the award which dealt with matter not relating to the subject-matter of the suit. A separate application should be made with regard to the ornaments. SAMIBAI v. PREMJI PRAGJI, 20 B. 304... 762

(44) Ss. 409, 413—Application for leave to sue in forma pauperis—Refusal of such application a bar to subsequent application in the same right — Jurisdiction -- Plea of jurisdiction.—The plaintiff applied for leave to sue as a pauper for the redemption of a mortgage. As he did not proceed with the application, it was rejected with costs on 29th November, 1888.

On the 4th February, 1890, plaintiff again applied for leave to sue as a pauper for the redemption of the same mortgage. There being no opposition, the application was granted, and was registered as a suit.

On the 20th September, 1893, when the suit had been heard nearly to the end, the Government Pleader intervened, and applied that it should not be allowed to proceed further until the plaintiff had paid the costs incurred by Government in opposing the first application, which had been rejected. But the plaintiff refused to do so, and thereupon the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit with costs under s. 413 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), and ordered the plaintiff to pay the Court fees under s. 412.

Held, on appeal, (1) that the order rejecting plaintiff's first application was an order under s. 409 of the Code of Civil Procedure; (2) that both the applications were made in respect of the same right to sue; (3) that the order rejecting the first application operated as a bar under s. 413 of the Code to the entertainment of the second application; and (4) that such bar being one to the jurisdiction of the Court, the Subordinate Judge was not only competent but bound to take notice of it at any stage of the suit. (g)--Contributory —Liability of the heirs of a deceased contributory—Calls—Calls made before the winding up—Limitation—Official liquidators not bound to take out letters of administration to the estate of a deceased contributory before settling the list of contributories—Shares duly issued, cancellation of—Reduction of capital.*—S. 61, Indian Companies, Act VI of 1882, (corresponding with s. 38 of the English Companies' Act of 1862), creates a new liability in the shareholders, and that liability includes contribution, not only in respect of calls made since the winding up, but also in respect of unpaid calls made before the date of the winding up, whether barred by limitation at that date or not.

The official liquidator need not take out letters of administration to the estate of a deceased share-holder before settling the list of contributories.

There is nothing in ss. 126 and 148 requiring the official liquidator to place on the list all the persons who may as representatives be liable to contribute in discharge of the liability of a deceased share-holder as contemplated by s. 126. Nor can the liability, under that section, of a person who has been placed on the list as his representative be affected by the omission of the official liquidator to do so.

It was also agreed that, in consideration of the transfer, he and "his executors or administrators shall be entitled, so long as they hold the said hundred shares, to an extra or preferential dividend."

On this agreement the parties acted, and the shareholder held the shares till he died in England in 1888, having by will directed that his executors or administrators should hold the hundred shares in trust for his surviving brothers, of whom the executor who proved the will was one. Administration with the will annexed was granted in India, to the plaintiff in this suit as the attorney of the executor. A note of this was made in the register of the company, leaving the hundred shares still in the name of the testator. The company then discontinued to pay the preferential dividend, and now contended that it was no longer payable, inasmuch as the testator's estate had been administered, and that the executor no longer held the share as executor but as trustee for the beneficiaries under the will.

Held, that the contract was still in operation, the executor still "holding" the shares within its meaning; and that the preferential dividend continued payable to the estate of the testator, the company being only concerned with the legal title to the shares, and not Contempt of Court.

Punishment by imprisonment—Practice.—On 1st September, 1890, in an administration suit in which Ganji Akhai, as executor of a Will was defendant, a receiver was appointed and Gangji Akhai was ordered to deliver to the receiver certain Government promissory notes of the value of Rs. 45,000 belonging to the estate, which was the subject-matter of the suit. He did not obey the order and absconded from Bombay, and on 16th March, 1891, in his absence, a rule for its attachment for contempt was made absolute. It was afterwards ascertained that he had used the notes for his own purposes. A warrant was issued for his arrest, and he was apprehended, and on 23rd April, 1891, he was convicted of criminal breach of trust and sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment. Previously to his trial (viz., on the 9th April, 1891), he had been committed to jail for contempt of the order of September, 1890, so that after his conviction he was in jail both under his sentence and under the order for contempt. On the 4th October, 1892, the Court passed a money decree in the administration suit against the defendant for Rs. 80,000 and costs. The sentence passed upon the defendant for the criminal offence expired on the 22nd October, 1892. Applications for his release from imprisonment under the order for contempt were made in December, 1892, and 10th April, 1893, but were refused. Counsel now moved again for his release.

Held, that the defendant should be released from imprisonment. The right of the plaintiff to demand the promissory notes from him was merged in the money decree. The right to demand the notes was gone, and the order that he should deliver them up to the receiver had ceased to be operative. The commitment, in so far as it was intended to enforce obedience to the order of the 1st September, 1890, could no longer be continued on that ground. It was the decree now and not the order which constituted the measure of the obligation between the parties. That was a simple money decree, and it was contrary to the expressly declared will of the Legislature and to all modern principle and precedent to keep a defendant under commitment for contempt to compel him to pay a money decree. If the attachment order was regarded as a punishment for the defendant's offence in not having delivered up the notes, the punishment should be commensurate with the offence. Imprisonment under it could not be indefinite. By s. 493 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) the Legislature indicated that such imprisonment should not extend beyond six months. The defendant had, however, been in jail for more than twenty months. For the criminal offence he had suffered the punishment to which he was sentenced, and the Court would not be justified in indirectly adding to its duration. THE ADVOCATE-GENERAL OF BOMBAY v. Conversion.

(1) Hindu converts to Mahomedanism—Borah Mahomedans—Suni Borahs—Inheritance—Succession among such converts—Native Christians—Law applied to Native Christians prior to Indian Succession Act (X of 1865)—Custom and usage of inheritance among converts—Burden of proof—Evidence—Matter of public interest—Decrees—Evidence of custom—Practice—The Suni Borah Mahomedan community of the Dhandhuka Taluka in Gujarat are governed by the Hindu law in matters of succession and inheritance.

Held, therefore, that in this community a widow is entitled to succeed to her husband's estate to the exclusion of a daughter or a step-daughter.

As to the law governing Hindu converts to Mahomedanism, the following principles may now be regarded as settled:—(1) Mahomedan law generally governs converts to that faith from Hinduism; but (2) a well-established custom of such converts following the Hindu law of inheritance would override the general presumption. (3) This custom should be confined strictly to cases of succession and inheritance. (4) If any particular custom of succession be alleged which is at variance with the general law applicable to these communities, the burden of proof lies on the party alleging such special custom.

If evidence is given as to general prevalence of Hindu rules of succession in a Mahomedan community in preference to the rules of Mahomedan law, the burden of proof is discharged, and it then rests with the party, disputing the particular Hindu usage in question, to show that it is excluded from the sphere of the proved general usage of the community.

Among Native Christians certain classes strictly retain the old Hindu usages, others retain these usages in a modified form, and others again wholly abandon them. Before the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) the Christian convert could elect to attach himself to any one of these particular classes, and he would be governed by the usage of the class to which he so attached himself. These same principles are applied to the case of Hindu converts to Mahomedanism such as Khojas and Cutchi Memons.

Conversion—(Concluded).

The decrees of competent Courts are good evidence in matters of public interest, such as the existence of customs of succession in particular communities. Such decisions form an exception to the general rule, which excludes res inter alias actæ. BAI BAIJI v. BAI SANTOK, 20 B. 53 ... 594

(2) Hindu converts to Mahomedanism—Retention of Hindu law and usages—Maintenance—Rights of junior member of a Thakor's family to maintenance out of an estate of the nature of an impartible raj—Limitation—Molesalam Girasias—Custom.—The Hindu law of inheritance and succession applies to Molesalam Girasias who were originally Rajput Hindus, but were subsequently converted to Mahomedanism.

The plaintiff was the second son of the defendant, who was the Thakor of Amed, a talukdari estate of the nature of an impartible raj or principality. The plaintiff's family belonged to the community of Molesalam Girasias. Plaintiff alleged that according to a family usage he as a junior member of the family was entitled to receive maintenance from his father, who was the holder of the gadi. The estate was under the management of the Talukdari Settlement Officer from 1878 to 1888, during which period that officer granted the plaintiff an allowance in lieu of maintenance without any objection on the defendant's part. On the 1st August, 1888, the estate was restored to the defendant, who stopped the allowance. The plaintiff thereupon sued in 1891 to recover from the defendant arrears of maintenance for two years and eleven months at Rs. 200 a month.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, and that the claim was not time-barred. MAHARANA SHRI FATESANGJI JASVATSANGJI v. KUVAR HARISANGJI FATESANGJI, 20 B. 181 ... 679

The defendant carried on a printing and publishing business at Delhi. Between the years 1869 and 1891 the defendant translated certain English works (e.g., Todhunter's Mensuration, Barnard Smith's Algebra, &c.) into the Urdu language for the use of native students, and sold and distributed copies of such translations in various parts of India. The plaintiffs alleged that they were the proprietors of the copyright in the said books, and they sued in Bombay for a declaration of their ownership, and that the said books printed and sold by the defendant were an infringement of the said copyright, and for an injunction, &c. It appeared that in June, 1894, the plaintiffs' agent who was then in India, instructed the Bombay firm of Sunder Pandurang to order copies of the said translations from the defendant. A letter was accordingly sent by Sunder Pandurang to the defendant at Delhi requesting him to send the books to Bombay by value payable post, which the defendant did, and he received payment for them from the Post Office at Delhi. The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the High Court of Bombay had no jurisdiction, and he denied that he infringed the plaintiffs' copyright.

Held, that no part of plaintiffs' cause of action arose in Bombay, and that the High Court of Bombay had no jurisdiction. The act of Sunder Pandurang in paying for and receiving the goods formed no part of the defendant's offence, which was completed when he posted the books at Delhi.

The English Copyright Act (Stat. 5 and 6 Vict., cap. 45) extends to all parts of India. Having regard to s. 15 of that Act it is clear that a person who infringes copyright must be sued, if he offends in India, not only within the limits of that country, but also in that part of India in which the offence has been committed. See also s. 13 of the Indian Act XX of 1847.

Held, also that translations are not copies, and that the defendant by translating the books had not infringed the plaintiffs' copyright.

The plaintiffs had registered themselves as the proprietors of the copyright of the books in question both in London and in India. The defendant had not given notice of his intention to dispute the plaintiffs' copyright as required by s. 8 of Act XX of 1847.

Held, that the plaintiffs' copyright in the book had been established. MACMILLAN v. SHAMSUL ULAMA M. ZAKA, 19 B. 557 ... 372

Costs.

(1) Decree—Assignment of decree pending appeal—Assignee of decree made respondent to appeal—Decree reversed in appeal—Liability of assignee for costs of hearing in lower Court.—The Standard Oil Company and one Ellis sued the defendant for damages. The lower Court found that there was no privity of contract between the company and the defendant, and dismissed the suit of the company (plaintiff No. 1) with costs, but passed a decree for Ellis (plaintiff No. 2) with costs. The defendant appealed in the first instance making Ellis (plaintiff No. 1) the sole respondent. The company, however, gave the defendant (appellant) notice that the decree obtained by Ellis had been assigned to them. Whereupon he (the appellant) obtained leave to make the company party-respondents as assignees of the decree from Ellis. The company objected to be made respondents. The appeal Court reversed the decree of the lower Court and dismissed the suit, and the question arose whether the company could be made liable for the general costs of the hearing in the lower Court.

Held, that the company were liable only for the costs of the appeal in which they had taken an active part, but not for the general costs of hearing in the lower Court, except so far as the suit was their suit. Ellis was liable for the costs throughout. The appellant (defendant) was not entitled, by bringing the company on the record against their will, to obtain an additional security for the costs already incurred in the lower Court.

(2) S. 54—Offence committed by a British subject in foreign territory—Powers of the Police to arrest for such offence without a warrant—Wrongful arrest—Wrongful confinement—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s 342.—S. 54 of the Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882) does not empower a police officer to arrest, without a warrant, a British subject in British India on a charge of criminal breach of trust or other cognizable offence committed outside British India.

Mukund was a native Indian subject of the Queen-Empress, residing at Belgaum. A complaint was filed against him in the Sangli State charging him with committing breach of trust within the territories of that State. Thereupon he obtained an order from the District Magistrate of Belgaum, dated 15th November, 1891, which exempted him from arrest for the offence of criminal breach of trust without a warrant issued by himself or by the Political Agent of the Southern Mahratha Country. This order was communicated to Mukund through the accused, who was chief constable at Belgaum. On the 27th November, 1891, a police officer from the Sangli State came to Belgaum with a warrant issued by the Sangli Court for the arrest of Mukund on a charge of criminal breach of trust. The chief constable thereupon directed Mukund's arrest. Mukund brought to the notice of the chief constable the District Magistrate's order of the 15th November, 1891, but he was detained in custody till the matter was reported to the First Class Magistrate, who ordered his discharge. In the meantime the complaint filed against Mukund in the Sangli State was dismissed without requiring his extradition.

Mukund thereupon prosecuted the chief constable on a charge of wrongful arrest and wrongful confinement.

Held, that the chief constable had no power to arrest the complainant without a warrant, and that he was guilty of the offence of wrongful confinement under s. 342 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860). In re MUKUND BABU VETHE, 19 B. 72 ... 49

(10) Ss. 298 and 302—Jury—Verdict—Special verdict—Duty of Judge—Practice—Procedure.—The accused was tried for rape. The jury, after considering their verdict, announced through their foreman that the accused "did the act with consent." The Sessions Judge thereupon, without requiring them to reconsider their verdict or giving them any fresh directions, asked them whether they found the accused guilty or not guilty. The jury again retired and brought in a verdict of guilty, upon which the Sessions Judge sentenced the prisoner to three years' rigorous imprisonment.

Held, reversing the conviction and sentence, that the first verdict of the jury being a special verdict, and there being no real ambiguity about it, the Sessions Judge was bound under s. 302 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) to record the verdict and apply the law thereto.

Held, also, that the second verdict could not be sustained, as there was nothing to show that the Sessions Judge gave the jury any fresh directions, or explained to them that a finding that the woman had consented was tantamount to an acquittal. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MADHAVRAO, 19 B. 735 ... 492

(13) Ss. 421, 430—Criminal procedure—Practice—Procedure—Appeal by accused—Order rejecting appeal as barred by limitation—Review of such order—Finality of judgments in criminal matters.—A Sessions Judge dismissed an appeal on the ground that it was barred by limitation. On a subsequent application by the accused, the Judge admitted the appeal and at the hearing acquitted him. The High Court sent for the record in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction.

Held, that the order of acquittal was ultra vires under s. 430 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (X of 1882). The order dismissing the appeal was final and not open to review.

It was argued that s. 421 of the Crim. Pro. Code (X of 1882) only applies to orders passed on the merits, and that as the order rejecting the appeal was not of that class, it was not an order "upon appeal" and was not final under s. 430.

Held, that s. 421 was not limited to orders passed on the merits and that the order in question was an order upon appeal and final under s. 30.

The Crim. Pro. Code (X of 1882) makes no provision for review of judgments in criminal matters by subordinate appellate Courts. The jurisdiction of revision is vested in the High Court, which has ample powers under chap. 32 to rectify any inadvertent failure of justice. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. (14) S. 431—Practice—Appeal by accused against conviction—Death of appellant—Abatement of appeal—Appeal—Remedy open to the deceased appellant's heirs.—Two persons, Mahomadshah and Nabishah, were convicted of criminal breach of trust and each was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000. Both prisoners filed an appeal to the High Court. Nabishah died pending his appeal. On Mahomadshah's appeal the High Court passed an order acquitting him and reversing his conviction and sentence. Thereupon one of the relatives of the deceased Nabishah applied to the High Court to set aside the conviction and sentence passed in his case, and order the fine to be refunded.

Held, that on Nabishah's death his appeal abated under s. 431 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

As the case turned on the appreciation of evidence, the High Court declined to interfere in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, referring the legal representatives of the deceased to the Governor in Council for redress. In re NABISHAH, 19 B. 714 ... 478

It appeared that the Magistrate was a shareholder in the company which prosecuted the accused.

Held, that the Magistrate was disqualified from trying the case. As a shareholder of the company he had a pecuniary interest, however small, in the result of the accusation, and was, therefore, "personally interested" in the case within the meaning of s. 555 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

Decree—(Concluded). PAGE

Held, that the effect of the decree was extinguished by the agreement, which could only be enforced by a fresh suit, and not by an application for execution of the former decree.

An agreement consisting of reciprocal promises to be performed by the plaintiffs and the defendant can be sued upon by the plaintiffs when they have not refused to carry out their promises, though they may not have put an allegation in the plaint saying that they are ready and willing to do so, s. 51 of the Indian Contract Act being no bar to such a suit.

When the plaintiffs are entitled to ask for the performance of the part of the contract in which they are interested and the defendant claims execution of the whole to which the plaintiffs do not object, the Court ought to pass a decree directing execution of the whole contract, instead of rejecting the claim. Deed.

(1) Creditors' trust-deed—Assignment of all his property by debtor to trustees for payment of creditors—Suit by creditor who had signed as creditor and as trustee to recover his debt notwithstanding the deed.—On the 30th March, 1894, the plaintiff sued the defendant, who traded under the name of Vassanji Jairam, to recover Rs. 7,705 due on an adjusted account. On the 17th April following the suit was on the board for hearing, but by consent of parties was adjourned for three months. Later on the same day the defendant executed a deed whereby he assigned all his property to the plaintiff and three other persons as trustees in trust for the payment of his creditors. The deed was executed by the plaintiff and the other trustees both as trustees and as creditors. It contained no release and no agreement by creditors to take less than the full amount of their debts. It conveyed all the defendant's property to the trustee, who was to collect the estate and divide it rateably among the creditors "without prejudice to the right of the several creditors to recover" the balance (if any) which might remain due to them after receiving such rateable distribution, and it declared that the said agreement for the payment of the debts was accepted by the creditors, and that "upon payment to the said creditors, respectively, of the full or whole amount of their respective claims these presents shall operate as fully and effectually as an order of discharge from the Insolvent Court in respect of the debts now due from the said debtor, or the said firm of Vassanji Jairam to the said creditors respectively, and may be pleaded in bar to any claim in respect of such debts; and each of them the said creditors for himself, his heirs, executors and administrators doth hereby covenant with the said debtor, his heirs, executors and administrators that he or they will not, if the said debtor shall pay the said full amount of the debts due by him or his said firm of Vassanji Jairam to the said creditors, bring any action, suit or proceeding against them or any of them for or in respect of the debts now due from the said debtor or the said firm of Vassanji Jairam to the said creditors respectively." On the execution of this deed the trustees took possession of defendant's books of accounts, and proceeded to recover the defendant's estate.

Deed—(Concluded).

The three months for which, as above mentioned, the suit was adjourned in April, 1894, having now expired, it came on for hearing. The defendant pleaded the deed, and contended that the plaintiff having accepted the trust, and signed the deed, was not entitled to continue the suit against him.

Held, that it would be inequitable that the defendant having handed over all his property to four of his creditors as trustees with a view to the payment of his debts in full should be harassed by one of those creditors who had accepted the trust. The conduct of the plaintiff had been such as to deprive him of the right to present payment of his debt except by the assignment made to him and the other trustees. There had been a concluded agreement which precluded him from proceeding with his suit, and to allow him to proceed would be a fraud on the creditors. Under the circumstances there was an implied condition that the creditors should not sue until their remedy under the assignment was exhausted. The creditors should get what they could under the assignment, and then proceed for the rest. GOKULDAS MUCCANJI v. VASSANJI JAIRAM, 19 B. 12 ... 8

Accordingly the plaintiff's house was searched, and its floor dug up, and the plaintiff was placed in confinement for an hour or so. No property was, however, found. Thereupon the plaintiff sued the defendant to recover damages for loss of character suffered by him in consequence. Both the lower Courts decreed the plaintiff's claim, holding that it lay on the defendant to prove reasonable and probable cause for the suspicion communicated to the police and the search of the plaintiff's house. On second appeal, the High Court reversed the decrees and dismissed the suit.

Held (per JARDINE, J.) that the rule as to the burden of proof in suits for malicious prosecution should be extended to a case like the present. The onus, therefore, lay on the plaintiff not only to allege in the plaint, but also to prove against the defendant malice and absence of reasonable and probable cause for the information given by him to the police. The plaintiff, however, had given no evidence of his own innocence, nor that the suspicion of the defendant was groundless, nor that the defendant had any malice.

Per RANADE, J.—The present case was governed by the principles which govern suits for defamation, and under the circumstances the action of the defendant fell within the exception which protects information given to a person in authority in the discharge of a public or private duty, where no malice in fact is shown to exist.

Defamation—(Concluded). PAGE

There is a distinction between the case of a false charge falling under s. 211 of the Penal Code (XLV of 1860) and that of false information given to the police under s. 182. A person prosecuting another for an offence under the latter section need not prove malice and want of reasonable and probable cause except so far as they are implied in the act of giving information known to the police with the knowledge or likelihood that such information would lead a public servant to use his power to the injury or annoyance of the complainant. In an inquiry under s. 211, on the other hand, the absence of just and lawful ground for making the charge is an important element. RAGHAVENDRA v. KASHINATH BHAT, 19 B. 717 ... 480

After the District Court had passed a decree for dissolution of marriage, but before the confirmation of the decree by the High Court, the petitioner, in ignorance of the law, married another woman, but he ceased to cohabit with the woman on discovering his mistake. Under the circumstances the High Court made the decree absolute, holding that under s. 14 of the Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869) it had a discretion to do so.

By the law of England the question of the capacity of a person to enter into a contract is decided by the law of his domicil. This principle of English law is adopted by s. 11 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872).

A minor cannot be sued on a bond executed by him during minority and not ratified by him after his majority.

A document, therefore, which limits or extinguishes the chance of acquiring such an easement does not require registration. 13 Bom. 252 and 16 Bom., 474 followed and approved as to the circumstances in which the Court will grant an injunction where a right to light and air is infringed. (2) Right of way—Purchase of land adjoining purchaser's land—Way of access—Way of necessity—Sale-deed—Construction—Circumstances existing at the time of the sale.—A person purchasing a plot adjoining his own land, and having access to the plot through his land, cannot acquire a way of necessity over his vendor's land of which the plot formed a part. The fact that if the plot had been sold to a third person, he would have acquired a way of necessity, does not affect the question.

Where a portion of an estate is sold, a right of way leading to such portion may be created by the use of general words, provided that the circumstances existing at the time of the sale were such as to justify the belief that such was the intention of the parties.

Where the words used in a Marathi deed of sale were "sarva hakk wa sambandh" (i. e., all rights and accompaniments),

Held, that the words in themselves, apart from the circumstances at the time of the sale, did not include a right of way over the vendor's property as conveyed along with the portion of the land sold; but if there was an old path leading across the vendor's adjoining ground to the plot sold, and the purposes for which the plot was sold, and if a stranger builds on the land of another, although believing it to be his own, the owner is entitled to recover the land with the building on it, unless there are special circumstances amounting to a standing by so as to induce the belief that the owner intended to forego his right or to an acquiescence in his building on the land. This is also the law in India, with the exception that the party building on the land of another is allowed to remove the building. Delay by the owner in bringing a suit is not in itself sufficient to create an equity in favour of the person spending money on the land so as to deprive the owner of his strict rights.

The decree made by the High Court was that the plaintiff should recover the land with liberty to the defendant forthwith to commence to remove his building and to restore the property to the condition in which it was when he took possession, the same to be completed within one year from date of decree. In default, the plaintiff to be at liberty to remove the building at the expense of the defendant. PREMJI JIVAN BHATE v. HAJI CASSUM JUMA AHMED, 20 B. 298 ... 758

Estoppel.

(1) Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Estoppel by conduct—Mistake of law—Adoption—Acknowledgment of adoption.—One Ganpatrav Raje Shirke was possessed of considerable property both in British territory and in the territory of His Highness the Gaikwar. He died in 1858, leaving three childless widows, Laxmibai, Savitribai, and Babai. Shortly after his death, the plaintiff Kuverji, who was then a minor, was taken to Baroda by Laxmibai, and on her representations as well as those of her co-widows he was acknowledged by the Gaikwar as their adopted son, and as such entitled to succeed to all the estate and privileges enjoyed by the deceased Ganpatrav. For several years afterwards the widows treated the plaintiff as the legitimate heir and successor of Ganpatrav in respect of the Baroda property. With regard to the estate in British territory, the widows at first put forward Kuverji as the adopted son of Ganpatrav. On their application a certificate of heirship was issued under Reg. VIII of 1827, declaring that "the Bais were the widow heirs, and the minor Kuverji the son heir, of the deceased Ganpatrav." In one case the widows obtained a decree as guardians of the minor, on a bond executed in favour of Kuverji as heir to Ganpatrav. When the Bombay Summary Settlement Act (II of 1863) was passed, the widows accepted the summary settlement in respect of the inam holdings of their deceased husband, and thereupon the holdings were entered in their names in the Government records. Finding themselves secure in the possession of their husband's estate, the ladies now dropped the allegation of adoption, and dealt with the property in British territory in their own right, and not as trustees or guardians of the minor Kuverji. In 1871, Kuverji sought to have part of the property in British territory transferred to his own name as the adopted son of Ganpatrav. The widows resisted this attempt and denied his adoption. In 1881, Kuverji made a similar attempt, but failed, the Revenue authorities having eventually resolved to leave the question of Kuverji's title by adoption to be determined by the Civil Court.

In 1884, Kuverji filed the present suit against the widows of Ganpatrav for a declaration of his adoption by Ganpatrav and for possession of Ganpatrav's estate in British territory. The widows denied the factum of the adoption, and disputed its validity. They also contended that the suit was barred by limitation. The Agent for Sardars in the Dekkhan, who tried the case, dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiff's adoption by Ganpatrav was not proved, and that the claim was barred by limitation, the widows having been in adverse possession of the property in British territory for more than twelve years.

The plaintiff appealed against this decision to the High Court, contending (inter alia) that the widows were estopped by their conduct from denying the plaintiff's adoption.

Held, that the widows were not estopped.

Per BIRDWOOD, J.—The fact that the plaintiff was put forward by the widows as their adopted son in the Baroda territory did not estop them from disputing the plaintiff's allegation that he was adopted by Ganpatrav. Nor was the circumstance that the widows and the plaintiff obtained a joint certificate of heirship to Ganpatrav in British territory conclusive as an estoppel.

Per JARDINE, J.—There was no estoppel, (1) because there was nothing to show that the plaintiff had been led to alter his position in life through belief in any misrepresentations made by the widows, and (2) because the widows might have been under the same mistake of law as the plaintiff, viz., that the Gaikwar's recognition of his adoption created a status operative everywhere, as well in British territory as in the Gaikwar's territory. The defendant, who under the will of his father was entitled to a large property but had not yet come into possession of it, was of an extravagant and reckless character. He pleaded, as to part of the consideration for the notes, that he did not receive it, and as to a further part, that the consideration was immoral. In dealing with the case the Court laid down the following propositions, not as rules of law, but as guides in considering the evidence in such a case :—

(1) That upon the above facts the ordinary presumption that a negotable instrument has been executed for value received was so much weakened that the defendant's allegation that he had not received full consideration was sufficient to shift the burden of proof and to throw upon the money-lenders (the plaintiffs) the obligation of satisfying the Court that they had paid the consideration in full. That is the practical effect of illus. (c) to s. 114 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872).

(2) Where the plaintiff, in answer to such a defence, affirmed that he had paid the consideration in full, and was corroborated by his books and witnesses, the onus of proof again shifted over upon the defendant.

(3) The burden of proof thus thrown upon the defendant could only be met by a perfectly truthful and harmonious statement which the Court felt able to rely upon with confidence. In the absence of this, the ordinary presumption laid down in s. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) must prevail, viz., until the contrary is proved the presumption should be made that every negotiable instrument was made for consideration. (4) Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 26—Statement of accused—Custody of police—Statement made in temporary absence of police.—A person under arrest on a charge of murder was taken in a tonga, from the place where the alleged offence was committed, to Godhra. A friend drove with her in the tonga and a mounted policeman rode in front. In the course of the journey, the policeman left the tonga and went to a neighbouring village to procure a fresh horse, the tonga meanwhile proceeding slowly along the road for some miles without any escort. In the absence of the policeman, the accused made a communication to her friend with reference to the alleged offence. At the trial it was proposed to ask what the prisoner had said, on the ground that she was not then in custody, and that s. 26 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) did not apply.

Held, that, notwithstanding the temporary absence of the policeman, the accused was still in custody, and the question must be disallowed. EMPRESS v. LESTER, 20 B. 165 ... 668

The decree-holder thereupon applied to the Court to have the obstruction removed. This application was registered under s. 331 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), as a suit between the decree-holder as plaintiff and the party who offered the obstruction as a defendant.

On the 22nd January, 1891, the decree-holder withdrew this latter suit. Thereupon his darkhast of the 7th March, 1889, was struck off the file. On the 12th November, 1892, he presented a second darkhast for execution.

Held, that the second darkhast was barred by limitation. Execution of Decree—(Continued). PAGE

On 23rd July, 1888, plaintiff obtained a decree for the redemption of certain lands, on payment within three months of the amount due to the mortgagee, which was to be ascertained in execution proceedings. Against this decree the defendant appeal to the High Court.

Pending the appeal, the plaintiff presented a darkhast for execution on the 4th October, 1888. This darkhast was dismissed, as the plaintiff failed to produce a copy of the mortgage-bond within the time allowed by the Court. The three months allowed by the decree for payment expired on the 23rd October, 1888.

On 11th February 1890, the High Court confirmed the decree, and on 11th April, 1890, plaintiff presented a fresh darkhast for execution. Both the lower Courts dismissed this darkhast on the ground that the dismissal of the first darkhast operated as res judicata.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to execute the decree, and that his second darkhast was not barred either by limitation or on the principle of res judicata. NANCHAND v. VITHU, 19 B. 258 ... 175

The delivery of possession under s. 263 of the Civ. Pro. Code contemplates the decree-holder being placed in actual possession by possibly dispossessing, in the eye of law, a third person who is not affected by the decree. The mere formal delivery of possession cannot of itself effect such dispossession unless the deprivation of possession be complete as a fact, a conclusion which the Court has to form on the whole of the evidence. It does not make any difference if such a decree is in a partition suit. RAMCHANDRA SUBRAO v. RAVJI, 20 B. 351 (F.B.) ... 795

Code* (Act XIV of 1882), s. 305—Confirmation of such sale by one Court—Subsequent application for confirmation to other Court—Practice—Procedure.—Panchlingappa Baslingappa obtained a decree against Venubai in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Saundatti. He applied (darkhast of 1892) for execution, but Venubai, on 19th April, 1893, obtained permission, under s. 305 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), to raise the amount of the decree by private sale on or before the 6th June, 1893, the day fixed for the sale. She obtained a certificate of leave under s. 305.

Another decree was obtained against Venubai in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Belgaum by one Annaji Ramchandra, and he attached in execution (darkhast 351 of 1892) the same lands, which were already attached by the Saundatti Court. From the Belgaum Court, however, Venubai also obtained a certificate under s. 305 of the Civ. Pro. Code, on 22nd April, 1893, authorizing a private sale.

Relying on these two certificates Venubai sold the lands under attachment to the applicant Andanapa bin Rachapa for Rs. 2,000 by deed dated 25th May, 1893. On the 28th June, 1893, Andanapa applied to the First Class Subordinate Judge in Belgaum, under s. 305 of the Civ.Pro.Code, for confirmation of the sale and that the purchase money paid by him should be distributed as follows, viz., Rs. 518-14-2 in satisfaction of the decree of the Belgaum Court, Rs. 128-7-10 in satisfaction of the decree of the Saundatti Court, and the balance, Rs. 1,352-10-0, to be paid to Venubai. The Court of Belgaum granted the application and directed that the above sum of Rs. 128-7-10 should be paid into the Court of Saundatti. On the 17th July, 1893, Andanapa applied to the Court at Saundatti to confirm the sale already confirmed by the Belgaum Court, and he brought into Court the said sum of Rs. 128-7-10. On the 19th June 1893, while the above proceedings were going on, a third decree holder (the opponent) had applied to the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Saundatti for execution of his decree. He objected to the confirmation of the sale applied for by the applicant. The Subordinate Judge allowed the objection and refused confirmation of the sale. The applicant then applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction.

Held, that the application to the Saundatti Court by Andanapa was superfluous and ought to have been rejected, inasmuch as the sale had already been confirmed by a competent Court, (viz., the Court of Belgaum) and nothing further remained to be done in regard to it. These goods, however, were already under attachment in execution of certain decrees obtained in the Small Cause Court against the defendant. On the 4th September, 1895, by an order of the High Court made on the application of the plaintiffs, the execution proceedings in the Small Cause Court suits were transferred to the High Court, and it was ordered that the attached property should be realized by the High Court. The records of the execution proceedings in those suits were lodged in the Prothonotary's office. On the 26th September, 1895, the decree-holder in one of the Small Cause Court suits obtained an order from the Judge in chambers directing the Sheriff to take charge of the attached property and realize it by sale. The Sheriff accordingly sold the property and certified the sale to Prothonotary's office. The plaintiffs subsequently (under the rules of the Sheriff's office) applied to the Prothonotary for payment to them of the amount realized or so much thereof as should satisfy their decree. The plaintiffs were directed to give notice of their application to the holders of the Small Cause Court decrees.

Held, that the holders of the Small Cause Court decrees were entitled to share rateably with the plaintiffs in the High Court suit in the proceeds of the property sold in execution by the Sheriff. JAYNARAYAN MEGHRAJ v. ISMAIL KARAMALI, 20 B. 377 ... 813

The accused was a karkun in the nazir's office, and it was his duty to keep the accounts of moneys received in the office from judgment-debtors and of moneys paid out to decree-holders. He was charged with abetting the misappropriation of three sums, viz., Rs. 20 on the 19th November 1885, Rs. 45 on the 23rd November 1885, and Rs. 10 on the 26th June 1886. As to the first sum, it was alleged that an instalment of Rs. 25 due under a decree had been paid into nazir's office by a judgment-debtor on the 19th November, 1885, but the accused had entered in the office day book only Rs. 5, thereby enabling the balance of Rs. 20 to be misappropriated. It appeared, however, that a sum of Rs. 25, being the instalment due to the decree-holder under the above decree, had been in due course paid out to him on the 4th December 1885. As to the second sum of Rs. 45, it was alleged that a sum of Rs. 50 had been paid in but only Rs. 5 had been entered by the accused, the balance being misappropriated. It appeared, however, in this case also that the full amount of the instalment viz., Rs. 50 had been duly paid out to the decree-holder a few days after its receipts. As to the third sum, it was alleged that the total receipts entered in the book on the 26th June, 1886, were Rs. 55, but the figure entered as the total was only Rs. 45, and that the balance of Rs. 10 had been misappropriated. The jury found the accused guilty on all three charges. On appeal by him it was contended that there was no evidence of the misappropriation of the specific sums in respect of which he was charged. There was evidence of a general deficiency, but there was no evidence that these specific sums formed part of that deficiency. On the contrary the evidence showed that the instalments paid into the office had been duly paid out to the persons to whom they were payable.

Held, that the jury having had the facts brought to their notice, their verdict was final, and the High Court would not interfere with the verdict.

Depositions taken on commission in criminal cases, although inadmissible under chap. 40 of the Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882) may be admitted under s. 33 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), if the requirements of the proviso to that section have been complied with.

The words "opportunity to cross-examine" in the proviso to s. 33 do not imply that the actual presence of the cross-examining party or his agent before the tribunal taking the evidence is necessary.

To make evidence admissible against an accused person under s. 33 of the Evidence Act, the fact that he had full opportunity of cross-examination, if not admitted, must be proved.

Quære—Whether the opportunity to administer cross-interrogatories under a commission is an " opportunity to cross-examine " within the meaning of the proviso to s. 33 of the Evidence Act so as to render the evidence taken on interrogatories admissible.

The provisions of s. 167 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) apply to criminal trials by jury.

When part of the evidence, which has been allowed to go to the jury, is found to be irrelevant and inadmissible, it is open to the High Court in appeal, either to uphold the verdict upon the remaining evidence on the record under s. 167 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), or to quash the verdict and order a retrial.

(1) Adoption by a daughter-in-law—Adoption divesting an estate which had already vested in another person—Consent of such person to adoption—Hindu law.—One Shri Dharnidhar, a separated Hindu, died in 1852 childless, leaving three widows and a daughter-in-law Venubai, the widow of a predeceased son Chintaman. Dharnidhar's estate was taken, on his death, by his widows and ultimately became vested in Laxumibai, the survivor of them. In 1871, while she was in possession, Venubai adopted the plaintiff. In 1874 a decision was passed against Laxumibai, in execution of which a large portion of her deceased husband's property passed into the possession of one Chinto. In 1886 the plaintiff filed this suit against Chinto, claiming, as the adopted son of Venubai, to be entitled to all the estate of his adoptive grandfather Shri Dharnidhar (Venubai's father-in-law).

Hindu Law—2.—Adoption—(Continued). PAGE

Held, that he could not recover. His adoption by Venubai, which could only be to her husband Chintaman, could not divest Laxumibai of the estate which had come to her as heir of her husband Shri Dharnidhar.

On Dharnidhar's death the estate had vested in his widows with remainder to his collateral heirs, and even if Laxumibai had assented to the subsequent adoption of the plaintiff by Venubai, his claim would not stand against the rights of Dharnidhar's collaterals who would succeed on Laxumibai's death.

From the moment that Dharnidhar died, and his estate vested in his widows, the right of his daughter-in-law Venubai to adopt for the purposes of representation was at an end. SHRI DHARNIDHAR v. CHINTO, 20 B. 250 ... 725

(2) Adoption by a mother after the death of her son who has left neither child nor widow—Adoption by a grandmother without the consent of her daughter-in-law—Objection taken for the first time in appeal—Practice.—Under the Hindu law a mother is competent to adopt when her son dies leaving no widow of other heir nearer than herself.

A Hindu of the Shudra class died, leaving him surviving his mother and a paternal grandmother. After his death his grandmother adopted the defendant. Subsequently to this adoption the deceased's mother adopted the plaintiff. Thereupon both plaintiff and defendant claimed the deceased's estate.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. The deceased's mother having succeeded as heir to her son, her mother-in-law could not by any adoption divest her of her rights as such heir without her consent. The defendant's adoption was, therefore, invalid.

An objection based upon a point of law, may be made in second appeal, provided it does not involve the taking of any additional evidence on matters of disputed facts. GAVDAPPA v. GIRIMALLAPPA, 19 B. 331 ... 224

(3) Adoption directed by will—Will—Bequest—Bequest to the boy named for adoption—Conditional gift on adoption—Adoption a condition precedent to such boy taking under the will.—Where a Hindu testator directed that a boy should be taken in adoption, and added "to this boy, all the things mentioned in my will having been done, I give the residue of my estate as his inheritance and I appoint him as my heir."

Held, that adoption was a condition precedent, and that the boy not having been adopted could not take under the will. KARAMSI MADHOWJI v. KARSANDAS NATHA, 20 B. 718 ... 1048

(4) Adoption of an only son—Validity of such adoption among Lingayets—Custom of Lingayets—Gift by adoptive father at the time of adoption—Gift binding on adopted son—Conditional adoption—Custom—Evidence of custom.—According to the custom of Lingayets in the districts of Dharwar and Bijapur the adoption of an only son is valid.

Where a Hindu at the time of taking a son in adoption made a gift of a portion of his ancestral property to his daughters, and the deed of gift as well as the adoption deed were executed on the same day, and they mutually referred to each other.

Held, that the plaintiff's natural father having been a party to the deed of adoption which referred to the deed of gift executed along with it, the case fell under the category of conditional adoptions which are allowed by law.

Held, also, that the deed of gift to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was valid and binding on plaintiff.

(6) Only son.—The adoption of a person who at the time of his adoption is an only son, is invalid. The fact that other sons are afterwards born to his parents, does not validate his adoption. RAIJI JADHAV v. BAI MATHURA, 19 B. 658 ... 440

(7) Relinquishment by the adopted son in favour of his adoptive mother of his rights as adopted son—Release—Second adoption—Registration—Registration under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), ss. 56 and 60—General Registration Act (III of 1877).—The plaintiff was adopted in 1880 by Koina, the widow of one Ganu. In June, 1885, he executed a document which recited that he and Koina had not been on amicable terms, and that his adoption had consequently been cancelled, and that she had adopted another son (defendant No. 1) to whom she had given all rights of heirship, and declared that in consideration of Rs. 200 paid by Koina he delivered back to her the rights which he had obtained by virtue of his adoption and heirship. This document was not registered under the General Registration Act (III of 1877), but was registered under s. 56 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), which section applied to the district in which the transaction took place. Koina died in October 1885, and the plaintiff brought this suit, as adopted son, to recover the property of Ganu. The first defendant, who had been adopted by Koina subsequently to the plaintiff's adoption, contended that he had been validly adopted and that he was entitled to the property. He relied (inter alia) upon the document executed by plaintiff in June, 1885.

Held, that the plaintiff could not renounce his status as adopted son although he might give up his right of inheritance and that whatever estate became vested in Koina by the release came to the plaintiff on her death, either as the adopted son of Ganu or as heir of Koina.

Held, also, that the defendant's subsequent adoption was invalid, and that nothing would pass to him by force of such adoption.

It was contended that the release in question was not admissible in evidence, not having been registered under the General Registration Act (III of 1877).

Held, that the document was admissible. It was a conveyance within s. 56 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) and the law in force as to its registration was contained in ss. 56 and 60 of that Act. MAHADU GANU v. BAYAJI, 19 B. 239 ...

(8) Reversioner, suit by, to set aside an adoption by a Hindu widow—Right of suit—Remote reversioners—Watan property—Bom. Act V of 1886, s. 2.—The right to sue to set aside an adoption by a Hindu widow is, as a general rule, limited to the nearest reversionary heir, and if he without sufficient cause refuses to institute proceedings, or if he has precluded himself by his own act and conduct from so doing, or has colluded with the widow, or concurred in the alleged wrongful act, the next presumable reversioner will be entitled to sue. In such a case, upon a plaint stating the circumstances under which the more distant reversioner claims to sue, the Court must exercise a judicial discretion in determining whether the remote reversioner is entitled to sue, and should require the nearer reversioner to be made a party to the suit

Raghunath, a separated Hindu, died possessed of certain property, a portion of which was watan land, and left him surviving a widow Ramabai, a daughter Manubai and the plaintiffs, who were his brother's sons. Subsequently Ramabai adopted Vishvanath as a son. Manubai (the daughter), who lived with Ramabai and Vishvanath, did not take any steps to dispute the alleged adoption. The plaintiffs now sued for a declaration that the adoption, if made in fact, was invalid, and that they were entitled to succeed to the property of Raghunath on the death of his widow Ramabai.

Held, that as the plaintiffs were entitled under s. 2 of Bombay Act V of 1886 to succeed to the watan property in preference to Manubai after the death of Ramabai, and were the presumptive reversionary heirs after Ramabai to the watan property and the only persons

———4.—Caste.

(1) Caste question—Reg. II of 1827, s. 21—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Majority of caste, right of.—The plaintiffs and defendants were members of the Kutchi Dossa Oswal caste of Hindus residing in Bombay. The plaintiffs alleged that by a resolution of the caste unanimously passed at a caste meeting held on the 19th September, 1893, a committee, of which they were members, was appointed on behalf of the caste for the purpose of preventing Brahmans from attending the feasts of the caste in the caste oart in Bombay, and that on the 16th and 18th July, 1894, by resolutions unanimously passed the members of the caste were strictly prohibited from feasting any Brahman in the caste oart, and the committee was authorized not to allow any casteman wishing to feast Brahmans in the oart, to use the caste oart and caste vessels, and if necessary to take legal steps in the matter. The plaint alleged that the defendants proposed to give a feast in the caste oart to which they had invited Brahmans, and prayed for an injunction and for a declaration that the above resolutions were validly passed and were binding upon the defendants and on the caste. The defendants contended that the subject-matter of the suit was a caste question and not cognizable by a Civil Court, and further that the meetings referred to in the plaint had not been duly convened, and that the resolutions were invalid and not binding on those who were not present and who did not consent to them. They alleged that Brahmans had from time immemorial as a matter of course attended the caste feasts, and they denied that the plaintiffs or any members of the caste had now a right to exclude them. The Court found as a fact that a large majority of the caste were in favour of excluding Brahmans from caste feasts.

Held, that the majority of the caste having arrived at a bona fide decision that the convenience and comfort of the caste were best advanced by the exclusion of the Brahmans from their oart, it was not a case in which the Court could say that the decision was so subversive of the interests of the minority as to amount to a practical confiscation of their property or denial of their rights, and that the Court ought to give effect to it.

The Court accordingly passed a decree in terms of the prayer of the plaint prohibiting the defendants from bringing Brahmans into the oart to dine so long as the resolution of the caste prohibiting the practice continued in force.

The Court does not decline to give effect to the expressed wishes of the majority of a caste as to the management and custody of caste property, which the minority seek to set at naught, by reason of the suit involving a caste question.

In matters relating to the management of caste property and the administration of its affairs the majority of the caste has authority to control the minority. But the Court will not by its decree enable the majority to make a tyrannical use of its power. It would not assist the majority to deprive without cause the minority of their right to use what is the common property of all, or give effect to a resolution passed in violation of the rules of natural justice or of a directly confiscatory nature. (4) Joint family property—Gift—Gift of undivided share by adults of family—Minor co-sharer not a party to gift—Ejectment—Defendant trespasser—Onus of proof—Plaintiff to prove his superior title.—According to Hindu law, under ordinary circumstances a gift by a co-parcener of his undivided share in immoveable property is invalid, and a minor's share cannot be given away by a manager except in case of necessity or for certain specified purposes.

Certain land which was joint family property was given by the adult members of the family to the plaintiff as the worshipper of a deity. A minor co-parcener did not join in the gift. The plaintiff sued the occupier for possession.

Held, that the plaintiff could not recover. The gift not being made from necessity, or for the performance of any pious duties obligatory on the minor or the family, was invalid, and could not be given effect to even with respect to the shares of the donors. ..

If the son against whom the decree is sought to be executed as representative of his father takes the objection that the debts are tainted with immorality, he can do so under s. 244 of the Civ. Pro. Where a decree for partition is silent about mesne profits subsequent to the institution of the suit, a party is at liberty to assert his right to such profits by a separate suit. In 1881 the youngest son, Jugmohandas, filed a suit for partition (No. 444 of 1881) against his father and his two brothers. Being apprehensive that his other sons (the plaintiffs) might make a similar claim, Sir Mangaldas on the 28th June, 1881, entered into an agreement with them (the plaintiffs) which recited (inter alia) that he (Sir Mangaldas) alleged that the only ancestral immoveable property belonging to him was the property specified in Part I of the sch. I annexed to the agreement, but that the plaintiffs (his sons) alleged that the immoveable property specified in Part II of that schedule was also ancestral property and provided (inter alia) that, in consideration of the terms and conditions therein set forth, his sons (the plaintiffs) would not "claim a partition of the said property" during the lifetime of the said Sir Mangaldas.

The terms of this agreement were duly observed by the plaintiffs during their father's lifetime, and they continued to reside with him until his death.

In the interval, however, viz., in 1886, the partition suit (No. 444 of 1881) brought by Jugmohandas was decided, and by the decree it was declared that the immoveable property specified in sch. I of the aforesaid agreement was not ancestral property, but was the self-acquired property of Sir Mangaldas.

On the 9th March, 1890, Sir Mangaldas died, leaving a will dated 27th January, 1888. By this will he directed that his executors and trustees should take possession of all his property both ancestral and self-acquired, and, after referring to the agreement of the 28th June, 1881, and to the property in Part I of the schedule thereto, continued: "Whereas it has been decided by the Court of first instance, and such decision has been confirmed by the Appellate Court, that such property (i.e., the property in Part I) is not ancestral property, yet I am unwilling to disturb the said deed as between my said two sons, and I, therefore, hereby confirm the same." Then after making some other provisions he devised and bequeathed to his trustees "all the residue of my self-acquired property," and he directed that such residue when ascertained and realised should be handed over to the Chancellor and Senate of the Bombay University to be devoted to the founding of scholarship.

As directed by the will, the executors took possession of all the testator's property, including the property in Part I of the said schedule. This last named property was subsequently, viz., in December, 1890, conveyed by the executors to the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs now sued the executors, contending that the properties in Part I of the schedule to the agreement being ancestral under the agreement and will, they (the plaintiffs) were entitled not only to them, but to all the accumulations and accretions thereof, which amounted in value to about ten lakhs of rupees. The University, on the other hand, contended that the accumulations and accretions formed part of the self-acquired property of the testator, and went to the University under the residuary clause of the will.

Held (1) that the effect of the agreement was to make the property specified in Part I of the schedule thereto ancestral property as between the parties to the agreement.

(2) That the agreement was confirmed by the will, and was binding on the executors.

(3) That, although the corpus of the said property became ancestral under the agreement, the accumulations and accretions thereof did not. They were the self-acquired property of the testator, and passed to the trustees under the residuary clause of the will.

The plaintiffs had subsequently to the death of Sir Mangaldas taken possession of the properties in question, and had paid probate duty on them. The plaintiffs had taken conveyances from the executors and had given releases to the executors, and in a previous suit (No. 670 of 1892) the first plaintiff had in his evidence stated that he did not wish to dispute the will, and that he had elected to take under it.

Held, that by their conduct the plaintiffs had elected to take the properties in question under the will, and could not maintain a suit for an account of the rents and profits either under or in opposition to the will.

Held, also, that the sons of the plaintiffs (the minor defendants) were bound by the acts of the plaintiffs. The property in question was not really ancestral. It was only such for the purpose and by virtue of the agreement of 28th July, 1881, and the plaintiffs were entitled to waive it or rescind it if they pleased, and their sons could not prevent them from doing so. When the minor arrives at full age, he may apply to have the division set aside if it can be shown to be illegal or fraudulent, or even if it was made in such an informal manner that there are no means of testing its validity.

Where fraud is charged against the defendant, the plaintiff must set forth the particulars of the fraud which he alleges.

A suit to set aside a deed of partition on the ground of fraud is governed by art. 91 or 95, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and must be brought within three years after the minor plaintiff has attained majority according to s. 7 of the Act. CHANVIRAPA v. DANAVA, 19 B. 593 ... 396

(3) Suit by minors for partition—In what cases such a suit can lie—Malversation.—Under the Hindu law a minor co-parcener cannot sue for partition unless his interests are (1) likely to be advanced thereby, or (2) protected from danger.

Where an adult co-parcener has taken up a hostile position to the interests of minor co-parceners and denied their rights, or sets up his own independent title, or where the minors live separately and the adult co-parcener does not support them, in all these cases it is in the interest of the minors that their share shall be partitioned and set apart.

The plaintiffs, who were minors, sued by their next friend for a partition of their ancestral property in the possession of their step-brother, the defendant. It appeared that soon after their father's death disputes and differences arose between plaintiff's mother and their step-brother, which led to their separation in food and residence. The defendant managed the family property, but did not support the minors out of the rents and profits thereof. Hence the suit.

Held, that though no malversation was alleged or proved, the allegation, in the plaint of disputes and separate residence and defendant's failure to support the plaintiffs were sufficient to justify the Court in permitting the plaintiffs to maintain the suit. MAHADEV v. LAKSHMAN, 19 B. 99 ... 66 originally held by A and B as tenants in common, and they divided the income according to their respective shares. After A's death, his widow adopted Chitko on condition that she was to remain in absolute possession and enjoyment for her life, and that Chitko was to succeed to the estate after her death. The widow mortgaged 9 out of the 12 thikans, sold one, and granted a perpetual lease of another to the defendant. All these alienations to the defendant were made without any legal necessity. The defendant also purchased B's share in the thikans in dispute. The plaintiff purchased Chitko's rights, and on the widow's death sued to set aside her alienations and to obtain joint possession with the defendant of all the thikans. The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the widow's alienations were valid and binding on the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff's remedy was a partition suit.

Held, that A's widow, not having higher powers than those of an ordinary Hindu widow who succeeds as heir to her sonless husband could only make valid alienations for purposes warranted by the law. As no legal necessity was shown in respect of the alienations in question, which were made long after disputes had commenced between her and her adopted son, they were not binding on him or his alienee the plaintiff.

Held, also, that plaintiff was entitled to be put into joint possession with the defendant. Both were outside strangers who had purchased the several shares of the separated owners of the thikans in dispute. A partition suit was not, therefore, necessary.

Where on the redemption of a mortgage the mortgagee executed a document which purported to be a notice of attornment to the tenants in occupation of the mortgaged property, containing a recital that the property had been redeemed.

Held, that the document, though unregistered, was admissible in evidence for its own proper purpose of proving the attornment, though not for the purpose of proving that the mortgage charge was satisfied. ANTAJI v. DATTAJI, 19 B. 36 ... 24

A bequest to "the children of R, living at his decease" where some such children are in existence at the date of the will, need not be construed as a gift to a class of which some members might come into existence after the testator's death, when such a construction would manifestly defeat the primary object of the testator.

The right of executors, who have used their own monies for the purposes of the estate to be allowed them in their accounts, cannot be affected by limitation before such accounts are taken.

A direction in a will to trustees to pay a Hindu lady so much of certain dividends as she might from time to time require for her own use and support, &c., and to accumulate the surplus not required by her upon trusts, entitles the legatee to receive, if she requires it, the whole interest as it falls due, but not to claim afterwards amounts which she did not require as they fell due and which have been accumulated, and this is so whether the trust for which accumulation is directed is valid or invalid. (3) Construction — Bequest to executors and trustees in trust for son of testator and his widow—Life-interest—Estate in fee—Control and management of executors and trustees.—Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, a Hindu, by his will bequeathed certain property to his executors and trustees "upon trust for my son Tribhovandas and his heirs from the time of my death to allow him to occupy and use the same, and to enjoy the income thereof, and after the death of my son Tribhovandas, in trust to allow his widow to occupy and use the same and enjoy the income during her life; but if the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas shall die without leaving male issue him surviving, then in trust after the death of the survivor of them without leaving such male issue to my son Purshotamdas and his heirs according to the rules of Hindu law." The sons Tribhovandas and Purshotamdas both survived the testator, and Tribhovaudas (the defendant) had a wife and three sons living at the date of suit. He contended that under the above clause he was absolutely entitled to the property subject to the interest of his widow for her life. The plaintiffs (the executors and trustees) contended that the defendant had only a life interest in the property.

Held, that the defendant Tribhovandas took only an interest for life in the property. The words "in trust for Tribhovan and his heirs," which, standing alone would give the property in fee, were to be read with the words immediately following, which showed a clear intention that Tribhovan should only take a life-interest to be followed by the same interest in his widow, after whom the heirs of Tribhovan would take as purchasers.

Held, also, that the trustees were intended to take the legal estate and to have the control of the property, allowing Tribhovan to enjoy the income of it. F. YORKE SMITH v. TRIBHOVANDAS, 19 B. 401 ... 270

(4) Construction—Gift of residue of income of property "to be used for the purposes of A and B as trustees think proper"—Gift to future children of testator's daughter—Appointment—Power of appointment by will given to daughter in case no children born.—One Jetha Ludhani, a Hindu inhabitant of Bombay by his will directed that his immoveable property in Bombay, should be formed into a trust of which he appointed certain trustees. Out of the net income of the trust the trustees were to pay Rs. 50 to his wife Moti and his daughter Mamu for their personal expenses, and the residue was "to be used for the purposes of my wife Moti and my daughter Mamu and her children in such manner as my trustees think proper." Mamu was thirty years of age at the hearing of the suit and had no children,

Held, that this was a gift of the residue of the net rents in equal shares to Moti and Mamu, and that the survivor of them would be entitled during her life to the entirety of the said rents.

The testator further directed that after Mamu's death the trust was to stand valid during the lifetime of her children, if any, and that afterwards the heirs of such children should divide and receive the property. But, if Mamu had no children, then after the death of Mamu and Moti the trust should become void, and the property was to be delivered to such person as Mamu might by will appoint.

Held (1) that the provisions for the future children (if any) of Mamu failed under the ruling in the Tagore case. If any children should be born, the question would arise as to what would become of the property;

(2) that the direction that the property should be delivered to such person as Mamu should by will appoint, was a valid direction,

A direction in the will of a Hindu, to the following effect "my remaining moveable property shall be dealt with by my son G. according as he may think proper; and when the sons of my son G. shall attain the age of twenty-one years, the same shall be divided and duly received by G. and his sons in equal shares" confers an absolute gift on G. If the gift over to G.'s sons, on their attaining the age of twenty-one years, were valid, the absolute estate of G. would be liable to be divested on a son or sons of G. attaining the age of twenty-one years, and asking for a division; but that gift being clearly void under ss. 101 and 102 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) its insertion has no effect on the words of absolute gift preceding it.

A direction in the will of a Hindu that immoveable property should be retained in the hands of trustees appointed by the will and that the balance of the rents, profits, &c., after the payment of expenses should be used and enjoyed by the testator's son G. in such manner as he might think fit, with a provision empowering the sons of such son to call him to account for the management of the property on attaining the age of twenty-one and with a direct, though void, gift over to the grandsons of such son, confers only a life estate on the son G.,—the vesting the property in trustees, the right of G.'s sons to ask for an account; and the gift over to G.'s grandsons all showing an intention on the testator's part that the enjoyment of the bequest should be of limited duration within the meaning of s. 159 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865).

To constitute a gift by implication in a will there must be a reasonable degree of certainty as to the persons intended to take and the nature of the estates which they are intended to take. A direction that until the son or sons of the tenant for life of immoveable property should attain a certain age, no person on behalf of such son or sons should ask the tenant for life for an account or raise any objection does not sufficiently define the persons to take or the estates in which they are to take to constitute a gift by implication.

It would be difficult, if not impossible, for a Hindu to create by express terms the estates which arise by virtue of the doctrine of Hindu law in regard to the rights of male issue in ancestral property; and even where the hypothesis that the testator intended (under a misapprehension of the law) to create such estate affords a key to the will, and gives an adequate explanation of the various estates which would have to be implied in order to give full effect to the different directions contained in the will, yet if the estates cannot be implied from the words used in the will, the Court cannot create such estates for the testator by implication, since to do so would be to construct a will for him based upon his supposed intention, not on the words which he has used. It was subsequently indorsed at Gwalior by Damodar Sukhlal to the plaintiff at Cawnpore, who sent it to the Bank of Bombay at Bombay for collection. It was to become payable on the 1st June, 1889, but on 23rd April, 1889, the bank presented it to the defendant's firm at Bombay for acceptance, which was refused. The Bank thereupon returned it to the plaintiff at Cawnpore, and it was never presented for payment. On the 16th June, 1891, the plaintiff filed a suit upon the hundi against the defendant at Cawnpore, but on the 18th March, 1893, the plaint was returned to him, the Court holding that it had no jurisdiction. On the 16th April, 1893, the plaintiff filed this suit in the High Court of Bombay. Previously to the filing of the suit the defendant had ceased to carry on business at Bombay.

The defendant contended (1) that the hundi being payable at a fixed date, and not having been presented for payment when due, no cause of action had arisen to the plaintiff. (2) That the Court had no jurisdiction, inasmuch as (a) the defendant was a foreigner and at the date of suit did not carry on business in Bombay, and (b) no part of the cause of action (if any) had arisen in Bombay. (3) That the suit was barred by limitation.

Held, (1) That dishonour by non-acceptance of a hundi payable at a fixed date gives an immediate cause of action against the drawer, and there is no need to wait until the maturity of the huudi or to present it for payment.

(2) That under the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) the dishonour of a hundi by non-acceptance constitutes now, as it has always done, part of the cause of action in a suit against the drawer.

(3) That the Court had jurisdiction under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865.

Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 278, 281, 487, 351—Indian Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vic., C. 21.*—Plaintiffs filed a suit in a Subordinate Court and attached before the judgment some moveable property of the defendant. Before the hearing of the suit, the defendant filed a petition in Bombay under the Insolvency Act, and a vesting order was made. Held, that the Official Assignee was entitled by an application to the Court, in which the suit was filed, to have the attachment raised before the defendant was declared an insolvent.

Where a vesting order is made after attachment, and before decree, the title of the Official Assignee takes effect, and prevents the attaching creditor from obtaining satisfaction of his decree by a sale. for the maintenance according to his position in life, of the insolvent and his family. In December, 1894, on his application for final discharge under s. 60 of the Act, the Official Assignee applied that before the order of discharge was made, judgment should be entered up against him under s. 86 for the amount of his debts. The Commissioner of the Insolvent Court in the exercise of the discretion given to him by the Act ordered judgment to be entered up accordingly. On appeal by the insolvent,

Held, reversing the order, that under the circumstances of the case the discretion of the Commissioner had been improperly exercised and that the order to enter up judgment against the insolvent should be discharged. In the matter of HORMORJI ARDESHIR HORMORJI, 19 B. 776 ... 522

Insurance.

(1) Life insurance—Age of assured—Proof of age—Onus of proof—Mistake in statement of age—Fraud.—A insured his life with the defendant company. By the terms of the policy the declaration of the assured as to his age was made the basis of the contract, and the policy was issued subject to the express condition that, in case any statement contained in the declaration were untrue, the policy should be void. The assurance was also expressly made subject to the regulations and conditions contained in the prospectus of the company. The prospectus contained the following provision with regard to the age of parties insured: "Age admitted in the company's policies in all cases where proof is given satisfactory to the directors. Proof of age can be furnished at any time: if not furnished, it will be necessary on settlement of claim;" and after stating the nature of the "evidence as to age" which the company would accept, the prospectus continued:—"The directors recommend applicants to furnish any of the above as soon as possible and get the age admitted in the policy, as it is required by all soundly conducted companies on settlement of claim if not previously produced. A died, and his administrators claimed the amount of the policy.

Held, that the above condition contained in the prospectus, which must be read into the policy, imposed on the assured, or his representatives, the obligation of giving proof of age before the company could be called upon to pay. If the evidence had been given in the life-time of the assured, and an admission of age was attached to the policy, no further proof would be needed, and the onus of disputing the age would be thrown on the company; but, in the absence of such evidence and of such admission, it lay upon those claiming upon the policy by reasonable proof to satisfy the Court as to the age of the assured.

The prospectus of the company contained a further provision that "policies held by parties on their own lives are indisputable on any ground whatever except fraud."

Held, that this provision did not relieve those claiming upon the policy from the burden of giving proof of age, but it covered a misstatement as to age as well as other misstatements, provided they were not fraudulent. It relieved the assured from the legal effect which an innocent misrepresentation as to age would otherwise have had under the strict terms of the contract. The result, therefore, was that the plaintiffs should give proof of the age of the assured, but, if such proof disclosed nothing more than an innocent mistake as to age on the part of the assured, the policy would not be vitiated. Subject to the above terms of the prospectus, any untruth in the declaration as to the age of the assured would vitiate the contract. The statement as to the age of the assured amounts to a warranty, and the warranty being broken the risk under the policy would not attach. ORIENTAL GOVERNMENT SECURITY LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY v. Judge.

(1) Bias—Possessory suit in a Mamlatdar's Court—Mamlatdar acting in the management of the property under the orders of the Talukdari Settlement Officer—Disqualification of the Mamlatdar as a Judge.—No Judge can act in any matter in which he has any pecuniary interest, nor where he has any interest, though not a pecuniary one, sufficient to create a real bias.

A Mamlatdar who under the orders of the Talukdari Settlement Officer had acted in the management of the property in dispute in a possessory suit before him, was held to have such an interest as to disqualify him from trying the case.

Where an officer of Government has in the course of his executive duties " formed an opinion upon a matter and has acted upon that opinion, or sought to give effect to it as an agent on behalf of a public body which has become a litigant in a cause," the law will presume an interest creating a bias sufficient to disqualify him as a Judge. (2) Religious endowment—Property in British India of a temple outside British India—Right to officiate in such temple—Right to share of such property—Partition.—The plaintiff was a member of a family which had the management and received the income of certain property situate in British India belonging to a temple situate at Ashta in the Nizam's territory. Part of the income was devoted to religious services and part to the support of the family. The plaintiff sued to recover by partition his share of the income and for an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff in celebrating religious worship at the temple when his turn came to officiate. The defendant (his brother) resided at Ashta.

Held, that the right to share in the income followed the devolution of the office and that the Court could not grant the relief prayed for, as the Courts in British India could not execute their decree by putting the plaintiff in possession of his office when his turn came to officiate at the temple which was outside British India.

According to Hindu text-writers as regards public endowments, religious offices are naturally indivisible, though modern custom has sanctioned a departure in respect of allowing the parties entitled to share to officiate by turns and of allowing alienation within certain restrictions. Jury. PAGE

(1) Verdict of jury—Special verdict—Murder—Culpable homicide—Grave and sudden provocation—Loss of self-control—Burden of proving loss of self-control on accused—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 299 and 300—Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 238, 303 and 307—High Court's power of interfering with the verdict of a jury.—The accused was tried for murder. The first verdict of the jury was "guilty of murder under grave and sudden provocation." The Sessions Judge told the jury that it was their duty, after considering the question of provocation, to return a simple verdict of guilty or not guilty. The jury, therefore, brought in a second verdict of "not guilty." The Judge, considering this verdict to be perverse, referred the case to the High Court under s. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

Held, that the direction given to the jury after the first verdict was wrong, as the case fell under s. 238 of the Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882). Although the charge was only one of murder, the jury had a right to bring in a verdict of culpable homicide, if there was grave and sudden provocation so as to deprive the prisoner of the power of self-control.

Held, also that the jury were not bound to find a simple verdict of guilty or not guilty. They might have found a special verdict, or findings on matters of fact to which the Judge applies the law.

Held, also, that the first verdict was a verdict of murder, as the jury did not find that the provocation had destroyed the power of self-control.

It is not a necessary consequence of anger, or other emotion, that the power of self-control should be lost. Except where unsoundness of mind or real fear of instant death is proved, the pressure of temptation is no excuse for breaking the law.

Held, lastly, that the High Court will not interfere with the verdict of a jury unless it is shown to be clearly and manifestly wrong.

A verdict ought to be considered a proper and not a perverse verdict if it is one which reasonable men might find on the facts in evidence. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. DEVJI GOVINDJI, 20 B. 215 ...

Khoti Land—(Concluded). PAGE

One Sadashiv, a sharer in a khoti village, mortgaged his khasgi land appertaining to his share in the khoti to the plaintiff and undertook to pay the Government dues on it. Plaintiff got a decree on his mortgage and in execution the land was sold, and purchased by defendant in the year 1878. In the year 1881 the khoti sharers effected partition. In 1883 defendant took possession of the land. In 1884 and again in 1885 Sadashiv having mortgaged his takshim (share), including the khasgi land to plaintiff, the latter as mortgagee brought a suit to recover makta (fixed) rent in kind payable for the khasgi land purchased by the defendant.

Held, that as the partition between the khoti sharers took place after the execution sale, only the occupancy of the land was sold to the defendant, and that the plaintiff was entitled under the circumstances to recover a fair assessment.

Held, disallowing the defendant's contention as to exemption from payment of the rent, that the agreement by the mortgagor to be responsible for the revenue came to an end with the extinction of the equity of redemption by the Court sale. (1) *Ejectment—Notice to quit—Agricultural land—Tenancy at will—Yearly tenancy—Rent not payable until the end of the year—Construction—Land Revenue Code (Bom. Held that the contract between the parties took the case out of s. 84 of the Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879), and that as the rent would not be payable until the end of the year, the landlord might put an end to the tenancy and demand the land at the end of any year without giving any previous notice of any particular period, but he could not demand immediate possession in the middle of a year. (2) Ejectment—Tenure—Plea by defendant that he held the land by fazendari tenure for building purposes—Permission to build—Counterparts of leases produced by landlord—Execution of counterpart denied by defendant—Ancient documents—Claim of tenant to compensation for buildings erected by him.—In a suit for ejectment brought in 1894 the defendant contended that he held the land on permanent fazendari tenure, and produced a document, dated 1848, by which his predecessor was given permission to build upon the land. The plaintiff (landlord), however, produced the counterparts of a subsequent lease to the same tenant (defendant's predecessor), dated 1851, which created a monthly tenancy and of later one to the defendant himself, dated 1859, creating a yearly tenancy determinable on a month's notice, under which provision this suit was brought. The defendant denied that he had executed this document, and contended that it was not proved. The lower Court held that these documents were admissible as ancient documents, and relying upon them passed a decree for the plaintiff. On appeal, Held, confirming the decree, that having regard to the circumstances, the documents must be held proved, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession of the land.

(5) Lease—Ejectment—Title—Tenant cannot dispute landlord's title.—The plaintiff sued for possession of a certain house, alleging the expiry of the lease (kabulayat) on which the defendants held it as tenants. The Mamlatdar dismissed the suit, being of opinion that the plaintiff had no title to the house when he granted the lease, and the house belonged to the defendants when they passed the lease.

Held, reversing the decree, that the defendants (tenants) having executed the kabulayat could not deny the plaintiff's title as a ground for refusing to give up possession, and the Mamlatdar himself, therefore, could not go into the question. PATEL KILABHAI NARAYANDAS v. HARGOVAN MANSUKH, 19 B. 133 ... 89

(6) Mirasi tenure—Ejectment—Trespasser—Suit by an inamdar to recover possession—Mirasi tenure existing—Right of inamdar against trespasser.—An inamdar sued to eject the defendants from certain lands, alleging them to be trespassers. The Courts found that the lands were mirasi lands, and that one Ganu was mirasdar. The defendants had redeemed a mortgage effected by Ganu and claimed to hold possession as against the plaintiff.

Held, that as the land was found to belong to Ganu as mirasdar, and as his mirasi tenure was still subsisting, the plaintiff as inamdar was not entitled to eject the defendants, whether or not they had any rights as against the mortgagee. VINAYAK JANARDAN v. MAINAI, 19 B. 138 ... 93

(7) Notice to quit—Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879), s. 84—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss 111 and 117—Annual tenancy—Denial of lessor's title prior to suit—Sufficient cause to enable lessor to recover possession without notice to quit—Landlord's right of forfeiture.—In cases not falling under s. 117 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), a denial of the lessor's title prior to suit is, notwithstanding s. 84 of the Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879), a sufficient cause of action to enable the lessor to recover possession without notice to quit.

The object of s. 84 of the Land Revenue Code is to define the nature of contract of tenancy, but the landlord's right of forfeiture arising from denial of his title is no part of the contract of tenancy, but is a right which the law implies in all cases from the relationship of landlord and tenant. If the Legislature had intended to exclude the right of forfeiture in cases of annual tenancies, there would have been express provision to that effect. VENKAJI KRISHNA NADKARNI v. (9) Yearly tenant—Notice to quit—Disclaimer of landlord's title in the course of pleadings—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 111 (b) and 116—Not retrospective.—The sections of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) relating to notice do not apply to suits instituted before that Act came into operation. Before that Act came into operation, a tenant other than a monthly tenant, holding over on the terms of his lease, was entitled to reasonable—that is to say, in the case of lands and in the absence of usage or stipulation to the contrary—to six months' notice to quit.

Disclaimer of a landlord's title after suit brought in the pleadings does not of itself determine the tenancy and render notice to quit unnecessary. AMBABAI v. BHAU, 20 B. 759 ... 1076

Lease.

(1) Assignment—What amounts to—Terms appropriate to freehold and fazendari land—Forfeiture by assignment without license—Waiver of forfeiture, what amounts to—Result of waiver of forfeiture—Damages on forfeiture for breach of covenant to repair.—An assignment by way of mortgage of leasehold property in terms appropriate to fazendari property, the lease and mesne assignments being handed over to the mortgagee on execution of the deed, and a subsequent assignment of the equity of redemption of the same property in terms appropriate to freehold property will, in the absence of any circumstance to lead the assignees to believe that the assignor had any further interest in the property, operate as assignments of the lease.

Where there is a proviso in a lease for forfeiture on assignment without previous license of the lessor, the acceptance by the lessor of rent or insurance premia from the assignee without license or the entering into an agreement with him in respect of repairs operates as a waiver of any and all causes of forfeiture of which the lessor is at the time aware.

Where assignments of leaseholds are invalid as being in breach of a covenant not to assign without previous license and so causing forfeiture of the lease, but are valid in all other respects, on waiver of the forfeiture the assignments become operative, and those taking under them become assignees of the lease with the consent of the lessor, and are subject to all the liabilities of such assignees.

The rule in Joyner v. Weeks, ((1891) 2 Q. B. 31 at p. 43) that when there is a lease with a covenant to leave the premises in repair at the end of the term, and such covenant is broken, the lessee must pay what the lessor proves to be a reasonable and proper amount for putting the premises into the state of repair in which they ought to be left, applies where a term has ceased by forfeiture as well as where it has expired by efflux of time. (3) Limitation Act (XV of 1877), ss 5 and 14—Guardian and minor—Decree against minor—Neglect of guardian to appeal—Leave to appeal granted to minor after attaining majority — Practice—Procedure.—One Kessowji Jadhowji died in 1886 and by his will directed his daughter-in-law Ladkavahoo to adopt Karamsey Madhowji, his nephew's son, and "to this lad at his inheritance" he gave the residue of his property. In a suit filed to have the will construed, a decree was passed on 1st October, 1887, declaring (inter alia) that until his adoption by Ladkavahoo, Karamsey Madhowji was not entitled to any part of the estate. Karamsey Madhowji was then a minor and was represented in the suit by his father and guardian. No appeal was made against the decree, but the guardian and Ladkavahoo began to negotiate with each other as to the sum of money which each should receive out of the testator's residuary estate as the price of giving and receiving the boy in adoption. These negotiations continued until 1890, when Ladkavahoo died, and the adoption directed by the will thus became impossible. In December, 1894, Karamsey Madhowji, alleging that he had only attained majority on the 14th of that month, applied for a review of judgment, but his application was rejected. In March, 1895, he obtained a rule nisi for leave to appeal against the decree of 1st October, 1887. He submitted that the circumstances amounted to " sufficient cause " under s 5 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and that he had not unduly delayed his application after attaining full age.

Held, that the special circumstances did amount to " sufficient cause " under the above section, and that leave to appeal should be granted. The guardian was desirous that the adoption ordered by the decree should take place, hoping that he would obtain a large sum of money for giving the minor in adoption. His interests were, therefore, in conflict with those of the minor, and the interest of the latter were not sufficiently consulted in deciding whether or not to appeal against the decree. (4) Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 60—Deposit—Loan.—The plaintiff claimed to recover from the defendant, who was his grandfather, the sum of Rs. 4,917, which was the amount standing to his credit in an account in the defendant's books. In November, 1869, the plaintiff being then one year old his mother (the defendant's daughter) paid over to the defendant the sum of Rs. 650, and at her request the money was credited in the books of the defendant's firm in the name of her son the plaintiff. A further sum was similarly paid over by her in December, 1871, and at her request was credited to the same account. The plaintiff alleged, and the Court found, that these sums were presents which had been made to him on his birthday and other auspicious occasions. The said sums had been carried over from year to year in the firm's books, the interest being added each year, but no payment had ever been made to the plaintiff, or on his behalf, out of the sum so standing to his credit. Compound interest had been allowed in the account, and on the 9th November, 1893, the amount standing to the credit of the plaintiff was Rs. 4,917.

The plaintiff contended that the money had been paid to, and accepted by, the defendant as a deposit to be held in trust for him. The defendant alleged that the money in question had been lent to him by the plaintiff's mother, and contended that the plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation.

Held, that the plaintiff's claim was not barred. The defendant stood in a fiduciary position to the plaintiff, and, therefore, there was a deposit within the meaning of art. 60 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and limitation did not commence to run until demand. Govindram applied for execution on the 24th November, 1886, and died in May, 1887. Shankarlal attained majority on the 15th December, 1891, and on the 24th July, 1891, applied for execution, no application having been made since November, 1886.

Held, that the application was not barred by limitation. Under s. 231 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), Shankarlal was entitled equally with the other judgment-creditors to apply for execution of the whole decree for the benefit of all the decree-holders; and as he was a minor when the decree was passed, and when the last application for execution was made, he was entitled to the benefit of s. 7 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and could apply for execution within three years of attaining majority. (13) S. 20—Interest—Payment of interest as such—Mortgage—Payment of rents to mortgagee in lieu of interest on debt—Mortgage-deed not registered—Deed not admissible to prove rents paid as interest—Evidence—Practice—Registration Act (III of 1877), ss. 3 and 17.—By a bond dated 15th July, 1872, A assigned to B the "vahivat of assessment" of certain lands belonging to him as security for a loan of Rs. 10,000. The bond provided that B should receive the assessment, and after making certain payments should retain the balance in lieu of interest until the principal debt should be repaid. The bond was not registered. The assessment was duly received by B until April, 1887. In February, 1890, B filed this suit to recover the principal sum from A personally, relinquishing his claim against the land, as the bond was not registered. A pleaded limitation. B contended that the receipt of the assessment in lieu of interest was a payment of "interest as such" within the meaning of s 20 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877 and that the last of such payments having been made within three years before suit his claim was not barred.

Held, that the suit was barred by limitation. The assignment of the "vahavit of assessment" contained in the bond was an assignment of a benefit arising out of immoveable property within the meaning of ss. 17 and 3 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) or else a mortgage; and in either case the bond could not be admitted in evidence, as it was not registered. But it was only by reading the terms of the bond that the Court could gather that the assessment was to be received in lieu of interest. This would be to admit indirectly the provisions of the bond in evidence. Apart from the bond there was no evidence that the plaintiff (B) had been paid "interest as such" within three years of the filing of the suit by the duly authorized agents of the defendants, and the claim was, therefore, barred. (17) Art. 75—Instalments—Payment of debt by instalments—Right to sue for whole debt on default of payment of any instalment—Default in payment—Waiver of right to sue—Proof of waiver—Nature of proof. —On 15th August, 1891, the defendant executed a document admitting that he was indebted to the plaintiffs in the sum of Rs. 2,125 and agreeing to pay the amount in seven instalments, the first (Rs. 401) to be paid in August, 1891, the second on the 28th April, 1892, and the remainder at intervals of six months. The document contained the following clause :—"If any of the instalments is not duly paid, I am to pay the whole amount with interest at eight annas per cent. per annum." The defendant failed to pay the first instalment, which the plaintiffs admitted was now barred, but on the 10th June, 1895, the plaintiffs filed this suit to recover the remainder of the debt and interest. The defendant pleaded that under the above clause the whole sum became due on the failure to pay the first instalment ; that the right to sue which then accrued was never waived, and that the suit was now barred by limitation.

Held, that the plaintiffs having failed to prove waiver of the right of suit which accrued to them in August, 1891, the suit was barred by limitation.

The waiver contemplated by art. 75 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) must be either an agreement between the parties, or such conduct as will itself afford clear evidence of a legal waiver. KANKUCHAND SHIVCHAND v. RUSTOMJI HORMUSJI, 20 B. 109 ... 631

(20) Art. 115—Agreement—Construction.—The plaintiffs were husband and wife, and they were married on the 14th March, 1888. On the day of their marriage the defendant, who was the father of the first plaintiff, gave him a note addressed to his (the defendant's) firm as follows :—

"Do you be pleased to pay Rs. 7,000, namely, seven thousand, for ornaments in respect thereof, together with interest thereon at the rate of Rs. 4, namely four, per one centum per one annum, within a period of 3, namely three years from this day."

The plaintiff took this note to the defendant's firm, and in return received the following document addressed to himself :—

"You sent one 'chithi' (note) for Rs. 7,000, namely, seven thousand, on me. The sum which your father Set Mancherji Bomanji Panthaki caused to be paid to you in respect of the ornaments appertaining to your marriage has been credited to your account, bearing interest at 4, namely four, per cent. For the same this 'receipt' has been given in writing.

No money was actually paid by the defendant to the plaintiffs, and none was lodged with the defendant's firm by the plaintiffs, but subsequently to the above transaction an account was kept in the defendant's books, in which the first plaintiff was duly credited with interest every year. In March, 1894, the plaintiff demanded from the defendant the amount standing to his credit on this account. The defendant pleaded limitation.

Held, that the purpose for which the money was to be paid, viz., the purchase of ornaments for the wife, indicated that it was the intention of the parties that payment should not be made until the plaintiffs were prepared to purchase ornaments and that until then the money should remain with the defendant's firm. The intention was that the money should not be paid until the plaintiffs required it for the purpose for which it was destined, and demanded it. The contract was not broken until the plaintiffs demanded the money, which they did in March, 1894. Article 115 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applied to the case, and the suit was not barred MANCHERJI BOMANJI v. NUSSERWANJI MANCHERJI, 20 B. 8 ... 563

(21) Arts. 132 and 147—Bond—Mortgage—Security pledge (taran gahan) —Hypothecation—Charge — Simple mortgage without possession—Limitation.—Where a bond given for a loan contained the following condition as to security and repayment of the money :—

"The security pledge (taran gahan) for this is our own property, Survey Nos. 170 and 778 in the village Ped, on all the land of which two numbers do you take satisfaction for the said money; and if it should be insufficient, I will personally make satisfaction."

Held, that the transaction was a mortgage governed by art. 147, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and not a charge governed by art. 132. DATTO DUDHESHVAR v. VITHU, 20 B. 408 (F. B.) 835

(22) Art. 134—Mortgage—Decree obtained by mortgagee for possession until payment of mortgage debt—Possession taken by mortgagee under decree—Continuance after decree of relation of mortgagor and mortgagee—Sale by mortgagee—Vendor and purchaser—Subsequent suit for redemption by mortgagor against mortgagee and his vendee—Plea by vendee of purchase for value without notice—Bona fides, meaning of—Purchaser, meaning of, in art. 134.—A decree on a mortgage having directed the mortgagor to give possession to the mortgagee until the payment of the mortgage debt and costs found due, the mortgagee entered into possession and subsequently sold the property to a third party. More than twelve years after the sale, the mortgagor brought a redemption suit both as against the mortgagee and the purchaser.

Held that the suit (as against the purchaser) was barred under art. 134, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and that notwithstanding the decree for possession, the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee continued, whether under the original mortgage or the decree.

Absence of bona fides as distinguished from actual knowledge of the vendor's title does not prevent the purchaser from claiming the benefit of art. 134, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). In order to give the purchaser the benefit of art. 134, the purchase need not be bona fide in the sense of being without "constructive notice" of the restricted nature of the vendor's title, but the term "purchaser" in that article is meant a person who purchases that which is de facto a mortgage upon the representation made to him and in the belief that it is an absolute title. Twenty years afterwards (13th May, 1888) she adopted a son, who in 1890 brought the present suit to recover the alienated property.

Held, that the suit was not barred by limitation.

Per FARRAN, J.—Whether art. 140 or art. 144 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applied to the case, the suit was not barred; for if it fell under art. 140, the possession of the defendants adverse to the widow could not affect the plaintiff's rights, and if it fell, as it seemed to do, under art. 144, the possession of the defendants did not become adverse to the plaintiff until he became entitled to possession of the property upon his adoption.

Per CANDY, J.—The suit was governed by art. 144, under which the period of limitation began to run from the time when the possession of the defendants became adverse to the plaintiff on his adoption in 1888. Assuming that the possession of the defendants was adverse to the widow, that fact did not affect the plaintiff, who did not derive his right to sue from or through her. MORO NARAYAN JOSHI v. The fact that the reversioner has made an unsuccessful application for possession in execution proceedings against the widow, and has not sued under s. 283 of the Civ. Pro. (28) Art. 144—Adverse possession—Symbolical possession—Effect of symbolical possession against third parties—Auction purchaser—His right to tack on his own possession to that of judgment-debtor.—The property in dispute belonged to one Dhondi. He sold it to Arjun on 25th April, 1873, but did not put the vendee into possession. On 18th April, 1883, Arjun sold the property to the plaintiff.

On 4th June 1883, in execution of a money-decree against Dhondi the property was put up to sale as his and was purchased by the defendants, who were put into possession by the Court on 26th March, 1885.

On 28th March, 1885, the plaintiff sued Arjun and Dhondi's wife (Dhondi being then in prison) to recover possession of the property. A decree was passed, in execution of which he obtained symbolical possession through the Court on 8th February, 1886. When he sought to take actual possession, he was resisted by the defendants.

Thereupon the plaintiff filed the present suit on 19th December, 1889, to obtain actual possession of the property from the defendants.

Held, that the suit was barred under art. 144 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The defendants had a right to tack on the period of their own adverse possession as against the plaintiff to that of Dhondi's adverse possession as against Arjun. The symbolical possession obtained by the plaintiff did not break up the continuity of the adverse possession of the defendants and the person through whom they derived their title. HARJIVAN v. (29) Arts. 170, 178—Pauper—Application for leave to appeal in forma pauperis—Practice—Procedure.—Plaintiffs filed a suit for partition, which was dismissed on 9th December, 1890. On the 17th March, 1891, plaintiffs presented an appeal to the High Court on a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 10.

On 18th January, 1892, the High Court held that the memorandum of appeal was insufficiently stamped, being chargeable with an ad-valorem stamp on the value of plaintiffs' share.

On 16th February, 1892, plaintiffs applied for leave to appeal in forma pauperis. This application was granted ex-parte.

At the hearing of the appeal, however, the respondent contended that the pauper appeal was time-barred.

Held, that the application for leave to appeal in forma pauperis having been presented beyond the thirty days allowed by art. 170 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), was barred by limitation. The pauper appeal could not, therefore, be proceeded with. Article 178 of the Limitation Act had no application to the present case. MAHADEV BALVANT v. LAKSHMAN BALVANT, 19 B. 48 ... 33 interest by attachment of the mortgaged property and not by sale, execept in case of its being held that the property was not liable to attachment.

On 12th October, 1874, A applied for execution of the decree, and thereupon the mortgaged property was attached and placed under the management of the Collector, who paid the proceeds from time to time into Court till 1891. The Court paid the proceeds to A on 25th February, 1876, 5th February, 1877, and 7th October, 1877.

In 1878, A being dead, his son C applied to the Court to be made a party to the record and to be allowed to continue the execution proceedings.

In 1880, C applied to the Court under s. 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) to issue notice to D, as B's heir and legal representative, to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him. D did not appear, and an ex-parte order was passed for execution to proceed as against him.

The Collector continued in management till 5th February, 1892, when the application (darkhast) of 1874 was withdrawn and a fresh application was made by C on 12th June, 1892.

D resisted on the ground that the application was time-barred under art. 179 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

Held, that the application of 1892 was not barred by limitation, as the execution proceedings under the first darkhast of 1874 were continuously going on during the whole period that the Collector's management lasted under the orders of the Court, and as each year's payment received by the decree-holder was but a partial step in aid of execution of the decree.

Held, further, that the applications made by C in 1878 and 1880 were also "steps in aid of execution" within the meaning of art. 179, cl. 4 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). KESHAVLAL BECHAR v. PITAMBERDAS TRIBHUVANDAS, 19 B. 261 ... 177

The process fee for service of the notice being deficient, the decree-holder paid the deficiency on 29th August, 1890. On the 22nd August, 1893, the decree-holder presented a fresh application for execution.

Held, that the second application for execution was time-barred. The payment of the additional Court-fee was not "a step in aid of execution of a decree" within the meaning of cl. 4, art. 179 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). DWARKANATH APPAJI v. ANANDRAO RAMCHANDRA, 20 B. 179 ... 678

Lunacy.

Act XXXV of 1858, ss. 15, 16, 17, 18 and 20—Hindu lunatic—Guardian—Manager—Joint member of the lunatic's family, appointed manager of the lunatic's estate, not bound to render account—Manager charged with mismanagement is entitled to have particulars of the charges made against him—Order or certificate of appointment.—The manager of a Hindu lunatic's estate appointed under Act XXXV of 1858, who is in possession with others of joint family property, is not, in his capacity of manager of the lunatic's estate, bound by the provisions of s. 15 of the Act to exhibit an inventory and account of the family property. The lunatic is possessed of no property for which the manager is liable to account. It does not make any difference if the manager is himself a joint owner or not. The Act provides no machinery, nor does it confer any power upon the Court, to deal with the joint family property or interfere in the affairs of a joint family.

If a manager is charged with mismanagement he is entitled to some particulars of the charges made against him.

In all cases of lunacy in which a guardian or a manager of the lunatic's estate is appointed by the Court under the Act, it is desirable to issue a formal order or certificate of appointment. TRIMBAKLAL GOVANDAS v. HIRALAL, 20 B. 659 ... 1007

(1) Limitation—Striking out lunatic plaintiff's name—Restoration of name—Suit by person not adjudged to be of unsound mind under Act XXXV of 1858 - Practice—Procedure.—A plaint as originally framed contained the name of Kirparam, stated to be of unsound mind, as first plaintiff and of his wife Nathi as his guardian and second plaintiff. When the plaint was actually filed, Kirparam's name was struck out by the pleader and Nathi. Subsequently his name was restored on his own application, but the period of limitation prescribed for the suit had then elapsed. The first Court held that under s. 7 of the Limitation Act the plaintiffs claim was not barred. On appeal, the Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the order of the first Court restoring Kirparam's name was bad, and that the suit was time-barred at the date of that order. On second appeal, Held, reversing the decree that the pleader and Nathi acted beyond their authority in striking out Kirparam's name, and that, therefore, the restoration of his name must relate back to the filing of the suit, which was, therefore, not barred.

Quære—Whether a person of unsound mind, but not adjudged to be so under Act XXXV of 1858, can in this country sue by his next friend. KIRPARAM JUMEKRAM MODIA v. MODIA DAYALJI JUMEKRAM, 19 B. 135 ... 91

(2) Lunatic's estate—Act XXXV of 1858, s. 14—Manager appointed under the Lunacy Act—Manager of joint family—Alienation by manager. Where a person is appointed manager of a lunatic's estate under Act XXXV of 1858, he can only make a valid alienation in accordance with the provisions of that Act, although he may also be de facto manager of the family property.

A Hindu married woman having a lunatic husband and minor sons was appointed guardian of the lunatic's estate under Act XXXV of 1858 She was also de facto manager of the family. She mortgaged the family property without the sanction of the Court, as required by s. 14 of the Act.

Held, that the mortgages were invalid as regards the lunatic's interest in the property, but as regards the interest of the minors, which was vested in them at the time of the mortgages, the property being ancestral, the mortgages were binding if made for family purposes. (2) Minors—Mortgage by widow—Widow—Right to mortgage shares of minors.—In 1884 one Ismail Ebrahim, a Mahomedan, died intestate, leaving a widow, two sons and two daughters. At the time of his death he was the owner of a certain house in Bombay. After his death his widow and his eldest son Ebrahim (without the consent of the other children who were minors) mortgaged the said house to the defendant. In 1894 a younger son and one of the daughters of Ismail filed this suit, praying that their shares in the house might be ascertained and declared; that the house should be sold, and their shares in the proceeds handed over to them. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff's mother and adult brother Ebrahim had mortgaged the house to him in 1891 as a security for a loan of Rs. 3,500 which they wanted to pay off debts incurred in rebuilding the house and to defray the marriage expenses of the said Ebrahim. He contended that the mortgage was binding on the plaintiffs, having been made for the benefit of the family, and that, if not, the plaintiffs were bound to pay him the money due to him before claiming any share in the house.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to their shares in the said house free and discharged of the mortgage executed to the defendant.

The Mahomedan law makes no provision with regard to mortgages, as such transactions are, strictly speaking, unlawful, as they involve the payment of interests. As, however, mortgages do now exist among Mahomedans, they must be governed by the rules applicable to sales. To authorize a sale by the guardian of a Mahomedan minor, there must be an absolute necessity for the sale, or else it must be for the benefit of the minor. The money raised by the mortgage in question was not raised for any purpose specially authorised by Mahomedan law and the purpose for which it was raised was not for the benefit of the minor. Consequently, the widow had no authority to mortgage their shares. HURBAI v. HIRAJI BYRAMJI SHANJA, 20 B. 116 ... 636

(2) Procuring wrongful execution of a warrant of arrest—Reasonable and probable cause.—The plaintiff sued the Municipal Commissioner of Bombay for damages, alleging that the Commissioner had maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause procured a warrant to be issued against him on 24th March, 1892, and subsequently procured that warrant to be executed at a time when its force was spent, and under circumstances when it ought not to have been executed. From the evidence it appeared that on the 21st December, 1891, a notice was served on the plaintiff under s. 232 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act (III of 1888) requiring him to do certain drainage work upon premises belonging to him. The work not having been done, a summons was issued against him on the 11th February, 1892, requiring him to appear before the Presidency Magistrate to answer a charge of not having complied with the above notice. The summons was returnable on the 25th February, 1892, and on that day the plaintiff appeared, but the hearing was postponed until the 24th March, 1892. On the 27th February, 1892, the plaintiff wrote to the defendant objecting to the nature of the work he was required to do, and adding "after this explanation, I will leave the matter in the hands of the Drainage Department to do the work, and will pay the expenses" In reply to this letter the Executive Engineer on the 21st March informed the plaintiff that he must appear in Court on the 24th March, and also requested him to "take the work in hand at once and complete it within the time now allowed." On the 22nd March, 1892, the plaintiff replied by letter stating that he did not understand the work, and asking the Municipality to get it done, he offering to pay the expense. The letter ended as follows:—I do not see any reason now to attend in Police Court on 24th instant, as I am ready and willing to do the work." The plaintiff did not attend the Court on the 24th March. On that same day (24th) a letter signed by the Municipal Commissioner was delivered to the plaintiff, dated the 23rd March, informing him that a "fresh summons" had been issued against him for not complying with the requirements of the notice served on him. The Courts held that the non-appearance of the plaintiff on the 24th March was not caused by the receipt of this letter. On the 24th idem, in consequence of the non-appearance of the plaintiff in obedience to the summons, a warrant of arrest was issued against him. The date originally inserted in the warrant for the plaintiff's appearance before the Magistrate was the 7th April, but this date was subsequently altered to the 2nd June. There was no evidence as to how or by whom this alteration was made. The plaintiff having heard on the 25th March of the issue of the warrant appeared next day (the 26th) before the Magistrate and surrendered, showing to the Magistrate the defendant's letter of the 23rd March and explaining why he had not attended on the 24th. A note was made of his surrender and he was told by the Magistrate to appear on the 7th April. The plaintiff, however, did not get the warrant cancelled. He stated that at the office of the Presidency Magistrate's Court he was informed that the warrant was with the Municipality, and that he then went away and did nothing more. On the 7th April, the Municipal Engineer went to the plaintiff's premises and pointed out the work that was to be done. He (the plaintiff alleged) told the plaintiff that he need not attend the Police Court that day, as he would get the hearing of the summons postponed for a fortnight. The plaintiff then instructed a plumber to do the requisite work, which was completed (as plaintiff alleged) on the 26th April and was passed and approved by the Municipal Authorities. The plaintiff swore that he attended the Police Court on the 21st April, but apparently did not bring his appearance to the notice of the Magistrate, as the Municipal officers had left the Court before he arrived. He further stated that he attended again on the 28th April, but was told by a Municipal Inspector that he might go away, as the work was done. Another hearing was apparently fixed on the 19th May, but the case was again adjourned to the 2nd June. On the 31st May, the plaintiff was arrested in execution of the warrant of the 24th March. The evidence was that on that morning, at 8 o'clock, a Municipal Inspector (Hormasji Cursetji) who was not called as a witness at the hearing, accompanied by a police sepoy, went to the plaintiff's house and pointed out the plaintiff to the sepoy, who arrested him and took him in custody to the police station and subsequently before the Magistrate. He was released on depositing Rs. 25 as security for appearing when required. On the 16th June, the plaintiff again appeared in the Police Court when the summons was withdrawn. The plaintiff claimed Rs. 10,000 as damages for malicious prosecution, wrongful arrest and detention in custody and false imprisonment.

The defendant denied that he had applied for or obtained the warrant for the plaintiff's arrest, or that he or his servants had anything to do with the arrest or was responsible for it, save that a Sub-inspector who knew nothing of the warrant had pointed out the plaintiff to a police officer at the latter's request. He further denied that the proceedings were malicious and without reasonable and probable cause. The lower Court (Starling, J.) held that the defendant was liable for the wrongful execution of the warrant against the plaintiff and awarded the latter Rs. 500. On appeal, Held, affirming the decree of the lower Court, that the defendant was liable. On the 28th April at any rate, the warrant in question was a spent warrant and could not be properly executed, as it was, on the 31st May. As the warrant was issued by the Magistrate of his own accord, the defendant could not be liable for its execution (as shown by the case of West v. Smallwood (3 M. and W. 418) unless he or his subordinates took an active part in executing it. The mere circumstance that the plaintiff was pointed out to the police officer who executed the warrant by a Municipal Inspector might not of itself amount to taking an active part. But there were special circumstances which should be taken into consideration in conjunction with it. The length of time which elapsed before the warrant was executed, and the alteration of the date in the direction contained in the warrant as to taking bail, not explained in any way and which could not have been made by the police, pointed to the warrant having been, if not in the actual keeping of the Municipal authorities at any rate under their control, and to the police having been set in motion by them. Under these circumstances, it was incumbent on the defendant to give rebutting evidence, and more especially to call the Municipal Inspector to explain the circumstances under which he pointed out the plaintiff to the police officer who executed the warrant. ACWORTH v. SHAVAKSHA DHUNJIBHAI, 19 B. 495 ... 324

Act* III of 1876)—Jurisdiction of Mamlatdar—Irregular decree of Mamlatdar made by consent of parties—Subsequent refusal by Mamlatdar to order execution of decree—Extraordinary jurisdiction of High Court—Questions of fact—Practice—Procedure.—The applicant brought two possessory suits against the opponent in the Mamlatdars' Court for the recovery of certain pieces of land. By consent, decrees were passed in these suits, that unless the opponent paid a certain sum of money to the applicant within two months, the latter should get possession. After the expiration of two months the applicant, alleging that the money had not been paid as agreed, applied for execution of the decrees. The Mamlatdar found that the money had been tendered to the applicant, but had been wrongfully refused by him. He ordered execution to issue as to costs, but declined to make any order as to possession. The applicant thereupon applied to the High Court in its extraordinary jurisdiction and alleged that the money had not been duly tendered.

Held, that the decrees were such as the Mamlatdar could not legally make under the provisions of the Mamlatdars' Act (Bom. Act III of 1876), and the consent of parties could not give him power to do so.

Held, also, that the High Court would not go into the question as to the due tender of the money. It was not open to the High Court, in the exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction, to go into this question of fact, nor would it be proper to further the execution of an irregular decree, especially as the applicant had a clear remedy by suit. (3) Mamlatdars' Act (Bom. Act III of 1876), s. 17—Decree passed by Mamlatdar—Execution—Execution of Mamlatdar's decree by Mamlatdar under directions of Collector.—A Mamlatdar having under the direction of the Collector executed a decree passed by himself directing the removal of a dam.

Held, that though it might be improper for the Collector to issue such a direction, which legally could only issue from the High Court, the High Court would not set aside the execution if otherwise valid. S. 17 of the Mamlatdars' Act (III of 1876) is imperative, and leaves to the Mamlatdar no discretion as to the duty of enforcing the decree. The Act does not purport to provide detailed rules as to applications for execution, and a Mamlatdar's Court is not governed as to execution of decrees by the ordinary rules of procedure; and provided the procedure followed gives effect in the end to the intention of s. 17, the Court will not interfere.

Held, also, that under s. 17 of the Mamlatdars' Act III of 1876 a Mamlatdar was not precluded from himself supervising the execution of a decree in a case in which the village officers were from interest or other cause unlikely to give proper effect to it. RAKHMA v. TULAJI, 19 B. 675 ... 451

It was contended that two of the defendants, parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, being then minors were not properly represented by their mother. Gangabai, also a party defendant to the suit, she not having obtained a certificate of administration under Act XX of 1864, and that the decree did not, therefore, bind them, and also that the decree was in respect of debts contracted by Vishnu Bhikaji for immoral and improper purposes.

Held, that s. 2 of Act XX of 1864 did not apply, as though Gangabai had not obtained a certificate she did not claim charge of the estate.

Held, also, that an issue having been raised and determined in the suit in which the decree was passed that Gangabai did represent the minors as guardian for the suit, and as the decree expressly named them as sued by Gangabai, their guardian, the minors were expressly made parties and were properly represented by Gangabai.

Held, also, that proof of immoral habits in the debtor did not throw the onus on to the plaintiff and oblige him to prove that the debt was not incurred for an immoral or illegal purpose. VASUDEV v. KRISHNAJI, 20 B. 534 ... 921

Act XX of 1864 gives no power to a guardian or administrator to bind his ward by personal covenants.

Minor—(Continued). PAGE

A guardian appointed under Act XX of 1864 can pledge the property of his ward for purposes beneficial to the minor, but not as a security for money previously borrowed which the minor was under no obligation to pay.

Under s. 29 of Act XX of 1864 a guardian cannot contract a debt for the marriage of his ward without the sanction of the Court.

Debts contracted by the guardian of a minor for a pilgrimage not undertaken in the discharge of an urgent spiritual duty, which it was obligatory on him to perform, are not necessaries for which the minor would be held liable.

A guardian has no authority to acknowledge a debt on behalf of his ward so as to give the creditor a fresh start for the period of limitation, as he is not an agent on the part of his ward within the meaning of s. 19 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). (6) Infant—Decree against minor—Review—Right of minor to impeach decree—Practice—Procedure.—One Kessowji Jadowji in his will directed his daughter-in-law Ladkavahu (defendant No 1) to adopt his nephew Karamsi Madhowji (defendant No. 2), and he devised the residue of his estate to him. The executors of Kessowji's will subsequently brought this suit to have the will construed and the rights of Karamsi Madhowji in the testator's estate ascertained and declared. A decree was made on the 1st October, 1887, by which it was declared that Karamsi's adoption was a condition precedent to his inheritance, and that, unless he was adopted, he was not entitled to any part of the testator's property. On 22nd October, 1894, Karamsi Madhowji (defendant No. 2) filed a petition of review, stating that at the date of the decree he was a minor and had only recently, viz., on the 14th December, 1884, attained the age of eighteen years. He contended that there was error apparent on the face of the decree, inasmuch as it did not provide that he should have an opportunity of showing cause against it in so far as it affected his interests after he attained his majority.

Held, that the review could not be granted. The Courts in India after deciding an issue in which an infant, party to a suit, is interested, have no power to reserve to the infant the right of questioning such decision. At all events a decree is not erroneous for not containing such a provision when the issue in which the infant is interested has been fully gone into and argued before the Court. A decree passed against an infant properly represented is binding upon him like a decree passed against an adult, but it is open to the infant to impeach such decree by a suit in cases where his guardian has been guilty of fraud or negligence in allowing the decree to be passed against him. property is brought to sale in execution of a decree against the widow or some of the heirs of the mortgagor, and the whole property is sold, then the heirs not brought on the record cannot be permitted to raise the objection that they are not bound by the sale simply because they are not parties to the record. This principle of law applies as much to a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law as to a Mahomedan family.

One Nur Saheb mortgaged his property in 1862 to Bhimaji and died in 1864, leaving a widow, a son and two daughters. In 1864 Bhimaji (the mortgagee) sued the minor son represented by his mother for possession as owner under the gahan lahan clause, and got a decree on 30th September, 1864, and obtained possession in 1865. To this suit the daughters of Nur Saheb were not parties. Bhimaji held the land till 1887 and then sold it to Somana (defendant No. 2). In 1890 Nur Sheb's daughter brought this suit against Bhimaji and Somana to redeem the mortgage of 1862, contending that they were not bound by Bhimaji's suit in 1864, not having been parties to it.

Held, that the plaintiffs could not redeem. They were bound by the decree obtained by the mortgagee in 1864. DAVALAVA v. BHIMAJI DHONDO, 20 B. 338 ... 787

The defendant was in possession as mortgagee under a subsequent registered mortgage of 1867. He was not a party to the suit and decree of 1887. The plaintiff sued for possession. The defendant claimed that the plaintiff could not recover possession without paying off his (the defendant's) claim.

Held, that at the execution sale the plaintiff bought the property in dispute free from all subsequent incumbrances, subject only to the right of the defendant, if he so desired, to retain possession.

Held, also, that the plaintiff as purchaser stood in the place of the prior mortgagee and had a right to possession; that the defendant as subsequent mortgagee could not compel the plaintiff to pay off his (the defendant's) mortgage, but that the defendant not having been a party to the suit on the prior mortgage had a right, if he wished to retain possession, to pay off the plaintiff's claim.

both plots was sold in execution of a decree against him and was purchased by the plaintiff. In 1877 Babaji and his two brothers sold plot 1 to the defendants Nos. 3—6, who at once paid off the mortgage of 1870 and took possession. On the 11th February, 1877, the three brothers paid off the mortgage of 1874 of plot 2 and in the same month mortgaged that plot to the defendants with possession. On 26th August, 1890, the plaintiff sued for possession of Babaji's share by partition and redemption if necessary.

Held, that the suit was barred by art. 137 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). Babaji became entitled to possession of his share of plot 1 in 1877 when the mortgage of 1870 was paid off by the defendants, and their possession had been since then adverse to the plaintiff. As to plot 2, Babaji had become entitled to possession of his share therein on the 11th February, 1877, when the mortgage of 1874 was redeemed. GANESH v. RAMCHANDRA, 20 B. 557 ... 937

Held, that if the sale took place owing to the mortgagee's default, it would not affect the mortgagor's right to redeem.

The general rule, that a Government sale for arrears of revenue gives a title against all the world, is subject to the exception that if it is caused by the default of a mortgagee, it does not take away the mortgagor's right to redeem the mortgage to recover the land. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 27.*—A defendant who has assigned all his rights in the subject-matter of the suit, and has no longer any interest in it, has no right to be made a co-plaintiff.

A plaintiff who has no right of action when he brings his suit cannot remedy the defect and acquire the right by joining with him persons who have the right of action.

The right of redemption and the right of foreclosure are always co-extensive, and from the postponement of the former the Court will infer an intention to postpone the latter in the absence of express provision on the point; where there is such express provision, giving the mortgagee power to foreclose at any time, any stipulation postponing the mortgagor's right to redeem is unilateral and void of consideration.

A Court of Equity will not enforce any agreement in restraint of the right of redemption which is oppressive and unreasonable as giving the mortgagee an advantage not belonging to the contract of mortgage.

A mortgagor cannot, by any contract entered into with the mortgagee at the time of the mortgage, give up his right of redemption or fetter it in any manner by confining it to a particular time or a particular description of persons. SAYAD ABDUL HAK v. GULAM JILANI, 20 B. 677 ... 1021 taken by the plaintiff within time to make his legal representatives parties. The suit was, however, allowed to be continued against defendant No. 2 and a redemption decree was passed in plaintiff's favour.

Held, on second appeal, that defendant No. 2 being the sub-mortgagee and not the assignee of defendant No. 1, on the death of the latter no cause of action survived to the plaintiff against defendant No. 2, and the suit abated under s. 368 of the Civ. On the 14th December, 1891, the plaintiff gave possession of the land to the Municipality, and on 27th January, 1892, claimed Rs. 60 per square yard as compensation. By letter dated 23rd February, 1892, the Municipal Commissioner (without prejudice) offered Rs. 50 per square yard as compensation, and stated that on the plaintiff producing the title-deeds and papers to establish his title, the necessary documents in connection with the payment would be prepared. Nothing further took place in the matter until the 14th February, 1894, on which date the plaintiff wrote a letter to the Municipal Commissioner in which without mentioning any sum he requested the payment of the amount which might be due to him as compensation for his land taken by the Municipality. The Commissioner refused to pay the compensation, contending that the plaintiff's claim was time-barred. The plaintiff thereupon brought this suit claiming Rs. 1,165 (being at the rate of Rs. 50 per square yard) as compensation for the land taken up by the defendant or in the alternative for that sum as damages for the breach of contract to pay purchase money for the land. The defendant pleaded (1) that notice under s. 527 of the Municipal Act III of 1888 was necessary before suit filed, and (2) that the suit was barred by limitation. The Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court found for the defendant with costs and dismissed the suit contingent on the opinion of the High Court.

On a case stated for the High Court,

Held (1) that notice under s. 527 of Act III of 1888 was not necessary, that section not being applicable to suits brought to enforce payment of compensation under s. 301 of the Act;

(2) that the suit was not barred by limitation.

Per FARRAN, J.—A suit against the Municipality of Bombay for compensation for land acquired by the Municipality under s. 299 of Act III of 1888 is not an action of tort or quasi-tort, but a simple action for the price of land, which the terms of s. 301 of the Act impose upon the Commissioner to pay. The obligation to pay that price is of the same nature, (1) whether the owner assents to the valuation of the land placed upon it by the Commissioner, (2) whether the value is determined by the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, or (3) whether it is left undetermined. Section 527 does not apply to any of these three cases. In all of them the obligation to pay is imposed by s. 301 and does not arise from the manner in which the amount of the price to be paid is arrived at.

2. Section 504 prescribes the only mode in which in case of dispute the value of the land can be determined. If the owner of land disputes the Commissioner's valuation he must apply to the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court within a year. If he does not do so, the result is that he loses the power of effectually disputing the Commissioner's valuation, but does not lose his right to the amount of the valuation.

3. The owner of land has a remedy independent of the provisions of s. 504. The section only deals with cases where there is a dispute as to the value of the land, and leaves untouched those cases where there is no such dispute, but where the Commissioner for some reason declines to pay. In such cases the owner is left to his ordinary remedy, no special mode of procedure being prescribed. Cases in which there has been a dispute, but in which the owner abandons his claim to dispute the valuation of the Commissioner, fall within the latter category. MANEKLAL MOTILAL v. Act III of 1888) requiring him to reduce the height of a building which he had erected. The building was completed in June, 1893, and the notice was issued on 13th January, 1894. Raghunath was prosecuted for not complying with this notice. He contended that the notice was time-barred, as it had not been given within three months after the completion of the building. In answer to this plea it was urged, on behalf of the Municipality, that the building could not be said to have been completed, unless and until such accommodations as privies and cesspools had been executed in accordance with the requirements of the Health Department, and that, therefore, the notice was within time.

Held, that the notice was time-barred. The word "completion" in s. 353 of Bombay Act III of 1888 must be taken in its ordinary sense, and the Court cannot read into the section "in accordance with sanitary regulation" or "sanitary officers' opinion." In re RAGHUNATH MAKUND, 19 B. 372 ... 251 Act VI of 1873). The District Judge, on the evidence and having regard especially to the fact that the street in question was protected by a gate closed at night by a polia, or watchman, who lived over the gate, and was under the control of and paid by the owners of the houses in the street, held that there had been no dedication of the land to the public, and that the public had not acquired such a right of going over it as to make it a public street vested in the Municipality. On second appeal by the defendant the High Court refused to interfere with the decision of the lower Court.

In the absence of a definition of a public street in the Bombay District Municipal Act VI of 1873 the High Court refused to apply the definition contained in the City of Bombay Municipal Act III of 1888. AHMEDABAD MUNICIPALITY v. MANILAL UDENATH, 20 B. 146 ... 655

(6) *District Municipal Act (Bom. In this notice plaintiffs did not expressly state their intention to build the wall in dispute.

On the 28th August, 1890, the Municipality wrote to the plaintiffs, requiring them to furnish a plan showing the design of the proposed building with its measurements.

On 30th September, 1890, the plaintiffs, without furnishing the plan as required, built a wall on their land. Thereupon the Municipality gave a notice to the plaintiffs requiring them to pull it down, as it had been built without their permission. The plaintiffs having failed to comply with this notice, the wall was demolished, and its materials were carried away by the Municipal servants. Thereupon the plaintiffs sued the Municipality to recover damages for the wrongful demolition of the wall.

Held, that the plaintiffs had contravened the provisions of cl. 1 of s. 33 of Bombay Act VI of 1873, inasmuch as they had built the wall without giving any notice, or (if they did give notice) without affording the information required by the Municipality. The Municipality were, therefore, justified in ordering the wall to be demolished. DAVE HARISHANKAR v. THE TOWN MUNICIPALITY OF UMRETH, 19 B. 27 ... 18

Partnership.

(1) Death of partner—Subsequent recovery of asset by surviving partner—Suit by administrator of deceased partner against surviving partner for recovered assets—Suit for partnership account—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), ss. 7 and 17—Jurisdiction.—In 1889 one Hemabai, a widow and a partner in a firm carrying on business in partnership with two persons, viz., Goculdas and Bhugwandas (defendants Nos. 1 and 2), in Sind and at Behrin in the Persian Gulf, died, and the partnership was then dissolved. She had no children, but it was alleged that she had adopted one Purshotam, the brother of the second defendant. On the 13th February, 1890, the guardian of one Kissondas, a minor (her husband's nephew), applied to the High Court of Bombay for letters of administration to her estate, alleging that Kissondas was her heir and next of kin. A caveat was filed by her father and others, in which they denied that Kissondas was her heir, and alleged that Purshotam had performed her funeral ceremonies. The matter came on as a suit on the 19th February, 1894, when an order was made, without prejudice to any of the questions raised by the issues, dismissing the application and ordering letters of administration to Hemabai's estate to issue to the Administrator General of Bombay. Letters of administration were accordingly granted to him on the 30th March, 1894.

In the meantime, however, viz., on the 12th April, 1893, Bhugwandas (defendant No. 2) had filed three suits in the High Court of Bombay, in the name of himself and Goculdas (defendant No. 1), as surviving partners of Hemabai's firm, to recover certain debts due to that firm. Disputes subsequently arose between Bhugwandas and Goculdas, and by a consent order of the 22nd July, 1893, it was ordered that any moneys recovered in the said three suits should be paid over to a receiver (defendant No. 3), to be held by him until further order. On the 1st August, 1893, consent decrees were passed in the above three suits for a total sum of Rs. 28,335, which was forthwith handed over to the receiver.

On the 22nd April, 1894, this suit was filed by the Administrator General of Bombay as administrator of Hemabai appointed as above stated. He claimed to recover the whole sum paid to the receiver, alleging that the first and second defendants as her partners were largely indebted to the firm, and that the money really belonged to her estate. He prayed that the receiver might be directed to pay over the money to him, and that, if necessary, the partnership accounts should be taken. The second defendant (inter alia) pleaded that the suit was one for partnership accounts, and was barred by limitation, and also that the High Court of Bombay had no jurisdiction to try it.

Partnership—(Concluded). PAGE

Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to hear the suit. The cause of action alleged was that the second defendant was endeavouring, under cloak of his position as surviving partner, to get into his hands a sum of money within the jurisdiction of the Court, with a view to deprive the representatives of his deceased partner of it, and to employ it for his own purposes. That was, at all events, part of the cause of action, and leave to sue had been obtained under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865.

Held, also that s. 17 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applied, and that under its provisions the suit was not barred. RIVETT-CARNAC v. GOCULDAS SOBHANMULL AND OTHERS, 20 B. 15 ... 568

Pro. Code* (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 409 and 413.—On the 2nd February, 1890, the plaintiffs applied for leave to sue in forma pauperis. After investigation the Court on the 15th July, 1890, refused leave, but on the plaintiff's application granted him time to pay the Court-fees. He paid the fees on 12th August, 1890. At this date the suit was barred, and the defendant pleaded limitation. The plaintiff contended that the suit should be taken as instituted at the date of his application for leave to sue as a pauper. The lower Court held the suit barred, and dismissed it.

Held, confirming the decree, that the plaintiff's application to sue as a pauper having been disposed of under s. 409 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) there was no proceeding pending which could be continued and kept alive by the payment of Court-fees. On the rejection of an application for leave to sue as a pauper the only course open to the applicant is that declared in s. 413, viz., to institute a suit, and the date of the institution of that suit for the purposes of limitation is the actual date thereof. The plaintiff could not then be regarded as a pauper, and s. 4 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1876) would have no application. KESHAV RAMCHANDRA v. KRISHNARAO, 20 B. 508 902

The accused, a Native Indian subject of Her Majesty, was committed to the Court of Sessions for abetting the commission of murder or of rioting under ss. 302 and 147 of the Indian Penal Code. The alleged abetment consisted of words spoken in British territory by the accused, inciting certain Portuguese subjects to kill one Bhana if he attempted to remove the produce of certain lands situate in the Portuguese territory of Daman. A disturbance afterwards occurred at Daman in connection with this matter, in which one man was killed and another wounded. Thereupon the Governor-General of Portuguese India moved the Government of Bombay to bring the accused to justice as the instigator of the murder. The Government of Bombay being of opinion that s. 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) was applicable to the case, passed a Resolution in the Political Department directing the District Magistrate to take the necessary action in the matter. The District Magistrate thereupon committed the accused to the Court of Session on a charge of abetment of murder or of rioting.

Held, quashing the commitment, that the alleged abetment was not an offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code, and that, therefore, the Sessions Court had no jurisdiction to try the accused.

Held, also that s. 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) had no application to the present case, the alleged offence of abetment not having been committed outside British India. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GANPATRAO RAMCHANDRA, 19 B. 105 ... 70

Pro. Code* (Act X of 1882), ss. 191, 197.—The complainant was Deputy Collector and First Class Magistrate of Bijapur. Certain petitions said to emanate from the accused were received by Government charging the complainant with bribery and corruption. Government thereupon ordered Mr. Monteath, Collector and Magistrate of the district, to enquire into the matter. Mr. Monteath enforced the attendance of the accused by writing to the police, who brought the accused before him. In answer to questions put to him, the accused denied having sent any petition to Government, but stated that he had paid a bribe to the complainant to secure the acquittal of his son, who was then on his trial on a charge of theft before him. Mr. Monteath examined other witnesses and reported the result of his inquiry to Government. Government permitted the Deputy Collector to prosecute the accused, and he accordingly lodged a complaint against the accused for defamation, under s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860) in having stated to Mr. Monteath, in the course of the inquiry, that he (the complainant) had accepted a bribe from him.

The trying Magistrate was of opinion that the offence fell under s. 211 of the Penal Code. He at first framed charges both under ss. 211 and 500. But subsequently he struck out the charge of defamation under s. 500 and convicted the accused under s. 211 of making a false charge.

On appeal, the Joint Sessions Judge was of opinion that the charge under s. 211 could not be maintained, as the accused had not made any "false charge" to a Court or officer having jurisdiction to investigate it. As regards the charge of defamation, he was of opinion that the fact of bribery was not proved. But he held that in making the statement to Mr. Monteath the accused had acted in good faith, and that his case fell under exception 8 to s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code. He, therefore, reversed the conviction under s. 211 and acquitted the accused of defamation under s. 500 of the Code. Against this order of acquittal Government appealed to the High Court.

Held that the accused was guilty of defamation.

Held, also, that s. 211 of the Penal Code had no application to the present case. The accused was brought before Mr. Monteath against his will. He did not make any complaint before that officer; and though what he stated, in answer to questions put to him, was defamatory, the imputations did not constitute a "false charge" within the meaning of s. 211, as he did not intend to set the criminal law in motion.

Per RANADE, J.—The words "falsely charging" in s. 211 must be construed along with the words which speak of the "institution of proceedings." These latter words are obviously used in a technical and exclusive sense, and the same restricted sense must be given to the words which relate to a false charge as implying a false complaint.

Held, also, that, in the absence of sanction from Government, the inquiry held by Mr. Monteath, the District Magistrate, was not a taking cognizance of the offence.

Held, also, that as Mr. Monteath was not sitting as a "Court" when he made the inquiry and examined the accused, the accused was not entitled to claim an absolute protection from a charge of defamation as a witness in a judicial proceeding The accused was only entitled to a qualified privilege depending on the exceptions to s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code.

Per RANADE, J.—The High Court, in exercising jurisdiction in the matter of appeals against acquittals, should confine its exercise to the particular grounds of objection which are raised by Government against the acquittal complained of. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KARIGOWDA, 19 B. 51 ... 34

(8) S. 279—Rash riding on a public way.—The accused was convicted of a rash riding on a public way under s. 279 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). He contended that his conviction was bad, on the ground that there was no proof that any person was on the road in question at the time when he was alleged to have ridden in a rash or negligent manner.

Held, that though there was no such proof, it was competent to the Court to take into its consideration the probability of persons using the public way being placed in danger by the act of the accused. The accused's act came within the mischief struck at by s. 279 of the Indian Penal Code and was included within its terms. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. HORMUSJI NOWROJI LORD, 19 B. 715 ... 479

The Joint Sessions Judge, relying apparently on evidence that the injured person remained in a hospital for the space of twenty days, drew from that circumstance alone the inference that he was during that period unable to follow his ordinary pursuits, and convicted the accused under s. 326 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860).

Held, reversing the convictions, that in the absence of any evidence that the injured person was unable to follow his ordinary pursuits during the space of twenty days, such an inference could not legally be drawn.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—(Concluded). PAGE

Before a conviction can be passed for the offence of grievous hurt, one of the injuries defined in s. 320 of the Indian Penal Code must be strictly proved, and that the eighth clause is no exception to the general rule that a penal statute must be construed strictly.

Proof of being in a hospital for the space of twenty days cannot be taken as equivalent to proof of grievous hurt. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. VASTA CHELA, 19 B. 247 ... 168

(13) S. 330—Using violence for the purpose of extorting a confession—Abetment—Illegal omission to act—"Respondeat superior"—Bombay Police Act (Act IV of 1890), ss. 51 and 52—Duty of a police officer to shelter a person in custody.—A policeman who stands by, acquiescing in an assault on a prisoner committed by another policeman for the purpose of extorting a confession, is guilty of abetment of an offence under s. 330 of the Indian Penal Code.

Nothing but fear of instant death is a defence for a policeman who tortures any one by order of a superior. The maxim respondeat superior has no application in such a case. Under the Bombay Police Act (Act IV of 1890) every police officer is bound to shelter a person in custody, and to arrest persons committing assaults likely to cause grievous bodily injury. If he omits to perform this duty, he is guilty of abetment.

When the law imposes a duty to act on a person, his illegal omission to act renders him liable to punishment. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. LATIFKHAN, 20 B. 394 ... 825

(15) S. 499—Defamation—Publication—Mode of publication defamatory though the imputation be true.—Under s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code the person who publishes, and the person who makes, an imputation are alike guilty of defamation.

A Court may find that an imputation is true and made for the public good, but on considering the manner of the publication (ex. gr., in a newspaper) it may hold that the particular publication is not for the public good, and is, therefore, not privileged. (16) S. 499, Exception 9—Defamation—Privilege of counsel—Good faith—Construction—Construction of statute.—A pleader, in addressing a Mamlatdar on behalf of his client, who was charged under s. 125 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) with wilfully removing boundary marks, commented on some of the witnesses for the prosecution, and called them loafers. Thereupon one of those witnesses prosecuted the pleader for defamation. The Magistrate held that there was no justification for the offence, and convicted the pleader, and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 15 under s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code.

Held, reversing the conviction and sentence, that in the absence of express malice (which was not to be presumed) the pleader was protected by exception 9 to s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code.

Held, also that in considering whether there was good faith (i.e., due care and attention) the position of the person making the imputation must be taken into consideration. In the case of an advocate, where express malice is absent, a Court having due regard to public policy would be extremely cautious before depriving him of the protection of exception 9 to s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code.

(2) Ejectment—Title by possession—Mamlatdar—Finding by Mamlatdar as to possession—Subsequent contrary finding by Civil Court—Mamlatdar's order not conclusive—Suit by party against whom Mamlatdar's order made—Limitation.—The plaintiff brought this suit to recover possession of certain land which had belonged to her nephew, and of which after his death in 1878 she had assumed the management. In 1881 she brought a possessory suit against the first defendant in the Mamlatdar's Court, which suit was dismissed in January, 1885, the Mamlatdar holding that she had not been in possession. In a civil suit, however, which (pending the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court) she had filed against the first defendant in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Haveri, the Judge found that she had been in possession since 1880, and awarded her damages against the first defendant (who was held to be her farm servant) for crops which had been taken away by him. In 1887, the second defendant as mortgagee from defendant No. 1 obtained a decree against plaintiff in the Mamlatdar's Court awarding him possession of the land, and in execution of that decree the plaintiff was dispossessed in December, 1887.

In 1890 the plaintiff filed this suit to recover possession and for mesne profits since 1887. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff had no title to the land and that the suit was barred by limitation, inasmuch as the plaintiff had not brought a suit to establish her right within three years after the Mamlatdar's order in 1885 dismissing her possessory suit.

Held, that the Mamlatdar's order of January, 1885, had no conclusive effect and was rendered ineffectual by the subsequent decree of the civil Court; and as the plaintiff continued in possession, notwithstanding that order, down to 1887, the present suit was not barred by limitation, and neither her remedy nor her right to the land was extinguished.

Held, also, that the plaintiff's possession prior to 1887, confirmed as it was by the decree of the civil Court in 1885 and by the finding of the lower Court of Appeal in the present case, must prevail against the defendant, who claimed through plaintiff's farm servant only and whose possession commenced with the disturbance which compelled the plaintiff to bring the suit.

Possession is prima facie evidence of title and is primarily exclusive, and it is for him who impugns this exclusive title to show that the possession originated in a way not to affect his own right. KRISHNACHARYA v. LINGAWA, 20 B. 270 ... 738

(18) Procedure—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 39—Pleader—Pleader duly appointed by a party to a suit cannot delegate his authority to another pleader—Ex parte decree.—The applicant (defendant No. 2) was one of two defendants in a suit in the Court of Small Causes in Bombay. He and his co-defendant (defendant No. 1) appointed separate pleaders (K. and W.) to conduct their case. On the day of hearing the applicant was unavoidably unable to be present, and his pleader (K.) being also engaged elsewhere requested W., the pleader of the other defendant in the suit, to hold his brief and to conduct the case for both defendants. W. did so. A decree was passed against both defendants. The applicant subsequently applied to the Full Court under s. 37 of the Presidency Small Causes Court Act (XV of 1882) for a new trial on the ground that he had not been represented at the hearing and that the decree had been passed against him ex parte. The Full Court refused the application, holding that the applicant had been represented by a pleader, and that the decree against him was not ex parte. The appellant then applied to the High Court in its extraordinary jurisdiction.

Held, discharging the order of the Full Court, that the decree against the applicant was an ex parte decree. K., who was the applicant's duly appointed pleader, could not delegate his authority to W., and as the applicant was not himself present, the decree was ex parte. W. was not the duly appointed pleader of the applicant and could not, therefore, represent him at the hearing ; see s. 89 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882). The High Court sent back the case

(26) Procedure—Decree—Execution of decree—Death of judgment-debtor after attachment but before sale in execution—Sale without legal representative of judgment-debtor being made a party—Effect of such omission on validity of sale—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 311, 316.—Tukaram obtained a decree against one Subhankhan, and in execution attached certain land which Subhankhan had previously mortgaged to Krishnaji. On the 11th June, 1877, a warrant for sale was issued followed by the usual proclamation. Subhankhan died on the 27th September, 1877, and a few days afterwards, viz., on the 3rd October, 1877, the sale took place without any notice being given to Dhondu Bai, who was the heir and legal representative of Subhankhan, who, however, came to know of it shortly after. Tukaram the decree-holder, purchased the land at the sale, and in 1883 sold it to Aba, who redeemed the mortgage from Krishnaji and took possession. In 1891, Dhondu Bai, as heir and legal representative of Subhankhan, brought this suit claiming to redeem the mortgage. She made Krishnaji (original mortgagee) and Aba (the purchaser) parties to the suit. She contended that the sale in execution was bad, having taken place after the death of the judgment-debtor and without his legal representative having been placed on the record.

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to redeem.

Per JARDINE, J.—As no "substantial injury" was alleged to have resulted by reason of the plaintiff not having been brought on the record of the execution proceedings immediately on the death of the judgment-debtor and before the sale took place, the purchaser acquired a valid title under s. 316 of Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882).

Per RANADE, J.—The omission to join the name of the representative of the deceased judgment-debtor as a party to the record was a material irregularity and a serious defect in the title of the auction-purchaser. But this irregularity did not vitiate the sale under the special circumstances of the present case, viz., that the plaintiff had taken no step to set aside the sale although she came to know of the sale within a few days after it took place; that there was no fraud or mala fides on the part of the judgment-creditor; that the sale had not resulted in any substantial injury to the plaintiff, and that the auction-purchaser and his assignee had been in adverse possession for more than twelve years. (31) Procedure—Plaint—Alternative reliefs—Partition—Findings of fact unaccompanied by reasons—Not conclusive in second appeal—Second appeal.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the northern half of a certain plot of land, alleging that it had fallen to his share at a partition made in 1887, and that he was illegally dispossessed thereof by the defendant in 1890. He also prayed, in the alternative, that if the alleged partition were not proved, the land should be partitioned and his share awarded to him. The suit was dismissed by the lower Courts on the ground that the alleged partition was not proved, and that no order for partition could be made in the face of the plaintiff's distinct allegation that it had already taken place.

Held, that the plaintiff's allegation of partition did not preclude him from seeking the alternative relief on the strength of his general title.

Held, also, that where no reasons are given by a lower appellate Court for the conclusions arrived at, such conclusions cannot be accepted as legal findings of fact in second appeal. NINGAPPA v. SHIVAPPA, 19 B. 323 ... 219

(32) *Procedure—Plaint, presentation of—Return of plaint for presentation to proper Court—Jurisdiction—High Court, power of, to interfere under Reg. The First Class Subordinate Judge, to whom the plaint was then presented, also returned it for presentation in the proper Court on the ground that the subject-matter was below his pecuniary jurisdiction. The plaintiff thereupon presented the plaint to the successor of the Second Class Subordinate Judge who had originally returned the plaint. That Judge held that he had no jurisdiction to review the order passed by his predecessor. The plaintiff appealed, and the Judge rejected the appeal, holding that no appeal lay against an order refusing to grant a review.

The plaintiff applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction.

Held, that the case was one in which the High Court ought to interfere under cl. 2, s. 5 of Reg. II of 1827.

The order of the Second Class Subordinate Judge was set aside with a direction that he should admit the plaint as of the date of its original presentation. GIRDHARLAL HARGOVANDAS v. LALLU JAGJIVAN, 20 B. 50 ... 592

(33) Procedure—Possession—Joint property—Suit by co-owner for exclusive possession.—The plaintiff sued for possession of certain land. The lower Court held that the land was the joint property of the plaintiff and defendant, but finding that the plaintiff had been in exclusive possession allowed his claim and gave him a decree. On second appeal.

Held, that exclusive possession could not be awarded unless exclusive title was proved. On plaintiff's application, which was not opposed by the defendant, the decree of the lower Court was varied, and the plaintiff was awarded joint possession of the property in suit. NANA v. APPA, 20 B. 627 ... 986

(36) Procedure—Suit for possession—Issues to be raised—Second appeal—Finding of fact—Finding of lower Court based on misconception of evidence.—The finding on an issue of a lower appellate Court which is based on a misconception of what the evidence is, cannot be accepted in second appeal as a legal finding on it.

In a suit to recover possession based on a deed of sale,

Held, that the Court should have raised issues as to ownership and possession, as even if the sale-deed were not proved, the plaintiff might have been able to substantiate a title independently of it. GOVIND v. VITHAL, 20 B. 753 ... 1072

(1) Application for probate—Executor—Arbitration—Reference by executor to arbitration—Award—Power of executor to refer to arbitration—Effect of award—Jurisdiction—Jurisdiction of Testamentary Court to decide question of award.—An executor having propounded a will and applied for probate, a caveat was filed denying the execution of the alleged will, and the matter was duly registered as a suit. The executor and the caveatrix subsequently referred "the dispute" to arbitration, and an award was made that the alleged will had not been executed. The executor nevertheless subsequently continued the suit. At hearing the caveatrix pleaded the award and contended that it was binding on the plaintiff (executor). The plaintiff (executor) contended that the Court as a Court of Probate had no jurisdiction to try any question as to the award, but was limited only to the question of the execution of the will.

Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to determine the question as to the award.

Held, also, that the award was binding on the executor. GHELLABHAI ATMARAM v. NANDUBAI, 20 B. 238 ... 717

(3) Will—Executor who has acted required to lodge will and obtain probate.—One Tulsidas Varajdas died in 1883, and by his will appointed his brother Tapidas sole residuary legatee and also his executor, and he directed that in case of Tapidas' death, Damodar (Tapidas' son) should be executor. Tapidas accordingly acted as executor until his death in May, 1886, and then his son Damodar continued to administer the estate, but neither of them obtained probate of the will. Tapidas left a will whereby he appointed his two sons Damodar and Dayabhai (the applicant) his executors and also his residuary legatees. In June, 1895, Dayabhai, stating that he was one of the residuary legatees of Tapidas, who was the sole residuary legatee of Tulsidas Varajdas, applied for a citation to be issued to Damodar directing him to bring in and prove the will of Tulsidas Varajdas. In reply, Damodar submitted that there was no necessity to prove the will; that the estate was fully administered, and that he had no funds left in his hands out of which to pay the costs of probate.

Held, that the executor Damodar must lodge the will in Court, and that on the applicant Dayabhai paying half the estimated cost of obtaining probate (including probate duty), the executor Damodar should take out probate of the will. DAYABHAI TAPIDAS v. DAMODAR TAPIDAS, 20 B. 227 ... 710

(4) Will—New page of will not duly executed substituted by testator after execution of will—Dependent relative—Revocation.—After the death of the testator (H. G. Meakin) his will was found among his private papers in a sealed envelope with the words "H. G. Meakin's will not to be opened until after death," written in his hand writing on the face of the envelope. The will was wholly in his writing and was written on four separate sheets of paper pinned together. The first, third and fourth pages were of blue paper and of the same size, and each of them was signed at the bottom by the testator and by two witnesses. The fourth page stated the date of the will and was signed by the testator and was duly attested by the said two witnesses. The actual execution of the will took place (as was proved by evidence) in March or April, 1894. The second page, however, was of a different kind of paper from the other pages and of smaller size, and was signed by the testator, but not by witnesses. This second page contained a bequest to a child who was born in May, 1894, i.e., some months after the will was executed. The executors propounded the will.

Held, that probate must be refused. KER v. MEAKIN, 20 B. 370 ... 809

Railway Company. PAGE

(1) Indian Railway Act (IV of 1879), s. 11—Loss of goods—Liability of company—Declaration of value and nature of goods and payment of increased charge—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 30.—In January, 1890, a box containing rupees was delivered by the plaintiffs to the defendant company in Bombay to be carried to Saugor. From the evidence it appeared that the plaintiffs did not intend to insure the box. The box was taken to the booking office at the station, and the parcel clerk asked what it contained, and was told that it contained coin, and he learned casually that the amount was Rs. 6,000. The clerk charged Rs. 18-1 0 for the box, which was the "treasure rate" for carriage. This sum was paid and the box was duly despatched, but was lost or stolen in the course of transit. The plaintiffs sued to recover the Rs. 6,000. The defendants contended that, having regard to the provisions of s. 11 of Act IV of 1879, they were not liable. inasmuch as (1) the contents of the box had not been duly disclosed, nor (2) had an increased charge been paid. The plaintiffs obtained a decree in the lower Court.

On appeal,

Held (reversing the decree) that the defendant company was not liable—

(1) Because there was no sufficient declaration of the value and contents of the box.

(2) Because the sum paid by the plaintiffs for the carriage of the box was the ordinary charge for treasure, and was not the increased charge which under s. 11 of Act IV of 1879 should have deen paid in order to make the company liable.

(3) Per BAYLEY, J.—That the claim of the plaintiffs was one against the defendants for compensation for losing goods, and fell within art. 30 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and that as this suit was not brought until after the expiration of two years from the date of the loss it was barred by limitation. THE G. I. P. RAILWAY COMPANY v. RAISETT, 19 B. 165 ... 112

(2) Liability for loss of goods—Railways Act, IX of 1890, s. 75.—(1) The words "loss, destruction or deterioration" in s. 75 of the Indian Railways Act, IX of 1890, include loss caused by the criminal misappropriation of the parcel by a servant of the railway administration in charge thereof.

(2) Under s. 75 of that Act, it is necessary that both value and contents of a parcel (if over Rs. 100 in value) should be declared before the railway administration can be held liable in respect thereof.

(3) The payment by a consignor of silver coin of the specie rate required by the general regulations of a Railway Company to be paid for the carriage of such goods is not such a payment as satisfies the requirements of s. 75 of the Indian Railways Act, IX of 1890. Where a Mahomedan testator had by his will appointed three executors, only one of whom had acted and got possession of the estate, a suit by the testator's widow for administration of the estate was held sufficiently well constituted for the purpose of a motion for a receiver, although only the executor who had acted was made defendant, the other two executors not being parties to the suit.

A receiver is not justified in delegating or entrusting to another a duty entrusted to him by the Court. He should in all important matters apply for and obtain the direction of the Judge who appoints him.

The mortgaged lien was not announced in the proclamation of sale as required by s. 287 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), and the auction-purchaser had no actual knowledge of the mortgage. In a suit brought by the mortgagee against the mortgagors and the auction-purchaser to recover the mortgage-debt by sale of the mortgaged property.

Held, that except in a case of fraudulent concealment, the registration of the mortgage was notice to subsequent purchasers The property was, therefore, liable under the mortgage, and the auction-purchaser was bound by it.

Held, further, that the omission to declare the mortgage at the time of the sale could not be treated as an estoppel. DHONDO BALKRISHNA KANITKAR v. RAOJI, 20 B. 290 ... 751

(b) of the Registration Act (III of 1877) does not render a passage in a will inadmissible in evidence if the words of it do not purport or operate to extinguish an interest in the present or in future, but state only past facts. Such a statement would, if proved, be admissible also under s. 32, cl. (6) of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872). CHAMANBU v. MULTANCHAND, 20 B. 562 ... 940

(4) S. 17, cls. (b) and (h)—Instrument creating a charge in the nature of a mortgage—Admissibility of documents compulsorily registrable—Evidence—Registration.—A kararnama (agreement), dated 11th day of June, 1885, was passed by A. to B. to the following effect :—

"As my father Shivaram valad Keshav is dead, it has been arranged that I should succeed to his estate..... Part of this estate at Vagoda, consisting of a house, fields, cattle and a cart, has been given into your possession for use and enjoyment. The reason thereof is that you have undertaken to pay Rs. 450 found due on an adjustment of khata from my father to Ganpatdas Khushaldas. I am unable to pay off this debt ; and so you have been put into possession of this property. I shall pass to you a sale-deed in respect of this property, and shall transfer the fields to your name from the year 1888—89."

Held, that the kararnama required registration. It did not fall within the exception provided for by cl. (h) of s. 17 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). It was not a document which merely created a right to demand another document. It created as between the parties to it a charge in the nature of a mortgage. The document of itself declared a right, and the mention of an intention to execute a deed of sale made no difference.

An unregistered mortgage bond for one hundred rupees and upwards may be admissible in evidence to prove the simple debt or a personal obligation, but it is inadmissible in evidence to prove any right to the property affected by it. VANI v. BANI, 20 B. 553 ... 934

(6) S. 50—Priority—San-mortgage optionally registrable, but not registered—Subsequent mortgage registered—Decree passed on san-mortgage—Execution—Purchaser at execution sale—Priority of mortgagee under registered mortgage to such purchaser—Notice.—In 1875 the land in dispute was mortgaged to defendant No. 2 under two san-mortgage bonds, which were optionally registrable, but were not registered. In 1885 the land was mortgaged to plaintiff by a registered mortgage accompanied with possession. In 1886 the defendant No. 2 obtained a decree upon his san-mortgage bond, in execution of which the mortgaged property was brought to sale and purchased by defendant No. 3.

Defendant No. 3 was afterwards put in possession by the Court. Thereupon the plaintiff sued to enforce his mortgage lien against the property in the hands of defendant No. 3, who pleaded that the san-mortgages of 1875 were entitled to priority over the plaintiff's mortgage of 1885, and that he as purchaser at a sale under a decree obtained upon the san-mortgages held the property free from the plaintiff's claim.

Held, that the plaintiff's mortgage, having been executed and registered after Act III of 1877 had come into force, was entitled under s. 50 of the Act to priority over the unregistered san-mortgage bonds.

A san-mortgage is not within the exceptions mentioned in s. 50 of the Act.

Held, also, that under s. 47 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) the plaintiff's registered mortgage began to operate from the date of its execution and was not affected by the decree subsequently obtained upon the earlier mortgages.

By the custom of Gujarat, transfer of possession, which is necessary under general Hindu law, is not essential to validate san-mortgages, and such mortgages have always been held valid charges as between mortgagor and mortgagee, but they are liable to be defeated in case of the transfer of interest to third parties under registered instruments.

Apart from the doctrine of equitable notice, registration under Act XVI of 1864 and Act VIII of 1871 conferred no priority on a registered document as against a document the registration of which was optional. Since Act III of 1877, however, the competition obtains in a more general form, and confers priority on all documents required to be registered, and registered since Act III of 1877 was passed, over all prior unregistered deeds of an antagonistic character. Res Judicata.

(1) Estoppel—Fraud—Judgment obtained by fraud—Not conclusive inter partes—Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), ss. 18. cls. (b) and (c)—Revocation of certificate.—One Punja died in 1889, leaving behind him his daughter Mahali. Punja, it was alleged, had made a will appointing Kalidas and Kasandas as his executors. The executors applied for a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act VII of 1889 to recover a debt due to the deceased's estate from one Motiram. Mahali opposed this application, and claimed the certificate for herself by a separate application. The District Judge rejected Mahali's application, and issued a certificate to the executors on 14th September, 1892.

In the meantime, one Manchharam obtained a decree against Mahali as legal representative of Punja, and in execution bought Punja's right, title and interest in the debt due from Motiram. On 12th September, 1892, Manchharam applied for a certificate under Act VII of 1889 to recover this debt. The District Judge rejected this application. Manchharam appealed to the High Court. To this appeal the executors were made parties at their own request. The High Court reversed the District Judge's order and remanded the case for disposal on the merits. Upon the remand the executors did not appear before the District Judge to contest Manchharam's application, and the District Judge granted him a certificate. Thereupon he applied for revocation of the certificate previously granted to the executors; and the executors in their turn applied for a revocation of the certificate granted to him. The District Judge revoked Manchharam's certificate on the ground that he had fraudulently concealed from the Court the previous grant of a certificate to the executors.

Against this order Manchharam appealed to the High Court, contending (inter alia) that the executors not having resisted his application for a certificate after the case had been remanded by the High Court, were estopped, on the principle of res judicata, from applying for a revocation of the certificate granted to him.

Res Judicata—(Concluded). PAGE

Held, that the executors were not estopped. The executors having applied to be made parties to the appeal proceedings, were bound to appear in the Court below, and their failure to do so disabled them from pleading objections, such as the collusive character of the decree and Mahali's want of title, but it did not operate as res judicata, especially when there was reason to suspect fraud on the part of Manchharam. The order obtained by him could not have the effect of res judicata, unless the executors being called on to dispute it, had failed to do so.

A party to a proceeding is never disabled from showing that a judgment or order has been obtained by the adverse party by fraud.

Held, also, that the District Judge had a right, under s. 18, cls. (b) or (c) of Act VII of 1889, to revoke the certificate he had granted under a mistake of fact to Manchharam. MANCHHARAM v. KALIDAS, 19 B. 821 ... 551

Seaworthiness—Damage to goods by leakage while ship in dock—Bill of lading — Exception.—The plaintiffs' goods were loaded in the defendants' steamer then lying in dock to be carried from Bombay to certain ports in East Africa. At the time of loading, the ship was apparently in a sound and seaworthy condition. Two days after the goods had been put on board, and when the ship was still in dock, it sprung a leak, and the water came into the hold and damaged the plaintiffs' goods. The ship was taken to the dry dock, the cargo was shifted, and the leak repaired. It appeared that the leak had arisen from the fact that one of the plates of the ship had been worn thin in one particular spot, so that when the cargo was put on board, and the ship lay deeper in the water, the pressure became so great that a hole was made and the water rushed in. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for damages. The defendants pleaded (1) that the ship was in a seaworthy condition when the goods were put on board, (2) that they were protected by the bill of lading which contained the following exception, viz., "Accident, loss and damage from vermin, barratry, jettison, collision, fire, machinery, boilers, steam and all the perils, dangers and accidents of the sea, rivers,

Held, that the defendants were liable. While the ship was in dock it was not seaworthy, and the exception in the bill of lading did not limit the implied warranty of seaworthiness. VITHULDAS GOBER v. THE BOMBAY AND PERSIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY, 19 B. 639 ... 427

Injunction—Negative agreement—Direction of Court—Agreement not to work for a rival tradesman—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 22, 56 and 57—Damages.—The plaintiff was a milliner carrying on business in Bombay, and the defendant was in his employment up to the year 1890. In that year he left the plaintiff's service and the plaintiff alleged that at the time he left it, he was indebted to the plaintiff for moneys not accounted for and also in respect of loans made to him. The plaintiff instituted criminal proceedings in the Police Court against the defendant for criminal breach of trust, and procured a warrant for his arrest. The defendant surrendered, and at the time of the agreement hereafter mentioned, the proceedings in this matter were going on. The defendant was out on bail, and was then in the service of a rival milliner named Bhimji Jivan. On the 1st February, 1893, an agreement in writing was made between the plaintiff and the defendant whereby the defendant agreed as follows:—(1) to pay the plaintiff Rs. 1,950 in full settlement of the plaintiff's claim; (2) to enter the plaintiff's service as cutter and to serve him for ten years from the date of agreement; (3) to serve plaintiff honestly; (4) in case plaintiff was obliged to dismiss him for some "fault," then until the expiration of the said period of 10 years the defendant should not carry on the business of a cutter or tailor, either directly or indirectly, on his own account or as partner or servant of another, and in case he should do so, the plaintiff should be at liberty to stop him.

On the 15th February, 1893, the charge of criminal breach of trust against the defendant was dismissed the plaintiff offering no evidence in support of it. The plaintiff subsequently called on the defendant to enter his employment in accordance with the agreement, but the defendant refused, and remained in the service of Bhimji Jivan. The plaintiff, therefore, filed this suit praying for an injunction restraining the defendant from carrying on business as a cutter or tailor for ten years from the date of the agreement. The lower Court dismissed the suit.

Held, on appeal, that the lower Court was right in refusing either to grant specific performance of the agreement or an injunction against the defendant, but that inasmuch as it had refused an injunction on the ground that pecuniary compensation was the plaintiff's proper remedy, it ought not to have dismissed the suit, but ought either itself to have awarded damages or to have ordered an inquiry as to damages. The plaintiff being held to be entitled to a remedy, the appropriate remedy should be awarded.

The appellate Court accordingly passed a decree against the defendant and awarded the plaintiff Rs. 10 as damages, with costs of the appeal. CALLIANJI HARJIVAN v. NARSI TRICUM, 19 B. 764 ... 512

(6) Suits' Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 8—Suit to take accounts—Court fee stamp—Jurisdiction—Amount of claim as fixed by plaintiff—Relief incidental to the principal relief—Appeal.—According to s. 8 of the Suits' Valuation Act (VII of 1887), in suits for taking an account, the Court-fee stamps and jurisdiction are both determined by the amount of claim as fixed by the plaintiff.

In a suit for taking account the plaint having contained several items which were all incidental to the chief item of relief, the plaint was held to be substantially one to have the minor plaintiffs' estate administered, that is, to have accounts taken and the accounting party ordered to pay what (if any) should be found due from him on the balance of such account.

The plaintiffs having put the valuation of the suit at Rs. 130 in the plaint.

Held, that the High Court had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal against an order rejecting the plaint. The appeal lay to the District Court. The appeal was, therefore, returned for presentation in the proper Court. BAI AMBA v. PRANJIVANDAS DULLABHRAM. 19 B. 128 ... 134

Act* III of 1876, s. 18.—No suit will lie to set aside an order validly passed by a Mamlatdar under Bombay Act III of 1876, though such an order may be superseded by a decree of a Civil Court.

The land in dispute belonged originally to a Parsi named Dadabhai, who died intestate. After his death, one of his brothers without taking out Letters of Administration sold the land to the plaintiff. The defendant claimed a right of way over this land, alleging that it was public land. He obtained an injunction from the Mamlatdar's Court, restraining the plaintiff from obstructing his alleged right of way. Thereupon the plaintiff filed a suit to set aside the Mamlatdar's order, and for a declaration that he was owner of the land, and that defendant had no right of way over it. Both the lower Courts rejected the plaintiff's claim on the ground that under s. 190 of the Succession Act (X of 1865) plaintiff could not establish his right to the land in the absence of Letters of Administration to the estate of Dadabhai, the original owner.

Held, reversing the decrees, that s. 190 of Act X of 1865 did not apply. Neither the plaintiff nor the defendant relied as the basis of his right on the previous title of Dadabhai. There was no question of administration.

Held, also, that a person sued as a trespasser cannot, without proof of his own right, oust an apparent owner by pointing out some defect in the title of the latter. TULJARAM v. BAMANJI KHARSEDJI, 19 B. 828 ... 555

Held, that such an order was not an order "granting, refusing or revoking a certificate" within the meaning of s. 19 of the Act, and was, therefore, not appealable. BAI DEVKORE v. LALCHAND JIVAN DAS, 19 B. 790 ... 530

(6) Ss. 17 and 20—Certificate of heirship—Hindu family—Political Agent—Grant of certificate by Political Agent—Irregularities in making grant—Stamp on certificate—Court Fees' Act VII of 1870, s. 26—Notification of Governor-General.—A District Judge cannot treat a certificate of heirship granted by the Political Agent in a Native State as invalid because the applicant had not given to him the requisite information as to the other members of the family and no notices had been issued to them. These irregularities of procedure may be a reason for the Political Agent to cancel the grant, but they do not enable the District Court to treat it as a nullity.

A certificate having been granted on an ordinary stamp of requisite value, it was contended that it was not properly stamped in accordance with the Court Fees' Act (VII of 1870) as required by s. 17 of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), because it did not bear upon it the words "Court Fees as directed in the notification of the Governor-General, No. 361, dated 18th April, 1883.

Held, that though s. 26 of the Court Fees' Act (VII of 1870) provides that the stamp used to denote the fee chargeable under the Act shall be of such particular kind as the Governor-General in India in Council may by notification, from time to time direct, and that though the Governor-General had issued such notification, still the direction in the notification, that the stamp should bear the words "Court-fees," was not a matter on which he had authority to give any direction under the terms of s. 26 of the Court Fees' Act, and, therefore, could only be regarded as a departmental order, the non-observance of which could not invalidate the stamp for the purpose of the Act.

A certificate of heirship stamped with the proper stamp, and granted by the Political Agent of a Native State, must be recognised by the Civil Courts in British India "as having the same effect in British India as a certificate granted under this Act" as provided by s. 17 of Act VII of 1889, and under s. 20 precludes the granting of a certificate by a Civil Court. Surety.

(1) Decree—Execution—Stay of execution on giving security—Subsequent execution—Default of judgment debtor—Liability of surety in execution.—The execution of a decree for partition was stayed pending appeal on the defendant giving security that he would satisfy such decree as might ultimately be passed against him by the appellate Court. That Court confirmed the decree of the lower Court. In obedience of the decree the judgment-debtor deposited in Court certain property in his possession consisting of bonds, decrees and other articles. But as he did not produce the whole of the property as ordered by the decree, the Court directed execution to proceed against his surety. The surety paid into Court the full sum stipulated in the surety bond. Thereupon the judgment-debtor applied that the property deposited by him in Court should be valued and made over to the decree-holder in part satisfaction of the decree pro tanto, and that only the balance then remaining due should be paid out of the money paid in by the surety. The Court refused, holding that the decree-holder was entitled to be paid over the whole sum paid in by the surety. On appeal, Held (reversing the order of the lower Court) that the property already produced in Court by the judgment-debtor should be first applied towards the satisfaction of the partition decree, and if the decree-holder did not obtain complete satisfaction in this way, the money paid in by the surety should then be made available. Charity suit—Defendants' costs as between attorney and client ordered out of the charity estate—Charges allowed and disallowed as against estate—Discretion of Taxing Master.—In a suit brought by the Advocate General at the instance of relators for the purpose of removing the defendants from the position of directors of a Mahomedan mosque, and for administration of the property of the mosque, &c., the decree ordered that the defendants should have their costs taxed as between attorney and client out of the charity funds. The attorneys of the defendants accordingly brought in their bill of costs, and in taxation it was contended that they should be allowed out of the charity funds all the sums which the Taxing Master certified they should pay their attorneys.

Held, that where the Taxing Master decided that certain items allowed against the defendants should not come out of the charity funds, his decision could not be disturbed.

It does not follow that because a charge is proper to be allowed between an attorney and client, that the client, if trustee, should be allowed that charge out of the trust funds. ADVOCATE GENERAL OF BOMBAY v. MOULVI ABDUL KADUR JITAKER, 20 B. 301 ... 760 interest of such person should cease, and for the remainder of his life should be paid for the maintenance and support of the family of such persons.

In July, 1894, the plaintiff, who was one of the sons of the settlor, filed his petition in insolvency, but on the 5th December, 1894, he withdrew it.

Held, that the forfeiture clause did not take effect, and that the plaintiff was entitled to be paid by the trustee his share of the income of the trust property. HORMASJI N. DAVUR v. DADABHOY N. DAVUR, 20 B. 310 ... 766

(3) Trustees - Trustees raising money by mortgage of trust property—Sanction of Court.—A testator by his will devised property in Bombay to trustees on certain religious and charitable trusts. The income of the property was more than was required for the purposes of the trust, and the trustees had a surplus of Rs. 19,000 in their hands. They were obliged to pull down a certain chawl which stood upon the land for the purposes of rebuilding upon it, and they proposed, with a view to improve the property, to erect a larger and more substantial building than the former one. They expended the surplus of Rs. 19,000 which was in their hands, but found that to complete the work a further sum of Rs. 20,000 was necessary. This they proposed to raise by mortgaging the trust property. They calculated that the whole mortgage-debt would be paid off out of the surplus rents of the trust property within three years. They filed this suit, praying that the Court would sanction the proposed mortgage. The Court, however, refused its sanction, and dismissed the suit. DINSHAW NOWROJI BODE v. The plaintiffs thereupon paid an additional Court-fee of Rs. 900 under s. 11 of the Court-Fees' Act (VII of 1870). The defendants appealed to the High Court from the decree of the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiffs objected that the appeal lay to the District Judge, and not to the High Court.

Held, that the value of the subject-matter of the suit exceeded Rs. 5,000; the appeal, therefore, lay to the High Court under s. 26 of Act XIV of 1869. IBRAHIMJI ISSAJI v. BEJANJI JAMSEDJI, 20 B. 265 ... 735

Vendor and Purchaser.

(1) Broker—Brokerage from vendor and vendee—Position and rights of broker—Claim of brokerage from both vendor and vendee.—A broker is entitled to his commission if the relation of buyer and seller is really brought about by him, although the actual sale has not been effected by him.

A broker is entitled to his commission where he has induced in the vendor the contracting mind, the willingness to open negotiations upon a reasonable basis even though a change or modification of the terms of the contract is made by the buyer and seller without his intervention.

A broker sued the Municipality of Bombay for brokerage in respect of land purchased by them.

Held, that, if during the time that the broker was negotiating with the vendor, the latter was induced to consent to the sale, the broker was entitled to his brokerage. It was not material to enquire what operated upon the mind of the vendor, and whether it was the advice of friends, or the knowledge that his land could be acquired compulsorily, or the persuasions of the broker. It was sufficient to support the broker's claim if the vendor's acceptance of the terms was brought about during his intervention; and the fact that the Municipal Commissioner stepped in at the last moment, and himself actually struck the bargain, did not deprive the broker of his brokerage.

Primarily a broker is merely the agent of the party by whom he is originally employed. To make the other side liable to pay him brokerage it must be shown that he has been employed by such party to act for him, or that in the contract he has agreed to pay brokerage. Code (Act XIV of 1882) authorizes some of the raiyats of a village to sue the proprietor of it for themselves and the other raiyats for a declaration of their general rights, and for an injunction restraining the proprietor from interfering with their enjoyment of those rights.

Vendor and Purchaser—(Concluded). PAGE

In 1806, the East India Company granted a village to Ardesir Dady, subject to the raiyats' customary rights and privileges which were embodied in Reg. I of 1808, but the deed of conveyance was not passed until 1819, and it was then executed to the executors of Ardeshir, who had died in the meantime. This deed made no reference to rights and privileges of the raiyats. In 1868, the defendant purchased the village from its legal owners. In 1889, plaintiffs sued defendant for themselves and on behalf of the other raiyats of the village to enforce their rights. The defendant pleaded that as the deed of conveyance of 1819 made no mention of these rights, he was not bound by them.

Held, that as at the time of the conveyance of the village to the defendant, the lands were in the occupation of the raiyats, the defendant ought to have made inquiry as to their rights. Having failed to do this, he was bound by the rights of the tenants as much as if they had been specially mentioned in the conveyance to him.

Held, also, that as there had been no denial of plaintiff's rights until shortly before the suit, it was not barred by limitation. AHMEDBHOY HABIBBHOY v. BALAKRISHNA MUKUND, 19 B. 391 ... 264

(5) Right of purchaser to have lands registered in his name in Revenue Records—Collector's books—Suit for declaration of such right—Limitation—Limitation applicable to such suit—Such right not an interest in immoveable property—Cause of action in respect of such right Declaratory decree—Jurisdiction—Objection taken for first time in second appeal—Practice.—Plaintiffs having purchased certain lands in 1867 brought this suit in the year 1890 to obtain a declaration of their right to have the land registered in their name in the Revenue Records. The lower Court dismissed the suit as barred under art. 144, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

Held, reversing the decree, that a right to be placed on the register was not an interest in immoveable property, and that art. 144 of the Limitation Act did not apply. The right is one which does not give rise to a cause of action until it is asserted or denied. And a suit for a declaratory decree in respect to it must be brought within a period of six years from that date. In the present case, the right had not been asserted or denied until the suit was filed, and the suit was therefore not barred.

An objection having been raised, in second appeal, that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, as the plaintiffs had not previously asked the Collector to place them on the register.

Held, that this circumstance was not necessary to give jurisdiction, although it might be a reason for treating the suit as premature. That objection, being taken for the first time in second appeal, was disallowed. BHIKAJI BAJI v. PANDU, 19 B. 43 ... 29

(1) Bombay Act III of 1874, s. 17—Collector's power to determine the amount of payments of a fluctuating character—Act X of 1876, s. 4, cl. (c)—Jurisdiction.—The payments referred to in s. 17 of Bombay Act III of 1872 are those mentioned in s. 4, namely, "customary fees or perquisites in money or in kind whether at fixed times or otherwise." It is the commutation of these customary and fluctuating payments that is provided for by ss. 17—21. But the Collector has no power under s. 17 to impose new burdens on the land-owner in cases where the payment being constant already there is nothing to determine.

Plaintiff was the Inamdar of a certain village. Defendant No. 3 was the watandar Kulkarni of the village. He enjoyed for the performance of his duties some inam lands and a cash allowance of Rs. 5 paid annually by the Inamdar. In 1884, defendant No. 3 having failed to perform the service in person or by deputy, the Collector appointed defendant No. 2 to act as Kulkarni. Defendant No. 2 officiated from 20th November, 1884, to 4th December, 1886. On the application of defendant No. 2 the Collector increased his remuneration according to the scale fixed for Government villages, known as the Wingate scale, and ordered plaintiff to pay the increased remuneration, so as to make up the amount due under that scale. On 26th September, 1890, the Collector recovered the sum of Rs. 171 from the plaintiff by attachment of his property The plaintiff thereupon sued the Secretary of State for India in Council to recover this amount as being illegally levied. The defendant pleaded that the Collector, having determined the amount of defendant No. 2's, remuneration under s. 17 of Bombay Act III of 1874, the plaintiff had no cause of action against him, and that the suit was barred under s. 4, cl. 3 of Act X of 1876.

Held, that as the cash payment made by the plaintiff to the watandar was certain, and not of a fluctuating or indeterminate character, the Collector had no power to increase the remuneration of the officiator under s. 17 of Bombay Act III of 1874.

Held, also, that the suit was not barred by s. 4 (c) of Act X of 1876. ANANTACHARYA v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA, 19 B. 581 ... 389

(2) Construction—Absolute gift—Gift over to widow or issue of donee—Life-interest—Costs.—Anna Maria Bocarro, a Portuguese inhabitant of Bombay, died in April, 1884, leaving three sons, Michael, Silveiro and Joaquim (defendant No. 3) and two daughters, (Rose and Caroline.) By her will, she directed that her daughter Rose should enjoy the rents and profits of certain immoveable property for her life, and that after her death the said property should be sold, and the sale proceeds (after payment of two legacies thereout) be divided equally between her two sons, Silveiro and Joaquim (defendant No. 3). The seventh clause of the will was as follows :—

7. "I further direct that the amount which may fall to the share of my son Joaquim Amador Bocarro under (c) of paragraph 6 above should be held in trust by my executors hereinafter named and converted by them into Government securities ; the interest accruing therefrom should be paid for the maintenance of my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro. Should my said son die leaving a widow or issue, his share shall be given to such widow or issue according as he may devise and bequeath. Should my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro reform himself, and take off all his evil tendencies, and lead a steady, quiet and orderly life, or should he on account of illness or other reasonable cause be in urgent need of pecuniary assistance, I leave it to the discretion of my executors either to make over to my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro for his absolute use the whole of the amount which he may be entitled to under (c) of paragraph sixth above or such part or parts thereof as to my executors may appear proper."

Held, on appeal, confirming the decree of the lower Court, that under the above clause of the will there was a clear gift to the wife or issue of Joaquim, but that Joaquim was to have the power of designating how they were to take. To that extent the absolute gift to Joaquim was qualified. Should the gift over fail, the absolute gift to Joaquim would remain unimpaired. BECHAR AKHA v. P. DE CRUZ, 19 B. 770 ... 516

(3) Construction—Gift of life interest or corpus—Discretion of executors to hand over corpus—Costs.—Anna Maria Bocarro, a Portuguese inhabitant of Bombay, died in April, 1884, leaving three sons, Michael, Silveiro, and Joaquim (defendant No. 3), and two daughters, Rose and Caroline. By her will she directed that her daughter Rose should enjoy the rents and profits of certain immoveable property for her life, and that after her death the said property should be sold, and the sale-proceeds (after payment of two legacies thereout) be divided equally between her two sons Silveiro and Joaquim (defendant No. 3). She further, however, directed that Joaquim's share of such proceeds should be held in trust by her executors and invested in Government securities, the interest of which should be applied to Joaquim's maintenance, and that in case Joaquim should die leaving a widow or issue, his share should go to them as he should devise or bequeath. The will then continued :—"Should my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro reform himself, and shake off all his evil tendencies, and lead a steady, quiet and orderly life, or should he on account of illness or other reasonable cause be in urgent need of pecuniary assistance, I leave it to the discretion of my executors either to make over to my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro for his absolute use the whole of the amount which he may be entitled to under (c) of paragraph sixth above, or such part or parts thereof as to my executors may appear proper."

Silveiro died in 1885, unmarried and intestate, leaving his two brothers Michael and Joaquim and his two sisters Rose and Caroline him surviving. Michael died in 1889, leaving a widow and children.

In 1891 Joaquim (defendent No. 3) mortgaged all his interest under the said will to the plaintiffs to secure a loan of Rs. 6,100. In 1893 Rose died, and in 1894 Caroline died.

Will—(Concluded).

PAGE

Subsequently the executors were proceeding to sell the property mentioned in the will when the plaintiffs filed this suit praying for a declaration that they had a valid charge upon Joaquim's interest herein, and that his interest should be ascertained and declared, and he himself ordered to pay the amount of their claim; that the property should be sold and their claim paid out of the funds; that the executors should be restrained from selling, save subject to their (plaintiffs') rights, &c.

The plaintiffs and Joaquim contended that he (Joaquim) in the events that Lad happened was entitled to the whole of the proceeds of the property absolutely, and that the gift in the sixth clause of the will could not be cut down by the provisions of the seventh clause.

Held:—(1) That the defendant Joaquim had no interest in the house mentioned in the will. He was only entitled to a share of the proceeds after it had been sold.

(2) That his interest in his share of such proceeds was merely a life-interest, with power to appoint to his widow or issue, and that he was not entitled to be paid the corpus of such share, but that the executors might under certain circumstances and at their discretion hand over to him the said corpus.

(3) That neither the plaintiffs nor Joaquim could interfere in the sale of the said property.

(4) That the plaintiffs had a valid charge upon Joaquim's interest in the sale-proceeds of the said property to the extent of their mortgage.

(5) That Joaquim's interest was (after deducting the legacies given by the sixth clause) an absolute interest in one-fourth share of Silveiro's moiety and a life-interest in his (Joaquim's) moiety subject to contingency of the executors in their discretion handing over the corpus of the share, or part thereof, for his absolute use, in which event the plaintiffs had the right to the same so far as their debt was unsatisfied.

(6) As to costs, the plaintiffs and third defendant Joaquim should pay their own costs; that the executors and defendants Nos. 4 to 12 should have their costs paid out of Joaquim's share in Silveiro's moiety of the sale-proceeds, and, if that fund were not sufficient to pay such costs, the plaintiffs and the third defendant Joaquim to pay the deficiency. (1) Jurisdiction—Local allegiance—English Consular Court—Greek residents at Zanzibar—Jurisdiction of the British Consular Court at Zanzibar over foreign subjects enjoying British protection—Order in Council, dated 29th November, 1884, s. 6.—The Greek residents at Zanzibar having been by international action placed under British protection are liable to the British criminal law in force at Zanzibar.

The accused, who was a Greek under British protection at Zanzibar, was convicted by the British Consular Court at Zanzibar of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 304 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). He appealed to the High Court of Bombay contending, inter alia, that he was a Greek subject, and as such not liable to be tried by the Consular Court.

Held, that it was competent to Her Majesty to exercise jurisdiction in one foreign State over the subjects of another foreign State; that under s. 6, cl. (b) of Her Majesty's Order in Council dated 29th November 1884, the provisions referring to British subjects were applicable to foreigners enjoying British protection in so far as by treaty, capitulation, grant, usage, sufferance, or other lawful means, Her Majesty had jurisdiction at Zanzibar in relation to such persons; and that the prisoner, being a British protected person within the meaning of s. 4, cl. (b) of the Order, was amenable to the jurisdiction of the Consular Court. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. REGO MONTOPOULO, 19 B. 741 ... 497

(2) Jurisdiction of High Court over Consular Court of Zanzibar—High Court at Bombay—Power of revision—Appeal—Jurisdiction—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 622—Zanzibar Order in Council, 1884, arts. 7, 8, 9, 21, 27, 30.—The High Court at Bombay has no power of revision over civil cases tried by the Consular Court at Zanzibar, though it is authorized to hear appeals from the decisions of that Court as a District Court by the Zanzibar Order in Council of 1884.

Zanzibar—(Concluded). PAGE

A power of revision is not an incident of appellate powers, but on the contrary can only be exercised where there is no appeal, and had it been intended to give such powers to the High Court at Bombay, it would necessarily have been expressly provided for.

Per JARDINE, J. (dissenting) :—Under any circumstances the Consular Court at Zanzibar is bound to obey a writ issued by the High Court for certifying the papers of a civil case. Under ss. 9 and 10 of the Bombay Civil Courts' Act (XIV of 1869) taken with art. 21 of the Zanzibar Order in Council of 1884 and s. 622 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), the High Court is competent to exercise revisionary jurisdiction in civil matters tried by the Consular Court at Zanzibar. KHOJA SHIVJI v.
